

LIBRARY
OF THE
SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
SAN ANSELMO
CALIFORNIA

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2025

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

TWELFTH ANNUAL CUMULATION

REVIEWS OF 1916 BOOKS

EDITED BY
MARGARET JACKSON

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES WRITTEN BY MARY KATHARINE REELY

Property of Graduate Theological Union
Return to San Francisco Theological Seminary

THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y., and NEW YORK CITY

1917

THE
BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

TWENTY-ANNUAL COMPILATION

REVIEWS OF 1916 BOOKS

EDITED BY
MARGARET JACKSON

DESIGN AND LETTERS BY MARY CATHERINE BEECH

PROPERTY OF
SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT
KEITH IN
SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT

THE H. W. HILSON COMPANY
PRINTED AT THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA PRESS 1917

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

VOL. XII

FEBRUARY, 1917

No. 12

PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY

White Plains, N. Y.....39 Mamaroneck Ave.
New York City.....10 E. Forty-third St.

Entered as second class matter January 21, 1914, at the post office at White Plains, New York, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

One year - - - - -	$10.00
Single numbers - - - - -	1.00
Semi-annual cumulation (August) - - - - -	2.00
Annual cumulated number, bound (February) - - - - -	5.00

The Book Review Digest will be sent to subscribers until an order to discontinue is received with remittance for amount due.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING

Beginning with January 1917 issues: Combined rate for Book Review Digest, Cumulative Book Index and Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature—$35 per page per month; two of these publications $30; one of these publications $25 per page per month. Smaller space and contract rates furnished upon request.

We have always been a nation of immigrants. "He is an American, who, leaving behind him all his ancient prejudices and manners, receives new ones from the new mode of life he has embraced," wrote Crèvecoeur, a French immigrant of the eighteenth century. "Here," he continued, "individuals of all nations are melted into a new race of men, whose labors and posterity will one day cause great changes in the world."

The problem of the melting pot is not new. From the beginning national unity has been a matter not of race but of a common ideal. But as the problem has become more complicated, there are those who fear that the ideal may be lost.

"Americanization" has been one of the catchwords of the moment, but behind the catchword there has been a solid movement that is achieving results. Some of the books that it has called forth are worthy of attention. First among them are two by the most inspiring immigrant of them all, Edward A. Steiner. The wave of fear called up by the supposed dangers of so-called "hyphenism" was met by his "Confessions of a Hyphenated American." Later came his quieter, but no less stimulating "Nationalizing America." Another immigrant who has spoken in one of the books of the year is Elias Tobenkin, a young American of Russian birth. He came to America as a boy, and in a first novel, "Witte Arrives," he tells what it means to come to a new country, how this land looks to a new comer, to what extent it fulfils his hopes. It is a book greater in promise than in achievement, better in plan than in execution, but is a book worthy of a wide reading. Frances Kellor's "Straight America," and a companion volume on "Americanization," by Royal Dixon, were both influenced by the political feeling of the time in which they were written, but they offer much that is sound sense on their fundamental subject. A book bearing on an untouched but important phase of the problem is "Leadership of the New America," by Archibald McClure. What part do the race leaders of each group play in shaping the lives of our new Americans? Mr. McClure has gathered valuable data in answer to this question.

But much of the best material on the subject is in form that is outside the scope of the Book Review Digest. The Bureau of Naturalization, one of the sub-divisions of the U. S. Department of Labor, has issued a "Course in Citizenship," prepared by Raymond F. Crist and designed for use in evening schools. The Bureau of Education has brought out a bulletin on "Public Facilities for Educating the Alien," compiled by F. E. Farrington, and has others in preparation. The Department of State has prepared a "Compilation of Certain Departmental Circulars Relating to Citizenship, Registration of American Citizens, Issuance of Passports, etc." Of the many excellent lists compiled by libraries, only brief mention can be made here. The A. L. A. Publishing Board has issued a "Selected List of Russian Books," compiled by J. Maud Campbell, also an annotated list of "Recent French Literature," compiled by Sarah G. Bowerman. In addition there is valuable pamphlet material issued by such organizations as the Immigrant Publication Society, 241 Fifth Ave., New York, and the Committee for Immigrants in America, 20 West Thirty-fourth street, New York. This committee issues the Immigrants in America Review, a quarterly. Another publication that should be known to libraries is the American Leader, issued by the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, an association representing 742 newspapers, printed in 30 languages, with a circulation of 8,000,000. For the assurance of those who fear for our future, let us quote its aim:

"To help preserve the ideals and sacred traditions of this, our adopted country, the United States of America; To revere its laws and inspire others to respect and obey them; To strive unceasingly to quicken the public's sense of civic duty; In all ways to aid in making this country greater and better than we found it."

The one important addition made during the year to the list of periodicals from which reviews are cut is The Times [London] Literary Supplement. To meet the request for more information on technical books we have added in this cumulation quotations from the Quarterly List of New Technical and Industrial Books issued by the Pratt Institute Free Library. This list complete will be found at the end of the volume.

Publications from which Digests of Reviews are Made

- Am. Econ. R.—American Economic Review. $5. American Economic Association, Ithaca, N. Y.
 Am. Hist. R.—American Historical Review. $4. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.
 Am. J. Soc.—American Journal of Sociology. $2. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Am. J. Theol.—American Journal of Theology. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 A. L. A. Bkl.—A. L. A. Booklist. $1. A. L. A. Publishing Board, 78 E. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
 Am. Pol. Sci. R.—American Political Science Review. $3. American Political Science Ass'n, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
 Ann. Am. Acad.—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. $6. 36th and Woodland Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.
 Astrophys. J.—Astrophysical Journal. $5. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Ath.—Athenæum. $4. Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E. C., London.
 Atlan.—Atlantic Monthly. $4. Atlantic Monthly Company, 3 Park St., Boston, Mass.
 Bib. World.—Biblical World. $2. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Bookm.—Bookman. $3. Dodd, Mead & Co., 4th Ave. & 30th St., New York.
 Bot. Gaz.—Botanical Gazette. $7. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Cath. World.—Catholic World. $3. 120-122 W. 60th St., New York.
 Class. J.—Classical Journal. $2.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Class. Philol.—Classical Philology. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Dial—Dial. $3. 608 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
 Educ. R.—Educational Review. $3. Educational Review Pub. Co., Columbia Univ., N. Y.
 Elec. World.—Electrical World. $3. McGraw Publishing Co., 239 West 39th St., New York.
 El. School J.—Elementary School Journal (continuing Elementary School Teacher). $1.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Engin. N.—Engineering News. $5. Hill Publishing Co., 10th Ave. at 36th St., New York.
 Engin. Rec.—Engineering Record. $5. McGraw Publishing Co., 239 West 39th St., New York.
 Eng. Hist. R.—English Historical Review. $6. Longmans, Green & Co., 39 Paternoster Row, London, E. C.
 Forum—Forum. $2.50. Forum Publishing Co., 286 Fifth Ave., New York.
 Hibbert J.—Hibbert Journal. $2.50. Sherman, French & Co., 6 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.
 Ind.—Independent. $4. 119 W. 40th St., New York.
 Int. J. Ethics—International Journal of Ethics. $2.50. Prof. James H. Tufts, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
 Int. Studio—International Studio. $5. John Lane Co., 116-120 West 32d St., New York.
 J. Geol.—Journal of Geology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 J. Philos.—Journal of Philosophy, Psychology and Scientific Methods. $3. Sub-Station 84, New York.
 J. Pol. Econ.—Journal of Political Economy. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Lit. D.—Literary Digest. $3. Funk & Wagnalls Company, 354-360 Fourth Ave., New York.
 Nation—Nation. $4. P. O. Box 794, New York.
 Nature—Nature. $7.75. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.
 New Repub.—New Republic. $4. Republic Publishing Co., Inc., 421 W. 21st St., New York.
 N. Y. Times—New York Times Book Review. $1. Times Square, New York.
 No. Am.—North American Review. $4. North American Review Pub. Co., 171 Madison Ave., New York.
 Outlook—Outlook. $4. Outlook Co., 381 4th Ave., New York.
 Pol. Sci. Q.—Political Science Quarterly. $3. Ginn & Co., 70 Fifth Ave., New York.
 Pub. W.—Publishers' Weekly. $5. 241 W. 37th St., New York.
 R. of Rs.—American Review of Reviews. $3. Review of Reviews Co., 30 Irving Place, New York.
 Sat. R.—Saturday Review. $8. 10 King St., Covent Garden, London, W. C.
 School R.—School Review. $1.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Science, n. s.—Science (new series). $5. Science Press, Sub-Station 84, New York.
 Spec.—Spectator. $8. 1 Wellington St., Strand, London, W. C.
 Springfield Republican—Springfield Republican. $10. The Republican, Springfield, Mass.
 Survey—Survey. $3. Survey Associates, Inc., 112 E. 19th St., New York.
 The Times [London] Lit. Sup.—The Times Literary Supplement. $2.10. The Times, North American office, 30 Church St., New York.
 Yale R., n. s.—Yale Review (new series). $2.50. Yale Publishing Ass'n, 209 Elm St., New Haven, Conn.

In addition to the above list the Book Review Digest frequently quotes from Henry Turner Bailey's reviews in the School Arts Magazine (formerly School Arts Book); Boston Transcript; Cleveland Open Shelf; N. Y. Best Books; N. Y. Libraries; N. Y. City Branch Library News; New York Public Library New Technical Books (a selected list, published quarterly); Pittsburgh Monthly Bulletin; Pratt Institute Quarterly Book List; Wisconsin Library Bulletin (Book Selection Dept.), and the Quarterly List of New Technical and Industrial Books chosen by the Pratt Institute Library.

OTHER ABBREVIATIONS:

- Abbreviations of publishers' names will be found in the Publishers' Directory at the end of the August number.
 An asterisk (*) before the price indicates those books sold at a limited discount and commonly known as net books.
 The figures following publisher's name represent the class number and Library of Congress card number.
 The descriptive note is separated from critical notices of a book by a dash.
 The plus and minus signs preceding the names of the magazine indicate the degrees of favor or disfavor of the entire review.
 In the reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review.

Book Review Digest

Devoted to the Valuation of Current Literature

Reviews of 1916 Books

AARONSOHN, ALEXANDER. With the Turks in Palestine. il *$1.25 (7c) Houghton 940.91 16-21211

During his residence in the United States, the author was connected with the Department of agriculture and when he returned to his native home in Palestine in 1913 it was for the purpose of taking motion-pictures that could be used to illustrate lectures in America. He was still engaged in this work in 1914 when the war broke out, and altho he had taken out "first papers" as an American citizen, he was impressed into service in the Turkish army. The story of his experiences as a soldier and of his escape, first written for the Atlantic Monthly, is told in this book.

"Interesting, specially as it is the only book dealing with war conditions in Palestine."

+ A L A Bkl 13:214 F '17

Ind 88:329 N 20 '16 80w

ABBOTT, JAMES FRANCIS. Japanese expansion and American policies. *$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 327.52 16-2389

The author, sometime instructor in the Imperial Japanese naval academy, is of the opinion that war between Japan and the United States, if it should come, would be largely our own fault. This is the chief reason why Americans should inform themselves concerning Japan and our relations with her. He sums up the contents of his book as follows: "The first three chapters I have devoted to a brief historical résumé, in order that the reader may orient himself with respect to the whole problem. The next four chapters deal with the material upon which is based the central conclusion of the book—that war with America would be national suicide for Japan. The last two chapters are an appeal to Americans to recognize Japan's aspirations as an oriental power, in the belief that it will be to our own advantage to do so." (Preface)

+ A L A Bkl 12:315 Ap '16

"Lucid and interesting. . . . Under present conditions of excitement and suspicion it would be most wholesome for this book to have large reading." I. S.

+ Ann Am Acad 67:315 S '16 250w

"This is a much-needed book. It should be read by all leaders of public opinion and by all conscientious voters."

+ Bib World 47:412 Je '16 400w

"A sober and well-reasoned study. He presents a sympathetic account of the development of Japan in the Meiji era, points out her present problems, and finds their solution in the industrial and commercial field, with China as her most vital market. . . . In the three historical chapters a number of errors of fact are found. Both Professor Abbott and Mr. Crow keep alive the fiction that Great Britain revised her treaty with Japan in 1894 because of the latter's success in the war with China. As a matter of fact, the treaty was signed before war was declared." P. J. Treat

+ — Dial 61:21 Je 22 '16 170w

+ Ind 86:304 My 22 '16 90w

"The author's history is untrustworthy throughout. . . . There is a persistent unfairness to Great Britain. . . . He fails to mention that the basis of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, so far as it concerns China, is the guarding of her territory from dismemberment. . . . In his chapter on 'The Monroe doctrine East and West,' the author reveals a strange lack of acquaintance with its history and evolution."

— Nation 103:202 Ag 31 '16 2050w

N Y Br Lib News 3:39 Mr '16

"The book is just such a calm and sane looking in the face of facts and treating them in a reasonable way as the Japanese situation needs. We have heard far too many of those prophecies of inevitable war which would be themselves a most potent factor in bringing it about. It is now the part of wisdom to heed this sane and quiet voice which says that if there should be war with Japan it would be our own fault."

+ N Y Times 21:38 Ja 30 '16 1150w

+ N Y Times 21:226 My 28 '16 280w

"Mr. Abbott's review of Japanese history seems to us to be both illuminating and entirely fair in its explanation of Japan's past relations with China and of Japanese policy in Korea and Manchuria."

+ R of Rs 53:501 Ap '16 100w

St Louis 14:182 My '16 30w

Reviewed by L. T. Chapman

+ Seven Seas 2:37 My '16 90w

"Dr. Abbott's book is eminently sensible."

+ Spring'd Republican p15 Mr 10 '16 570w

Reviewed by K. H. Claghorn

Survey 37:314 D 16 '16 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Ap 27 '16 50w

ABELSON, PAUL, ed. English-Yiddish encyclopedic dictionary; a complete lexicon and work of reference in all departments of knowledge. il $5 Jewish press pub. co., 77 Bowery, N. Y. 492.5 15-16016

A book for the Jewish-American. It is designed for the purpose of helping the Jewish immigrant to understand his new American environment.

"The most comprehensive work of its kind."

+ A L A Bkl 12:407 Je '16

ABRAHAM, GEORGE DIXON. On Alpine heights and British crags. il *$2.50 (3c) Houghton 796 A16-640

A book of mountain climbing adventures by the author of "The complete mountaineer," "British mountain climbs," and other works. Many of the climbs described were taken in the Dolomites, in a part of the Austrian Tyrol which has since become the ground of battle between Austria and Italy. The peaks of England, Scotland and Wales were the scenes of other adventures. There are also chapters devoted to: The work of the Alpine guide, How to climb safely, Winter sport mountaineering, and With the birds of prey on the crags. The twenty-three illustrations from photographs admirably suit the text; they show the beauty of the country described, and give an idea of some of the difficulties encountered by the mountaineer.

ABRAHAM, GEORGE DIXON—Continued

- + A L A Bkl 12:414 Je '16
Boston Transcript p22 F 2 '16 550w
- + Nation 102:709 Je 29 '16 1500w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:44 Mr '16
- R of Rs 53:504 Ap '16 50w

ADAM, H. PEARL, ed. International cartoons of the war. il *$1.50 Dutton 940.91
(Eng ed 16-16732)

"The measure of a man may safely be taken by his sense of humor, particularly where he himself is involved. So with nations. The cartoons which a nation produces, particularly at such a time as the present, have a peculiar, not to say, significant interest. . . . Among the sixty-odd drawings contained in this volume are representative cartoons from English, Italian, American, Japanese, Russian, Polish, French, and German sources. Assembled thus in a single book they afford the student of humanity a deal of information."—Dial

- + Dial 61:478 N 30 '16 110w
- Ind 88:329 N 20 '16 40w
- + Springfield Republican p15 S 17 '16 320w

ADAMS, ARTHUR BARTO. Marketing perishable farm products. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) pa *$1.50 Longmans 338 16-14602

"This monograph deals with the marketing of only 'perishable' farm products, in which category the author includes vegetables, fruits, and dairy and poultry products." (J Pol Econ) "His solution of the present waste of at least a third of the truck farmer's effort lies mainly in the improvement of facilities for wholesale trade in the towns; standardizing of packages; prompt spreading of market news; and, in some regions, cooperative selling by the farmers and chain stores or some form of cooperative retailing." (Ind)

- + A L A Bkl 13:57 N '16
- Ind 87:463 S 25 '16 120w

"Although this treatise contains much valuable information and many helpful ideas, it is open to adverse criticism on many points. One fundamental defect arises from the attempt to segregate perishables and treat them as one class. These commodities are not a 'fairly homogeneous class' from the marketing standpoint, as stated in the preface (p. 5). . . . Faulty distribution among markets is grossly exaggerated by the author. . . . The whole work gives one the impression that possibly the author had preconceived notions, which still show themselves in some of the chapter headings and statements of problems involved, but which are not borne out by the actual facts gathered and presented in the monograph." L. D. H. Weld
+ — J Pol Econ 24:811 O '16 930w

ADAMS, CHARLES FRANCIS. Charles Francis Adams, 1835-1915; an autobiography. il *$3 (4c) Houghton 16-6471

Two years before his death in 1915 Charles Francis Adams sent a sealed package to the Massachusetts historical society, saying that it was "an autobiographical sketch," that might be used later in the preparation of a memoir. On examination the "sketch" was found to be a complete autobiography and it is here printed in full as it came from his hands. His attitude toward life and toward himself is critical and his analysis of the shortcomings of his own early education and the training received at Harvard are of particular interest and value. There are chapters on: Youth and education; Law and politics; Washington, 1861; War and army life; Public service and history. The memorial address by Henry Cabot Lodge is printed as an introduction.

"The main matter of the book is the portrait of the author himself. Frans Hals could not have made it more vivid."

- + Am Hist R 21:834 Jl '16 850w
- + A L A Bkl 12:424 Je '16

"This self-restraint,—even, in the desire to be just, this failure to be fair to self,—serves to make clear that which was Adams's greatest attribute both as man and writer,—his absolute intellectual and moral integrity, so taken for granted by friend and foe alike, that none was ever known to question it." E. D. Adams

- + Dial 60:461 My 11 '16 3000w

"Mr. Adams's book is a veritable storehouse of intimate knowledge, of anecdotes, of striking incidents relating to his great contemporaries—Lincoln, Sumner, Seward, Douglas."

- + Lit D 52:1707 Je 10 '16 1750w

"If he destroyed his diary, what might he not have done to this autobiography! Not that we would have missed it for much. The real Adams comes out in it. The hues of his pencil are not too sombre to disguise him entirely. Many a racy passage in the volume begs for quotation."

- + Nation 102:436 Ap 20 '16 1200w

"His autobiography will be read as long as readers want to know what it was like to be born a Puritan leader. It is a book to read and keep and reread, amusing, sad, tonic, courageous, vivid, pugnacious. It is a record of New England at its best, of energetic toil without high spirits, of a self-distrust that has unflinching eyes." P. L.

- + New Repub 6:297 Ap 15 '16 1100w
- + N Y Times 21:524 N 26 '16 60w

"The earlier chapters have somewhat the fascination of the best of novels of the modern school—the school which joins keen interest in life as an adventure to the lucidity of realism and of an emancipated point of view. The story vibrates to the note of reality—the reality of intense life and conviction."

- + No Am 203:773 My '16 1200w

"I know of no formal history that leaves on the mind so vivid an impression of the blank uncertainty, the vain optimism alternating with hopeless despair, which prevailed in Washington during the winter of 1861." Carl Becker

- + Pol Sci Q 31:611 D '16 900w
- + R of Rs 53:629 My '16 140w
- St Louis 14:198 My '16 20w

"As racy and candid a record of an interesting life as has been written in recent years. There are absorbing and important chapters—particularly those containing his recollections of Washington before and after the war. His own and his family's connection with historic events is reflected with the modesty which underlies all this remarkable record of criticism and self-depreciation."

- + Springfield Republican p15 Ap 2 '16 2500w

Reviewed by E. M. Chapman

- + Yale R n s 6:189 O '16 1600w

ADAMS, HELEN MORTIMER. When mother lets us model. ("When mother lets us" ser.) il *75c Moffat 372.5 16-26541

"Filled with directions for making interesting things of clay—beads and dishes for dolly for the youngest children, vases, pots, and candlesticks for the older boys and girls."—A L A Bkl

"Will be suggestive to mothers and teachers."

- + A L A Bkl 12:486 Jl '16

"Practical suggestions for working with clay, written less patronizingly than some of the other books of this series. Many helpful illustrations and direct instructions."

- + Wis Lib Bull 12:272 Je '16 24w

ADAMS, HENRY FOSTER. Advertising and its mental laws. il *$1.50 (1½c) Macmillan 659 16-21566

A book intended primarily for students, altho the author expresses a hope that it may be of value too to the man interested in advertising from the practical side. The book consists of a discussion of the basic facts and principles of psychology as related to advertising, an analysis of printed advertisements and description of laboratory tests, with a comparison between such tests and the results of actual advertising campaigns. Contents: Definitions and functions of advertising; Advertising and psychology; Advertising as a part of the environment; The different kinds of mediums; Informing the customer; Experiments in advertising; Statistical methods; Attention; Holding the attention; Association; Fusions; Memory; The appearance of advertisements; Action; Sex differences; Results obtained in advertising. The author is instructor in psychology at the University of Michigan.

"Fuller and more concrete than Scott's 'Psychology of advertising' (A. L. A. Catalog 1904-1911)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:203 F '17

"Summarizes much of value in other studies and adds a great deal of new material, the result largely of extension laboratory investigations among students. The book teems with information and practical suggestions for the scientific advertiser, while at the same time it has its attraction for the psychologist on account of the thoroughly sound method revealed in almost all the investigation."

+ Dial 61:591 D 28 '16 330w

N Y Br Lib News 3:189 D '16

St Louis 15:14 Ja '17

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 28 '16 200w

ADAMS, JOHN DUNCAN. When mother lets us carpenter. ("When mother lets us" ser.) il *75c Moffat 680 16-9288

"This book does not try to teach the abstract principles of carpentry, but to show the boy or girl how to do things that 'develop the child's creative faculty.' . . . Candleholders, brush-holders, match-holders, bookracks, flower-brackets, slipper-boxes and other substantial things are among the objects that young readers of this practical book may learn to make."—Springfield Republican

"For younger children than Verrill's 'The amateur carpenter.'"

+ A L A Bkl 12:486 J1 '16

"These word descriptions would appear to be rather indefinite and hard to follow, but they would doubtless provide inventive children with many ideas."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 18 '16 180w

+ Ind 88:405 D 4 '16 50w

St Louis 14:442 D '16

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 27 '16 90w

ADAMS, JOHN QUINCY. Writings of John Quincy Adams; ed. by Worthington C. Ford. 12v v 5-6 ea $3.50 Macmillan 308

v 5 and 6 The fifth volume covers the years 1814-1816. "Of particular interest to American readers of the present day is the account which he gives of the peace negotiations at Ghent, and of his activities in Great Britain in the early part of 1816. Almost the last letter in the fifth volume, written from London, is concerned with the relations of the United States to Spain." (Dial) "The sixth volume, which deals with the years from 1816 to 1819 discovers Adams living in England, and busily engaged in discussing with Lord Castlereagh, Minister for foreign affairs, the many questions which came up in regard to the fisheries and to commerce relations. The letters begin so soon after the close of the second war with England, that it seems remarkable to read Adams's opinion, that this was a war on which the young nation should not look with pride. . . . Among the personal elements to be found in the letters are his observations to his mother, Abigail Adams, of the life of the English court, of his personal relations with different Englishmen and of the bringing up of his children who were with him in England." (Boston Transcript)

+ Am Hist R 22:180 O '16 830w (Review of v 6)

A L A Bkl 12:111 D '15 (Review of v 5)

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 8 '16 1000w (Review of v 6)

Reviewed by S. L. Sioussat

+ Dial 60:279 Mr 16 '16 850w (Review of v 2-6)

Reviewed by H. E. Egerton

Eng Hist R 30:730 O '15 1300w (Review of v 1-5)

Ind 87:69 J1 10 '16 50w (Review of v 6)

Nation 103:66 J1 20 '16 370w (Review of v 6)

R of Rs 53:755 Je '16 20w (Review of v 6)

"The 753 pages of the volume cover only four years, none of them marked by any world-shaking events. . . . For the present-day reader the proper place for all but a small number [of the despatches] would seem to be a State paper office. Still that small number deals with subjects about which one is always glad to have fresh contemporary evidence, and it so happens that some are of particular interest just now. We refer to the economic problems with which England and her government were faced immediately after the peace."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p331 J1 13 '16 890w (Review of v 6)

ADAMS, SAMUEL HOPKINS. Unspeakable Perk. il $1.25 (2c) Houghton 16-15844

A story of romantic adventure in a Caribbean island republic. For reasons known only to his own scientific mind, the man called Perkins chooses to go disguised behind disfiguring goggles. Polly Brewster, the wilful American heiress who has trifled light-heartedly with his affections, regarding him as in some way akin to the beetles he studies, experiences a shock when she first sees him in an ungoggled state, so to speak. She learns that in appearance as in spirit, the "Unspeakable Perk" is very much a man. By implication the story offers a tribute to the Public health service and the new kind of courage that it calls forth.

+ A L A Bkl 13:33 O '16

"A clever novelette." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:65 S '16 280w

"There is no part of the story in which the skill of the author comes more to the front than the way in which he gathers up his tangled threads and springs his two surprising facts. The naturalness of it all and the fact that no one of the characters has to step out of his part to bring about the dénouement closes the story upon a particularly successful note." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 2 '16 600w

+ Lit D 53:1039 O 21 '16 190w

"A decided improvement on the author's earlier 'Little Miss Grouch.'"

+ N Y Times 21:309 Ag 6 '16 500w

"While undeniably whimsical and amusing, it is not the best work Samuel Hopkins Adams is capable of producing. . . . On its own level it is an entertaining vacation tale."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 20 '16 350w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 50w

ADDAMS, JANE. Long road of woman's memory. $1.25 (4c) Macmillan 396 16-22671

A book offering studies of the social value of memory. The function of memory seems, from the testimony brought together by Miss Addams, to be two-fold: it transmutes the past, softening its harshness and beautifying its barrenness, and it throws certain events into high relief, measuring personal experiences against accepted traditions. Thus, while it tends to preserve conventions, it offers a challenge to them. In its second function memory exercises a power of selection which tends to set new social standards. The event which brought much of the personal testimony on which the book is based to the author's notice was the sudden spreading of a rumor to the effect that Hull house sheltered a "Devil baby." Different race groups offered varying versions of the legend but in each case it was a matter of wrong doing and retribution, and the story made its special appeal to the old women who have had in their keeping the "mores" of the race. Their tongues were loosed and strange tales from bitter experience with life were poured into sympathetic ears, all contributing something to an understanding of the part humble women play in shaping social culture. Another part of the book is drawn from the author's experience in the war zone.

ADDAMS, JANE—Continued

"Appeared in the Atlantic Monthly."

+ A L A Bkl 13:146 Ja '17

"Powerful in descriptive touches, incisively human, dramatic, ironic, cumulatively tense and refreshingly personal." Sam Schmalhausen

+ N Y Call p15 D 10 '16 380w

"While, as we have said, her style is lucid and engaging, her work is not easy reading. It is too acutely reasoned, too deeply thought for that; but it cannot be read without profound interest, or without substantial profit."

+ N Y Times 22:30 Ja 28 '17 310w

+ Outlook 115:118 Ja 17 '17 50w

"She completes a fine, thoughtful, and suggestive work with a chapter on her own personal interpretative memory."

+ R of Rs 55:213 F '17 160w

"The individual stories which Miss Addams reports at first hand are worth reading; and one doubts sometimes whether the stories without the theory would not have made a better book, especially as she has a literary style which is singularly heavy-footed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p628 D 21 '16 120w

ADDERLEY, REV. JAMES (GRANVILLE). In slums and society. $1.50 Dutton 16-22365

"Canon Adderley has given us an autobiography which is a string of amusing stories intermixed with shrewd observations on things ecclesiastical, dramatic, political, and literary. But the ecclesiastical chapter is as long as the three others put together, and an ecclesiastical flavour runs through the whole book."—Spec

+ A L A Bkl 13:120 D '16

"Less a book to be read at a sitting than one to be picked up from time to time, to be read aloud and talked about. . . . Intimate and charming from cover to cover."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 11 '16 540w

+ Dial 61:473 N 30 '16 150w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:140 S '16

+ N Y Times 21:434 O 15 '16 610w

+ Pratt p38 O '16 20w

"The author, honorary canon of Birmingham and vicar of St. Gabriel's, is at present acting as an army chaplain."

St Louis 14:440 D '16 20w

"There is hardly one of the friends of Canon Adderley in this book—Lang, Temple, Benson, Gore, Scott Holland, Stanton, Creighton—who is not abounding in humanity, of whom some good story cannot be told. As to the author himself, his career is a witness. The man who has been an actor and a socialist as well as a parson can claim a tolerable breadth of experience; and the man who can tell good stories against himself sufficiently establishes his humour—a humour, be it noted, able to live with a high seriousness and a complete devotion to his calling."

+ Sat R 121:161 F 12 '16 1350w

+ Spec 116:529 Ap 22 '16 750w

"The rich humor of the book never totally obscures the fine and humane religion, the intense love of spiritual personalities, the desire for social justice, which are plainly the deeper elements in the author's nature."

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 7 '16 1100w

ADLER, MRS. HAZEL (HYMAN). New interior; modern decorations for the modern home. il $3 (5c) Century 747 16-22794

"The new point of view in the decoration of the home may be characterized as the artist's as opposed to the upholsterer's," says the author. She believes that the time has come when we may sever our dependence upon other times and other countries and that we have the ability to found a new decorative period to be known as "twentieth-century American." Some of the chapters take up: Modern ideas in walls, furniture, and fabrics; The emancipation of the dining table; Children's rooms; Little houses, cottages, and bungalows; The possibilities of the city apartment; Making over old houses; A new system of color organization. The book is well illustrated from photographs and from designs in color.

"Calculated to please those possessed of both taste and a comfortable income as well as a liking for what is aesthetically satisfying in the minutest details of their home environment."

+ Dial 61:478 N 30 '16 190w

"Surely one of the most interesting of the season's books. You may not agree with its theory; you may not like its examples of 'modern decoration for the modern home,'—this making of a room a work of art in itself. . . . But the chapters and the pictures will set the house furnisher thinking, even questioning the use or the beauty of some conventional purchases."

+ Ind 89:73 Ja 8 '17 200w

"The intentions of the author are good, but there is little of value in the book. . . . There are not enough evidences of long, serious study and eye-training; and too many evidences of sketchy professionalism, reinforced by a feminine plausibility." Herman Kobbe

— N Y Call p14 N 26 '16 130w

+ N Y Times 21:567 D 24 '16 400w

St Louis 15:16 Ja '17

AFANASIEV, ALEKSANDR NIKOLAEVICH. Russian folk-tales; tr. with introd. and notes by Leonard A. Magnus. $2 Dutton 393.3 16-15196

"There are few readers of English who have any extensive acquaintance with the limitless wealth of Russian folk-lore. The collection of Afanasev, who, with others, gathered the traditional chronicles, epic songs, and folk-tales from all parts of Russia, remains almost unknown. Mr. Magnus has found his principal sources in this vast collection and has translated the seventy-five folk-tales chosen as literally and accurately as possible in order to preserve their unpolished and elemental beauty."—N Y Times

"A contribution of real worth is here made to the literature of the world's folk-lore. There is humor in the tales, but mere fun is seldom met and broad, boisterous fun never." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 8 '16 470w

"Russian fairy stories differ essentially from the Celtic in the absence of the whimsical and from the German in the lack of homely, intimate touches. The Russian superhumans are saints, witches, wizards, and good fortune comes not from cleverness or integrity but from pure luck or from kindness. Kindness is the great virtue."

+ Ind 86:550 Je 26 '16 220w

"Nature is alive and always impressive, but there are no personifications of nature. . . . Considered in their entirety, the outstanding feature in these tales is their endeavor to give a faithful transcription of life as it exists. Facts flow along in succession as they take place, with no moral, no judgment, no philosophy about them. Everything seems natural and real. The vitality and energy of every fact is inherent and does not depend on something from without."

+ N Y Times 21:251 Je 18 '16 650w

"Literally speaking—if such a word can be used in connexion with those delightful beings—there are no fairies. Yet the stories contain all the elements of the fairy-tales which were the delight of most of us when children."

+ Spec 116:230 F 12 '16 380w

"The translator has supplied an adequate introduction, with fairly extensive notes and a glossary. If he errs it is on the side of meticulousness."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 13 '16 500w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

AGG, TANSY RADFORD. Construction of roads and pavements. il *$3 McGraw 625 16-17111

"Professor Agg's book is the most recent contribution to college textbooks on road construction, and it will be found a useful one. . . . The contents, cited in order, are: The development of highway systems, surveys and plans, design of rural highways, construction and maintenance of earth roads, testing nonbituminous materials, sand-clay roads, gravel roads, waterbound macadam pavements, concrete, vitrified brick, wood-block, stone-block, bituminous pavements, dust layers and bituminous carpets, penetration and mixed macadam pavements, sheet asphalt and asphaltic concrete, selection of class of pavement, design of pavements and tests of bituminous materials."—Engin N

+ Engin N 76:745 O 19 '16 180w

"As a whole, the book is concise and well arranged. It gives data that will be of great assistance to the student, and will make an exceedingly valuable book of reference for the engineer who has the actual charge of designing and constructing roads and pavements. It is a desirable addition to existing highway literature, and no highway engineer's library will be complete without it." H: G. Shirley

+ Engin Rec 74:418 S 30 '16 350w
N Y Br Lib News 3:154 O '16

"It is largely a compilation, the sources of information being current periodical literature and other treatises on highway construction, but in the main the material has been well selected. Especially valuable are the examples of good practice following the discussions on the various types of roadways." (Canadian Engineer, Sept. 28, 1916) Also reviewed in Good Roads, Oct. 7, 1916; Municipal Journal, Oct. 12, 1916."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 N '16 190w
Pittsburgh 21:496 N '16
St Louis 14:395 N '16

AIKEN, CONRAD POTTER. Turns and movies, and other tales in verse. (New poetry ser.) *75c Houghton 811 16-6639

"Turns and movies" is made up of fifteen short sketches, each giving a picture of stage life. The titles are the familiar ones of vaudeville acts, Rose and Murray, The Apollo trio, Aerial Dodds, and so on. Following these are four longer poems: "Discordants," "Evensong," "Disenchantment: a tone poem," "This dance of life: Earth triumphant, part two." "Turns and movies" was first printed in the Poetry Journal, "Discordants" in Poetry.

"The fifteen series of tales, brief etchings of theatrical life, which constitute 'Turns and movies,' powerful, incisive, sordid, and acid as they are, have nothing of that quieter, inflowing charm and beauty which is more intimately Mr. Aiken's quality. These poems have a kind of fascination it is true, but it is the fascination of literature and not of life." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 25 '16 1650w

"One word will characterize the pictures—the word bloodshot. . . . His lapses in taste are flaws in art." O. W. Firkins

— Nation 104:44 Ja 11 '17 350w

"Raw realism in combination with poetic fervor and a passion for truth."

+ R of Rs 53:762 Je '16 30w

"One cannot find fault with realism for being real, or with naturalism for being natural, but one feels that Mr. Aiken has overstepped the bounds and gone over into something that is a kind of supernaturalism and a murky place withal. That all this is often presented in fitting and beautiful words, and with a mastery of the technic of verse is beside the point."

+ Spring'd Republican p13 My 28 '16 330w

"He is not at all concerned with poetic visions or with the production of beautiful lines or phrases. It is the central facts of human life—not the passionless pageant of nature—that enthral him; and by the method, not of suggestion, but of exactly detailed record, he builds up pictures of vivid mordant actuality."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p11 Ja 4 '17 200w

AIKEN, MRS. EDNAH (ROBINSON). Hate breeders; a drama of war and peace in one act and five scenes; with an introd. by Henri La Fontaine. *75c Bobbs 812 16-9156

The first scene of this play shows a German field hospital. A young soldier, severely wounded, is going under ether, begging up to his last conscious moment to be allowed to die. Then in the scenes that follow are enacted the memories that surge through his mind as he sinks into unconsciousness—his last stand as a socialist against war, the breaking of his will and his submission to the inevitable, the horrors of the battlefield to one whose soul revolted against killing. And the final scene goes back again to the hospital room. The operation has been successful; another soldier has been patched up, ready to be sent back to fight again.

"The doctrine expounded in this play is the glorified gospel of non-resistance. . . . It is dramatic; it has a certain appeal. But it is based on facts that are about as profound and logical as is the air from which Mrs. Aiken has plucked them. . . . The sentiments disclosed in this play do credit to none concerned in its making."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 30 '16 260w

"The familiar arguments against militarism have seldom been grouped more tersely or effectively, but the demonstration of an evil is one thing and the abolition of it, unfortunately, is another. The problem, to which no solution has yet been found, is how universal brotherhood is to be brought about. The dramatist does not offer much aid in this direction."

+ Nation 103:616 D 28 '16 300w

N Y Br Lib News 3:74 My '16

AITKEN, SIR WILLIAM MAXWELL. Canada in Flanders. maps *50c (1c) Doran 940.91 (Eng ed 16-6246)

The author, a former Montreal business man, now living in England and serving as a member of Parliament, has written an account of the part played in the early fighting of 1914 by the Canadian expeditionary force. He went to the front with his countrymen and writes as an eye-witness. Contents: Mobilisation; Warfare; Neuve Chapelle; Ypres; A wave of battle; Festubert; Givenchy; Princess Patricia's light infantry; The prime minister; The Canadian corps. The book has a preface by A. Bonar Law, secretary of state for the colonies and an introduction by Sir Robert Borden, prime minister of Canada. The appendixes list rewards and honors.

+ Cath World 103:402 Je '16 220w

+ Ind 86:218 My 8 '16 160w

"Not only of vital contemporary interest, but will also prove of considerable service to the future historian."

+ Nation 103:114 Ag 3 '16 310w

"Not the least valuable portion of the book is the series of maps which shows the varying positions of the Canadians from hour to hour during that historic fight [Ypres]. While the historian, as he reads these pages, will find that he is provided with information of the utmost value, the ordinary reader will be stirred by the stories of valor contained therein."

+ N Y Times 21:187 Ap 30 '16 350w

"It has been hailed in England as one of the great war books of the year and is now in its tenth edition. All Canadians feel especial pride in the valor displayed by Canadian troops in the battles of Ypres, Neuve Chapelle, Givenchy, and Festubert. These are all described in detail in this compact volume."

+ R of Rs 53:628 My '16 120w

AKSAKOV, SERGEI TIMOFEIEVICH. Years of childhood tr. from the Russian by J. D. Duff. il *$3 Longmans A16-609

"Serge Aksakoff lived from 1791 to 1859. He was born in the district of Orenburg, at Ufa,

AKSAKOV, S. T.—Continued

where his father held an office in the law courts. His grandfather was an important landowner at Aksakovo, and Serge, after his father, inherited the estates. At the age of eight he went to school at Kazan, and eight years later, when many of his class-mates joined the army to fight against Napoleon, he left Kazan university. . . . 'Years of childhood,' published in 1858, was Aksakoff's last book written 'when he was nearly blind, a prisoner in his room, and suffering constant pain for which death was the only cure; yet he never once alludes to the conditions under which it was written.' . . . In 'Years of childhood' Aksakoff summons into literary presence all the graphic memories of his early boyhood, down to the winter of 1799, when he went to school at Kazan."—Sat R

+ A L A Bkl 12:477 J1 '16

"No understanding of Russian literature is complete without a knowledge of the life and work of Sergei Timofeevitch Aksakoff. . . . Biography such as this does more than introduce another Russian to the western world. It brings with it a view and an understanding not merely of the life of a little boy in Russia at the beginning of the nineteenth century, but also a clear series of pictures of the rural Russia of that period." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 1 '16 1300w

+ Ind 86:550 Je 26 '16 60w

+ Pittsburgh 21:422 O '16 100w

"Thus to turn one's boyhood into art is to gain from facts a most intimate tale of wonder, every childhood being its own fairy-tale. That Aksakoff has never been translated into any language is an oversight very difficult to pardon; but now, at last, he is happy in an excellent interpreter."

+ Sat R 121:210 F 26 '16 670w

"We have what happened to the child exactly as it appeared to the child—told so well, indeed, that it has become a Russian classic—but giving us only a child's account of what he saw, felt, and thought. Nor is this the only wonder in the book."

+ Spec 116:754 Je 17 '16 850w

ALDINGTON, RICHARD. Images—old and new. (Contemporary ser.) *60c Four seas co. 822

"This is Mr. Aldington's first book. Hitherto his work has only appeared in book form in the various Imagist anthologies. [The American] edition contains seven more poems than are in the English edition, of which 'Steale,' 'Lesbia,' and 'Scents' are so good that their non-inclusion in the English copy is hard to understand. . . . In the American edition the poems are placed in no apparent order; but the English edition has distinct divisions, the volume being separated into two parts. The first part contains poems inspired partly by reading, partly by nature; in the second part all the poems are inspired by direct experience."—Poetry Review

"What you feel is not that haphazard choice of subject which any collection of poems might present; but something deeper, a conveyance of spirit between two worlds of experience. Mr Aldington has the imagination to evoke these states realistically. He is remorselessly expressive in his moods, even to the point of being tenderly coarse." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '16 220w

"I am not sure but the palm for delicacy and indelicacy alike goes to Mr. Richard Aldington." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 104:44 Ja 11 '17 70w

"It is the Greeks who are responsible for most of the poems in the first part of 'Images.' And here it must be borne in mind that Mr. Aldington's scholarship has nothing pedantic in it. . . . No one can understand Mr. Aldington's work who does not understand that these things are second nature to him, and by no means a pose. The other great influence in Mr. Aldington's work has been the French." Amy Lowell

+ Poetry Review 1:11 Je '16 1350w

ALDINGTON, MRS. RICHARD (H. D., pseud.). Sea garden. (New poetry ser.) *75c Houghton 811

H. D. is one of the group represented in the annual volumes of "Some Imagist poets." In this volume she has collected twenty-eight poems, some of them reprinted from Poetry, The Egoist, Little Review and other journals devoted to the new in literature.

Ath p478 O '16 40w

"H. D., though sometimes she flashes a true picture before us as in 'Sea iris' or 'Hermes,' does not reveal much power of grasping the essential, or at any rate of giving it form in words. And she often leaves us puzzled as to what she wants to express by her images. . . . The reading of these compositions involves a good deal more labour than enjoyment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p479 O 5 '16 430w

ALDIS, MARY (REYNOLDS) (MRS. ARTHUR TAYLOR ALDIS). Flashlights. *$1.25 Duffield 811 16-11975

Vagrant thoughts—scraps of experiences common to most of us—grave ones and gay, here flash before the reader with clearest definition. City sketches compose the first group; the second includes retrospective themes; while the third tells seven stories in meter. If one is reflective by nature, he will like best the second group, containing among a number of pieces two, "Watchers" and "The beginning of the journey" which contrast the joy of human companionship thru life with the loneliness of going down into eternal mystery alone. Also in this same class is "Floodgates" which takes first the man's and then the woman's view of their life together after the fret and torment of youth are past, when both are struggling for holier ground on which to make more acceptable to each other the stronger service of maturity. The poems are reprinted from the Masses, the Survey, and other periodicals.

"She just presents life nakedly, takes no sides with this or that condition, holds no brief for this or that purpose, expressing only the pity and the glory of it, the impulses in its multitudinous moods and emotions. She gives one, too, a sense of security in the free forms that are used, which has only been attained by a few of the new writers." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 19 '16 420w

"The stories are at least pungent, quite apart from the form in which she has chosen to put them. The rhymed and metrical 'true' verse is mediocre, the 'new verse' is—the new verse.' . . . It is unfortunate that Mrs. Aldis has chosen to follow that new school which feels it absolutely incumbent upon itself to drag the gutters and sewers for its subjects."

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 5 '16 460w

ALDRICH, MILDRED. Told in a French garden, August, 1914. il *$1.25 (2c) Small 16-23086

This little volume is related to the author's earlier book, "A hilltop on the Marne," only in setting. In the tense days of August, 1914 a group of friends were gathered together in a French farmhouse. Thru the diversity of opinions occasioned by the crisis then approaching, friendship threatened to become strained, and to avoid a possible break some one proposed the ancient device of story telling. War stories were banned and each of the tales is drawn from the experience and reflects something of the personality of the teller. A lawyer, a doctor, a trained nurse, a journalist, a violinist and a sculptor are among those who tell the stories.

+ A L A Bkl 13:174 Ja '17

+ Lit D 53:1719 D 30 '16 280w

"It is the faithful psychology, the wordy inaction of the prologue that is arresting."

+ New Repub 9:105 N 25 '16 250w

"The spirit of the amateur authorship of each is delightfully maintained, and maintained with a skill that is eminently professional."

+ N Y Times 21:526 N 26 '16 780w

+ R of Rs 54:679 D '16 140w

"Only two of the collection rise above the average—'One woman's philosophy' and 'The night before the wedding.' The others are hackneyed and some lack even a fair plot."

— + Springfield Republican p6 N 21 '16 110w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 100w

ALEXANDER, DE ALVA STANWOOD. History and procedure of the House of representatives. *$2 (2c) Houghton 328.73

16-11176

The author took up his study of the history and procedure of the House of representatives at the suggestion of the late Thomas B. Reed. Notes supplied by Speaker Reed have been used as the basis for this book. Chapters are devoted to: Apportionment and qualification of members; The roll of members elect; Organization of the house; The speaker; The speaker and committee appointments; Other officers and the whip; Floor leaders; Privileges, pay, and obsequies of members; Creating and counting a quorum, etc. Thruout the history much attention is given to the personalities of men who were influential in establishing precedents and shaping customs.

"Particularly commendable are the absence of partizanship or special pleading, and the entire avoidance of any attempt to tell, under the guise of a history of the organization and procedure of the House, the political or constitutional history of the United States." W: MacDonald

+ Am Hist R 22:177 O '16 630w

"A thorough and trustworthy treatise."

+ A L A Bkl 13:57 N '16

"Several defects in Mr. Alexander's work may now be noted. His failure to discuss the influence of English precedent on the rules of the House of representatives is an important, if not serious omission. . . . Although the author devotes many pages to obstruction, it is curious that he failed to mention 'filibustering' the American form of this peculiar procedural device. . . . Finally, certain mechanical defects in the book are noticeable. The index is inadequate. . . . Nevertheless, the book is a valuable contribution to a highly important but too little known subject." G. W. Rutherford

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:775 N '16 1100w

+ Ann Am Acad 68:328 N '16 180w

"The author of this book was a member of each Congress from the fifty-fifth to the sixty-first inclusive. He writes of the House of representatives with warm enthusiasm and accurate knowledge. The result is a book which might well be read by intelligent students generally and read with unusual care by teachers and students of American politics." N. M. B.

+ Educ R 52:310 O '16 440w

"Students will welcome the appendix containing the list of speakers and chairmen of important committees from the first Congress to the present day."

+ Ind 87:70 JI 10 '16 70w

"His pages afford much information of a practical nature about parliamentary proceedings, worth every man's while to acquire."

+ Lit D 53:416 Ag 19 '16 190w

+ Nation 103:323 O 5 '16 1550w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:89 Je '16 40w

+ N Y Times 21:319 Ag 13 '16 90w

Pittsburgh 21:360 JI '16

"Curiously there exists no compact popular treatise on the procedure of the House, no clear and simple description of the law-making process. . . . It cannot be said that Dr. Alexander has supplied the deficiency. He has been concerned more with past developments than with present methods." E. M. Sait

+ — Pol Sci Q 31:629 D '16 870w

"One noteworthy feature of the book is the chapter of character studies of the more prominent floor leaders of the house, especially those who figured during the ten years preceding the civil war."

+ R of Rs 54:118 JI '16 90w

ALEXANDER, HARTLEY BURR. North American [mythology]. (Mythology of all races) 13v v 10 il $6 (7c) Jones, Marshall 291 16-13983

Volume 10 of the "Mythology of all races" and Volume 1 on Greek and Roman mythology by William Sherwood Fox are the first of the series to appear. Volume 10 is devoted to a study of the folklore of the primitive peoples of the North American continent north of Mexico and will be followed, in volume 11, by a treatment of the more highly developed southern races. The author has confined himself to a descriptive study based on regional divisions. "Criticism has been limited to the indication of suggestive analogies, to summaries in the shape of notes, and to the formulation of a general plan of selection." (Preface) The far north, The forest tribes, The gulf region, The great plains, Mountain and desert, The pueblo dwellers, The Pacific coast, west, and The Pacific coast, north, are the geographical divisions under which the subject is treated. The illustrations have been chosen "with a view to creating a clear impression of the art of the North American Indians, as well as for their pertinency to mythic ideas."

"As the author of this work is himself well aware, the recording and comparative study of the mythologies of American Indians, while proceeding rapidly, are as yet so incomplete that any work dealing with the subject is in the nature of the case temporary and superficial. It is high praise, therefore, when, as in the present case, one can say that an attempt in this field is admirably carried out, and the selection and arrangement of the material betray discrimination and good judgment. . . . Taken as a whole, this work fills a definite need in a worthy manner." J: R. Swanton

+ Am J Theol 21:141 Ja '17 650w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Monmouth

+ Bookm 44:302 N '16 730w

"George Foot Moore, the consulting editor, is well known at Harvard, where he is professor of the history of religion, and the work as planned [13 volumes] owes much to his broad knowledge and comprehensive grasp of the work in hand."

+ Boston Daily Advertiser Je 17 '16 2150w

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '16 1750w

"A splendid example of book-making, in binding, typography and illustration. . . . We assure all librarians that the series is so important that no library can afford to be without it."

+ Congregationalist Je 15 '16 250w

Reviewed by H. A. Clarke

+ Dial 61:258 O 5 '16 2900w

"No public or college library will be quite complete without this monumental work."

+ Express [Portland, Me.] Je 3 '16 400w

+ Int J Ethics 27:123 O '16 150w

"The method is that of statement and comment combined in the same narrative. The myths themselves are given mostly in the author's words, the quotations from native tellers of the stories are abundant. And the comparative method is constantly in evidence. So that the interrelations, similarities, or dissonances current in different regions are noted as the reader progresses. The results are pleasure in reading and economy in time and effort. A word of appreciation should be given to the publisher for a production preeminent for splendid type, excellent plates, attractive binding, and good proof-reading."

+ Lit D 53:471 Ag 26 '16 300w

"The method for the series is not comparative but presentative. Therefore the work will be of use rather to the general reader than to the technical student, although even to the latter some of the volumes may bring new information, so large is the scope of the series and so authoritative the standing of many of the authors."

ALEXANDER, HARTLEY BURR—Continued

+ N Y Times 21:377 S 24 '16 950w

+ North American [Phila.] Je 24 '16 280w
Pratt p9 O '16 20w

"Illustrations are unusual and of great interest not only to the archæologist, but to the student of art."

+ Pub W Je 10 '16 50w

"One who knows something of the vast jumble of material that in this volume has been whipped into shape, can best appreciate the difficulty of the task essayed by the author and it is a pleasure to call attention to the breadth of culture and sympathy he has brought to its accomplishment." A. C. Fletcher

+ Science n s 44:644 N 3 '16 720w

"The author's selection has been excellent. He has chosen in almost every case the most important myths, and he has told them well. The book is commendably readable and intensely interesting throughout. The notes are well selected, as are the reference works in the bibliography."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 1850w

"The volume contains a useful body of supplementary notes, a comprehensive bibliography, and a large map showing in colors the linguistic distribution of the North American aborigines."

+ Sun [New York] Je 25 '16 1800w

ALEXANDER, PHILIP FREDERICK, ed.
North-west and North-east passages, 1576-1611. (Cambridge travel books) il *75c Putnam 919.8 16-8244

"In this, the first volume of a series designed to illustrate the history of geographical discovery by means of select voyages and travels, are given accounts of the voyages of Frobisher, Davis, Hudson and Barents, taken from old narratives. Frobisher's and Davis's voyages are from Hakluyt's 'Principal navigations,' and are practically complete. Prickett's narrative of Hudson's last voyage is from 'Purchas' pilgrimes,' omitting the earlier and less interesting portions. Barents's third voyage is from Philip's translation of 1609, revised by the use of the Hakluyt 'De veer.'"—Boston Transcript

"The series should be valuable as supplementary reading in schools, and is of use in making easily accessible the little-known early accounts of Arctic exploration."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Jl 5 '16 310w

"The modernising of these texts, so far as necessary, has been carried out without any of the charm of the original being lost."

+ Nature 96:113 S 30 '15 280w

ALLEN, CAROLINE STETSON. Chimney corner tales. il *$1 (3c) Pilgrim press 16-20554

Stories written for children and reprinted from St. Nicholas, Little Folks, The Christian Register and other magazines. Some of the stories, among them A real little boy blue, The dapple-gray pony, and When Polly put the kettle on, are based on old nursery rimes.

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

Bookm 44:405 D '16 60w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 9 '16 120w

ALLEN, FREDERICK JAMES. Business employments. il *$1 Ginn 658 16-5181

"A large amount of information about manufacturing and trading will be found in 'Business employments.' An outline of the requirements for service in factory offices is given. One chapter is devoted to the various departments of a large plant, where the central administration works through subdivisions. The responsibility for the personnel and training of subordinates is emphasized. . . . The third part of the book deals with banking. The federal reserve act of 1913 is explained."—Springfield Republican

A L A Bkl 13:106 D '16

Cleveland p152 D '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:77 My '16

"'Bibliography,' p. 203-208; 'Business and trade journals,' p. 209-211."

+ Pittsburgh 21:242 My '16 30w

Springfield Republican p17 My '16 180w

"The volume is the result of several years' investigation, while the author is peculiarly fitted for his task because of his connection with the Boston vocation bureau, through which he has secured his facts." F. M. Leavitt

+ Survey 36:607 S 16 '16 270w

ALLEN, FREDERICK JAMES. Shoe industry. il $1.25 Vocation bu. of Boston, 6 Beacon st., Boston 685 16-10502

"This book briefly traces the history of the shoe industry from hand labor to machine operation, touches upon the art of tanning, sets forth the general divisions of the manufacture of leather footwear, and then minutely describes the manufacturing operations incident to the production of shoes. The particular jobs in each department are fully explained and their return indicated. The book contains, moreover, an excellent glossary of terms used in shoemaking, a short list of representative books that may be used for reference and a full catalogue of shoe periodicals. The purpose of the volume is to furnish to young people about to choose an avocation the complete details of the opportunities in the shoe trades."—Ann Am Acad

"The book is clear and full as regards the 'nature, history, magnitude, operations and processes' of the industry, but is not so satisfactory and definite on the side of labor conditions and wages."

+ A L A Bkl 13:152 Ja '17

"A carping critic might question Mr. Allen's ability as a historian or his sensitiveness to economic factors of cause and result, but no one could find fault with his painstaking account of the processes of shoe manufacture and the consequent demands for workers. Not only young men and women seeking vocational guidance, but everyone connected with the shoe business, particularly salesmen and retailers, will find this treatise helpful." M. K.

+ Ann Am Acad 68:324 N '16 190w

Cleveland p114 Ag '16 30w

N Y Br Lib News 3:124 Ag '16 60w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p17 Ag '16 70w

Pittsburgh 21:414 O '16 20w

Pratt p21 O '16 30w

"The wage data are extremely unsatisfactory. . . . And why does not the author tell us something about the nature of trade union activity among the workers of the shoe industry. . . . In the chapter on 'employment conditions' we are informed about social service and welfare schemes found in shoe factories, but not a word do we read about trade unions." B. M. Selekman

+ — Survey 36:544 Ag 26 '16 400w

ALLEN, IRVING ROSS. Personal efficiency, applied salesmanship, and sales administration. (Business administration, section II) il LaSalle extension univ. 658.7 15-15227

"Mr. Allen has marshalled in dramatic array dozens of concrete selling problems involving a solution dependable upon human action. Selling is not considered in the specific sense of an individual sale but includes a discussion of such characteristics in human experience as bring success 'in social affairs, in politics, in the church, in the home, or in whatever place men strive to achieve.' This text recognizes two dominating and influential fields in relation to selling forces, namely, the personal point of view involving the development of self, and the administrative phase of selling involving the sales manager in his activities related to the distribution of goods and selling policies. The vital problems of controlling men in the field, hiring help, and training help are amplified by effective and encouraging examples."—Ann Am Acad

"Largely speaking, 'Personal efficiency and selling' is a book which enthusiastically intro-

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

duces its reader into a conviction that power and success will come if feeling for one's work is rightly directed in the mastery of selling problems. There is not so much emphasis given to the pure science by which human qualities are to be evolved as an assurance that they can be evolved." H. W. Hess

+ Ann Am Acad 63:305 Ja '16 220w

"The style is so excessively informal and intimate that the serious student, after a hasty glance, is likely to despair of finding anything substantial in the volume. This is unfortunate, for much of the material, especially that dealing with hiring, controlling, training and paying salesmen, is worthy of serious consideration."

+ — Pol Sci Q 31:195 Mr '16 90w

"Attacks the subject from an intensely practical standpoint. The principles which he presents for acquiring personal power, developing personality and realizing the fullest possibilities on these values, are such as many men can turn to good account."

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 10 '16 90w

ALLEN, JAMES LANE. Cathedral singer. il *$1 (5c) Century 16-6440

This story of New York centers about the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. A mother and son who live in its shadow are the characters. The boy has a beautiful voice and it is the dream of the two that he may some day sing in the cathedral choir. The mother will make any sacrifice to make it come true, but the dream is snatched from her, leaving her bereft. The story appeared in the Century for May, 1914.

"Mr. Allen still continues to out-sentimentalize the sentimentalists. . . . We wonder if the author of such sentiments be supremely blind, supremely humorous, or simply successfully shrewd. But there is no doubt but that the public likes them. This most recent effusion will be called 'exquisite,' 'sweet,' or 'just lovely,' according to the status of the commentator; for it combines an unhappy ending with that 'glad,' 'bravery-in-misfortune' element so dear to the heart of the American people." R. M.

— Boston Transcript p8 Mr 18 '16 350w

"A pseudo-sermon disguised as fiction. Sentimentality is its chief characteristic, and a multiplicity of words effectually conceals most of its meagre force."

— Ind 86:184 My 1 '16 60w

"A story so simple in itself, but so wonderful in its appeal to the heart, that we are convinced no other writer could have made it more exquisite, more full of power, more appealing in its appreciation of the greatest of loves, which is mother-love."

+ Lit D 52:978 Ap 8 '16 350w

"Skilful as the author is in many passages of the narrative, he does not sufficiently centre the reader's interest."

— + Nation 103:38 Jl 13 '16 180w

"This story, short as it is, and it is less than a hundred and fifty pages, sums up rather amazingly Mr. Allen's special qualities. It has no happy ending; yet it leaves you with a perception of something even finer than happiness. The characters are few, the plot slight; yet there is tension, variety, suspense and emotion enough to keep you from laying it aside until the last page is read. This is not a story for a railway journey, not a book to be taken up and glanced through and forgotten. It will mean much to you, or it will mean nothing. But whether or not you respond to it, at least you will feel that the writer has given of his best."

+ N Y Times 21:93 Mr 19 '16 1200w

"Illustrates the defects rather than the excellences of his qualities, and by its constant and almost gratuitous plucking at our heart-strings plays into the hands of the Philistines."

— Spec 116:530 Ap 22 '16 700w

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 280w

"Mr. James Lane Allen is here, unfortunately, at his most solemn and most elaborate."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p179 Ap 13 '16 100w

ALLEN, NELLIE BURNHAM. Geographical and industrial studies; Asia. il *$0c (½c) Ginn 915 16-8352

A book suitable for supplementary reading for geography classes in the upper grades. The author has aimed to make Asia mean more than "a collection of colored areas, a series of names, or a maze of dots and lines." Some of the chapter headings are: The land of great waterways; Chinese farms and farmers; Tea farms and tea drinkers; Tibet and Turkestan; A trip on the Trans-Siberian railroad; Some Indian cities; Indian farms and factories; City and country life in Japan. There are 175 illustrations and 7 maps. Topics for study are appended to each chapter, and there is an index.

"The information, the kind and number of illustrations, practically duplicate those of Carpenter's 'Asia.' It is fuller on developments of the last twenty years—the industrial growth of Japan, Siberia, etc.—but does not give so much information on government."

+ A L A Bkl 13:129 D '16

+ Cleveland p17 Ag '16 20w

"It would seem ungracious in so elementary a textbook to object to the lack of emphasis placed on politics and the political spheres of influence of the various powers. But . . . the present war has made such an emphasis necessary. . . . The book covers its geography in a clear and satisfactory manner. The illustrations are well chosen, though it is unfortunate that the courtyard of a famous Delhi mosque should bear the caption, 'Every Hindu wishes to worship in Benares.' The author gives no aid to pronunciation whatever. In the spelling of proper names she leaves little to be desired, but we see no reason for the Germanic Mekka."

+ — Nation 102:548 My 18 '16 370w

+ St Louis 14:442 D '16 50w

ALLEN, ROBERT, pseud. (ALLEN ROBERT DODD). Captain Gardiner of the International police. *$1.35 (1½c) Dodd 16-7231

The European war has long been over when this story opens. A world federation has been formed and an international police force has kept the world at peace. A strong movement is on foot to reduce this force; for another war has become unthinkable. Captain Leslie Gardiner, a member of the international army, has just asked to be transferred to the Atlantic coast division where he can settle down permanently in New York, marry Evelyn Thornton and live happily, when an order comes sending him out to the Orient on a secret mission. The task intrusted to him is a delicate one, leading him into danger, and in a moment of stress he plays the coward, buying his life at the price of honor. Thereafter, in the strenuous events that follow, he devotes himself to regaining what he has lost, allowing those at home to believe him dead. And what follows is another world war, between East and West.

"In the author's choice of material, his manner of handling it and his conceptions of character the work suggests strongly some of E. Phillips Oppenheim's popular tales of international intrigue and national peril. But the scenes are played upon a much larger stage than any Mr. Oppenheim has employed, and the interests of civilisation that are at stake are far greater." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:324 My '16 250w

"The story is not free from the faults which pursue narratives of its kind; but it is told skilfully and spiritedly, and holds the attention of even a prejudiced reader."

+ — Nation 103:84 Jl 27 '16 500w

"Though it is well enough depicted, imaginary warfare has little interest and less charm for most readers just at present. What does give interest and charm to Mr. Allen's book is his gift for the portrayal of character. The novel is well written, the dialogue easy and natural, and if Evelyn is a little unreal her sister Mabel is delightfully human."

+ — N Y Times 21:114 Mr 26 '16 380w

"The portion of the story dealing with international affairs and warfare is breezily written

ALLEN, ROBERT, pseud.—Continued
and is exciting, and the 'two romances' threading these events are of minor importance."

+ Springfield Republican p13 My 28 '16 170w
"A story with plenty of variety and hair-breadth escapes, though having little literary merit and an atmosphere of unreality."
— + Wis Lib Bull 12:271 Je '16 80w

ALLIES' fairy book. il $*1.75 (4c) Lippincott

One representative fairy tale from each of the countries now fighting as allies has been chosen for this book. England is represented by "Jack the giant-killer," and for the three remaining divisions of the United Kingdom, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, there is one tale each. France contributes "The sleeping beauty," while from Italy, Portugal, Japan, Russia, Serbia and Belgium there are tales which are perhaps less well known. Edmund Gosse has written an introduction for the book and Arthur Rackham has made the pictures.

+ Ath p536 N '16 50w
+ Cath World 104:413 D '16 50w
+ Dial 61:546 D 14 '16 140w

"Arthur Rackham is as whimsical, as full of charm, and as masterly in color as ever."
+ Ind 88:464 D 11 '16 80w

"It is probable that of the cosmopolitan collection of fairy tales which Mr. Gosse has selected for this volume, not more than two or three are familiar to the Anglo-Saxon child, and the book has therefore all the advantages of novelty."
+ Int Studio 60:159 Ja '17 100w

"In all our issues of fairy tales, since the publication of the late Andrew Lang's collection of Perrault stories, we have not met with a more agreeable or more successful introduction than that of Edmund Gosse."
+ Lit D 53:1566 D 9 '16 180w

"An unusual volume, with a double appeal: to the little folk who love a story for what it is worth, and to those of their elders who have an interest in folk lore." R. D. Moore

+ Pub W 90:2072 D 9 '16 630w
+ R of Rs 55:101 Ja '17 210w
+ Sat R 122:sup3 D 9 '16 350w
+ Spec 117:sup608 N 18 '16 420w
+ Springfield Republican p15 D 10 '16 350w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p526 N 2 '16 60w
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p611 D 14 '16 500w

ALSTON, MADELINE. From the heart of the veld. $*1.25 (2½c) Lane 916.8 16-23523

A series of papers in which an English woman of education and culture writes of her life on the South African veld. Much of what she says of the effects of loneliness and solitude will be understood by women who have had like experiences, in our own prairie states or in Canada. The book is made up of two parts, At home on the veld and Wanderings here and there. In the first part there are chapters on The loneliness of the veld, Child-life on the veld, House-keeping on the veld, Gardening on the veld, etc. Part 2, devoted to stories of travel in South Africa, closes with an account of the author's return to England in war-time.

+ A L A Bkl 13:216 F '17
+ Ath p482 O '16 50w
+ Boston Transcript p8 D 30 '16 270w
+ Ind 88:506 D 18 '16 60w

"The author gives us the atmosphere and not merely the external physical features of South Africa."

+ R of Rs 55:217 F '17 130w

"A book refreshing alike in its cultivation and its common sense."

+ Sat R 122:sup10 N 4 '16 230w
+ Spec 117:589 N 11 '16 50w
+ Springfield Republican p6 D 22 '16 380w

ALTSHELER, JOSEPH ALEXANDER. Shades of the Wilderness: a story of Lee's great stand. il $*1.30 Appleton 16-5192

A new volume in Mr. Altshele's "Civil war series," continuing the narrative from the confederate side. "It opens with Gen. Lee's retreat from Gettysburg, and the author draws some vivid pictures of scenes attending the retrograde movement, together with striking portraits of Gen. Lee and other confederate leaders. Young Kenton is sent on a dangerous mission to Richmond, and there becomes involved in a situation in which a union spy figures prominently. The closing chapters are given over to descriptions of the battle of the Wilderness." (Springfield Republican)

A L A Bkl 12:486 J1 '16

"He paints a noble portrait of General Robert E. Lee. In common with nearly all present-day writers, Mr. Altshele preserves a fine spirit of tolerance and of comprehension of each section's point of view."

+ N Y Times 21:199 My 7 '16 160w

"The historical details are accurate and much of the narrative is drawn from sources of personal reminiscence."

+ R of Rs 53:635 My '16 60w

St Louis 14:244 Je '16

"Suitable for growing boys. Mr. Altshele's romances make agreeable reading for adults, as well as for boys, for he skilfully blends history and romance."

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 150w

ALVORD, CLARENCE WALWORTH, and CARTER, CLARENCE EDWIN, eds. Critical period, 1763-1765. il Ill. state historical lib., Springfield 906 15-14925

This is volume 10 of the Collections of the Illinois state historical library, and volume 1 of the British series, a series of several volumes to cover the period of British domination. "This one, being a preliminary volume, contains two valuable introductory essays, one entitled 'British Illinois, 1763-1768,' and the other 'The British occupation of the Illinois country, 1763-1765.' The first essay shows that British Illinois was a matter of discussion rather than of realization; and the second is a summary of events leading up to the possession of the country by the British. The documents included in the book are, in the main, devoted to three general subjects: description of the country and its inhabitants, French and Indian; the plans of the British for the exploitation of their newly acquired territory; and their efforts to obtain possession of it." (Am Hist R)

"Many of the copies made by Professor Carter from the manuscripts stored in the capitol at Albany have peculiar value now, as the originals were destroyed by the fire. . . . The care with which this material has been grouped into chapters, thoroughly indexed, and illuminated by a special introduction and footnotes, makes it an admirable example of scholarly editing." A. C. Ford

+ Am Econ R 6:91 Mr '16 500w

"Anyone who cares for this portion of the history of our common country will find this book readable and instructive; to the writer of history it is a source-book which cannot be overlooked."

+ Am Hist R 21:607 Ap '16 900w

+ Dial 60:427 Ap 27 '16 550w

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCE. National industries and the federal government. (Annals, v. 63) $1.50 Am. acad. 338 16-26123

"Contains twenty-six articles on the federal trade commission and its problems; the federal reserve board and its accomplishments; the interstate commerce commission and its work; and other federal departments in their relation to American industries."—N Y Br Lib News

A L A Bkl 12:261 Mr '16

"Reprint of the January, 1916, number of the Annals of the American Academy."

+ Cleveland p24 Mr '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:39 Mr '16 30w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCE. Preparedness and America's international program. (Annals, v. 66) $1.50 Am. acad. 327.73 16-16049

"Thirty-five timely articles by S. N. Patten, W. I. Hull, Walter Lippmann, Sidney L. Gulick, Norman Angell, Walter Weyl, and others." (A L A Bkl) "Contents: The basis of a durable peace and the safeguards against future international conflicts; What program shall the United States stand for in international relations? The effect of a large military and naval establishment on our domestic institutions and policy; Arguments for preparedness; Argument against large naval and military establishments." (N Y Br Lib News)

A L A Bkl 13:57 N '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:137 S '16 50w

AMERICAN art annual; ed. by Florence N. Levy. v 12 il $*5 Am. federation of arts 705

"There are here recorded 751 art museums and societies, an increase of 18 in a year; and 296 art schools, an increase of 80, with a roll of over 40,000 students, as compared with 36,000 in the previous year. . . . Every two or three years Miss Levy devotes a considerable section of her volume to 'Who's who in art.' The present volume contains the names, addresses, biographical notes (often of some length) of 4,665 painters, sculptors, and illustrators, American by birth or residence. Of this formidable array 1,741 names appear here for the first time. Picture sales by auction form another important section of the volume, taking up nearly 60 pages of small type. It is excellently done. The record includes 1,392 pictures which sold for $50 and over, the total amounting to $942,216, to which the Blakeslee sale contributed over one-quarter. . . . The obituary notices are noteworthy for their fullness. . . . There are nearly 100 illustrations, chiefly of works which have received special recognition during the year, and of portraits of artists."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Indispensable reference book. For the teacher its most valuable section is that on 'Methods of using art museums' to which ten different people contribute the results of their experience and observation."

+ School Arts Magazine 15:766 Je '16 90w

"Miss Levy's annual contribution to the art literature of the United States is one of the most useful and trustworthy works on that continent."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p80 F 17 '16 600w

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS. Year-book, 1914-1915. $*1.50 Ronald 657

"The year book contains a concise report of proceedings at the Seattle convention, text of all papers, list of accountancy boards, alphabetical and classified lists of members and all the other features which accountants have come to expect in their annual record. . . . The 1915 issue, which was published on December 1st, is in many ways one of the most important that has been issued. Many of the state laws contained in this volume were enacted during the year 1915 and accordingly have not appeared in any earlier issue. There are now thirty-nine such laws and the text of all of them has been carefully revised and compared with official records. . . . The report of the committee on education is as usual one of an infinite amount of detail and most valuable conclusions."—Journal of Accountancy

Journal of Accountancy 21:80 Ja '16 280w

AMERICAN ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION. Papers and proceedings of the twenty-eighth annual meeting. pa $1.25 Am. economic assn. 330.6

This volume forms a supplement to the American Economic Review of March, 1916, and contains papers and discussions given at the meeting of the association held at Washington, D. C., in December, 1915. Among the papers are: Probable changes in the foreign trade of the United States resulting from the European war, by Emory R. Johnson; The economic costs of war: the theoretical side, by John Bates Clark; the statistical side, by William S. Rosster; Price maintenance, by F. W. Taussig; The relation of public finance to private credit, by Willard Straight. Among the reports is that of the Committee on academic freedom and academic tenure made to the American association of university professors by a committee of nine members, with which a committee of three representing the American economic association had been merged. A list of the publications of the association since 1886 completes the volume.

AMERICAN HIGHWAY ASSOCIATION. Good roads year book, 1916. 5th ed il $1 Am highway assn. 625.7 (12-14988)

"The main divisions of the work follow those of the last volume, but the arrangement has been improved, so that the book is better adapted for reference than its predecessors. The index in the front has been better displayed—dividing the book into three principal parts—while a detailed index at the end leads one directly to the subject sought." (Engin Rec) The volume contains lists of Treatises on road, bridge and culvert construction, State geologists, Manufacturers, etc., and a glossary of trade names.

"The first 180 pages of this useful annual are devoted to road legislation, etc., in the United States and Canada. The information given for each state has been approved by the state highway engineer or highway commissioner or some other responsible official. Some idea of the extent of the good-roads movement may be gleaned from the fact that over 40 pages of the book are devoted to listing the various road-improvement associations—national, state and local."

+ Engin N 75:944 My 18 '16 170w

"Fully maintains the valuable place which its predecessors have made for this annual publication. The work is invaluable to libraries, associations, corporations and individuals requiring reference to highway laws, practices and statistics. . . . The digest of state highway specifications is a most valuable comparative summary of practice in different parts of the country."

+ Engin Rec 73:682 My 20 '16 240w

AMERICAN HIGHWAY ASSOCIATION. Official good roads year book of the United States; ed. by I. S. Pennybacker. 4th ed il $1 Am. highway assn. 625.7 (12-14988)

"Among the more important features included are: (1) a review of legislation, which includes state aid legislation, local bond issues, civil service, automobile registration, and convict labor; (2) history of road building; (3) reports of progress in road building; (4) highway engineering education. The text also includes a full bibliography of bulletins and magazine articles published during the past year [1914] relating to roads. A number of articles on the relation of good roads to economic and social welfare are mentioned."—Am Econ R

Am Econ R 6:122 Mr '16 80w

AMERICAN IRON AND STEEL INSTITUTE, NEW YORK. Directory of the iron and steel works of the United States and Canada. 18th ed $12 Am. iron & steel inst. 670.2 (16-15936)

"It is eight years since the last revision of Mr. Swank's work was published. Since that time, the changes in the industry have been so many and so sweeping that the present volume is an entirely new book. In place of the geographic arrangement of former directories, most of the space in this work is taken up with a list of the properties owned by the different iron- and steel-making companies, arranged in alphabetical order. Supplementing this are four lists, each arranged geographically, of blast

AM. IRON & STEEL INSTITUTE—Continued
furnaces, steel-making plants, steel foundries and rolling mills. Then follow lists of manufacturers of twenty different classes of iron and steel products, such as billets, bars, structural shapes, wire rods, black sheets, muck bar, tool steel, rails, seamless tubes, nails, etc."—Engin N

+ Engin N 76:312 Ag 17 '16 260w

"A directory of iron and steel works appears in A. O. Backert's 'A B C of iron and steel,' 1915."

Pittsburgh 21:526 N '16 40w

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE. Jews in the eastern war zone. gratis Am. Jewish committee, 356 2d av., N. Y. 940.91 16-5589

"An account of the disabilities of the Jews in Russia in normal times, and the wide-spread misery resulting from the war measure of expelling hundreds of thousands from the Polish provinces. [The work] includes reports on the government's unequal distribution of relief, the Russian atrocities in Galicia, and the economic condition of the Jews in Roumania and Palestine."—Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh 21:185 Ap '16 50w

Pratt p33 O '16 20w

St Louis 14:381 N '16 120w

AMERICAN Jewish year book, 5676, September 9, 1915 to September 27, 1916; ed. by Joseph Jacobs. $1 Jewish pub. 296

"The present volume, besides recording the events of the past year, contains a number of tables and articles, the most important of which is a summary of Jewish enterprise in Palestine, by Miss Henrietta Szold. The essay covers some one hundred and twenty-five pages."—Nation

"Miss Szold's summary is likely to become, next to Kurt Nawratzki's exhaustive 'Die jüdische kolonisation Palästinas,' the most authoritative statement thus far made on the subject in any language. In English it has no peer."

+ Nation 103:220 S 7 '16 1650w

AMERICAN labor year book, 1916; prepared by the Department of labor research of the Rand school of social science. $1 Rand school of social science 331.8 16-23940

"An attempt to put together in compact form the most important facts concerning labor and allied movements. In the section devoted to conditions in the United States, the essential characteristics of the principal national labor bodies are explained; the leading strikes of the year are reviewed; the cases of Quinlan, Lawson and other labor defendants are outlined; recent legislation is considered and the 'protocol' is discussed by Morris Hillquit. . . . The introduction of matter beyond the scope suggested by the chapter headings is indicated by the treatment of Mexico under the heading International socialist and labor movements."—Survey

"The information is commonly well selected but is often meager in comparison with the argument. . . . Ampler treatment of the American labor subjects is much to be desired." R. F. F.

+ Am Econ R 6:922 D '16 150w

"Seventy pages are given to the socialist movement in the United States, and ninety-three pages to the international socialist and labor movements. That is nearly half the book, and the excess of the foreign portion suggests that the 'American' in the title is surplusage and somewhat misleading."

N Y Times 21:485 N 12 '16 300w

"Despite the fact that the book is, for the most part, admirably detached and unbiased in its statement of fact, there is evidence here and there of a spirit not strictly scientific. . . . There are few such lapses as these however. . . . The book will be very valuable for reference and will answer many questions for the student of labor and reform movements." J: A. Fitch

+ — Survey 37:208 N 25 '16 320w

AMERICAN library annual, 1915-1916; including "Library work" cumulated; bibliographies; statistics of book production; etc. *$5 Bowker 020.5 (12-13594)

This volume is the fifth successive issue of the American library annual and the twenty-third by inclusion of its predecessor, the Annual literary index. The "lists of general libraries in the United States and Canada, are now supplemented by lists of libraries of a distinctive field and purpose, i. e., of 'special' or business libraries, of law and medical libraries, and of libraries of normal and high schools." (Foreword) The list of libraries in other countries is, on account of the war, little changed from the 1914-15 volume. A new feature is the inclusion of about ninety pages of summaries of the facts and statistics of some sixty leading and representative libraries. The "Index to dates" is omitted as it has been expanded into the publication Information. "Library work" has been extended and cumulated in dictionary form. A Directory of publishers with their individual output as recorded in the Publishers' Weekly is given.

AMERICAN PRISON ASSOCIATION. Proceedings of the annual congress, Oakland, California, October 9-14, 1915. $1.50 (1c) Am. prison assn., J. P. Byers, sec., 502 Empire bldg., Philadelphia 365

The 1915 congress of the American prison association was held in Oakland, California, October 9 to 14, with representatives from thirty-eight states, Canada and Cuba in attendance. This volume contains a report of the proceedings of the congress, with papers and discussions. As the preface points out emphasis is given to mental defectiveness in its relation to delinquency and crime.

AMERICAN SCENIC AND HISTORIC PRESERVATION SOCIETY. Twentieth annual report, 1915. il pa Am. scenic & historic preservation soc., 154 Nassau st., N. Y. 710

This report, submitted to the legislature of the state of New York, contains descriptions of scenic and historic spots preserved or improved thru the efforts of the society; among them, Stony Point battlefield, Philippe Manor hall, Palisades Interstate park, and the Saratoga battlefield. The larger part of the volume is given up to appendices presenting monographs on historical subjects, among them "Military camp life on upper Manhattan island and adjacent mainland during the American revolution," "Constitution island," and "The battle of the Boquet river, May 14, 1814"; also a paper on "The problem of city beautification as observed in Europe," by G. T. Hammond. There are illustrations.

N Y Libraries p63 F '16 120w

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW. Supplement to the American Journal of International Law. v 9 Special number Am. soc. of international law 341

This volume contains diplomatic correspondence between the United States and belligerent governments relating to neutral rights and commerce. The period covered is from August, 1914, to August 12, 1915. All the documents have been printed from official texts furnished by the Department of state of the United States.

AMERICAN SOCIOLOGICAL SOCIETY. War and militarism in their sociological aspects. pa *$1.50 Univ. of Chicago press 172.4

This volume contains the Papers and proceedings of the 10th annual meeting of the American sociological society held at Washington, D. C., December 28-31, 1915. Contents: War as determiner, by Edward A. Ross; Social values and national existence, by Theodore Roosevelt, followed by a discussion; The effect of war and militarism on the status of women, by Emily G. Balch, followed by a discussion; War and militarism in relation to government and politics, by Simeon E. Baldwin; Nationalism and state socialism, by William English Walling, followed by a discussion; Can war be done away with?

by Brooks Adams, followed by a discussion. The remaining pages of the volume contain the constitution, membership list, etc., of the society.

AMERICAN Whitaker almanac and encyclopedia for 1916; ed. by C. W. Whitaker. *$1 Macmillan 317.3

This is the second issue of this yearbook, the first, that for 1915, having been brought out by Doubleday. It is based on the British "Whitaker's almanac," which has appeared annually for 48 years, and to a large extent duplicates the international and foreign statistics of that publication. It specializes, however, in American information, giving "9,000 indexed facts concerning the trade, production, population, government, and general statistics of every state in the United States." The full index of 41 pages (double column) is an unusual and valuable feature. The last 33 pages are given to the Relations of the United States with the belligerent powers and to a résumé of the Land and naval operations of the great war.

"The American Whitaker' promises to become as indispensable in this country as its English prototype has long been abroad."

+ Dial 60:343 Mr 30 '16 70w

Ind 85:316 F 28 '16 60w

"A reference work whose worth has been firmly established."

+ Nation 102:260 Mr 2 '16 70w

R of Rs 53:509 Ap '16 70w

"The population returns printed here are of the 1910 census, although Massachusetts and several other states enumerated their population last year. These and other faults will doubtless be remedied in future editions, and the combination of statistics about the United States and the rest of the world in one small volume makes the book useful among works of its kind. The maps of the states are poor and could be dispensed with, without detracting from the value of the book. A detailed index makes the information readily available for reference."

+ Springfield Republican p8 F 17 '16 150w

AMERICAN year book; a record of events and progress, 1915. *$3 Appleton 031

"The record of the year 1915 is dominated by the influence of the European war," says the preface. The subject is treated directly in the first chapter of the book, in that on American history, written by Francis G. Wickware, editor of the annual, and again in the chapters on International relations, by Charles Edward Asnis, and Foreign affairs, by Roscoe R. Hill. But in almost any one of the other chapters, on Economic conditions, Public finance, Medical sciences, Literature and language, etc., the far-reaching effects of the war may be noted. There is a review of the National administration, one of State and county government and Municipal government. Other chapters are devoted to Social and economic problems and to Labor and labor legislation. The contributors to the volume number 125, all experts in their fields.

"In sum, the manual is excellently adapted to its purpose and full of value for the student of the year. The accounts of the progress of the sciences and of literary development, though they fill some 160 pages of the book, seem to contain nothing respecting the historical writings of the year."

+ Am Hist R 21:865 Jl '16 250w

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:595 Ag '16 190w

"The editors have gained for themselves the confidence of the public in the accuracy of the material presented." L. S. R.

+ Ann Am Acad 67:321 S '16 190w

"The military and naval section, devoted solely to our army and navy, is an excellent summary of administration and all the essential facts about both branches of the service."

+ Army and Navy Journal 53:1184 My 13 '16 150w

+ Dial 61:72 Jl 15 '16 150w

+ Engin N 76:310 Ag 17 '16 140w

+ Ind 86:185 My 1 '16 50w

"This compendious hand-book reveals the amazing diversity of the war's reactions, whether superficial or profound, upon American life. The book, however, gives its wonted attention to events of purely domestic interest. Certain of the chapters are admirably written. The editor, Francis G. Wickware, himself takes that on American history, and makes it not only a comprehensive and coherent record of events, but a sturdy statement of American principle in resistance to foreign aggression. . . . Two or three of the chapters, however, while satisfactory as a general outline, lack the thoroughness of these others; among them may be named Edward Everett Hale's short treatment of American literature, and Anna Tolman Smith's of education. The volume is carefully indexed."

+ Nation 102:440 Ap 20 '16 330w

"The sixth issue of a publication that has grown in usefulness from the beginning."

+ R of Rs 53:637 My '16 50w

ANDERSON, DICE ROBINS. William Branch Giles: a study in the politics of Virginia and the nation from 1790 to 1830. $1.50 Banta pub. 15-7324

"For the materials of a life of William Branch Giles, one of the most debated figures of his time, there have existed large stores of material. From his entrance into the House of representatives in 1790, an obscure young Virginian from a rural district, to his retirement from the Senate in 1816, he never failed to take an active part in all matters coming before Congress. During Jefferson's administration he was virtually party chief in legislative matters, while as a member of the Committee on foreign relations he paid unremitting attention to international affairs. It is the merit of Prof. D. R. Anderson's book that it has gathered together all these materials in the Annals of Congress, the writings of Adams, Jefferson, and Monroe, and the newspapers of Washington and Virginia, as well as in Giles's private correspondence, and that the author has cast new light upon the doubtful points in the character of a peculiar man."—Nation

+ Am Econ R 6:619 S '16 270w

"His life is important chiefly because it shows to what extent partizan bitterness went in the days when our political life was receiving its first impression through practical affairs. Giles was a man of a discarded and forgotten state of political action. It is only the more minute research of a more scholarly age that demands that his life be written. . . . The book does not give us an intimate life of Giles. Nevertheless, industry and good judgment characterize the work of the biographer. It is regrettable that the publishers have used poor paper and bad type which with poor binding give us an inferior piece of workmanship." J. S. Bassett

+ — Am Hist R 21:823 Jl '16 850w

Reviewed by J. H. Lantané

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:596 Ag '16 290w

"The heavy volume is largely a rather dry statement of Giles's attitude and utterances upon such questions as the national bank, the tariff, the embargo, states' rights, and the national judiciary; but there runs through it the purpose of vindicating Giles from the disparaging estimates left of him by opponents like Adams and Gallatin. In carrying out this purpose, the author sometimes fails to condemn Giles where condemnation is due. . . . Professor Anderson might more clearly have indicated the deficiencies of a man who was so extraordinary a reactionary in a democratic period. But both in its central narrative and in obiter dicta the book contains much of value to the student of state or national history. A careful index makes this easily accessible."

+ — Nation 101:784 D 30 '15 480w

+ R of Rs 53:498 Ap '16 60w

"A close analogy between the foreign policy of the United States 125 years ago and that of to-day is interestingly outlined in this book."

ANDERSON, DICE ROBINS—Continued

Not long after Congressman Giles took his seat, practically the whole of Europe became involved in the Napoleonic wars."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 17 '16 750w

ANDERSON, JAMES DOUGLAS. Making the American thoroughbred. il $5 (6c) J. D. Anderson, Madison, Tenn. 636.1 16-16543

This work has particular reference to the breeding and racing of thoroughbreds in Tennessee in the first half of the nineteenth century. The book differs from other works on the subject in that it is not solely concerned with the science of breeding, methods of training and other matters of interest to horsemen only. The author says, "This volume endeavors to emphasize the effect that all these theories and experiments had on the customs and habits of the people." The author has included Balie Peyton's "Reminiscences of the turf," written for the Rural Sun in 1872-73.

N Y Br Lib News 3:143 S '16

N Y Times 21:442 O 22 '16 600w

+ R of Rs 55:214 F '17 90w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. Windy McPherson's son. *$1.40 (1c) Lane 16-18489

The author of this story is a Chicago business man and he knows of the things of which he writes. He knows first of all the Middle-western small town and he writes of it with pitiless honesty, but with understanding too. Sam McPherson, town newsboy, is the son of the town drunkard and braggart. Windy McPherson was one of those men who couldn't settle back into civil life after four years' soldiering, but Sam is his mother's son too and it is the spirit of Jane McPherson in him that carries him to success. Success takes the form of money making and Sam becomes one of the Chicago money kings who came into prominence after the Spanish-American war. But Sam, trained in philosophical thinking by John Telfer of Caxton, cannot be satisfied with this kind of success. He wants to know the meaning of it all. The author is frank in his discussion of hidden evils, but his sincerity should save the book from charges of offensiveness.

"It is so long-winded that its sordidness becomes more repellent than interesting."

— Ath p543 N '16 20w

"It shows the Russian influence unmistakably, but its final effect is of a constructive realism, in contrast with the destructive naturalism of a Dostoevsky or a Dreiser." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:393 D '16 620w

"Mr. Anderson has to a large extent reflected the disordered life of the American national soul, following wandering fires in her search for the truth. . . . The story of Sam McPherson is big and impressive so long as it holds to this ideal of faithfulness to experience. It fails when the author forsakes his vision and manufactures an ending according to the dictates of tawdry contemporary fiction." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 N 25 '16 1200w

"Each person is stressed with such force, the color laid on with such daubing profusion, that each man and woman is to me a caricature. . . . Nor is there any architectural skill displayed. Like so many 'life' novels of the twentieth century there is a plentiful supply of incidents without any plot. . . . Yet I think its failure contains the seeds of success. . . . The author has done his level best to represent unsparingly what he believes to be the truth." W. L. Phelps

+ Dial 61:196 S 21 '16 330w

"Another 'first novel,' and perhaps the most remarkable of the year." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 103:508 N 30 '16 170w

"The book is one to own and re-read."

+ Nation 104:49 Ja 11 '17 700w

"The point about 'Windy McPherson's son,' is its liberal suggestion of a new integrity in the American novel. Eloquent as the characters are in Caxton . . . they are only part of the suggestive wealth of the story. . . . And for all the traces of the beginner's art, there is the virtue of unexpectedness in the story, the supreme quality of the organism which a story should have." F. H.

+ — New Repub 9:333 Ja 20 '17 1050w

"It is an epic of modern life in a western small town. Whoever desires to keep abreast with the best in current literature cannot afford to let it go unread."

+ N Y Times 21:423 O 8 '16 550w

"Arousing in its ruthlessly clear and crudely colorful picturing of life; it is to be valued for its frankness, its straight, unconventional thinking; it can hardly fail to turn the reader's mind to the reconsideration of important, if sometimes depressing, facts of the inner and of the outer life. And yet the story leaves the impression, not that it is a duty to think straight and to pierce through the veils of convention and prudery, but that life is a heady liquor of which it is wise to drink deeply. . . . The story leaves one aroused, but unsatisfied."

— + No Am 204:942 D '16 500w

+ R of Rs 54:679 D '16 100w

"It is reflected life; it is as though, rather than look at the view through the open window, Mr. Anderson had confined himself to what might be seen by standing with his back to the window and gazing in a mirror hung opposite to it."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p536 N 9 '16 400w

ANDREIEFF, LEONID NIKOLAEVICH. Crushed flower, and other stories; tr. from the Russian by Herman Bernstein. *$1.50 Knopf 16-21711

"There are here a selection of stories ranging from a mere sketch of six or seven pages to three narratives of novelette length, and in subject from a child's soul experience to Judas Iscariot. The story which gives the book its title, 'The crushed flower,' is a sad but exquisitely imagined incident in a little boy's life. . . . The keen and loving memory Andreyev displays for details of child thought, humorous or extravagant or sad, is both touching and, alas! much out of the ordinary. We use the word memory advisedly, for it is only memory which gives such insight. This story of Yurochka throws a new light on Andreyev's genius."—N Y Times

N Y Br Lib News 3:183 D '16 30w

"A new volume of translations from the work of Andreyev is to be welcomed both by the student and by those more casual readers with a taste for the unusual, the weird, and the revolutionary in any language."

+ N Y Times 21:489 N 19 '16 830w

"A remarkable story, 'The man who found the truth,' hitherto available only in the French and in abbreviated form, is worth in actual values to the mind and spirit a hundred ordinary 'uplift' books."

+ R of Rs 55:103 Ja '17 220w

ANDREIEFF, LEONID NIKOLAEVICH. Life of man; tr. from the Russian by C. J. Hogarth. *$1.25 Macmillan 891.7

"The life of man' is a modern 'morality' (Andreyeff has said that it originated from a second-hand account of 'Everyman'), and shows us symbolically the whole of human existence in its five short acts."—Spec

"This play, which is often called a 'Russian 'Everyman,' moralizes with a slight taint of the morbid upon the mortality of mankind. It is interesting as a study of pessimism, but it is not a tonic reminder of our latter end. 'The life of man' is not without its somber wisdom, however."

+ — Springfield Republican p13 Ja 16 '16 140w

ANDRESS, JAMES MACE. Johann Gottfried Herder as an educator. il *$1.25 Stechert 16-10917

"Especial attention should attach to the present volume, which makes a noteworthy addition to the meagre store of books that celebrate the work done in education. Great as he was in his own time, the world at large has remembered Herder far too little. The book begins with a sketch of Herder's life. . . . To the larger number of readers the later chapters of the book which deal with Herder's educational theories will be found the most valuable. His theories seem to have been based upon the axiom: "To learn for life, use and cultivate all your mental and bodily powers, and in good relationship, in correct proportions." To state it even more clearly, Herder's theory of education was the 'complete and symmetrical development of all the native powers of the individual.'—Boston Transcript

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 1 '16 400w

+ Educ R 52:423 N '16 50w

ANDREWS, CHARLTON. Technique of play writing; introd. by J. Berg Eisenwein. (Writer's lib.) *$1.50 Home correspondence school 808.2 15-26706

"The 20 chapters and appendices present the fundamental elements of play construction, a specimen scenario, specimen pages of play manuscript, lists of plays and lists of books helpful to playwrights."—Springfield Republican

"Questions and exercises included throughout the text. Bibliography (6p.)."

+ A L A Bkl 12:177 Ja '16

"What the book does give is a very sound working basis, which is derived from a study of the elements which have made good modern plays successful. The exercises which he suggests at the end of each chapter, and his citations from plays which are familiar to this season's theatre-going public, constitute the real worth of the book."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ja 12 '16 310w

"Enthusiasm and clearness of outline are precisely what Mr. Andrews lacks. . . . He has merely produced another book on a subject others have treated more trenchantly and brilliantly. As a guide for the classroom it might be found serviceable, especially in view of the interesting questions appended to every chapter, it has value as an integral part of the series of volumes to which it belongs." G: C. D. Odell

— + Educ R 52:521 D '16 330w

"The most excellent feature of the 'Technique of play writing' is its admirable command, for purposes of illustration, of characters and situations in contemporary drama. As the author discusses the elements entering into suspense and surprise, the climax and the development of plot, he drives his point home by examples from plays with which the reader is already partly familiar."

+ Ind 85:356 Mr 6 '16 70w

N Y Br Lib News 3:28 F '16

+ R of Rs 53:376 Mr '16 10w

"It cannot be said that any student who follows out the doctrines of Mr. Andrews' text will go violently wrong. It is more important for probable purchasers to know the equally certain fact that they are unlikely to be violently right. Dramatists have an unfortunate habit of being born, though it is also essential that they be made. The supposition in books of this class is always that if you write by rule you are writing well. The best part of Mr. Andrews' work is his running criticism on familiar plays. It is when he gets beyond criticism and attempts to lay down general laws for the fledgling dramatist that the author becomes at once amusing and disappointing." H. M. Jones

— + School R 24:491 Je '16 420w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 5 '16 190w

"Written for the would-be playwright, but helpful also for the student of the modern drama. Less technical than Archer's 'Play-making' and Price's 'Technique of the drama.'"

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:145 Mr '16 50w

ANDREWS, EWART SIGMUND. Strength of materials. il *$4 Van Nostrand 620.1 16-13182

"This is an advanced book on the mechanics of materials written for students preparing to take examinations for associate member of the Institution of civil engineers in Great Britain, and for the university degree in engineering. . . . A good set of problems, with answers, is included, and the properties of the British standard sections, together with some mathematical tables, are given in the appendix. . . . Many tables, curves and charts have been included for the use of designers, and their use is made clear by the solutions of illustrative problems."—Engin Rec

"The more abstruse and less frequently used parts of the subject, such as are often omitted or put in appendices, are placed in the body of the text in their proper order, but they are marked with an asterisk and may be omitted on the first reading." This makes the book more valuable as a reference text and still suitable for the usual undergraduate engineering course. . . . Chapter 9, 'Torsion,' again does not give the underlying theory as well as might be expected. Three different formulas are given for combined torsion and bending, but there is no demonstration of their theory." C. T. Morris

+ — Engin N 75:1132 Je 15 '16 600w

"The treatment of concrete columns cannot be considered complete. . . . The subject of springs is unusually well presented. . . . The long ton is generally used as the unit of force. The mechanical make-up of the book is excellent, although the lettering in some of the figures is poorly done. The book will take a high rank in the literature of the mechanics of materials." M. L. Enger

+ Engin Rec 73:650 My 13 '16 370w

"No doubt the book will be useful to students and young engineers, especially because so many special cases are worked out algebraically and numerically in detail. At the same time it is doubtful if the author has quite digested his reading. On some fundamental points he is obscure. Discrepant solutions are placed side by side, and the student left to his own resources or put off with 'we believe.'"

+ — Nature 96:111 S 30 '15 520w

ANDREWS, LINCOLN CLARKE. Fundamentals of military service; prepared under the supervision of Maj.-Gen. Leonard Wood. *$1.50 (2c) Lippincott 353 16-10142

A book for "citizen soldiers." "An honest performance of the duties of citizenship demands, first, that each citizen shall learn enough about the military service and its needs to give him an intelligent opinion thereon; and second, that each youth shall prepare himself reasonably to meet his individual responsibilities as a citizen soldier. Thus alone may we avoid having to go to war amidst such unpreparedness as must result in national humiliation, with wholesale loss of life and treasure. This book is designed to supply the means for attaining these qualifications, to place in one volume the fundamentals of military service, its meanings and its requirements." (Preface) The subjects covered are: Our military policy; Psychology of the service; Military training; Organization; Infantry drill; Cavalry; Field artillery; Coast artillery; The engineer corps, etc. The author is an officer in the army, and several of the chapters of the book are contributed by experts.

+ A L A Bkl 12:403 Je '16

"Such a volume can not be studied like a textbook. Rather it must be absorbed, in connection with study of the drill regulations of the different branches of the service. Particularly valuable and interesting is his presentation of the 'Psychology of the service,' and if that chapter could be read and absorbed by every citizen of this country, all citizenship would be improved." J. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ap 19 '16 450w

Cleveland p37 Ap '16

"It is popular, not over-technical and ought to be a great aid to true preparedness. It is a real work."

+ Ind 86:252 My 15 '16 80w

"The chapter on 'Riot duty' is well worth the attention of every militiaman, as it clearly sets forth the causes underlying the frequent failures of the militia to suppress civil disorders. . . . Apart from all other considerations, this book would be of the highest value to those who wish to intelligently follow the reports from the various fronts in Europe, as all the operations briefly

ANDREWS, LINCOLN CLARKE—Continued
mentioned in the communiques are set forth in detail, so that the layman may understand."
P. W. A.

+ Journal of the Military Service Institute 59:162 J1 '16 200w

Pittsburgh 21:305 Je '16 40w

Reviewed by Stuart C. Godfrey

+ Pub W 90:851 S 16 '16 660w

+ R of Rs 54:115 J1 '16 100w

"The work will doubtless find ready favor at the training camps of the eastern army division this summer where, it is understood, it will be the official textbook for all arms of the service. The work touches on every phase of military service, and really constitutes a cyclopedia on the subject."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 25 '16 450w

ANDREWS, MARY RAYMOND SHIPMAN
(MRS. WILLIAM SHANKLAND ANDREWS). Eternal feminine, and other stories. il $1.35 (2c) Scribner 16-22256

As a companion volume to the author's book of stories about men, called "The eternal masculine," this book of stories about women is issued. Some of them are recent stories, having been published in magazines within the last two years, others go back to 1905, 1908 and 1910. Contents: Her fling; The eternal feminine; Coals of fire; The very lilac one; A play to the gallery; The fifth of October; A political tip; The healer; The fugitive; Taki's career.

+ A L A Bkl 13:174 Ja '17

"Nothing could have pointed out more subtly than her collection the advance, the change of style (for it is no less than that) in the short-story writing of the last few years."

+ Dial 61:471 N 30 '16 200w

"Sentiment is overt in these pages, and does not always ring true. Indeed, there is not one of these stories which has its being without patent artifice, not one which seems to have written itself."

+ Nation 104:19 Ja 4 '17 270w

+ N Y Times 22:13 Ja 14 '17 600w

"The stories in the book which are most deserving of praise are 'Her fling,' 'Coals of fire,' 'A play to the gallery,' 'The fifth of October,' 'A political tip,' 'The healer' and 'The fugitive.' For 'Taki's career,' the last story in the book, there is no excuse."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 290w

ANDREWS, MARY RAYMOND SHIPMAN
(MRS. WILLIAM SHANKLAND ANDREWS). Old Glory. il $50c (2½c) Scribner 16-15660

Three slight stories which center around the American flag. The first, "The colors," was published in Scribner's magazine for July, 1916. It deals with a young American naval officer who, under the influence of hashish, insulted the flag and later refused to redeem his position. He resigned from the navy, in course of time claimed the English title which his family had allowed to lie dormant, and went with his daughter to make his home in England. When a possible war between the countries is threatening he finds he is at heart an American and returns to his native land. The two shorter stories are entitled "The stranger within the gates" and "The star-spangled banner."

Boston Transcript p9 S 2 '16 160w

+ Cath World 104:395 D '16 120w

+ Cleveland p126 N '16 90w

+ Ind 88:33 O 2 '16 40w

"The three stories are inspiring to the point of sadness and beautiful to the point of tears."

+ N Y Times 21:304 J1 30 '16 230w

+ R of Rs 54:349 S '16 40w

ANDREWS, ROY CHAPMAN. Whale hunting with gun and camera. il $2.50 Appleton 639 16-15524

"Mr. Roy Chapman Andrews, who is assistant curator of mammals in the American museum of natural history, New York city, has hit on a fresh subject in his 'Whale hunting with gun and camera.' It is the general belief that the whaling industry has been on the decline for many years. The truth is, however, that new methods have supplanted the old ones, putting the business upon an entirely different footing.

Mr. Andrews, in his work of collecting for the museum, went twice around the world, as well as northward on two expeditions to Alaska and southward to the waters of Borneo and the Dutch East Indies. He learned many interesting facts about whales, which had been the secrets of the men who hunted them for their living. In all his work the camera played an important part."—R of Rs

"This readable account supplements Verrill's 'Real story of the whaler' which is largely historical. Many interesting illustrations from photographs."

+ A L A Bkl 13:14 O '16

"The spirit throughout is that of the sportsman. This makes it very delightful reading. The truth, however, is that the author's real purpose is to bring before the reader the results of a very thorough study of whales." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '16 700w

+ Ind 87:426 S 18 '16 50w

+ Lit D 53:1543 D 9 '16 160w

+ Nation 104:53 Ja 11 '17 700w

N Y Br Lib News 3:143 S '16

+ R of Rs 54:458 O '16 220w

ANESAKI, MASA HARU. Buddhist art in its relation to Buddhist ideals, with special reference to Buddhism in Japan; four lectures given at the museum [Boston]. il $6 Houghton 16-109

"Buddhist art in Japan, even while portraying the same Buddha and his disciples as that of his followers in India, is under the sway of ideals peculiarly Japanese. . . . Professor Anesaki's aim, in the four lectures printed in this volume, is to expound the Japanese modifications, or selections for emphasis, of ideals as they developed in the eclectic Buddhism of that country, especially in relation to ecclesiastical art. He therefore gives a brief account of the Buddha, and of his two principal ideals of an unbounded fellowship and dedication, and follows with an exposition of these as conceived by the Japanese and expressed in their art—temples, sculpture of various sorts, and paintings—during different periods."—Lit D

"The book is filled with such interesting suggestions as this, and from every page is cast some illuminating side-light on what usually remains obscure, but its chief value lies in the very real help that it will give toward the better understanding and appreciation of an art whose power and loftiness compel attention. . . . Opposite each of the illustrations in this volume is a brief explanatory paragraph, and these, besides helping one to see the particular picture described, should be of great help in the appreciation of all similar works. These paragraphs taken in conjunction with the text of the book show one how to look at a Buddhist picture, and that is exactly what most of us need. A certain amount of mental adaptation is necessary." L. V. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 24 '15 1150w

"In its bearing on the history of art, the theme of the lectures is an important one. The author's treatment of it is thoroughly comprehending and clear in statement, and his book supplies a real need, as the information hitherto available is scattered through the pages of periodicals and costly publications to which few have access. . . . In spite of these shortcomings, the illustrations form an important and most useful feature of the book." F. W. Gookin

+ Dial 60:546 Je 8 '16 2250w

"The volume (sumptuous in form, a triumph of the book-maker's skill) will appeal only to the advanced student either of religion or art. But to him it will appear a treasure. The Boston museum, under the auspices of which the volume is issued, deserves both praise and congratulations for its enterprise as here displayed."

+ Lit D 52:452 F 19 '16 350w

+ N Y Times 21:113 Mr 26 '16 120w

Reviewed by F. W. Williams

+ Yale R n s 6:223 O '16 710w

ANNUAL register; a review of public events at home and abroad for the year 1915. *$6 Longmans 905

"The present issue for 1915 well sustains the character of its predecessors, and that, as every one knows, is an excellent character, long established and universally appreciated." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "Forty-eight pages are devoted to the war; but the larger sections—'English history' and 'Foreign and colonial history'—are, of course, full of the same subject. Many military and naval dispatches are printed in extenso. In the retrospect of the year's literature about fifty notable books are described and characterized at some length." (Ath)

Ath p198 Ap '16 50w

"No record of the past year could be dull, and certainly 'The annual register' is not, although comment is studiously withheld from the record of facts. However sorely tempted, the editor has kept strictly in view the true function of a register. . . . Care has been taken that the articles on 'Literature,' 'Art,' 'Commerce,' and in particular as it seems to us, on 'Science,' should not suffer from the concentration of interest upon the war."

+ Spec 116:663 My 27 '16 370w

"It is less bulky than its immediate predecessor. The result is attained by severe compression throughout, not by the elimination of any of the familiar features of the 'Register.' Moreover, space has been found for a new feature, or, rather, for the revival of an old feature. 'In the present number,' says a prefatory note, 'the "Annual register" resumes its ancient habit of printing in extenso various documents of public importance published during the year.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p158 Ap 6 '16 900w

ANSPACHER, LOUIS KAUFMAN. Unchastened woman; a modern comedy in three acts. 1l *$1.25 Stokes 812 16-4881

Mrs. Hubert Knollys declines to divorce her husband who has been unfaithful to her because it serves her purpose to bear his name and have the protection of her marriage. She is wealthy, beautiful, and clever, unscrupulous, utterly selfish, and incapable of love. When the play opens she had used her power to fascinate a poor young architect, Lawrence Sanbury, and by giving him his first commission to remodel her New York house and establishing his workshop under her roof attempts to break his own happy marriage relations. In contrast to her "house in the fashionable fifties" is shown the restricted flat in a model tenement in which Hildegarde, the architect's wife, supports them both by writing newspaper articles on reform. The plot is complicated by the introduction of Emily Madden, who had once loved Hubert Knollys, and is now the affianced wife of Michael Krellin, a journalist. Caroline Knollys attempts also to destroy the affection of Michael and Emily for each other. Tho both her schemes are defeated in a way that would have caused humiliation to another type of woman, she remains to the last her brilliant, self-possessed, unchastened self. The play has been staged.

"'The unchastened woman' appears at the first glance more like a European drama than an American play; for it is strong in strategy and weak in tactics. . . . To conceive and to create an unpleasant person and to avoid the usual temptation to reform this person before the final curtain-fall is an achievement in sheer strategy which has seldom been accomplished in our native drama. The merits of this play are large, and its defects are little. Half a dozen of our playwrights might have worked the pattern out more cleverly; but the important and preponderant fact remains that none of these other tacticians of our theatre has imagined and created so true a character as Caroline Knollys." Clayton Hamilton

+ — Bookm 42:383 D '15 770w

Ind 86:75 Ap 10 '16 50w

"It pretends to be a thoughtful play, and does indeed go through the motions of thinking. It has no direct message, is indeed a jumble of half-articulate messages. One suspects that the author has been reading Strindberg and has been captivated by one or another of his heartless women. In the central situation alone Strindberg would have found ample material for a clear-cut drama. But Mr. Anspacher, less despairing of womankind than the Swede, desired to contrast his heroine with a stable, full-hearted woman, and this necessitated a plot so complicated as to dull the artificial lustre of the main theme. . . . These protagonists, for all their pretensions, lack the intellect to make them really interesting. Strindberg, warped though his outlook on life was, contrived nevertheless to send momentary shudders through his audience."

— Nation 101:476 O 14 '15 420w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 5 '16 210w

ANSTEY, F., pseud. (THOMAS ANSTEY GUTHRIE). In brief authority. *$1.35 (1c) Doran

"The conception of a suburban family transported to Fairyland is delightful in itself, but it required a specialist in modern fairy tales to carry it off." (Ath) "Mr and Mrs. Wibberley-Stimpson, though suddenly and miraculously elevated to the throne of 'Märchenland,' retain the qualities which distinguished them as prosperous dwellers in Suburbia. Their readjustment to their new conditions is only superficial. In all essentials they remain incorrigibly insular, self-satisfied, prosaic, unromantic. . . . The novel is a feat of double impersonation, since it not only exhibits the attitude of the Wibberley-Stimpsons towards Fairyland, but, conversely, the impression created on fairy godmothers, princes, gnomes, and ogres by the Wibberley-Stimpsons." (Spec)

"We have seen very little of late of F. Anstey's work; but what he now gives us is of his best."

+ Ath 1915,2:263 O 16 110w

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 16 '16 510w

"Mr. Anstey's later works show even more delicacy of humour than his earlier ones—such as 'Vice versa,'—but for some reason they seem to be less popular."

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:37 Mr '16 60w

+ N Y Times 21:293 J1 30 '16 600w

"A merry tale, compact of the nonsense that sometimes comes so near to being extraordinarily good sense."

+ Sat R 120:499 N 20 '15 600w

"There is plenty of sound sense and shrewd observation in his gayest fantasias, and these qualities are not wanting in his latest venture."

+ Spec 115:481 O 9 '15 730w

ANTIN, MARY (MRS. MARY ANTIN GRABAU). At school in the promised land; or, The story of a little immigrant. *25c (1/2c) Houghton 16-11163

The chapters from Mary Antin's "The promised land" dealing with the little Jewish girl's school days in America have been reprinted in this small volume of the "Riverside literature series." This has been done, the preface states, "in response to many requests from educators throughout the country."

Reviewed by K. H. Claghorn

Survey 37:313 D 16 '16 110w

ANTRIM, ERNEST IRVING. Fifty million strong; or, Our rural reserve. 75c (1c) Pioneer press, Van Wert, O. 630 16-10808

In this little book the author attacks some of the problems of country life. Recreation, social centers, the country school, the country church, rural credits, agricultural cooperation, rural sanitation and the county hospital movement are some of the subjects touched on. There is also a chapter on Rural leadership.

ANTRIM, ERNEST IRVING—Continued

+ Dial 60:430 Ap 27 '16 130w
Reviewed by Graham Taylor
+ Survey 37:154 N 11 '16 180w

ANZAC, pseud. On the Anzac trail. *$1 (3c)
Lippincott 940.91 (Eng ed 16-19961)

This volume belongs to a series of "Soldiers' tales of the great war." The author is a New Zealander who "did his little best to uphold the honour of Maoriland" in Gallipoli. Contents: Joining up; Off; Life in Egypt; East and West; Day by day; "The battle of the streets"; At grips; Three weeks; Sitting tight; The order of the push. Parts of the book are in the form of a diary written in short snatches between the fighting. Other parts were written after the author was sent to England to face a life of permanent invalidism. Yet he says "I wouldn't have missed it for worlds."

+ R of Rs 54:460 O '16 70w

"Alike for its gaiety and heroism this short book is one of the outstanding documents of the war."

+ Sat R 121:sup2 Je 24 '16 350w

ANZAC book; written and illustrated in Gallipoli, by the men of Anzac. *$1.75 Funk (pa
*2s 6d Cassell, London) 940.91

(Eng ed 16-15303)

"Here is a soldier's book—made by the soldiers on the firing line, pictures and all; a product of the fertile genius of the Australasian branch of the English people; consisting of contributions, prose, poetry, and pictures, made during three weeks of last year in the trenches and dugouts of Gallipoli. . . . In an introduction General Birdwood gives the origin of the term 'Anzac'—the word being formed from the initials of the words 'Australasian and New Zealand army corps.' . . . The greater number of the contributors to this book were private soldiers."—Outlook

"There are many admirable and spirited drawings . . . and the poems reach a high standard, both grave and gay, after their kind."

+ Ath p291 Je '16 130w

"The official photographs included and published for the first time disclose the real conditions under which the men of Anzac lived. The profits of the sale of the book are to be given to the Australasian Red cross fund."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 30 '16 410w

"Of all books inspired by the European war, this large quarto-page volume promises to rank as the most dramatic, the most individual."

+ Lit D 53:751 S 23 '16 330w

"Many Americans who are deeply anxious for the success of the Allies in their fight against militarism and for democracy feel a sinking of the heart when they recall the end of the attacks on Gallipoli. They should read this book. There is here no gloom over defeat, no despair over failure. There is cheerfulness under appalling difficulties, a quick seizing of the humors of the campaign, a heroic resolve to retrieve eventually an unfortunate situation, and a determination to win in the end despite all odds. It is a book to make Englishmen—and Americans—proud of the spirit of their race."

+ Outlook 113:990 Ag 23 '16 1450w

"The story of Anzac is reprinted in extracts from the despatches of Sir Ian Hamilton, and A. R. Perry, a man of the Tenth, describes the first immense scenes on the morning of April 25th, 1915."

+ Sat R 122:22 J1 1 '16 110w

"Brimful of spirit, cleverness, and humour."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p251 My 25 '16 120w

APPPERSON, GEORGE LATIMER. Social history of smoking. *$1.50 (2c) Putnam 178

16-9164

"This is the first attempt to write the history of smoking in this country [England] from the social point of view," says the author. Such a history must of course touch on many other details of manners and customs of the years that lie between the Elizabethan age and the twentieth century. Contents: The first pipes of tobacco smoked in England; Tobacco triumphant [two chapters]; Cavalier and Round-head smokers; Smoking in the restoration era; Smoking under King William III and Queen Anne; Smoking unfashionable [two chapters]; Signs of revival; Early Victorian days; Later Victorian days; Smoking in the twentieth century; Smoking by women; Smoking in church; Tobaccoists' signs.

"Mr. Apperson extraordinarily complete in all that affects the West, says nothing about smoking in the East. . . . If only for its enthusiasm, the book should be welcomed by all true smokers who appreciate the history of their solace and resource."

+ Ath 1915,2:475 D 25 1400w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '16 550w

+ Springfield Republican p8 S 15 '16 260w

ARCHITECTURE and the gardens of the San Diego exposition; a pictorial survey of the aesthetic features of the Panama California international exposition. il *$2 Elder 606

16-14240

A companion volume to a similar work on the architecture and gardens of the Panama-Pacific exposition. The text of the book consists of an introductory essay on The architecture and the gardens of the San Diego exposition, by Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue, advisory and consulting architect of the exposition; an essay entitled A triumph of the Spanish-colonial style, by Clarence S. Stein; and the descriptive notes for the pictures, written by Carleton Monroe Winslow. The pictures themselves are of course the important and most interesting feature of the volume.

"There are about one hundred and fifty photographs in sepia, one to a page. The pictures are masterpieces of photography, and the descriptions briefly but adequately tell the story of the pictures. The entire volume, in print, paper, pictures, binding and cover, is a thing of beauty."

+ Boston Transcript p7 J1 15 '16 370w

Pittsburgh 21:495 N '16 30w

+ Springfield Republican p15 J1 16 '16 200w

ARENSBERG, WALTER CONRAD. Idols. (New poetry ser.) *75c Houghton 811

16-6641

This is Mr. Arensberg's second book of verse. A volume of "Poems" was published in 1914. In this new book he shows the influence of the imagists, particularly in the poems of the first section, "Clouds." Other poems are grouped as "Statues," "Crystals," "For the sake of peace," Translations.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '16 2100w

"Mr. Arensberg must be classified with the symbolists represented in French poetry by Mallarmé and the poets who succeeded him."

Cleveland p82 J1 '16 150w

"The signs of power are still visible. The mere Dante translation attains levels inaccessible to mediocrity, and there are not lacking personal moments when the author's presence is Olympian. But Mr. Arensberg does not stay long in the temple; he prefers the studio. His fortune as a whole is imaged in a line of Shelley's: 'I pursued a maiden and clasped a reed.' He has pursued the warmth of living reality, and he has brought back a musical appliance."

O. W. Firkins

— + Nation 102:670 Je 22 '16 320w

R of Rs 53:761 Je '16 30w

"There is no finer single poem in imagist poetry than 'Voyage à l'infini' in 'Idols.'"

+ R of Rs 54:233 Ag '16 50w

"Excellence of diction and even a rare choice of words are now and then to be noted, and these tend to conceal the essential emptiness and triviality of the themes."

— + Springfield Republican p6 J1 4 '16 160w

ARISTOPHANES. Clouds; text and translation; ed. by B. Bickley Rogers. *$3.25 Macmillan 882

"With his second edition of the 'Clouds' Mr. Rogers brings to an end the publication of the comedies of Aristophanes, which he began more than sixty years ago with the first. The introduction and nearly the entire commentary are new, but the translation is left much as it came from its author in the freshness of his youth, a few lines being rewritten here and there."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The book is intended for the cultivated man rather than for the exact scholar. There is a translation in corresponding metres on the opposite pages to the text, and a judicious commentary. . . . The translation, by reason of its verse form, is often hardly a translation at all, but rather a paraphrase, and a most inaccurate one at that, but the spirit of the author is usually well preserved, and if it were printed separately one would hardly observe that one was reading a translation. The appearance of the book is a delight to the eyes."

+ Nation 102:sup487 My 4 '16 210w

Pittsburgh 21:341 J1 '16

"To take up such a volume is, even to-day, to forget care. . . . To offer any poor meed of praise to Mr. Rogers's great edition of Aristophanes is assuredly superfluous. It is an almost unique work, and every one who has any love of letters already knows it well."

+ Spec 117:132 J1 29 '16 1500w

"The commentary exhibits the same genial interest in Greek life and English literature which marked its predecessors."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p220 My 11 '16 650w

ARMSTRONG, ROBERT CORNELL. Light from the East. (Univ. of Toronto studies. Philosophy) il $1.50 Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada 299 A15-1530

"The work, as stated in the preface, is 'intended to throw light on some of the formative elements of Japanese civilization, and lead to a better understanding of Japanese character and life.'" (Int J Ethics) "The book is devoted almost entirely to a historical survey of the schools of Japanese Confucianism in the period of the Tokugawa government (roughly from 1600 to 1868)." (Am J Theol)

"A critical and systematic examination of Confucianism in its relation to Japanese life and thought is not attempted by the author. He has, however, given, in a very simple and readable manner, as results of his many years' studies, much of the choice teachings, largely in quotations, of representative Confucian scholars of Japan that can be easily understood by the general public." Ukichi Kawaguchi

+ Am J Theol 20:141 Ja '16 850w

"For many years there has been a demand for a work containing a comprehensive summary of Japanese philosophy in a single volume. Mr. Armstrong's 'Light from the East' meets admirably the long-felt demand. . . . The author . . . seems to underestimate the value of Confucianism not merely as a system of philosophy cherished by the intellectual class, but also as a great moral teaching, which has influenced consciously and unconsciously the Japanese mind, and which has been the potent factor in shaping Japanese life and character." H. Okuda

+ Int J Ethics 26:300 Ja '16 530w

"There is nothing in Japanese Confucianism which is not found in China or in Europe and America; but, as to the process of 'Japanization,' it is peculiar to Japan and worthy of investigation. It is really an unfortunate thing that the author of the book conceives that 'the light of the East' consists in the matter of Confucianism rather than in that method of development which makes it Japanese. As to the chief attractions of the work, such as a command of language and power of imagery I was, I confess, charmed as I read it." Shigeo Kojima

+ J Philos 13:221 Ap 13 '16 430w

ARNOLD, HORACE LUCIAN, and FAUROTÉ, FAY LEONE. Ford methods and the Ford shops. (Works management lib.) il $5 Eng. mag. 658 15-26954

"A technical account of mechanical processes descriptive of methods of technical and factory organization. Chapters deal with Mr. Ford's personality, factory methods of employment, the relation of Mr. Ford to labor, and practices in safeguarding workmen. The book is lavishly illustrated."—Am Econ R

Am Econ R 6:136 Mr '16 40w
Cleveland p9 F '16

"The material in the book was first published in the Engineering Magazine as a series of articles started by Horace L. Arnold. Mr. Arnold died in the midst of his task, and Fay Leone Faurote finished the series. Charles B. Going has managed and edited the material so that the book has a unity which, because of the circumstances, was not the case as the articles were published. The book runs to nearly 500 pages in length and contains scores of photographs of detail operations which aid materially in making its contents useful as well as interesting."

+ Elec World 67:108 Ja 8 '16 240w

"A volume that must be of absorbing interest to almost anyone. It all but leaves the reader with the impression that he has actually visited the Ford shops and studied them at first hand."

R. R. Potter

+ Engin N 75:512 Mr 16 '16 200w

"Should be of value and interest to every industrial engineer, even though his work be the designing of the structures only. As is known in a general way, remarkable special machines, working routine and management system have been developed by the Ford organization. An understanding of them is well worth while, even if for the mere purpose of keeping in touch with the progress in manufacturing methods."

+ Engin Rec 73:24 Ja 1 '16 170w

N Y Br Lib News 3:24 F '16 150w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p15 F '16 10w

ARTSYBASHEV, MIKHAIL PETROVICH. War; 2 a play in four acts. *$1 Knopf 891.7 16-22619

"For the 'Borzoï' series of plays, published by Alfred Knopf, Thomas Seltzer has translated 'War,' a play by Michael Artzibashev, the brilliant young Russian novelist and playwright. . . . The drama shows us in the first act two weaklings despised by the healthy members of the community, the one a consumptive, the other of moral unworthiness. At the end of the war these two have gained supremacy, and have the right to produce the next generation, simply because the 'fit' have been killed. War has destroyed them, and the unfit must continue the life of the nation. This Artzibashev sees as the great tragedy of war."—R of Rs

N Y Br Lib News 3:185 D '16

"This play is notable for its restraint."

+ R of Rs 54:677 D '16 150w

ASHBURN, PERCY MOREAU. Elements of military hygiene, especially arranged for officers and men of the line. *$1.50 (1½c) Houghton 613.6 15-8055

A new edition, somewhat revised, of a work published in 1907. A supplementary chapter on The prevention of mental and nervous diseases has been added.

ASHLEY, ROSCOE LEWIS. Medieval civilization; a textbook for secondary schools. il *$1.10 Macmillan 940.1 16-6038

"The present emphasis on social rather than on the old-fashioned political history is reflected in 'Mediæval civilization.' It covers the ages of transition from the barbarian invasions to the peace of Westphalia [1648]. As the numbering of the pages and paragraphs indicates, it is a continuation of a volume on 'Ancient civilization." (Nation) There is a bibliography at the end of each chapter.

ASHLEY, ROSCOE LEWIS—Continued

"An improvement on many of its predecessors from the standpoint of historical accuracy. Still we noticed many an inaccurate statement, which we feel certain the author will correct in a second edition. He speaks of a married Catholic clergy without stating that they married against the law of western Christendom. . . ."

+ Cath World 103:689 Ag '16 210w

+ Educ R 52:316 O '16 40w

"It is fairly well provided with good illustrations, maps, review questions, and other formal equipment of a textbook. But many errors and frequent looseness or indefiniteness of statement betray either ignorance or haste—or both. In fact, the book gives the impression of being written by a maker of textbooks rather than by a scholarly teacher."

— Nation 102:sup496 My 4 '16 100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:59 Ap '16

"A rapid, but at the same time an interesting and readable, survey of 'Early European history.'"

+ Spec 117:108 J1 22 '16 100w

ASHMUN, MARGARET ELIZA. Isabel Carleton's year. il *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 16-18333

This is the story of Isabel Carleton's senior year in high school and of the summer following. It is one of those rare stories that picture happy, normal girlhood, finding in the everyday happenings of home and school incident enough to make a book of impelling interest for girls. Isabel is the daughter of a professor in a middle western university. Father, mother, two younger sisters and boy and girl friends enter into the story. Isabel graduates from high school as valedictorian of her class, spends a summer which has a touch of tragedy, and in the fall has an unexpected opportunity to go abroad for a year of travel before taking up her work in the university. Parts of the book are reprinted from the Youth's Companion.

+ A L A Bkl 13:129 D '16

+ Ind 88:402 D 4 '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:456 O 29 '16 90w

Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 50w

"An unusually well written story for older girls, with special interest in Wisconsin because the author is a former university instructor and the scene is laid in Madison."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 60w

ASHWORTH, JOHN H. Helper and American trade unions. (Johns Hopkins univ. studies in historical and political science) $1 (2½c) Johns Hopkins 331.87 15-15576

"This intensive study of the helper and the trade union is based, largely, upon trade union documents, personal correspondence, and experience. In his introduction the author defines the term 'helper,' and differentiates him from the apprentice and from other subordinate workers."

... Having defined and differentiated the helper from others, the author shows how he affects and is affected by trade union regulations." (Am Econ R) The author is instructor in political economy in Pennsylvania State college.

"The author has collected much valuable material and has presented it in a logical order and in readable form. The definitions are clear and criticism is substantiated by example. . . . This monograph is by far the best study made of the subject and is in every way a substantial piece of work." J. M. Motley

+ Am Econ R 6:395 Je '16 870w

ASKEW, ALICE J. DE C. (LEAKE) (MRS. C. A. C. ASKEW), and ASKEW, CLAUDE ARTHUR CARY. Stricken land: Serbia as we saw it. il *$3 (3½c) Dodd 940.91

The authors went to Serbia in the fall of 1914. They went primarily as writers but were ready, as they say, to turn their hands to anything. For many months they were cut off from the outside world, feeling and suffering with the Serbian people, and taking what part they could in the relief work. And having lived in daily expectation of reinforcements from the Allies to support the Serbian forces, they are very bitter against their own country, Great Britain, for help promised but not given. "We reviled Greece for having failed to abide by a solemn treaty; but what can we say for ourselves?" they ask.

"The book is capably done, though somewhat too much space is given to accounts of personal discomfort. This, it must be allowed, was often severe."

+ Ath p386 Ag '16 60w

"We are told far more concerning the adventures of these writers than of the country and of the people. On the trend of the war in that region we are told little or nothing."

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 3 '17 320w

+ N Y Times 22:3 Ja 7 '17 580w

"The book suffers from want of proper arrangement, and from the over-zeal of the writers in the cause of the brave and unfortunate people of Serbia. It is to be regretted that on reaching England they did not make the revision which they at first contemplated. As it is, their book gives the impression of a long and, it must be confessed, somewhat wearisome indictment of the allied diplomats."

— + Spec 117:293 S 9 '16 140w

"It is unfortunate there is no map; it is difficult without one to follow the course of the retreat."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p363 Ag 3 '16 350w

ASQUITH, HERBERT. Volunteer, and other poems. *1s Sidgwick & Jackson, London 821

"All lovers of good verse joined to high courage, the joy of battle, and the fighting spirit in its happiest and most exalted mood will delight in Mr. Herbert Asquith's 'The volunteer, and other poems.' . . . What makes this war-spirit the more remarkable is that two of the poems in this volume were written before the war; that is, before Mr. Asquith had become a soldier, perhaps before he had even thought of becoming one. . . . The first of these, entitled 'The volunteer,' appeared in the Spectator in the second week of the war. It had, however,—we say it with a full sense of editorial perfidy—been in our hands for nearly a year. . . . The other poem, entitled 'Ares, god of war,' and written in January, 1914, is even more remarkable for its prophetic element and for that delight in battle of which we have spoken."—Spec

"The later poems of the war betray a mind which can only grasp a present reality by diving back into literature for its expression."

— + Sat R 121:443 My 6 '16 180w

"In our opinion, as memorable a poetic achievement as any during the war, not forgetting that of Mr. Rupert Brooke. The inspiration is as well marked as the scholarship, and the inspiration is that of the man in arms. . . . Besides the goodness of the poetry, there is something exceedingly piquant in the thought that it is the work of one who is a poet, a prime minister's son, and a Blue marine."

+ Spec 116:22 Ja 1 '16 1350w

ATACK, F. W., ed. Chemists' year-book, 1916. 2v *10s 6d Sherratt and Hughes, London 540.3

"Mr. Atack's compilation is a much more comprehensive production than is usual in a work of this kind, and includes quite a remarkable body of information ranging from a list of notable dates in the history of chemistry to the pharmaceutical names of synthetic compounds and trade names of drugs, together with analytical tables, conversion tables for weights and measures, five-figure logarithms, natural sines and tangents, specific gravity and hydrometric tables, and tables of solubilities of a wide range of substances."—Nature

"As a rule, care has been shown in selecting the latest and best authorities, and the whole has been put together in a convenient form."

The proofs have evidently been very well read, as the book is remarkably free from typographical errors. The editor deserves great praise for the thoroughness with which he has done his work, and the book, we trust, will find a place in the laboratory or on the desk of every chemical consultant."

+ Nature 97:320 Je 15 '16 270w
Pittsburgh 21:571 D '16

ATHENÆUM subject index to periodicals, 1915; issued at the request of the Council of the Library association, subs £2 10s Athenæum, Bream's bldgs., Chancery Lane, London; B. F. Stevens & Brown, Am. agents, 16 Beaver st., N. Y. 050 (Eng ed 16-24573)

"This volume is the outcome of a resolution passed at the Bournemouth meeting of the Library association in 1913, at which a paper was read by Mr. T. W. Lyster, advocating the resumption of an index to periodicals on the lines of Poole and his continuators. . . . The proprietors of the Athenæum, in view of the value of the proposed index to all engaged in research work, offered their co-operation. A start was made in July, 1915, by the publication of a series of specimen class lists; and between October, 1915, and April, 1916, eleven lists were issued in separate form. The present volume consolidates these class lists into one alphabet, with the addition of over 2,000 entries, the final totals being as follows: periodicals indexed, 420; articles, 13,374; subject headings, 7,054; and author references, 7,280."—Ath

Ath p537 N '16 170w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p490 O 12 '16 40w

ATHERTON, MRS. GERTRUDE FRANKLIN (HORN). Mrs. Balfame. *$1.35 (1c) Stokes 16-5195

Mrs. Balfame had made up her mind to commit murder. She had decided to kill her husband and her plans were well and carefully laid, but it was reserved for another hand than hers to remove him from this world. David Balfame is shot down at his own gate; suspicion falls on Mrs. Balfame; she is arrested and tried. The reader is partly in the secret; he knows that Mrs. Balfame is technically innocent, whatever her intentions may have been. The mystery of the story depends on the discovery of the one who fired the shot. In the detective work of the tale the clever young reporters of the New York press take the leading part.

A L A Bkl 12:338 Ap '16
Ath p194 Ap '16 100w

Reviewed by Wilson Follett
— Atlan 118:494 O '16 240w

"Mrs. Balfame is not quite convincing. And right there one gets the basic weakness of the story. . . . The story is ingeniously constructed and developed with skill. The reader's interest will hardly fail to be tensely expectant from the early pages to the unfolding of the mystery. Mrs. Atherton has been careful of all the small details that make for the smooth running of the machinery of such a plot. And she has also developed the central and most important figure, Mrs. Balfame, with the greatest attention to her psychology. But she has failed to make convincing the crucial point in the story—the woman's decision to murder her husband." F. F. Kelly

+ — Bookm 43:83 Mr '16 550w

"Is it really a remarkable mystery story, is it really a work of art, is it really a good novel? It might of course be all these, but it falls far short of any of them. What the yellow newspaper is to American journalism 'Mrs. Balfame' is to American fiction. It is as crude and as raw as the crudest and rawest elements in our hybrid civilization. Beside its exaggerations and its falsities, such novels as those of David Graham Phillips are the most uncompromising truth. Beside its mysteries, the sensationalism of Laura Jean Libbey and others of that ilk make a near approach to life itself." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p24 F 23 '16 1550w

"The novel is a concrete expression and reflection of a part of the public mind which, unrestrained by religion and unconsciously influenced by extreme theories of sociologists, grows daily more vague as to moral distinctions and indifferent to the sanctity of human life."

— Cath World 103:254 My '16 580w

Reviewed by E. E. Hale
Dial 60:282 Mr 16 '16 400w

+ Ind 86:145 Ap 24 '16 50w

"Not less interesting are the studies of her state of mind, and of several other characters, and the trenchant picture of a social world where feminist sympathies condone murder, and a crowd of newspaper men, hungry for sensational copy, work up the case with a savage energy and methods more unscrupulous than those of Fouché or Corentin."

+ Library Association Record 18:176 Ap 15 '16 90w

"'Mrs. Balfame' is purely a potboiler."
— Nation 102:313 Mr 16 '16 300w

"The portrait of Mrs. Balfame is very carefully drawn—almost too carefully, indeed. Broader strokes, that leave more to the imagination of the reader, might have produced a more satisfying artistic effect, if not a more lifelike one, but Mrs. Atherton never did trust the intelligence of her public far enough for that, and she probably never will. This is exactly the point where the great talent of our greatest woman novelist stops short of being genius. She is too keen not to recognize and scorn the quality of the popular audience; she lacks the philosophy, or perhaps the passionate patience, which would enable her to aim above its head, and wait for time to bring in his revenges. . . . 'Mrs. Balfame' is a lesser book than 'Julia France' or 'The Californians' or 'Perch of the devil,' or several other novels by Mrs. Atherton we might name. Its limits are the segment of a circle, not the full horizon. So we lose the spaciousness of the earlier novels, the sense of freedom, of facing all ways from a centre."

+ — N Y Times 21:57 F 20 '16 1350w

Reviewed by M. K. Reely
Pub W 89:645 F 19 '16 700w

+ R of Rs 53:505 Ap '16 170w

"Mrs. Atherton has given literary form to the shilling shocker. Taking for her purpose the most sensational of plots, she has shown how such material may be moulded by a skilful hand into an acceptable story void of crudity, where the characters act and talk like men and women, not as puppets. She has shown, further, how such material lends itself to psychological treatment."

+ — Sat R 121:591 Je 17 '16 720w

"How two people should have been ready to die for so fishlike an egotist as Mrs. Balfame passes the wit of the present writer. It is only fair to say that it passed the wit of Mrs. Balfame herself."

— Spec 116:356 Mr 11 '16 770w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 5 '16 470w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p118 Mr 9 '16 450w

ATLANTIC MONTHLY. Atlantic classics. *$1.25 Atlantic monthly co., 3 Park st., Boston 814 16-9674

Sixteen essays chosen from recent numbers of the Atlantic Monthly are reprinted in this volume. Among them are Fiddlers errant, by R. H. Schaffer; Turtle eggs for Agassiz, by D. L. Sharp; A father to his freshman son, by E. S. Martin; Intensive living, by Cornelia A. P. Comer; The other side, by Margaret Sherwood; On authors, by Margaret P. Montague; The provincial American, by Meredith Nicholson and Our Lady Poverty, by Agnes Repplier.

+ A L A Bkl 13:18 O '16

+ Nation 103:206 Ag 31 '16 280w

N Y Br Lib News 3:87 Je '16 90w

ATWOOD, NORA. Theory and practice of the kindergarten. (Riverside educational monographs) *60c (1½c) Houghton 372.2 16-8464

A book designed for the beginning kindergarten. The author's purpose is to help her to relate the theory which she has been so carefully taught in training school to the practical problems which confront her in her work. Contents: The conduct of the kindergarten; Kindergarten accessories; The kindergarten program; The use of the kindergarten gifts; The use of the story in the kindergarten; The kindergarten and the primary teacher. The author has been connected with the kindergarten departments of the state normal schools at Montclair, N. J., at Winona, Minn., and at Providence, R. I.

ATWOOD, NORA—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 13:7 O '16
N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16
St Louis 15:10 Ja '17

AUDSLEY, GEORGE ASHDOWN, and AUDSLEY, BERTHOLD. Amateur joinery in the home. il $*1 (5½c) Small 694 A16-1515

"A practical manual for the amateur joiner on the construction of articles of domestic furniture." It is an English work prepared by two architects. There is an introduction followed by chapters on: Woods suitable for joinery, Tools and their uses, Methods of construction. A final chapter is given to a Description of the plates, of which there are twenty-two in addition to text illustrations.

AUDSLEY, GEORGE ASHDOWN, and AUDSLEY, BERTHOLD. Art of polychromatic and decorative turning. il $*1 (5c) Small 694 A16-1516

"A practical manual for the professional and amateur turner." Contents: Coloured woods suitable for decorative turning; Decoration by the process of studding; Decoration by the process of lamination; Decoration by the process of geometrical inlaying; The practical application of polychromatic and decorative turning. The frontispiece is in color and there are numerous other plates and figures.

AUDSLEY, GEORGE ASHDOWN, and AUDSLEY, BERTHOLD. Artistic and decorative stencilling. il $*1 (7½c) Small 747 A16-1517

"A practical manual on the art of stencilling on paper, wood, and textile fabrics, for home adornment and articles of dress." Contents: Introductory; Materials used in the process of stencilling; The preparation of stencils; The process of stencilling; The artistic stencilling of textile fabrics. There are twenty-seven plates in color and monochrome, with additional drawings in the text.

AUER, HARRY ANTON. Camp fires in the Yukon. il $*1.75 (3½c) Stewart & Kidd 799 16-5338

The purpose of this book is to give an accurate record of the author's experiences and observations as a hunter of big game in the Yukon. The expedition of which he gives an account had for its special objects the study of the habits of the animal life of the region and the obtaining of specimens of big game. In particular the habits of the Ovis dalli, the pure white mountain sheep, were studied together with other little known animals of the region. The account takes a narrative form and follows the events of the expedition. Additional notes on animal life are given in an appendix.

"Told in a breezy, humorous way, and full of just the sort of definite information on equipment, the game, the country, which hunters and many others will enjoy."

+ A L A Bkl 12:414 Je '16
Reviewed by F. F. Kelly
+ Bookm 43:548 Jl '16 230w

"Mr. Auer's book aims to be hardly more than a reproduction of the diary which he kept, the object of the party being not to produce a literary work but to study the habits of the various game on their native ranges and to obtain specimens for the members of the party. The writer has, however, succeeded in producing a book which is sure to interest and repay many non-hunters and non-explorers. Though he laments serious restriction to his labor in picture making owing to disaster to the photograph outfit, the net result is admirable."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 25 '16 320w

Reviewed by P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 61:23 Je 22 '16 220w
+ Ind 86:182 My 1 '16 50w
+ Nation 102:570 My 25 '16 480w
+ N Y Times 21:237 Je 11 '16 150w
+ R of Rs 53:630 My '16 80w
+ Springf'd Republican p13 My 28 '16 130w

AUMONIER, STACY. Olga Bardel. *$1.35 (2c) Century 16-18906

It is the scene in which the child Olga first experiences the delight of sound that convinces the reader that she is really a genius. She has stolen into Uncle Grubhofer's terrible room in hope of finding food there, suspecting that this was the explanation of Irene's frequent visits. Once in the room she made the discovery that banished consciousness of hunger, the discovery that the coiled wires and springs could be made to produce the sounds that filled her with ecstasy. The punishments of her sister Irene and her brothers Karl and Montague were unavailing in keeping her from the room, and fortunately after Uncle Grubhofer had settled the matter by the turning of a key another way of producing sound was opened out to her. Altho, following her brief exploitation as a child prodigy, her professional career is cut short by marriage, and tho it never fulfills its early promise, she retains the faculty of "looking at life like a child," which is the distinguishing characteristic of genius.

"This is another of the many 'first novels' which this season has produced, and one of the best of them in promise and achievement."

H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:260 N '16 400w

"Perhaps Mr. Aumonier's greatest skill is in showing how the child could never escape from her family, and could not even avoid their un-moral instincts. . . . The novel is worth while, and Mr. Aumonier is on the road to distinction." L. C. H.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 18 '16 1050w

"Like 'The green alleys,' moreover, it leaves the impression of formlessness—or, rather, it leaves no particular impression. The writer has not yet learned the art of stripping his story of non-essentials. He is still imagist, reflecting the part of life that he sees, not yet interpreting it, nor seeing it clearly or whole."

— + Dial 61:400 N 16 '16 220w

"An honest, high minded tale."

+ Ind 88:234 N 6 '16 110w

"We shall look with uncommon interest for further work by this new novelist."

+ Nation 103:352 O 12 '16 440w

"The novel gives an interesting glimpse of wire-pulling and publicity work in the world of concerts and recitals."

+ N Y Times 21:402 O 8 '16 530w

"A work of extraordinary power and reality. It is what all really great novels are—a biography that frees the mind to larger spaces by means of the significance of the definite and the particular."

+ R of Rs 55:103 Ja '17 190w

"The gradual unfolding of the child's lift up to womanhood, her career as a vaudeville artist, marriage, divorce, and second marriage—both marriages are far above her station in life—furnish material for a gripping story."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 8 '16 160w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 O 12 '16 20w

AURNER, CLARENCE RAY. History of education in Iowa. 4v v 3-4 ea $2 (2c) Iowa. State hist. soc. 370.9 (14-31842)

Volume three of Mr. Aurner's history deals with secondary education in Iowa. In the development of the secondary school the chronological order has been followed as closely as over-lapping organizations would permit. Dealt with in turn are the incorporated and unincorporated academy, institutions for special instruction, schools under sectarian domination, and the public high school. Volume four is devoted to the three state institutions for higher learning in Iowa—the State university at Iowa City, State college of agriculture and mechanic arts at Ames and the State Teachers college at Cedar Falls. The author's aim has been to avoid personal history in the development of these institutions and to place emphasis on the legal and official aspects of their growth.

"The volumes are authoritative within their limitations, impartial in tone, and rich in material suggesting further refinement and research. . . . The third volume is confused, prosaic, uncertain in its emphasis, too often apologetic for omissions, and quite lacking in elevation of understanding of the subtle forces which were shaping the great secondary school movement. not in Iowa alone, but in the whole West. . . . The fourth volume is based on abundant and orderly materials furnished by state legislation, official reports, proceedings of boards, and institutional publications. It is a distinct improvement on the preceding volume in proportions and in the tracing of forces at work in the evolution of the three institutions of collegiate type. Five good chapters are given to the state teachers college." K. C. Babcock

+ — Am Hist R 22:190 O '16 880w (Review of v 3-4)

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '16 90w (Review of v 4)

"The volume seems to give slightly undue space to private academies, institutions for special instruction, and sectarian schools, upon which there was undoubtedly the most material. Nevertheless, it contains a comprehensive, well-written, and fully documented record of the development of the public high school in county, township, and district, and a description of its relation to primary school and to the colleges and universities."

+ Nation 103:17 J1 6 '16 240w (Review of v 3)

AUSTIN, OSCAR PHELPS. Economics of world trade. il Business training corporation 382 16-11190

This volume is issued as "the first unit of a course in foreign trade." This course, which is to be complete in twelve instalments or study units, "aims to be practical, to avoid theory and speculation. It is designed to treat each of the subjects in as few and as forceful words as possible. It is American, written from an American point of view, for Americans." The present volume is made up of chapters on: Plan and scope of course; Our new place in world commerce; Retaining our increased trade; The need for trained men; Basic factors in world commerce; Other factors in world commerce; Probable expansion of world commerce; Our preparedness for foreign trade; The trend toward manufacturing; Our new trade relations; Fighting for the world's trade. The author is statistician for the foreign trade department of the National city bank of New York.

"Among the reasons for the decline of the American merchant marine since 1860 (p.95), no mention is made of the strongest influence—the opportunities for more profitable investment in domestic business enterprises." M. T. Copeland

Am Econ R 6:901 D '16 220w

+ Lit D 53:757 S 23 '16 100w

R of Rs 54:572 N '16 110w

AYER, MARY ALLETTE, comp. Our mothers. il *$1 Lothrop 808.8 16-10367

An anthology of the tributes in prose and verse that have been paid to motherhood. The selections range in length from complete poems to short two-line quotations.

"In it will be found many popular favorites."
+ — Ind 86:404 Je 5 '16 50w

AYRES, LEONARD PORTER, and AYRES, MAY. School buildings and equipment. il 25c (1c) Cleveland foundation, Survey committee; Russell Sage foundation 370.91 16-2422

This is one of the 25 sections of the report of the Educational survey of Cleveland conducted by the Survey committee of the Cleveland foundation in 1915. Cleveland has been building schools for 100 years, and in this little book the development that has followed the first one-room building erected in 1816 is traced. Contents: Advancing standards in schoolhouse construction; Developments in seven decades; Some conditions in the school plant; Safety and sanitation; Costs; Building problem of the board; Summary. There are 17 illustrations and a map.

Cleveland p7 F '16 90w

"The three volumes which have appeared thus far exhibit some of the characteristics of the survey clearly enough to justify comment on them. First, the survey has made an effort to put its results in form which can be understood by the lay reader. Secondly, the reports are full of facts. It has been the purpose of the survey staff to avoid so far as possible an appeal to opinion. They will doubtless have a wide circulation outside of the special community concerned."

+ El School J 16:219 Ja '16 1950w

+ El School J 16:342 Mr '16 190w

Pittsburgh 21:110 Mr '16

B

BACKUS, WILLIAM VERNON. Making happiness epidemic. *50c (5c) Holt 174 16-14740

A genuine contribution to more abundant living, dedicated "To that much maligned, little understood, often mistaken, but inherently noble, splendid, and God-like individual—my fellow man—of whatever country or clime." "Rudeness has become a national asset," asserts the writer. He would have the human family, all kin, set about to antidote this destroyer of happiness by kindness, sympathy and appreciation. The practical benefits of kindness—the pay in dollars and cents—are more easily understood by the average reader than the less familiar therapeutic benefits which are set forth in the discussion of "Deadly poison thoughts." Published in 1913 as "Talosophy."

N Y Times 21:278 J1 9 '16 100w

"A sane book, and one well worth while writing and reading."

+ Springfield Republican p10 140w

BACON, CHARLES WILLIAM, and MORSE, FRANKLYN STANLEY. American plan of government. *$2.50 Putnam 342.7 16-13168

A history of the constitution of the United States, including an account of its origin and a study of its interpretation by the courts. "The United States constitution of 1916 is not the constitution of 1789," says George Gordon Battle, who contributes an introduction. "This book shows how a plan of government adopted 127 years ago to give the people of thirteen little republics a central government strong enough to protect them from internal dissension and foreign aggression has been found sufficient for the management of the business of a nation which uses commercial and industrial machinery not dreamed of in the constitution-making era. No similar book is in existence."

+ Ath p474 O '16 60w

+ Bookm 44:69 S '16 330w

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '16 480w

N Y Br Lib News 3:106 J1 '16

"The work is at once historical and legal. It is not intended to be deeply philosophic on the one hand, or on the other to furnish to lawyers a complete account of decisions and precedents. It is meant, we should say, for study chiefly in colleges, and is certain to be useful to the citizens of the United States who may desire to understand the theory and working of our national system more accurately and more completely than is possible through the perusal of

BACON, C. W.; and MORSE, F. S.—Cont. the press. . . . The introduction by George Gordon Battle is not a serious contribution to the value of the book."

+ N Y Times 21:332 Ag 27 '16 550w

"These instances of inadequacies and errors are characteristic rather than exceptional. Mr. Bacon has given a convenient guide to many important judicial utterances, but his book can be used with safety only by one already well grounded in the decisions interpreting the constitution. One merit the work possesses. It shows no trace of any political or economic bias on the part of the author. Neither, however, does it indicate that political and economic doctrines have been factors influencing the judicial interpretation of the constitution." T: R. Powell

— + Pol Sci Q 31:626 D '16 1000w

R of Rs 54:113 J1 '16 10w

St Louis 14:388 N '16 70w

"As the authors take the document clause by clause, they do not always make it clear whether the federal government has ultimately prevailed over the states."

+ Spec 117:sup533 N 4 '16 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p468 S 28 '16 70w

BACON, CORINNE, comp. Children's catalog of one thousand books; a guide to the best reading for boys and girls. (Standard catalog ser.) *$2 Wilson, H. W. 028.5

The first edition of the Children's catalog, edited by Marion E. Potter, was issued in 1909. The new edition, prepared by Corinne Bacon, will be issued as a series of catalogs to meet the needs of different libraries. The present list of 1000 titles is designed for small libraries. 2000 and 3500 title lists are to follow. Like the first edition the new catalog is based on carefully selected library lists. The books are arranged under author, title and subject, arranged in one alphabet. Most of the titles are annotated. "The annotations are chiefly descriptive, occasionally evaluative and comparative, and have been taken in the main from the lists and bulletins used as a basis for selection." (Preface) 212 volumes have been analyzed for this list. A special attempt has been made to bring out Boy scout material, material on how to make and do things, etc. The St. Nicholas index, included in the first edition, has been omitted and will be issued later in separate and revised form.

+ Dial 61:546 D 14 '16 60w

+ Library World 19:186 Ja '17 300w

"This bibliography is the result of years of experience, and countless checking, and is a volume which no person interested in the training of children can afford to do without."

+ Lit D 53:1612 D 16 '16 60w

"Probably the most comprehensive catalog of the best juveniles ever issued."

+ Springfield Republican p8 N 18 '16 90w

BACON, CORINNE, comp. Selected articles on military training. pa *25c Wilson, H. W. 355 16-1774

One of the pamphlets of the Abridged debaters' handbook series. It contains a brief on the question, Resolved: That military training should be given in American colleges and universities; a bibliography of six pages, and reprints of articles presenting arguments for and against military training.

A L A Bkl 12:357 My '16

Ind 85:200 F 7 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:24 F '16

St Louis 14:150 Ap '16

BACON, CORINNE, comp. Selected articles on national defense. v. 2, advance sheets (Debaters' handbook ser.) pa *35c Wilson, H. W. 355.7

These advance sheets from a new handbook on national defense are published in answer to the demand for additional material on this subject. The pamphlet supplements the handbook published in 1915 and contains new reprints and a new bibliography.

A L A Bkl 12:400 Je '16

Reviewed by E. G. Balch

Survey 37:92 O 28 '16 20w

BACON, RAYMOND FOSS, and HAMOR, WILLIAM ALLEN. American petroleum industry. 2v il *$10 McGraw 665 16-17665

"These two sizable volumes by the director and the assistant director of the Mellon institute of the University of Pittsburgh, with special chapters by other experts, offer an important addition to the literature of the subject. Volume 1 follows somewhat the beaten track of geochemistry, geology, distribution, properties, history, and production. Volume 2 brings together from many sources and with convenient arrangement the present state of the refining art. . . . There is also a chapter on hygienic considerations, a complete glossary of bitumenology, and a wealth of footnote references."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

"A textbook, more comprehensive than Johnson and Huntley's 'Principles of oil and gas production' (Wiley, 1916. 371p). It is essentially descriptive. . . . An unusually comprehensive reference work."

+ A L A Bkl 13:203 F '17

"Reviewed in Canadian Mining Engineer, Oct. 1, 1916; Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter, Sept. 18, 1916; American Gas Light Journal, Oct. 30, 1916; Gas Age, Oct. 16, 1916; Mining and Engineering World, Oct. 21, 1916."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p4 N '16 130w

Pittsburgh 21:577 D '16

"Important authoritative reference and textbook."

+ Pratt p21 Ja '17 50w

St Louis 14:397 N '16

BAILEY, ALBERT EDWARD. Gospel in art. 2 il *$3 (2c) Pilgrim press 755 16-25229

The author says, "This book is an art course in the sense that it studies a number of paintings to discover their spiritual values. . . . The pictures have been selected because in some measure they speak of religion. They hint at some connection between this world of fact in which we move and the infinite spiritual world that penetrates it and gives it meaning. . . . It is the purpose of this book to help you discover and appreciate the religious element in art; to study art not for art's sake but for your sake; to strengthen your grasp upon the things that are unseen and eternal." The arrangement of the material of the book follows the life of Christ from the annunciation to the ascension. Brief biographical sketches of the artists represented are given at the close. The author is director of religious education at Worcester academy and lecturer in religious education in Newton theological institution.

"He has covered hitherto unexplored ground, and studies his subject from an original point of view. His chief concern in each instance is to find the soul of the picture, its spirit, which was transferred from the heart of the artist to the canvas."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 3 '17 330w

"Good as is the description of special pictures, the introduction on 'How to study a picture' seems worth all the rest together."

+ Outlook 115:114 Ja 17 '17 60w

"The book should be of special value to pastors. . . . but its scope is broad enough to include the layman who wishes to acquaint himself with the subject. The volume is attractively bound and printed."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 7 '17 140w

BAILEY, ARTHUR LOW. Library bookbinding. *$1.25 (2½c) Wilson, H. W. 025.7 16-14369

The author is librarian of the Wilmington (Del.) Institute free library and chairman of the A. L. A. committee on bookbinding. In his preface he states that he has limited his discussion to matters dealing directly with the binding of books for libraries. He has not taken up commercial binding nor historical binding since these subjects are treated adequately in Coutts and Stephen's "Manual." Nor has he included paper on account of its full treatment by other authorities, whom he lists. Among the 13 chapters, those on Binding before purchase and reinforcing, Repairing, recasing, re-covering, etc.; Magazine binders; and Pamphlets will be especially helpful to the librarians of the smaller libraries on account of the economies they suggest. The chapter on Specifications gives information on requirements for the binding of fiction and juvenile books, non-fiction, periodicals, newspapers, reference books, law books, music, books of illustrations, and commercial binding for reference books. The Suggestions for reducing cost (p. 119-123) will be of general appeal. Appendixes A, B and C are respectively: Specifications of the U. S. Bureau of standards for book cloths, Reading list on binding, and List of technical terms.

+ A L A Bkl 13:4 O '16

"It is detailed enough to be of service to the largest libraries. It is simple enough in treatment to be a great help to the smallest library. Mr. Bailey nowhere claims to have said the last word on library binding, but he has covered the field so well that it is not likely that any changes in the near future in either materials or methods of binding will make any elaborate supplement to his book necessary." F. K. Walter in the Library Journal.

+ Cleveland p161 D '16 120w

"By the greatest authority to publish a book on the subject so far this year."

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:103 Jl '16 15w

+ St Louis 14:426 D '16 30w

Wis Lib Bull 12:318 Jl '16 70w

BAILEY, BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Principles of dynamo electric machinery. il *$3 McGraw 621.31 15-24865

"Throughout the book, evident attempt has been made, first, to describe the fundamental phenomena involved in the operation of the various common pieces of commercial electric machinery and then to outline the more important physical reactions of the apparatus. Naturally, the mathematical development of theory has been given a secondary place, though the shorthand notation furnished by mathematical formulas has been freely employed. The students who are to use this book, or to follow courses based on such procedure, must have a thorough grounding in elementary physics. . . . The book is not to be thought of as a treatise for the 'practical' man."—Engin N

A L A Bkl 12:408 Je '16

Engin N 75:941 My 18 '16 420w

BAILEY, CAROLYN SHERWIN. Stories for Sunday telling. *$1 (3c) Pilgrim press 372.6 16-22746

The author says: "The stories included in this collection have all been used by Sunday school teachers and mothers for the specific value of bringing home to children of kindergarten and early primary age certain moral and spiritual facts. . . . The collection covers a sufficiently varied field to make the stories useful during the entire period of the children's spiritual development during the early years when they learn most simply and permanently through parable, fable and allegory." The stories are grouped as Sunday fairy stories; Stories of play; Holiday stories; Stories of everyday.

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 70w

BAILEY, LIBERTY HYDE. Standard cyclopedia of horticulture. 6v v 4-5 il ea *$6 Macmillan 634 (14-6168)

v 4 The fourth of the six volumes that are to make up this revised work covers the field from L to O, inclusive. Landscape gardening is treated at length, several authors contributing to the discussion. Machinery and implements is another subject given full treatment, with most interesting illustrations to show the evolution from earliest times to the present. Under the heading North American states each of the separate states of the union is given a section, with a map of each showing horticultural areas.

v 5 The fifth volume carries the work thru P, Q, and R. Pear, Peach, Pear, Pecan, Planting, Pruning, Quercus (oak), Quince, Rhododendron and Rose are some of the subjects covered. The volume is illustrated with colored plates, four thousand engravings in the text, and ninety-six full-page cuts.

"The colored plates of the volume are especially attractive."

+ Dial 60:478 My 11 '16 120w (Review of v 4)

"Dr. Bailey has reduced the system of cross-references to a minimum, so that any one consulting this new work can draw from it the information it contains with the least possible effort in a minimum of time."

+ Lit D 53:1180 N 4 '16 480w (Review of v 1-4)

BAILEY, LIBERTY HYDE. Wind and weather. *$1 Scribner 811 16-13164

A book of poems collected from the writings of many years. Like "The holy earth" this volume is one of the "Background books" in which, as the publishers announce, Mr. Bailey will give from time to time "his personal estimates and expressions on the important and interesting subjects to which he has devoted his life."

+ Ind 87:348 S 4 '16 100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:103 Jl '16

+ Springfield Republican p7 N 25 '16 460w

BAILEY, WILLIAM FREDERICK. Slavs of the war zone. il *$3.50 Dutton 16-23468

"Those who still believe that Austria-Hungary has a mainly German population may be recommended to study Mr. W. F. Bailey's 'The Slavs of the war zone.' His work is frankly descriptive and gives impressions of things seen." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "It ranges from the Baltic littoral to the southern shores of the Adriatic, and includes within its scope peoples as widely different as the primitive Ruthenes and the ultra-modern Czechs of Bohemia, but with the thread of common racial unity running through them all. It contains lurid pen-pictures of Serbia during the great retreat and Bosnia under Austro-German terrorism; intimate sketches of country-house life in Poland and Croatia; brisk descriptions of cosmopolitan Fiume and Laodicean Vienna, of the gaiety of Budapest and the business enterprise of Prague: each with a separate charm and individuality of its own." (Spec)

"This may not be the mood which makes a book impartial, but it often does make a book moving. 'The Slavs of the war zone' has the touch of eloquence which comes from an undercurrent of anger. Yet discount the very human bias of the author and the result is still creditable—a picture of a complex subject which is accurate, informative, vivid."

+ New Repub 9:276 Ja 6 '17 770w

+ N Y Times 21:543 D 10 '16 790w

R of Rs 54:572 N '16 70w

"A vivid, interesting book, the matter of it fresh and entertaining, the style carelessly easy and agreeable."

+ Spec 117:191 Ag 12 '16 300w

+ Springfield Republican p6 N 6 '16 320w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p315 Jl 6 '16 230w

BAILLIE, THOMAS CLEGHORN. Electrical engineering. v 1 il *$1.25 Putnam (A16-52)

"This text, dealing in an elementary fashion with electric circuits, machines and measurements, is intended as the introductory volume of a series of electrical texts being published in the Cambridge technical series. . . . The work covered in the text is ordinarily given in a technical school by the department of physics, as will be evident from a brief review of the contents. The chapters are entitled: Currents of electricity, Magnetism, Current measurement, Electromotive force, Resistance measurement, The potentiometer, Batteries and Electric light.

BAILLIE, THOMAS CLEGHORN—Continued
—Science

"For the most part it consists of photographs of electrical measuring instruments and descriptions of their contents. The discussion seems to be inadequate to give either a theoretical or a practical knowledge of the subject."
—Nation 102:sup502 My 4 '16 50w

"On reading the book nothing new is found, either in subject-matter or method of presentation. There are several other books to be had which cover the same ground in practically the same way. . . . The subject-matter is logically presented and is fairly well illustrated by original diagrams and cuts of commercial apparatus. To the layman desiring a knowledge of some of the underlying principles of electrical engineering or to the student attacking the subject for the first time, the text would be very helpful." J. H. M.
+ Science n s 43:575 Ap 21 '16 230w

BAKER, ARTHUR ERNEST. Tennyson dictionary. *$3 Dutton 821 16-17515

"A Tennyson dictionary" aims to present the characters and place-names contained in the poetical and dramatic works of the poet, alphabetically arranged and described; with synopses of the poems and plays." (Springfield Republican) "Mr. Baker's volume is one of a series of dictionaries of famous authors by various hands, already included in it being Dickens, Thackeray, Scott, Kipling, Thomas Hardy, Oscar Wilde and Zola." (Boston Transcript)

"Uniform with Mudge and Sears' 'Thackeray dictionary' and others in the series. . . . Of more practical use, perhaps, than the editor's 'Concordance to the poet,' but not considered equal to it in workmanship."
+ — A L A Bk 13:73 N '16

"Should be useful to some readers. There are 2,040 entries, embracing both historical and fictitious characters and places, with a short description of each. But the brevity is overdone, and the absence of references to line-numbers is a mistake. What is the use of a vague reference to so long a poem as 'In memoriam'?"
— + Ath p283 Je '16 60w

"We are ready once more to recognize Mr. Baker's industry, but we must say clearly that he has missed his chance of doing an interesting work adequately. The man who annotates Tennyson must have a range of culture beyond the ordinary guides to knowledge."
— Ath p318 Jl '16 300w

— Boston Transcript p9 Jl 29 '16 330w
N Y Br Lib News 3:122 Ag '16 30w
N Y Times 21:348 S 3 '16 60w
Pittsburgh 22:35 Ja '17 10w
Pratt p28 O '16

"If there is one thing which marks Tennyson, it is his skilful evocation of classical tradition, and here Mr. Baker's knowledge is singularly defective. We do not expect an encyclopaedia, but we may fairly ask for references to sources which every dictionary maker should know, and which many scholars, from Churton Collins to Professor W. P. Mustard, have long since traced."
— Sat R 121:591 Je 17 '16 450w

"We cannot see who is served by this, for instance: 'Shakespeare, a famous English poet and the greatest of dramatists.' Still less by: 'She-goat—a female goat. Becket.'"
— + Spec 117:50 Jl 8 '16 70w

+ — Springfield Republican p6 Ag 22 '16 230w
"Mr. Baker has already published a Tennyson concordance, a careful piece of work which is of value. We cannot say as much of his dictionary, which often leaves the inquirer unsatisfied, and has to a large extent been anticipated by the concordance."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Je 1 '16 330w

BAKER, LOUIS HARRINGTON. Favorite motor ways of New England, historical and descriptive. (MacNair's motorway ser.) il $2 (5c) H: MacNair, 354 5th av., N. Y. $17.4 15-18017

A motorists' guide to the New England states, including a bit of south-eastern New York. Its purpose is to supply "in concise form, information in regard to such points of interest as are met with on some of the principal highways of the region. It is not intended primarily as a path-finder, as it keeps for the most part to main lines of travel, but rather aims to answer the numerous questions which constantly occur to the tourist as to the significance of monuments and tablets, the identity of prominent buildings, the precise location of historical points, etc." (Preface) There are 15 maps, numerous illustrations and a list of hotels, with rates, etc.

St Louis 14:198 My '16

BALCH, ERNEST BERKELEY. Amateur circus life. il *$1.50 (4c) Macmillan 613.7 16-23797

The author has taken the ten elements that make up simple tumbling as practiced by professional acrobats and has worked out a system that may be used in the physical education of boys and girls. In addition to describing these exercises, he tells boys how to work up a circus. There is also a chapter on animal training.

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 100w

BALDT, LAURA IRENE. Clothing for women. (Lippincott's home manuals) il *$2 (2c) Lippincott 646 16-19681

A practical manual on the selection, design and construction of clothing, planned for both school and home use. Among the subjects taken up are: Clothing budgets and buying; Fabrics—facts for consumers; Principles of clothing design; Color; Pattern making; Simple problems in clothing design; Commercial patterns: purchase and use; Tools and equipment. Other chapters are devoted to the construction of various outer and under garments, and there is a special chapter addressed to the teacher. The work is illustrated with seven colored plates and 262 illustrations in the text. The author is an instructor in Teachers college, Columbia university.

"An exhaustive and extremely well illustrated manual which would help the woman who makes her own clothes or the woman who teaches sewing."

+ A L A Bk 13:106 D '16
+ Cleveland p151 D '16 50w
+ Ind 89:119 Ja 15 '17 40w
+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p19 N '16 200w
St Louis 15:14 Ja '17 20w

"The tables of information concerning suitable materials and suitable trimmings for the various garments are a valuable feature. The text is written for the person in dead earnest. No frills! The design throughout is severe but excellent."

+ School Arts Magazine 16:168 D '16 130w
+ Wis Lib Bull 12:451 D '16 30w

BALDWIN, JAMES MARK. American neutrality; its cause and cure. *75c (4c) Putnam 327.73 16-14713

The subject of these lectures was assigned to Prof. Baldwin by the Paris committee of the Harvard foundation as being of especial interest to university people in the provincial cities of France. The lectures appear in the English edition substantially as they were published in the French. The topics treated are: The character of American democracy as considered in the light of the present crisis; The effects of the war upon American opinion; The effects of the war upon American life. In his preface the author states: "I felt that an opportunity was offered to point out to the French not only the real feeling of the American people toward them and their cause, but also to explain to them the internal conditions which hinder the free expression of the American national conscience and will in this great crisis. . . . This has been one of the great lessons of the war: the reality of the distinction between a people and its government. . . . Events show that the American constitution . . . reposes in the president an authority in some respects too great. Such an authority may on occasion fail to make itself felt in the direction in which the true sentiment of the nation would express itself."

A L A Bkl 13:8 O '16

"Plainly a party pamphlet. It is not very well done or very convincing."

— Educ R 52:424 N '16 20w

"While there is much in Professor Baldwin's book that is just and true and well informed and doubtless illuminating for the French readers for whom it was written it is a pity that he should have misinterpreted upon several vital points the feelings, the convictions, and the purposes of so large a proportion of the American people."

— + N Y Times 21:266 Jl 2 '16 320w

Pittsburgh 21:359 Jl '16 30w

Pratt p34 O '16 70w

"Very illuminating work." [Earl of] Cromer

+ Spec 116:605 My 13 '16 300w

"Prof. Baldwin's historical and social data are correct enough, but exception may be taken to his deductions. His own bias, though shared by a large number of influential individuals, hardly reflects the view of the nation as a whole."

+ — Springfield Republican p17 Je 11 '16 200w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p158 Ap 6 '16 600w

"Readable and interesting, but rather slight and having ephemeral value."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:268 Je '16 70w

BALDWIN, JAMES MARK. France and the war as seen by an American. *50c Appleton 940.91 16-6085

"An interesting psychological study of the French temperament as it was manifest just before the war and as it was influenced by the outbreak of hostilities is made by Professor Baldwin. . . . His observations have convinced him that modern France has not been a military nation, that its ideals have been cultural, the most important rewards it chose to give those for the achievement of intellectual distinction, its aims the furthering of the free development of art, literature, and science, its purposes pacific. He examines his subject from the psychological, the moral, and the political side, and ends upon a note of optimism for the future of the country."—N Y Times

"Professor Baldwin discloses hardly anything new from his subject. A concise recapitulation in a single volume, touched with the author's evident sincerity, is the book's chief recommendation."

+ Ind 86:552 Je 26 '16 70w

+ N Y Times 21:148 Ap 16 '16 150w

+ Pratt p34 O '16 30w

St Louis 14:177 My '16 10w

BALL, ALICE ELIZA. Year with the birds. il *$3 Putnam 598.2 (Eng ed 16-11724)

A book of bird poems and bird pictures. In addition to her own poems about birds the author has quoted from many other poets. The 56 colored pictures are by Robert Bruce Horsfall of the American museum of natural history. The book is meant to serve as a guide to the birds. It begins with the winter birds, which are few in number and easily identified, and then takes up in the order of their coming the birds of spring. The verses by the author are descriptive, emphasizing the distinguishing features of each bird and telling something of his home and habits. The author says: "As rhyme and rhythm are delightful to children, it is hoped that the verses will aid in fixing many truths in their minds and that the book may fill a great need in schools."

+ Ind 86:403 Je 5 '16 60w

BALL, SARAH B., comp. 1600 business books; a list by authors, by titles and by subjects. *75c Wilson, H. W. 016.6 16-26773

A bibliography compiled by the librarian in charge of the Business branch of the Newark public library under the supervision of John Cotton Dana. The preface says: "This catalog is the result of nearly nine years' search for printed matter relating to business. The difficulty of discovering and selecting the literature of business—using literature in its broadest sense to include all printed matter—and the constant calls for information about it, led us to record what we found for the use of that rapidly increasing number of people who are interested in business books and business libraries. . . . It was compiled primarily to give the business men of Newark a comprehensive yet simple guide for office use to the books, directories, periodicals, etc., in the Business branch of the Newark Free public library. It is published now so that libraries and business men of other cities may have ready access to the results of our efforts to exploit a field of print as yet little known."

"Arranged in a single alphabet are authors, titles, and subjects, each book listed under as many subjects as may be needed to represent it fully." Classification numbers and date of publication of books are also given."

A L A Bkl 13:5 O '16

+ Bull of Bibliography 9:88 O '16 70w

+ Cleveland p139 N '16 30w

+ Ind 87:316 Ag 28 '16 50w

Springfield Republican p8 S 22 '16 80w

BALLARD, FREDERICK. Young America; novelized by Samuel Field. il *$1.25 (2c) Duffield 16-5196

A novelization of a popular play. "Young America" is a plea for the boy. Young Mrs. Doray, who loves children and has none of her own, becomes interested in Art Simpson, a neglected little urchin, pronounced by his aunt and others a hopeless case. Much of the action is taken up with a scene in the juvenile court where Art is taken on the charge of stealing. Mrs. Doray offers to stand sponsor for him to keep him out of the reform school. Her husband objects to the boy's presence in his home but is finally won over and persuaded to do his part toward giving the boy a chance. A dog has an important part in the story.

"The characters are all attractive, and the types they represent are drawn from the rising young America of today. But there is a sentimental streak in the story that makes the novel ring false. Although actors may have been able to convince their audiences, Mr. Field does not convince his readers. The whole thing is dull from beginning to end. As is usual in such cases the book is illustrated by photographs of the play."

— Boston Transcript p25 Mr 29 '16 130w

+ R of Rs 53:636 My '16 100w

"The book is merely a transcription and filling-in of the lines of the play. The play tells a wholesome and interesting little story which has its lesson of service."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 16 '16 70w

BALLS, WILLIAM LAWRENCE. Egypt of the Egyptians. il *$1.50 (2c) Scribner 916.2 (Eng ed 16-26221)

"Mr. Balls is already known as an authority on the commercial life of Egypt and as an expert in cotton. . . . The great value of this present volume is its opportune appearance on the eve of events that threaten, by successful or defeated invasion, to again change the political and commercial life of Egypt. The fact that the book is opportune is further enhanced by the clearly written story it contains in brief space—just the sort of a historical and commercial handbook everyone wants who for the first time considers Egypt for what it is, has been and is to be. . . . The chapter on 'The Nile in harness' is delightfully interesting. The comprehensive explanation concerning the fellaheen and the crops is of greatest value."—Boston Transcript

BALLS, WILLIAM LAWRENCE—Continued

"The historical section shows no special knowledge but is based on sound authorities."

+ A L A Bkl 12:334 Ap '16

"The best short road to a knowledge of Egypt ancient, modern and probable in the next half century, that is in print today. Mr. Balls is to be congratulated on a difficult achievement of a fascinating, yet intricate task. Thirty-two excellent illustrations make the text more comprehensible, if that is possible, which we doubt."

+ Boston Transcript p26 Ja 19 '16 380w

+ Ind 86:182 My 1 '16 40w

"The chapters on the Nile, on irrigation, and the crops are perhaps its most valuable sections, but the author is evidently a keen and thoughtful observer, and he has much to tell us on the reconstruction of the country."

+ Nature 96:479 D 30 '15 330w

"He has an easy, sometimes almost colloquial style which fits an account that is compressed into less than three hundred pages. Nearly a third is devoted to a survey of the history from prehistoric days to the declaration of the British protectorate in 1914. The author's general views are sound."

+ Spec 116:263 F 19 '16 200w

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 8 '16 240w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:186 Ap '16 70w

BAMBURGH, WILLIAM CUSHING. Talks on business correspondence. *$1 (3c) Little 652 16-17521

The author's purpose has been to gather together in one book the "principles, rules, customs and methods" that govern business correspondence. It is thought that the book will be useful both to the young clerk and the business man of experience. The five parts into which the work is divided deal with: Letters and letter-writing; Sales campaigns by correspondence; Relations with customers and public relations; Mail and mailing; Files and filing.

+ A L A Bkl 13:152 Ja '17

"The chief weakness of the book is the absence of sample letters."

+ Ind 88:331 N 20 '16 50w

"He neither imitates nor recommends the ordinary manuals of business letter writing, but advises the study of dictionaries, synonyms and correct composition."

+ Pittsburgh 21:577 D '16 90w

"Especially suggestive are some of the conclusions regarding best methods of finding prospective customers."

+ Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 150w

BANCROFT, JESSIE HUBBELL, and PULVER-MACHER, WILLIAM DEAN. Handbook of athletic games for players, instructors, and spectators. il *$1.50 Macmillan 796 16-2887

"This book is written for two classes of people: for those, first, who do not know the games represented, and who, either as teachers, players, officials, or spectators, want a clear working description; and, second, for those who do know the games, but who need a ready reference, clearly classified, to rules and information for all parts of the play." (Preface) All the major athletic games and events are covered. Part 1, on Ball games, describes fifteen games that are played with a ball, football, baseball, polo, lacrosse, golf, etc. Part 2 takes up Track and field games and rowing. The book is provided with pictures from photographs, diagrams, glossaries, bibliographies and an index.

+ A L A Bkl 12:326 Ap '16

Ind 86:144 Ap 24 '16 40w

+ Nation 102:677 Je 22 '16 90w

N Y Br Lib News 3:44 Mr '16

St Louis 14:194 My '16 30w

"It is good to see an American book inculcating principles of true sportsmanship, as this one does. The work deserves to be largely used."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 90w

"To the uninitiate and the half-initiate who throng our athletic events this handbook should be the welcome Baedeker of adventure in the new world of athletic contests which its writers hope it may become."

+ Survey 36:210 My 20 '16 140w

BANDELIER, ADOLF FRANCIS ALPHONSE.
2 Delight makers. il *$2 (2c) Dodd 16-24320

A novel of Pueblo Indian life, reprinted from the now out of print edition of 1890. The author was a distinguished archaeologist whose explorations in the southwest have been invaluable and whose writings are highly prized as contributions to American ethnology. His purpose in writing this novel was to recreate in a popular form the life that was carried on in the ancient pueblos. The accuracy of geographical, ethnological and archaeological details is vouched for, but in addition he has told a story that is of absorbing interest in itself. Its plot centers about a mother and son who have aroused the suspicion and incurred the displeasure of the "Delight makers," or "Koshare," a semi-secret society whose supposed power to make rain gives it a position of authority in the tribe. These two characters and several others are drawn with particular skill. Some of the photographic illustrations were made under the direction of the author by Charles F. Lummis, who also writes an introduction to the book.

"The book, novel or no novel, is a remarkable one, and should be read by all who are interested in Indian life. It is for the first time illustrated by means of photographs of the country described in the story." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 6 '16 520w

+ N Y Times 21:554 D 17 '16 500w

BANDLER, SAMUEL WYLLIS. Expectant
2 mother. il *$1.25 (2c) Saunders 618.2 16-16093

"This book is written in the hope that it may serve to explain in simple language many of the processes which relate to pregnancy, labor and the post-partum period. The thought has been not of pregnancy and labor alone, but of the mother; hence those sections dealing with puberty and the adolescent girl, many pages of which have been taken from the author's work on Medical gynecology." (Preface) The author is professor of gynecology in the New York Post-graduate medical school and hospital, and his book while simple and understandable is thoroughly scientific. It will be a valuable book for the special library shelf.

BANGS, JOHN KENDRICK. From pillar to post; leaves from a lecturer's note-book. il *$1.60 (3c) Century 817 16-6642

Years of experience on the lecture platform have furnished the material for this book. Mr. Bangs knows America from Atlantic to Pacific, and from Great Lakes to Gulf. It is a friendly and happy America that he knows and his book of reminiscences is full of reassurance for those who think we have fallen upon evil days. The chapters were written first for the Associated Sunday Magazines.

+ A L A Bkl 12:416 Je '16

"From pillar to post" appears to cover the full period of Mr. Bangs's experiences as a public speaker. The anecdotes which give it the greatest interest seem to be collected from the best of his experiences in these years. They give a very readable quality to his reflections. He purports to tell us something of the real nature of the American people, which he has had unusual opportunities for studying." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 22 '16 1050w

"A book packed with amusing incident and accident (the latter not always so amusing to the victim) as well as with manifold types of human nature. Mr. John R. Neill catches the spirit of it all in his numerous drawings."

+ Dial 60:386 Ap 13 '16 250w

+ Ind 88:330 N 20 '16 40w

"Mr. Bangs's narrative is anecdotic and mildly amusing—all that it tries to be."

+ Nation 102:547 My 18 '16 310w

+ N Y Times 21:328 Ag 20 '16 320w

+ R of Rs 54:680 D '16 80w

"Could probably do its best service by being left somewhere within reach and picked up to fill odd spaces of time. It could be opened at almost any page and be found moderately entertaining reading."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 16 '16 250w

BANK, W. DANE, pseud. Average woman. *$1.35 (1c) Doran 16-20588

As in his two earlier novels, "James" and "Treasure," the author gives a picture of an English industrial community. Emmie Bollins, at the opening of the story, is a trimmer in the hat factory of T. Boone & Son. At its close she is its owner and mistress. For Tim Boone, the "Son" of the firm falls in love with Emmie and marries her in spite of the three aunts who oppose the match. After six years of married life, in which Emmie successfully adapts herself to her new station, he dies, leaving her with two children and the factory. She takes charge, masters the details of the business, and proves a capable and efficient manager. In time she marries again. Emmie may or may not have been an average woman, but she was one who could adapt herself to circumstances and rise to occasions and one who could unquestioningly accept happiness where she found it.

"The author is evidently well acquainted with the customs and home life of Lancashire factory-workers. . . . The latter part of the book 'drags' somewhat."

+ — Ath p479 O '16 80w

"Reading Mr. Bank for the first time, one might even wonder for awhile if the writer has deliberately set to work gently to travesty the modern English novel of provincial life realistically detailed. But that feeling wears away as the homely drama unfolds, and one finishes the book with a new feeling, that of having been in contact with something which, however unsophisticated from the viewpoint of conscious letters, is fine and honest." F. I.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 18 '16 470w

"A good story, capably told."

+ N Y Times 21:402 O 8 '16 350w

+ Springfield Republican p13 D 24 '16 380w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 O 12 '16 170w

BANKS, EDGAR JAMES. Seven wonders of the ancient world. il *$1.50 (4c) Putnam 913.3 16-20749

The seven wonders of the ancient world were: The pyramid of Khufu; The walls of Babylon; The statue of the Olympian Zeus; The temple of Diana; The tomb of King Mausolus; The Colossus of Rhodes; The Pharos of Alexandria. To each of these the author devotes a chapter bringing to his task the knowledge of a modern archaeologist, he having been field director of the recent Babylonian expedition of the University of Chicago. The book has numerous illustrations and two maps.

"Interesting and untechnical."

+ A L A Bkl 13:118 D '16

"A book of irreproachable scholarship."

+ Dial 61:481 N 30 '16 170w

+ Lit D 53:1543 D 9 '16 230w

N Y Br Lib News 3:139 S '16 30w

N Y Times 21:551 D 10 '16 100w

St Louis 14:403 N '16

"A popular book of great merit."

+ Spec 117:556 N 4 '16 180w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 290w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p466 S 28 '16 320w

BANKS, HELEN WARD. Boys' Prescott. il *$2 (2c) Stokes 972 16-16062

A companion volume to "The boys' Motley," by the same author. She has retold the story of the conquest of Mexico, basing her narrative on Prescott's account. The book has twelve illustrations in color by T. H. Robinson.

"But why 'The boys' Prescott?' If girls are warned off from history why dedicate this attractive volume to three of them."

+ Ind 88:405 D 4 '16 50w

"Without sacrificing the essential strength of Prescott's great work, Miss Banks has so condensed and simplified the more technical account of the Spanish conqueror's campaign in ancient Mexico that it reads almost like a romance."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 9 '16 170w

BANNINGTON, B. G. English public health administration; introd. by Graham Wallas. (Studies in economics and political science) *7s 6d P. S. King & son, London 614

(Eng ed 16-7591)

"Dr. Bannington, for years a public health officer in the West Ham district [London], writes out of his own experience, observation and study with a twofold aim. He provides a 'survey of its administrative technique' of the British public health department for those who are interested as students or as electors or elected; and a solid reference book for those officials now in the health service who seek to rise to higher positions."—Survey

Am Econ R 6:169 Mr '16 40w

Reviewed by W. W. Ford

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:605 Ag '16 420w

"Such a comprehensive survey as this is sure to be welcomed and appreciated by American students of comparative government and of local and state health administration, although of course the book is of far more direct practical use in England than in the United States."

+ Engin N 75:943 My 18 '16 70w

"The author, who has an unusually wide experience as a practical administrator, provides a clear and concise survey of public health administration, intended to meet the needs whether of officials or of students or of elected persons." R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 14:443 Ja '16 60w

"The volume is invaluable for reference. . . . Significant as Dr. Bannington's study must be as a history and a call to higher efficiency in its definite territory, the volume will also prove illuminating to those in this country who are attentively studying public health administration and standards." Gertrude Seymour

+ Survey 37:53 O 14 '16 320w

BAR, LUDWIG, and others. History of continental criminal law. (Continental legal history ser.) *$4 Little 343 16-12417

"This important treatise is a translation by Thomas S. Bell and others of a German work written mainly by Carl Ludwig von Bar, late professor of law in the University of Göttingen. The editorial preface to the volume is the work of Professor John H. Wigmore of Northwestern university; the introductions are by Judge William Renwick Riddell of Ontario and Professor Edwin R. Keedy of the University of Pennsylvania." (N Y Times) "After a study of the Roman and Germanic sources, the author adds chapters dealing with France before the revolution, Scandinavia, Switzerland and The Netherlands. Then follow several chapters dealing with the period of the French revolution and the changes produced in France, Germany and other countries. A division of the work is devoted to the modern period comprising chiefly the nineteenth century. The last division, part 2, comprises a history of the theories of criminal law." (Ann Am Acad)

BAR, LUDWIG, and others.—Continued

"His work will be invaluable not only to students of the subject but to practical legislators who seek to draft codes that will remedy some of the glaring defects of American criminal procedure." J. P. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 67:309 S '16 250w
Cleveland p107 Ag '16 60w

"The translation is excellent."

+ Ind 87:424 S 18 '16 160w
N Y Times 21:277 J1 9 '16 110w

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY. Heart's content.
il $*1.50 Lippincott 15-20912

"Mr. Ralph Henry Barbour's annual contribution to the season's fiction is as the name indicates, a love story with a happy ending. . . . The hero, Allan Shortland, asks the heroine, Beryl Vernon, whom he has resolved to win, for congratulations on his approaching marriage before securing her consent to play a leading part in that ceremony. . . . It should be added that the story is not unknown to magazine-readers under the title, 'The happy man.' (Dial) It was first published in Lippincott's magazine for June, 1915.

"Of bright dialogue and clever invention there is no lack."

+ Dial 59:506 N 25 '15 120w

"The hero, and the book of which he is the soul, are well worth knowing by all desiring to secure, beyond peradventure, a cheerful hour."

+ N Y Times 21:51 F 13 '16 180w

"A whimsical, fanciful story of summer flirtation."

+ Springfield Republican p19 D 19 '15 180w

BARCYNKA, HÉLÈNE, countess. Honey-pot.
il $*1.35 (2c) Dutton 16-4389

A story of stage life. Two London chorus girls become immediate friends on their first meeting altho they represent different types and different backgrounds. Maggie is a child of the theater; the daughter of an actress, she has been familiar with the footlights since babyhood. Alexandra is an entire stranger to the stage and its traditions and the story is largely concerned with the alteration of her point of view under its influence. She sees her friend Maggie depart from what is to her the one way of virtue and is forced to admit Maggie's essential goodness in spite of all. She learns that an admired older woman is also a partner in an irregular union. These affairs are not directly condoned, but she learns to look with more tolerance on human frailty. In the end the way out of an uncongenial life is offered to the two girls by happy marriages.

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 12 '16 400w

Nation 102:387 Ap 6 '16 210w

"As a moral document, 'The honey-pot' is, we venture to believe, quite valueless. As a story, it is readable and interesting. It is from the standpoint of simple fiction that we prefer to regard it, and that we recommend it to the reader. As a 'grim piece of realism' or an Edgeworthian paean to virtue, we would not choose to consider it at all."

— + N Y Times 21:230 Je 4 '16 420w

"The author presents touching pictures of fortitude, privation and fights against temptation on the part of the girl. The closing scene is a bit theatrical."

+ — Springfield Republican p15 F 27 '16 420w

BARKER, GRANVILLE. Marrying of Ann Leete. $*1 (5½c) Little 822 16-9295

Three of Granville Barker's plays which were issued several years ago in one volume have now been brought out separately. "The marrying of Ann Leete," the first of them, is a four-act play of the eighteenth century. Ann Leete, the daughter of an impoverished gentleman, revolts from the artificiality of the world about her to marry her father's gardener. The smart dialog of the play is that of the eighteenth century comedy of manners, the point of view on matters of social distinctions and caste is of the present.

+ R of Rs 53:377 Mr '16 50w

BARKER, GRANVILLE. Red cross in France.
2 $*1 (2c) Doran 940.91

Mr. Barker went to France to investigate the work of the Red cross and he has written his impressions, to a large extent, in the form with which he is most familiar, in dialog. He has not used real names and may not have reported conversations word for word, but he has endeavored in this way to give the true spirit of his experiences. He visited many hospitals and tried to come into touch with all the varied Red cross activities. One of the chapters deals with the service rendered by the Friends. There is a preface by Joseph H. Choate.

"A human book."

+ Ath p550 N '16 90w

+ Outlook 115:209 Ja 31 '17 90w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p510 O 26 '16 500w

BARKER, GRANVILLE. Souls on Fifth. il $*1 (9½c) Little 16-8475

"Fifth" is Fifth avenue, and in this fantasy Mr. Barker sets forth the plight of the souls of departed Americans who haunt it. Instead of going to Paris, as good Americans are said to when they die, these Americans had come back to Fifth avenue. Like the man spoken of in Acts who "died and went to his own place" these people have come back to theirs. "Souls on Fifth" is reprinted from the April Century.

A L A Bkl 13:18 O '16

"A weird, arresting story."

+ Ind 86:217 My 8 '16 250w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 J1 '16 20w

+ N Y Times 21:275 J1 9 '16 350w

"It ends where the great spaces of a bountiful world cry out against Fifth avenue's prattling helplessness. I heard some one call the whole book 'sentimental stuff that Granville Barker thought was good enough for the American public.' It is good enough for the American public, or any other public that can appreciate nonsense mixed with wisdom and mockery near tears." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 89:1316 Ap 15 '16 580w

"The story breaks away from satire and ends on a plane of lofty idealism."

+ R of Rs 53:760 Je '16 90w

BARKER, GRANVILLE. Voysey inheritance; a play in five acts. $*1 (2½c) Little 822 16-9294

The second of the three earlier plays by Granville Barker now given individual publication, tells a story of English middle class life. The defalcations of a trust company and the efforts of a son to set straight the affairs that his father's dealings have tangled furnish the theme of the play. There are interesting studies of character provided in the portrayal of the various members of the Voysey family.

BARKER, GRANVILLE. Waste; a play in four acts. $*1 (2½c) Little 822 16-9293

The third of Granville Barker's plays to be republished this year is "Waste," a drama of English political life. With sharp irony, the author presents the case of a man whose brilliant career is ruined by a petty intrigue with a worthless woman.

BARKER, J. ELLIS. Foundations of Germany: a documentary account revealing the causes of her strength, wealth and efficiency. $*2.50 Dutton 943 (Eng ed 16-26932)

"This book by the well-known writer on politics and economics attempts to reveal the main-springs of Germany's power, the principles of Germany's statesmanship, and the factors which have shaped the people mainly by copious quotations from the pronouncements of 'Prusso-Germany's leading men,' and it is complementary to the author's 'Modern Germany.' Seven of the thirteen chapters have appeared in leading monthly reviews."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

A L A Bkl 13:114 D '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:157 O '16

"In the back of the book are some real treasures. They are five documents, printed in the original French, and are from the pen of Frederick the Great. They have been practically unknown up to the present time."

+ N Y Times 21:545 D 10 '16 350w

Pittsburgh 22:46 Ja '17

"Some of the conclusions at which Mr. Ellis Barker seems to arrive will scarcely command general assent in this country. . . . When Mr. Ellis Barker says that 'organization must be met with organization' he is on very safe ground. . . . But when he goes on to say that 'absolutism must be met by absolutism,' he propounds a far more questionable proposition." [Earl of] Cromer

+ — Spec 117:102 JI 22 '16 2000w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p311 Je 29 '16 60w

"In the case of the present book we confess that we should have approached it in a more indulgent humour had its author not prefaced it with a pean of self-praise and a claim so exalted as to antagonize the most kindly critic. . . . Very interesting and sound is Mr. Ellis Barker's chapter on the policy of Bismarck and of William II. He seeks to correct what is at least a popular delusion—namely, that the 'welt-politik' which has resulted in the catastrophe of the present war was a continuation of Bismarck's policy."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p410 Ag 31 '16 2000w

BARNES, ALFRED A. Hydraulic flow reviewed. il *$4.50 Spon 532 Agr16-943

"In this volume the author presents his investigations regarding the laws for the accurate measurement of water in either large or small quantities. . . . After a brief introduction and discussion of the formulas developed by Chezy, Prony, Darcy, Ganguillet and Kutter, Bazin, and Barre de St. Venant, the author explains the advantages gained by using logarithmic plotting of experimental data, and uses these advantages as proof of the superiority of the exponential form of hydraulic formulas. . . . A list of formulas for the flow of water in pipes, channels, canals and rivers is given. . . . The second part of the book deals with the measurement of water by triangular notches, weirs and circular orifices."—Engin Rec

"As a foundation for his deductions the author presents a table of results of 3,162 experiments on flow in pipes, flumes, canals and natural river channels, which he claims 'form the most complete lists that have so far been compiled.' The author hints that this table may be the most valuable part of the book. A short list of authorities consulted and cited is given. Neither in this nor in the table of experimental data does there appear any mention of American experiments reported during the past eight or ten years. This omission detracts materially from the value of the table, since many recent data on flow in brass and wrought-iron pipes, flumes, wood-stave and concrete pipes, and over weirs, are thereby ignored. There is no evidence that the author is familiar with other researches very similar to his review, or re-review—for example, those of Louis Schmeer and William H. Echols." R. E. Horton

Engin N 76:746 O 19 '16 1100w

"The author should be complimented for the thorough manner in which he has dealt with the subject, and it is believed that the new formulas developed will be appreciated and used extensively by the engineering profession." A. G. Hillberg

+ Engin Rec 74:269 Ag 26 '16 420w

"As a concise and comprehensive résumé of the results obtained from a wide range of experimental work, combined with a striking revision of their mathematical expression, the volume is a welcome and valuable addition to the literature on the subject." B. C.

+ Nature 98:87 O 5 '16 630w

N Y Br Lib News 3:142 S '16

"It is seldom that we receive a book which contains so much original and valuable work as does this one of Mr. Barnes'. . . . It seems to us to lay the foundations of a new practical hydraulics. Further than that, it appears to us to merit the close attention of those interested in the theory of hydraulic flow.' Engineer, London, May 12, 1916, p. 403. Also reviewed in Canadian Engineer, May 25, 1916, p. 577; in Mining Magazine, June, 1916, p. 353."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p7 Ag '16 190w

BARNES, CHARLES BRINTON. Longshoremen. il $2 (2½c) Survey associates 331.8 16-384

A special study of the longshoremen of the port of New York, the conditions under which they work, their relation to the problems of labor organization, unemployment, etc. The author says, "The most conspicuous fact concerning the longshoreman is his inconspicuousness. Libraries, statistical reports, labor histories almost without exception ignore him or mistake his case." This lack of material has necessitated much original investigation on his part and the results are presented in chapters on: The longshoremen: characteristics and opportunities; Longshore work; Methods of hiring and irregularity of the employment; Wages and earnings, etc. Appendices give information about other ports. There is a glossary, a bibliography and an index. The study was carried on under the direction of Pauline Goldmark.

Reviewed by W: O: Weyforth

+ Am Econ R 6:667 S '16 870w

+ Am J Soc 22:111 JI '16 250w

"The book is suggestive in showing the need for a greater detailed and more comprehensive study of longshoremen, so that both public opinion and legislation may compel a much needed improvement."

+ Ann Am Acad 65:313 My '16 150w

Cleveland p21 Mr '16 40w

"Presents interesting problems in group psychology."

+ Ind 86:344 My 29 '16 70w

+ J Pol Econ 25:126 Ja '17 350w

N Y Br Lib News 3:24 F '16

"Mr. Charles B. Barnes, director of the New York state public employment bureau, presents a masterly study of a laboring group which affords a most striking illustration of the evils which result from irregularity of employment. His conclusions in favor of the imperative need of legislation are enforced by facts and arguments beyond dispute or contradiction."

+ Pol Sci Q 31:357 Je '16 300w

+ R of Rs 53:378 Mr '16 110w

Springfield Republican p15 F 24 '16 430w

"Has detail, perspective and humaneness. . . . From $800 to $900 annually is needed to maintain a family in meager decency in New York city. Longshoremen have been trying to maintain health and decency on less than $500. For the effects and results, read Mr. Barnes' book." G: M. Hunter

+ Survey 36:293 Je 10 '16 900w

BARNES, CHARLES WESLEY. Social messages. The new sanctification. il *50c (2c) Meth. bk. 261 15-7308

"Mr. Barnes lays stress on the fact that there are two distinctly separate relations which exist for every human being, the one being the relation to God, and the other a relation to his fellow men. It is upon the second of these that he lays the greatest emphasis in this book, the social relations of mankind, because of the fact that man owes a duty larger than his own personal development. In this book he discusses the social views of several prominent men, John Wesley, Charles Kingsley, Frederick D. Maurice and Frederick W. Robertson."—Boston Transcript

BARNES, CHARLES WESLEY—Continued

Bib World 48:63 J1 '16 90w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 27 '15 130w

"Any reader will feel a lively interest in the author's account of the four great social reformers whom he has wisely chosen as illustrations of the principles for which, in his view, the church should stand."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ja 25 '16 160w

BARNETT, REV. SAMUEL AUGUSTUS, and BARNETT, HENRIETTA OCTAVIA (ROWLAND) (MRS. SAMUEL AUGUSTUS BARNETT). Practicable socialism, new series. *$1.75 Longmans 331 A15-2571

A collection of essays by two pioneer English socialists. "The various papers represent the precipitate of many years of thought and work coming out of a perfect comradeship. . . . The chapters are divided under general heads which themselves are suggestive of the range of democratic Christian culture: Religion, Recreation, Settlements, Poverty and labor, Social service, Education. Canon Barnett had a clean, sure faculty for estimating the well-to-do and the poor. . . . Holding firmly to the belief in the not distant abolition of poverty, he saw with equal clearness that the cure of destitution was not a cure of unrest. One of the earliest and most faithful exponents of organized charity, he held that charity was leading a revolution against itself. . . . Of Mrs. Barnett's contributions to the book, the most suggestive is that on town planning." (Survey)

+ Ath 1915,2:324 N 6 1400w

Cleveland p21 Mr '16 40w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

Hibbert J 14:442 Ja '16 120w

"Canon and Mrs. Barnett, indeed, not merely are not 'socialists' in our present acceptance of the term, but are at the very antipodes of socialism. The entire series of papers covering subjects as little related as is possible in a general discussion of human activities rests on the fundamental notion that betterment in human social relations must come from within the individual heart, not from external social decree."

+ Nation 102:49 Ja 13 '16 480w

"It abounds in suggestions that are profitable for American consumption."

+ Outlook 113:809 Ag 2 '16 140w

"A historic contribution to present-day applied idealism." R. A. Woods

+ Survey 35:302 D 11 '15 470w

BARSTOW, CHARLES LESTER. Famous sculpture. il *$1 Century 730 16-23029

A companion volume to "Famous pictures" and "Famous buildings," the three together forming a trilogy of art books for children. An introductory chapter is followed by discussions of: Egyptian sculpture; Early Greek sculpture; The classic myths; The golden age of Greek sculpture; Roman sculpture; Early Christian, Byzantine, Medieval, and Gothic sculpture; The renaissance; The full renaissance and the decline; Modern sculpture; Sculpture in America; A journey through sculpture land. A pronouncing vocabulary, glossary, list of names likely to be mispronounced, and an index complete the book.

+ A L A Bkl 13:225 F '17

+ Ind 88:466 D 11 '16 70w

+ N Y Times 21:547 D 10 '16 170w

"For students, for young people, and for the general public there is no clearer or better written handbook of elementary knowledge about sculpture."

+ R of Rs 55:107 Ja '17 110w

BARTIMEUS, pseud. Naval occasions and some traits of the sailor-man. *$1.25 Houghton (*1s Blackwood) (Eng ed 15-10955)

"'Bartimeus' deals, so to speak, with the psychology of the fleet in a series of episodes and short stories, most readable for their life-like freshness. We see the men at work and hear their language, calm or forceful according to occasion; also we see them at play, snatching a few hours' leave, or making the best of their time in port."—Ath

"Twenty-five clever sketches of British man-of-war life in the past ten years of peace before the war. Liberally spiced with humor and pathos and successful in creating confidence in the intelligence and efficiency of the minor officers with whom they are chiefly concerned. Partly reprinted from Pall Mall Gazette."

+ A L A Bkl 12:287 Mr '16

"We have only one criticism to make, and that answers itself—the stories are not always wholly spontaneous in their composition. The answer is that they were for the most part written for various periodicals, and they show a little too much in some cases the exigencies of plot, of a definite story prearranged beginning and ending. Still, this is amply redeemed by the treatment, which shows expert and clear-sighted knowledge."

+ Ath 1914,2:245 S 5 150w

+ Ind 83:334 S 6 '15 60w

"'Bartimeus' gives away no secrets nor does he abuse the privileges which the camaraderie of the service has conferred on him. He is neither patronizing nor idolatrous. He has no sentimental illusions about either officers or bluejackets, but he has a most sensitive appreciation of their great qualities. There are few sides of naval life, from farce to tragedy, untouched in this brilliant little book. The story of the midshipman who lost his sight from too much zeal in signaling is almost too harrowing, and there is no relief in the sordid gloom of 'A one-gun salute.' But the majority of the sketches are genial or mirth-provoking, and their appeal is only enhanced by the sudden intrusion of a sentiment which never rings false."

+ Spec 113:429 S 26 '14 1800w

BARTIMEUS, pseud. Tall ship on other naval occasions. *$1 (2c) Putnam (*1s Cassell & co.) A16-733

A companion volume to the author's "Naval occasions." It is made up of ten short stories of life in the British navy. They are modern stories of the days of submarines and torpedoes. Contents: Crab-pots; The drum; A captain's forenoon; The seven-bell boat; The king's pardon; An off-shore wind; The day; The mummings; Chummy-ships; The higher claim.

"When 'Bartimeus' writes a topical tale such as 'Crab-pots' or 'The king's pardon,' he spins an excellent and distinctly plausible yarn, but it bears the hall-mark of fiction, not truth. It is in such sketches of every-day incidents at sea as 'A captain's forenoon' and 'The seven-bell boat' that he is at his best. He is careful to indicate the altered conditions since the dawn of August 5th, 1914."

+ Ath 1915,2:263 O 16 260w

"For the task which he has taken in hand he has all the necessary qualifications—technical knowledge, love of his profession, a radiant belief in human nature, abundant humour, and an exquisite tenderness."

+ Spec 115:406 S 25 '15 1250w

BARTLETT, FREDERICK OLIN. Wall street girl. il *$1.35 (3c) Houghton 16-18329

Ten thousand a year, from Frances's point of view, was the least on which she and Don could live, and Don, sharing her simple belief in his ability to rise to that salary within six months time, accepts a twenty-five dollar a week job in a Wall street office. Here Sally Winthrop, who knows everything about business that Don doesn't know, takes him in hand and teaches him how one may live on twenty-five dollars a week. She knows, for she lives on half that. Not only does she teach him; she inspires him with the conviction that Frances can be brought to share the same point of view. His failure to convince Frances, and the result, bring this rather unusual story of business life to its satisfactory conclusion.

- "Will be popular."
 + A L A Bkl 13:122 D '16
 "It is all rather too obvious." P. G. Hubert, jr.
 + Bookm 44:278 N '16 90w
 + Boston Transcript p9 S 20 '16 500w
 "It is a charming idyll of Wall street and old
 New England; but it does not give that so desirable thrill which comes somehow when we get the real thing." E. E. Hale
 + Dial 61:269 O 5 '16 410w
 + Lit D 53:1041 O 21 '16 240w
 "The title leads one to expect something ephemeral, but the content is a piece of excellent realism, of the school of Mr. Howells."
 + N Y Times 21:380 S 24 '16 480w
 "There is a good deal of snap and go to this little story. The Wall street girl herself is a very real character. The rest suffer a good deal by comparison." H. Dick
 + Pub W 90:1414 O 21 '16 370w
 + Springfield Republican p15 D 31 '16 200w
 "A sentimental, hackneyed plot, but handled in a refreshing and clever way. Light and amusing."
 + Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 40w

BARTLETT, HENRIETTA C., and POLLARD, ALFRED WILLIAM, eds. Census of Shakespeare's plays in quarto, 1594-1709. *$7.50
 Yale univ. press 822.3 16-7227

"Beginning with 'Hamlet' and ending with
 'Troilus and Cressida,' the extant copies of the quarto editions of each play are listed and described, their present ownership, whether in libraries or in private institutions, being indicated. In all 886 copies are catalogued, the two parts of 'King Henry IV,' 'King Henry V,'
 'Julius Caesar,' 'King Lear,' 'Love's labor's lost,' 'Macbeth,' 'The merchant of Venice,'
 'Merry wives of Windsor,' 'A midsummer night's dream,' 'Othello,' 'Richard III,' 'Romeo and Juliet' and 'The taming of the shrew' being the plays included in addition to the two already mentioned. A list of unidentified copies is given and an alphabetical index to all owners and finders of the identified quartos." (Boston Transcript) The volume is published under the auspices of the Elizabethan club, Yale university.

- + Ath p594 D '16 160w
 "Nothing more eloquent of literary enthusiasm and bibliographical skill has recently been published." E. F. E.
 + Boston Transcript p7 Ap 15 '16 900w
 + N Y Times 21:308 Ag 6 '16 170w
 Pratt p29 O '16
 "This volume will be a joy to the Shakespeare bibliographer and student as well as to the bookseller, for it continues and supplements the splendid Shakespeare work which Sir Sidney Lee did for the First Folio and for the five volumes of Shakespeare's poems issued in facsimile by the Clarendon press in 1905
 —all of which have become recognized as indispensable books of reference. . . . The 'Census' has evidently been compiled with such care and accurate knowledge . . . that the few comments we can offer are made with becoming humility. The late Bernard Quaritch's 'Catalogue of English literature' of March, 1879, would seem to have escaped the authors' notice. . . .
 It is a matter of regret that the vast amount of material concerning the early quartos amassed by Mr. E. B. Harris, a London student, was not (as we believe it could have been) utilized in this work."
 + The Times [London] Lit Sup p308 Je 29
 '16 1350w
 Reviewed by W. A. Neilson
 + Yale R n s 6:215 O '16 900w

BARTLETT, ROBERT ABRAM, and HALE, RALPH TRACY. Last voyage of the Karluk. il *$2.50 (3c) Small 919.8 16-23799

The "Karluk" was the flagship of Vilhjalmur
 Stefansson's Canadian Arctic expedition of 1913-
 16. Mr. Bartlett, who had been with Peary on the "Roosevelt," was her master, and he has told here the story of the voyage, the sinking of the ship, the winter spent in a shipwreck camp, the sledge journey of his party to Wrangell Island, and of his own longer journey, taken in company with one Eskimo, to a point in Siberia where he could send out word of their fate.

 Stefansson had left the ship before these things happened, so Captain Bartlett, who was in sole command, is the one man to give the official report of the fate of ship and crew.

- + A L A Bkl 13:167 Ja '17
 "One of the finest stories of life in the Arctic regions ever published. . . . It is a swift, modestly told tale of heroic adventure, as attractive for youngsters as for the grown ups to whom it is addressed."
 + Ind 88:411 D 4 '16 110w
 + Nation 104:108 Ja 25 '17 490w
 + N Y Times 21:491 N 19 '16 1300w
 "From every page of the narrative shines forth unconsciously the genial, unselfish and indomitable spirit of the born leader and explorer." R. L.
 + Pub W 90:2083 D 9 '16 610w
 R of Rs 54:683 D '16 120w

BARTON, GEORGE AARON. Archæology and the Bible. (Green fund book, no. 17) il *$2
 Am. S. S. union 220.9 16-14622

"It is the purpose of this book to gather into one volume the most valuable information of all sorts that the excavations in Bible lands have afforded, and to put it in such form that it may be of service to the pastor and Sunday-school teacher." (Preface) The book is made up of two parts. The subject of Part 1 is The Bible lands, their exploration, and the resultant light on the Bible and history. Part 2 consists of Translations of ancient documents which confirm or illuminate the Bible. The 114 plates that illustrate the book are grouped at the end. The author, who is now professor of Biblical literature and Semitic languages at Bryn Mawr, was formerly director of the American school of oriental research in Jerusalem.

- "The most complete manual on the subject that exists in any language. . . . A sourcebook for historians rather than a history."
 L: B. Paton
 + Am Hist R 22:370 Ja '17 650w
 "In this work the facts of oriental archaeology are gathered with the most painstaking thoroughness. No discovery made prior to 1916 that has any bearing on the Bible is omitted.
 The translations of inscriptions can be trusted as made directly from the original and as representing the last word in linguistic science. Here a mass of information that hitherto has been accessible only in technical journals and reports is spread before the student in convenient form.
 It is a mine of archaeological and Biblical information. On the sides of completeness and of accuracy this book deserves the highest praise. Only in the matter of method of presentation is it open to unfavorable criticism.
 . . . It is impossible from this book to gain a clear idea of any particular period of the world's history without considerable labor. Instead of being a history of the ancient Orient in the light of archaeology and of the Bible, it is a collection of monographs on various topics connected with oriental archaeology. . . . This is a serious defect in the work." L: B. Paton
 + Am J Theol 21:117 Ja '17 1000w

"The best short book on the subject, up-to-date and authoritative."
 + A L A Bkl 13:196 F '17

"It is a distinct gain to have a work which can be heartily recommended to the most conservative type of reader, and with the assurance that he will not be driven away from it by the author's obtrusive opinions and that he will find here, probably for the first time, the plain, unvarnished facts unaccompanied by any efforts to color their meaning. . . . A few corrections may here be noted for the second edition which is sure to be demanded."

- + Bib World 48:306 N '16 950w

BARTON, GEORGE AARON—Continued

"Professor George A. Barton of Bryn Mawr is a Biblical commentator, an Assyriologist and an archaeologist of a long-established reputation, which was recently crowned by his election as president of the American Oriental society. An elementary work by such a man comes with more than ordinary authority. We are happy to add that Dr. Barton's work is written in a reverent spirit, and with faith in the divine inspiration of the Bible, and that his critical views, whatever they may be, are not obtruded upon the reader."

+ Cath World 104:407 D '16 700w
+ Ind 89:32 Ja 1 '17 170w
St Louis 14:427 D '16

BASHFORD, JAMES WHITFORD, bp. China, an interpretation. il $2.50 Abingdon press 915.1 16-13962

"Bishop Bashford, of the Methodist episcopal church, has written this book that he might help the people of the Occident to understand China. . . . It is the result of twelve years of practical experience with the Chinese, and of earnest study of their history, literature and contemporary life. . . . He begins with a study of the six physical causes which make possible China's population and civilization. . . . Then follow chapters describing industrial, commercial, educational and woman's life in China. These are interesting chapters, but more interesting are those which describe life as it is reflected in literature, philosophy, religion, law and politics. The last six chapters are devoted to the recent history of China, describing the downfall of the Manchus, the transition, and the Chinese republic. . . . The last three of these six chapters discuss China and Japan, China and the United States, and China and the world. . . . Fourteen appendices contain most valuable tables and original documents. The last appendix is an outline of Chinese history from 2205 B. C., to the mandate of Yuan Shih Kai restoring the republic, March 23, 1916."—Boston Transcript

"Bishop Bashford's work is the result of wide reading, large experience, careful thought and Christian sympathy. For one who wishes, in a single volume, to get an intelligent grasp of China's history her present position and her possible future, this is easily the best work published." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '16 950w

"The book shows no grasp whatever of the missionary activity of the Catholic church in China for centuries, though it mentions the Catholic orphanages for girls as being first in the field."

+ Cath World 103:836 S '16 270w
+ Dial 61:317 O 19 '16 160w
+ Ind 87:461 S 25 '16 250w
+ Lit D 53:467 Ag 26 '16 370w
+ N Y Times 21:274 Jl 9 '16 130w
+ R of Rs 54:120 Jl '16 120w

BASSETT, JOHN SPENCER. Life of Andrew Jackson. il $2.50 (1c) Macmillan

The two-volume edition of Professor Bassett's work, published in 1911, has been reissued in one volume at one-half the original price. A few minor changes in the text are the only alterations. In the preface to this edition the author emphasizes anew the fact that his aim was to write a biography of Jackson, not an account of the times in which he lived.

"There is only one important change in this edition, according to the author, and that is in the reading of the extract from Biddle's memorandum, in which he feels he has now gained greater accuracy. There are also minor differences in the reading of the text."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Jl 8 '16 220w
+ Dial 60:558 Je 8 '16 60w

"Briefer and much more judicious than Par-ton's work and more ambitious than Sumner's. It is sympathetic, but also critical. The book contains the best brief account of Jackson's struggle for the presidency and its significance in our history, as well as the fight for the re-charter of the Second national bank."

+ Ind 86:303 My 22 '16 140w

"The two likenesses of 1845 have, curiously enough, been transposed, but without transposition of the accompanying legends."

Nation 103:424 N 2 '16 110w

"A new single-volume edition of a life of Jackson that has taken its place as on the whole the best and most serviceable of a long line of biographies."

+ R of Rs 53:498 Ap '16 25w

"It is the most authoritative life of Jackson that has been written. It is not characterized by brilliance of literary treatment, and some may say that Jackson's personality does not stand forth as vividly as a biographer of a different method might make it. But the work does present a well-filled chronicle of Jackson's career, it aims to be impartial and honest in judgment, and it amasses the necessary political facts to make clear the various positions for which Jackson stood."

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 9 '16 950w

BASSETT, SARA WARE. Story of glass. il $.75c (2c) Penn 16-18635

This book is one of a series in which various industries are described in story form. Jean Cabot shares her time between two uncles, one living in Pittsburgh, one in Boston. With the Boston uncle she spends a summer abroad. In Venice a young Italian boy saves her life and is persuaded by the uncle to accompany them to America. The boy is a glass-blower and in America he is taken in hand by the other uncle, a glass manufacturer, who gives him a start in life. There is some account of glass-making abroad and of the collection of glass flowers at Harvard.

+ A L A Bkl 13:180 Ja '17

BATES, KATHARINE LEE. Fairy gold. $1.50 Dutton 811 16-23963

"The play, 'Fairy gold,' which opens the volume, is a new play. . . . The ugly leprecaun and his uglier mother display their wits against the nimble-footed fairies in the sharp contrast of beauty and ugliness which characterizes the fairy tale. It has a moral, too, as all good fairy tales should, for it ends with one mortal saying, 'Fairy gold still flees from men,' and the other answering, 'Earn an honest penny then!' The play holds approximately a third of the volume, while the rest is made of various poems which—many of them—have appeared from time to time in periodicals. Some of them are also to be found in the author's larger collection of verse—'America the beautiful.'"—Boston Transcript

"She has written for the child himself, appreciating that there is a love of beauty and of swinging rhythms in the child which deserves to be satisfied through a poetry which is on a level of excellence with that which is enjoyed by his parents."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 9 '16 680w
+ Lit D 54:134 Ja 20 '17 400w
+ N Y Times 21:525 N 26 '16 100w

BATES, SYLVIA CHATFIELD. Geranium lady. il $1.25 (2½c) Duffield 16-2877

The scene of the story is an island somewhere along the Atlantic coast "between Penobscot bay and Barnegat." To the inhabitants the world is divided into "island" and "off-island," and this story is concerned chiefly with two "off-islanders" who spend a summer there. Lieutenant Miles Hawthorne is convalescing after an accident and June Carver has taken a cottage on the island with the intention of raising geraniums. There is a slight mystery about June and for a time Lieutenant Hawthorne thinks his suit is hopeless, but it all ends happily.

"Appeared in the Woman's Home Companion."
+ A L A Bkl 12:427 Je '16

Ind 86:66 Ap 10 '16 40w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"The tale is gracefully written, and, unreal as it is, contains moments of true sentiment which hint that the author may eventually achieve something better than spun-sugar romance."

+ N Y Times 21:100 Mr 19 '16 180w

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 170w

"Simple, rather pretty little story. Good local color."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:186 Ap '16 40w

BATES, SYLVIA CHATFIELD. Vintage. il
$.75c (11c) Duffield 16-24321

A little story on the theme of love of country. Henry Colbrooke, a very modern young man, is scornful on the subject of patriotism and loyalty to the flag. He offends his grandmother and estranges the girl he loves by his bitter denunciations. Then his grandmother puts in his hands a little bundle of yellowed letters and in reading the words written by his grandfather, a boy of his own age in 1861, killed in an early engagement, he sees a new vision. The story appeared in the Woman's Home Companion in July, 1916.

BATIFFOL, LOUIS. Century of the renaissance; tr. from the French by Elsie Finimore Buckley. (National history of France)
*$2.50 (1½c) Putnam 944 A16-712

This volume is one of a series of monographs, each treating of one period of French history. This is the first to be translated into English. Others to follow will deal with the middle ages, the eighteenth century, the revolution, etc. There is an introduction by John Edward Courtenay Bodley, corresponding member of the Institute of France, in the course of which he says: "M. Batiffol is a skilful guide through that most important century of human progress which spans the interval between the middle ages and modern civilization. It is a confused epoch of French history, a period of contradictory movements and currents, in which the nation was only beginning to discover its destiny. The author instead of subjective dissertations on the origins of events and movements, gives us a series of vivid pictures and portraits, chiefly taken from contemporary records." The period covered is from the reign of Charles VIII to the close of the reign of Henry IV.

+ A L A Bkl 12:470 Jl '16

"Following the custom of Lavissee's History, M. Batiffol has added much to the charm and vividness of his narrative by the frequent citation of picturesque phrases and characteristic comments from the memoirs of contemporaries, letters of ambassadors, or the utterances of the protagonists themselves."

+ Dial 60:506 My 25 '16 800w

+ Educ R 53:198 F '17 40w

+ Ind 88:367 N 27 '16 360w

"Less full than Lavissee, it will claim a position of its own. Mr. Batiffol here sets a high standard of matter and presentation; and if, as in the case of Henri III, his judgments sometimes differ from older writers, he supports his views with abundant scholarship. The book is heartily to be commended. It has chapter bibliographies, and a good index."

+ Library Association Record 18:126 Mr '16 100w

"What this modern French historian has accomplished may be compared to wonderful moving pictures. The dramatized personæ of many a familiar romance of Dumas's or play of Hugo's are here."

+ Lit D 52:976 Ap 8 '16 730w

"It is as solid as it is brilliant. And it is far more than a mere narrative. Two admirable concluding chapters on 'Civilization under the last Valois' and 'The kingdom of France about 1600' illustrate the relation of the political history to the constitutional, social, literary, and artistic life of the time. A little more might have been made of the economic side, and of the political philosophy of the reformers. . . . Those who have not kept abreast of the revision of older verdicts which modern historical scholarship has brought about will doubtless be amazed at many of the views expressed in this interesting book."

+ Nation 103:14 Jl 6 '16 730w

"M. Batiffol's account of art and letters in France is clear and just, but somewhat limited and, one may say, inadequate. The forces of skepticism and of freedom of thought in matters religious are treated with less care and acuteness than are shown by him in the treatment of the political effect of the religious quarrels. But his spirit is singularly fair, and his work will repay careful reading. The translation is particularly sound, clear, direct, and free from Gallicisms."

+ N Y Times 21:99 Mr 19 '16 1350w

+ N Y Times 21:510 N 26 '16 240w

Pittsburgh 21:207 Ap '16 10w

Sat R 121:400 Ap 22 '16 1000w

Spec 116:499 Ap 15 '16 1950w

"Each volume of the seven has been written by an author of recognized ability, and the opening volume has already been crowned by the Académie des sciences morales et politiques."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ap 2 '16 520w

BAUMANN, ARTHUR ANTHONY. Persons and politics of the transition. *$2.25 Macmillan 942.08 16-19803

"Mr. Baumann has collected some of his mordant studies of individual politicians and shrewd, outspoken attacks on democratic tendencies." (Sat R) "Mr. Baumann's essays were mostly written before the world's peace was broken, but he has added explanatory paragraphs to illustrate the effect of the war on his beliefs. Thus, though a free trader, he is now prepared to accept tariff reform on political and moral grounds, even if it cannot be economically defended." (Ath)

"He is nothing if not outspoken. . . . His sketches of the 'persons' of the transition are uncommonly good."

+ Ath p322 Jl '16 570w

N Y Br Lib News 3:153 O '16 40w

"Devoted to the period 1895-1914."

Pittsburgh 22:47 Ja '17 60w

"A volume which is entertaining throughout, and very often provocative enough to stimulate that dissent which is occasionally the originator of thought. . . . Among the purely political essays there are two which are conspicuous, the one for its trenchant treatment of immediate problems, the other for its subtle handling of political theory. The first is 'The apparition of democracy,' and the second 'Conservatism and Christianity,' which reviews Lord Hugh Cecil's little volume on conservatism."

+ Sat R 121:613 Je 24 '16 1600w

"Mr. A. A. Baumann certainly provokes his readers to thought in these very skilfully written political essays with their sharpness of phrase, their spice of personal experience, and their aptness of historical and literary quotation. . . . [He has, however, a] knack of turning from an argument on a high plane to a paltriness, or unconsidered generalization. Such lapses show that his mind is not really judicial, but is capable of being niggling or cynical at a critical moment. . . . Several of Mr. Baumann's judgments seem to us so apt to the times and so concisely stated that we wish we could quote them all."

+ Spec 117:213 Ag 19 '16 2100w

"The particular transition in question is the end of the last century and the beginning of the present, 'when the extension of the franchise, compulsory education, the application of science to comfort, and a cheap press transferred power from the upper to the lower class.' Our objection is that the war indicates and implies a transition so much deeper and wider than the changes on which Mr. Baumann dwells; and the men whom he takes to represent them are or will be almost obliterated by it. . . . We hope that when we are successful in the war Mr. Baumann will again review the situation, for he thinks for himself, and he writes well."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p344 Jl 20 '16 670w

BAY, JENS CHRISTIAN, ed. Denmark in English and American literature; with an introd. by C. H. W. Haselriis. $1 Danish American assn., 30 N. Dearborn st., Chicago 016.948 15-15695

This bibliography, comprising something over a thousand titles, has been prepared for the Danish American association. It is an attempt to answer the question: "What has been written in English on Denmark, its history, culture, natural resources, its social and economic relations?" Works in English about Denmark and works translated from the Danish are included. The introduction says: "It is complete in the sense that it includes all books and papers of distinct service in view of our inquiry. The necessity which arose was a practical one, calling for the inclusion of matter of lasting value, and for the exclusion of matter of temporary or passing interest." The titles are arranged alphabetically by author and there is a subject and title index.

Dial 60:35 Ja 6 '16 40w
Pittsburgh 21:98 Mr '16
St Louis 14:42 F '16

BAYLES, WILLIAM HARRISON. Old taverns of New York. il *$2.50 Allaben 974.71 16-10690

"The author carries on the connected story of the New York taverns and their influence upon the history of the city and the nation . . . dwelling with some particularity upon the 'Black horse,' the scene of many political conferences in the early eighteenth century; 'The Merchants' coffee house,' famous for more than half a century; 'The King's arms,' associated with the stamp act and the non-importation agreement; 'The Queen's head,' where was organized the New York Chamber of commerce; 'Fraunces' tavern,' forever associated with the early history of the new republic; 'The Tontine coffee house,' which became the stock exchange of New York; 'The City hotel,' associated with the social and political life of New York after the revolution; and 'The Shakespeare tavern,' which became a musical and literary centre."—Boston Transcript

"While a great deal has been written about the old New York taverns, in a disconnected way, this is the first work which has come under our notice which gives a connected story linking them with the current events of the history of the city. Mr. Bayles has made no attempt to write an ornate and romantic narrative about his most interesting subject, but has confined himself to stating, concisely, yet not without adequate treatment, the facts relating to the early taverns of New York. The tales which he relates need no enhancement." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 18 '16 880w
+ N Y Times 21:254 Je 18 '16 250w
+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 19 '16 970w

BEACALL, THOMAS, and others. Dyestuffs and coal tar products; their chemistry, manufacture and application. (Manuals of chemical technology) il *$2.75 Appleton 667 15-13392

"It is virtually a reprint with certain revisions and additions of chapters from 'Industrial and manufacturing chemistry,' vol. 1, edited by Geoffrey Martin, on the following subjects: 'Industry of coal tar and coal tar products'; 'Industry of the synthetic coloring matters'; 'Industry of natural dyestuffs'; 'The dyeing and color-printing industry'; 'Modern inks'; 'Saccharine and other sweetening chemicals'; 'The industry of modern synthetic drugs'; 'The industry of photographic chemicals.' The field covered is so broad and presents such extreme possibilities of theoretical and practical details that the present publication can only be looked upon as a résumé."—Science

Cleveland p153 D '16 10w
+ Nature 96:339 N 25 '15 90w

"The literature on the subject has hitherto been of a highly specialized character, and, moreover, principally in the German language. . . . The book forms a valuable addition to our literature on chemical industries, and especially so on account of the authoritative details given of the various processes."

+ N Y Br Lib News 2:170 N '15 60w (Reprinted from the Gas World [London] p410 Ap 10 '15)

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p6 Je '15 140w

"To those having a knowledge of organic chemistry a study of the book will serve as a valuable review and a foundation for further study. A valuable feature of the book is the bibliography at the introduction of each chapter." L. A. Olney

+ Science n s 43:714 My 19 '16 180w

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD. Crimson gardenia, and other tales of adventure. il *$1.30 (2c) Harper 16-8691

A group of short stories collected from various magazines. The first is the story of the adventures of a blasé young man, who believed that romance was dead, during Mardi Gras week in New Orleans. Others that follow are stories of Central America and of the far north. Contents: The crimson gardenia; Rope's end; Innocencio; The Wag-lady; "Man proposes—"; Told in the storm; The weight of obligation; The stamped; When the mail came in; McGill; The brand.

Ind 86:486 Je 19 '16 40w

"Two stories laid in the Caribbean, with their desperate Haitian hero, have quite their share of brutal horrors. . . . 'The wag-lady,' 'Man proposes,' and 'The crimson gardenia' are bits of romantic comedy, well if obviously contrived. If you analyze them they are absurd enough; but such tales should be read with an open, not to say vacant, mind."

+ Nation 102:709 Je 29 '16 400w

"There is plenty of adventure and plenty of hardihood in these tales, so many of which are concerned with the age-long struggle of man with nature, and, if man is invariably shown as winning out in the end, why, it must be remembered that these stories appeared in magazines before their publication in book form. Mr. Beach's many admirers will doubtless greatly enjoy this new volume from his energetic pen."

+ N Y Times 21:170 Ap 23 '16 700w

"While the stories are diverse in place and entertaining, the short story is not Mr. Beach's happiest medium."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 23 '16 180w

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD. Rainbow's end. il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 16-20441

When Don Estéban Varona and Sebastian, his slave, died they took the secret of the Varona treasure with them. Doña Isabel, the second wife of Don Estéban and step-mother to the twin children, Estéban and Rosa, had made every effort to discover its hiding place but to no avail. To the two children it becomes but a legend and as they grow up they become too absorbed in the cause of Cuban freedom to give much thought to treasure. For this is a story of the Cuban insurrections that preceded American intervention in 1898. Young Estéban, altho a Spaniard by birth, is an ardent patriot and his sister is no less loyal than he. The hero of the tale is John O'Reilly, an American, and another important part in the story is taken by an American girl, Norine Evans, a young woman of wealth who is devoted to the Cuban cause. A double wedding and the finding of the treasure are incidents of the final chapters.

+ A L A Bkl 13:174 Ja '17

"Somehow it does not seem to be up to the level of 'The spoilers.' . . . But the Cuban background is well wrought and glowing and the tale leaps against it."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 1 '16 570w

"The book belongs to what we have learned to call the moving-picture class of fiction. It is ingenious, told with some spirit, and will no doubt please Mr. Beach's many admirers."

N Y Times 21:438 O 22 '16 730w

— + Springfield Republican p15 Ja 14 '17 160w
 "Plenty of reading without tears in the book."
The Times [London] Lit Sup p514 O 26
 '16 80w

BEARD, EMMA PATTEN. Jolly book of play-craft. il $*1.35 (3c) Stokes 793 16-20298

A book that will supply children with rainy-day and Sunday-afternoon entertainment. The author describes some sixty games which may be devised from the simplest of materials, card-board boxes, spools, buttons, pebbles, pins, old calendar pads, picture catalogs, etc. A ruler, a pencil, a pair of scissors and a box of colored crayons are all the tools required. There are many and attractive illustrations.

+ A L A Bkl 13:225 F '17
 + Ind 88:405 D 4 '16 50w
 + R of Rs 55:102 Ja '17 70w

BEAUMONT, ROBERTS. Standard cloths,
 2 structure and manufacture (general, military and naval). il $*5 Van Nostrand 677
 (Eng ed 16-8726)

"The author, who is one of the best known of British authorities, has examined a large number of typical and other varieties of fabrics and gives in this volume analyses and illustrations, as well as expositions of the principles and schemes of manufacture."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

Cleveland p116 Ag '16 20w
N Y Br Lib News 3:93 Je '16

"The illustrations, several of them colored plates, are exceptionally good. Reviewed in Journal of the Royal Society of Arts, Feb. 4, 1916, p. 241; in Illuminating Engineer, Feb., 1916, p. 72."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p18 My '16 140w

BECHHOFFER, C. E., tr. Five Russian plays; with one from the Ukrainian; tr. from the originals with an introd. $*1.25 Dutton 891.7
 16-20332

"These translations are for the most part reprinted from the New Age. They are selected as being 'European'—that is, not strictly national, and able to be appreciated by a foreign reader in translation; and as being modern—though one of them, 'The choice of a tutor,' is by Von Vizin, the great Russian satirical dramatist of the 18th century, being a little farce written quite late in his life (1745-1792), and recalling in its manner his better known comedies, 'The minor,' and 'The brigadier.' The other plays are two by Tchekov. 'The wedding' and 'The jubilee,' and two—'A merry death' and 'The beautiful despot'—by Evreinov, a still young dramatist who has written several books on stage-craft. The last, a Little Russian play called 'The Babylonian captivity,' by Larissa Petrovna Kossach (1872-1913), whose pseudonym is Lésva Ukráinka, represents the enslavement of Ukraine by its powerful neighbors."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

+ Spec 116:726 Je 10 '16 120w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p226 My
 11 '16 130w

BECHHOFFER, C. E. Russia at the cross-roads; with an introd. by A. H. Murray. $*2 Dutton 947 16-14087

"In spite of his German name and Russian origin, Mr. Bechhofer makes it evident that he is heart and soul an Englishman; . . . he writes from first-hand knowledge, having the great advantage of acquaintance with Russian speech and Russian literature. . . . He begins by emphasizing the fact that Russia 'is a land-locked empire' and to this imprisonment of centuries he attributes the national characteristics. His first chapter is entitled 'The Hamlet of the nations,' and shows that the two great divisions of Slavic thought are represented on the one side by those who hunger and thirst for western culture, those who are called 'Westerners,' and on the other, the Slavophiles, who believe that Russia should be self-sufficient and should turn its back on a political development sure to result in 'red riot and revolution, the Terror, Napoleon.'" —Boston Transcript

"His book should be read as a supplement to Richard Washburn Child's 'Potential Russia.' . . . He has a valuable chapter on the progress of Russian thought, the essential weakness of which he attributes to its provincial lack of critical treatment of literature. He has very little respect for the general run of modern Russian fiction. . . . As usual in such books, especially those emanating from Russo-English sources, the transmutation of Russian words is confused and confusing."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 30 '16 930w
Ind 88:205 O 30 '16 80w
N Y Times 21:388 O 1 '16 450w

"Intelligent but somewhat dogmatic book. . . . The author's summary account of Russian institutions is somewhat prejudiced by his Liberal party sympathies, but he is at any rate free from the delusion that Stepniak, say, represented the soul of Russia."

+ — Spec 117:242 Ag 26 '16 170w

"Unfortunately Mr. Bechhofer tries to use his main theme as a key to all the problems of Russian life, character, literature, politics, and art; and in this he signally fails. . . . The book does not give much indication of competent knowledge of Russian life or literature. Nearly every reference in it to a literary man goes wide of its mark. . . . Mr. Bechhofer had sound matter enough to make a good article of three or four thousand words. It is a pity that he has stretched it out into a book of ten times that length."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p290 Je 22
 '16 900w

BECK, JAMES MONTGOMERY. War and humanity. $*1.50 (2½c) Putnam 940.91
 16-23813

This "further discussion of the ethics of the world war and the attitude and duty of the United States," as the title-page describes it, is offered as a sequel to the author's earlier work, "The evidence in the case." All of the essays in the book were prepared first as public addresses to be given on various special occasions, one at the Cavell memorial meeting in Montreal, one at the Washington's birthday celebration in Philadelphia in 1915, one in London at a luncheon of the Pilgrims' society of England, and so on. The seven essays are: The "distress of nations"; The submarine controversy; The case of Edith Cavell; The foreign policy of President Washington; "Where there is no vision"; America and the Allies; The vision of France.

"In the detailed analysis which he gives to events, in the slow development of his theme out of the happenings of the war, in his painstaking examination into incidents, causes, results, the author of 'The evidence in the case' has given us in the present volume, a new brief for world co-operation."

+ N Y Times 21:543 D 10 '16 800w

"The title leads one to expect from a writer of a neutral country, a broad, impartial treatment. . . . As the case stands we look not only for the truth, but for the whole truth. That is, perhaps, an ideal rather than an end to be realized; but the author has, apparently, not tried to approximate it. He is flatly pro-Ally." Joseph Mosher

— + Pub W 90:2080 D 9 '16 540w

BEEGLE, MARY PORTER, and CRAWFORD, JACK RANDALL. Community drama and pageantry. il $*2.50 (3c) Yale univ. press 792.6 16-14043

A timely preliminary survey of some of the technical questions involved in writing and staging pageants and community drama. The practical experience of the authors in staging performances has made possible a collaboration of special value to the amateur producer. A discussion of the principles, types and production of community drama and pageantry precedes a presentation of the practical matters of acting, grouping, color, costume and setting, the dance, rehearsal and training, music and organization. Miss Beegle was organizing chairman of the New York Shakespeare celebration and Mr. Crawford has given a series of pageants at Dartmouth college in connection with the work of the summer school. Seventy-five pages are given to bibliographies.

BEEGLE, M. P., and CRAWFORD, J. R.—Cont.

+ A L A Bkl 13:17 O '16
+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 23 '16 670w
+ Ind 88:368 N 27 '16 50w
N Y Br Lib News 3:108 J1 '16

"These chapters are so full of suggestion and guidance that with the help of the book any community ought to be able to construct and produce a satisfactory pageant. And this is easily reversible, that any community so minded ought to have this book at hand for consultation at every turn."

+ Springfield Republican p7 N 25 '16 230w

"There are two strong points about it. The first is the discussion of dramatic theory in the first three chapters. The second strong feature is the discussion of the dance. . . . The weakest point about this work is the social theory. . . . Having, apparently, no clear conception of what is needed, it is not surprising that the authors lack a clear vision of what community drama may be expected to accomplish. . . . There is one serious omission. Nowhere is there any adequate discussion of the following up of a municipal pageant. A pageant without a permanent civic influence is a failure, and such an influence does not come by accident. . . . But the book as a whole is sound and fine." W. E. Bohn

+ Survey 36:526 Ag 19 '16 850w
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p454 S 21 '16 60w

Reviewed by Clayton Hamilton
+ Yale R n s 6:446 Ja '17 1050w

BEGGS, GERTRUDE HARPER. Four in Crete. il $1.25 Abingdon press 913.39 15-18748

"'The four in Crete' is the account of a visit from Athens to the sites of ancient Aegean civilization at Knossos, Phaistos, and Hagia Triada. The 'four' are 'the Western Woman,' 'the Sage,' 'the Scholar,' and 'the Coffee Angel.' The Scholar's informal and edifying discourses among the ruins give the book its body, whose naked usefulness is partially covered and more or less adorned with the narrative of such light adventure as is usual to travellers in company by sea and land in Mediterranean regions."—Dial

"If he desires his archeology and travel served together, the layman will take delight in reading this brief and popular account of discoveries in Crete. For a larger popular treatment, he will turn to Baikie. If he wants a more scientific treatment he will find it in Hall's 'Aegean archaeology.'"

+ A L A Bkl 12:379 My '16

"One fault with this book the reviewer wishes to state at once: it is too short. The style is so easy and graceful, the story is so charmingly told, with all its colloquialisms and the breeziness of the author's native Colorado, that one can lay the volume down only when he has finished it. Even then one reads the last page with a sigh of regret. A deep knowledge of the classics and of archaeology is clearly shown all through the volume, but it is all brought in so simply and naturally that even the Philistine reader may not be aware of the fact that he is acquiring classical information." M. N. Wetmore

+ Class J 11:375 Mr '16 1500w

"The four in Crete' is like other double-purpose books: both its purposes suffer from the combination. It is neither the best entertainment nor the best instruction. However, it affords the general reader an easy and pleasant, if somewhat slight, means of becoming acquainted with the work of Evans and Halbherr at their respective sites, and with the very interesting life which their discoveries have brought to light. The thirty-one illustrations, chiefly from 'The Western Woman's' camera, are very good."

+ Dial 59:619 D 23 '15 180w

"The author is obsessed by the idea of trying to enliven her tale by employing dialogue; and page after page is filled with long disquisitions by the Scholar and the Sage, which read like paraphrases of Baedeker, and are utterly unconvincing. The literary genre to which the book must be assigned is that of the 'Rollo' books of our youth, in which, if we remember rightly, the 'sugar-coating' of useful information was much more skilfully attempted."

+ Nation 102:321 Mr 16 '16 240w
N Y Times 20:416 O 31 '15 50w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, pseud.). First hundred thousand; being the unofficial chronicle of a unit of "K (1)." il $1.50 (2c) Houghton 940.91 16-6799

These sketches of "the personal adventures of a typical regiment of Kitchener's army" were written at the front and published under the pseudonym, "Junior Sub," in Blackwood's Magazine. They show how a green regiment is whipped into shape, how it behaves under fire, and how the irrepressible humor of the human race can lighten any situation. The author says "The characters are entirely fictitious, but the incidents described all actually occurred."

"So alive that they make us understand better than any reporter can 'the real make-up of the British soldier.' Can be obtained in reinforced binding at same price with no discount."

+ A L A Bkl 12:377 My '16

"Of 'The first hundred thousand' praise is now superfluous. It is a complete record of a miracle, the process by which a heterogeneous mob was turned within a year in a force worthy and able to maintain the traditions of a great regiment. Mr. Ian Hay is a resolute humorist, and those who have not yet made the acquaintance of Private Mucklewame and Capt. Wagstaffe should do so with all possible speed."

+ Ath p22 Ja '16 150w

"For all its apparent lightness of texture and its author's habitual disposition for humorous understatement, the book is a rare revelation of the Briton in one of his most stressful moments—the fateful year of 1915." Forrest Izard

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 4 '16 1200w

"A most illuminating and interesting book, with true literary value—a book to read and to keep."

+ Ind 85:462 Mr 27 '16 150w

"We emphasize the unity which binds these sketches together at the expense of the episodes which in every chapter provide capital reading. The book is eminently quotable, and the constant humor is leavened with frequent touches of pathos."

+ Nation 102:313 Mr 16 '16 900w

"Captain Beith's spirit is the spirit of the British public school, with a strong suggestion of Punch. . . . Pleasant though the narrative is, it does not convey a fine total sense of his adventure, his army and his empire. It has for a grave event a too-familiar imperturbability, an air of preserving style at the expense of sincere response. It is a sentimentalism to set forth the battlefield as a lawn-party Olympia. And if Captain Beith had been able to see this, he would have written a book more consonant with the infinitely valiant and beautiful spirit of men like himself." F. H.

+ New Repub 6:192 Mr 18 '16 1450w

"One of the most interesting works about the war yet written."

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:39 Mr '16 50w

"War books there are by the dozen, but none quite like 'The first hundred thousand.' It is likely to endure when most of the other war books are forgotten. To Americans, perhaps, 'The first hundred thousand' has at the present moment a special interest, for it tells of a problem which this country might have to solve in the near future."

+ N Y Times 21:108 Mr 26 '16 1000w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"Deserves more than a careful study by an American citizen who is interested in the problem of national defense."

+ Outlook 113:61 My 10 '16 1200w

R of Rs 53:502 Ap '16 50w

"These sketches contain all that is irrepressibly brave, comical, devoted, prosaic, glorious, or dull in the lives of thousands of young men who in the last eighteen months have been learning the business and the art of war; and these things are rendered not in the measured prose of an essayist or in the cunning 'effects' of a story-teller, but in the argot of the orderly room, the 'shop' of the camp and the trench, the slang of daily conversation in the training grounds of England, behind the lines in France, and the fiercest front of the battle. . . . A book fit to be read for consolation and hope in the heaviest private hour of those who must stay in England and watch the glory that reaches to-day from Loos to the Euphrates."

+ Sat R 120:566 D 11 '15 800w

"We cannot imagine that the war will produce a better book of its kind than this. The fact that Mr. Hay habitually sees the light side of things does not in the least prevent him from being a serious observer. It is the achievement of his art that his effects are never trivial, though the reader may have felt in his journey towards them that he was simply passing from one joke to another. . . . But best of all is the account of the 'Battle of the slag-heaps.' Here the reader may appreciate, as well as he is ever likely to have the opportunity of doing, the blindness of trench warfare. Mr. Hay implicitly draws a distinction between blindness, as we have called it, and confusion. That is not an easy thing to do, but he has done it."

+ Spec 115:918 D 25 '15 2200w

"The only book comparable to this one is Boyd Cable's 'Between the lines.' But, unlike Mr. Cable, Capt. Hay has relatively little to say about the actual fighting, confining himself almost exclusively to the human element."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 480w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:185 Ap '16 70w

BELDING, ALBERT G. Accounts and accounting practice. *90c Am. bk. 657 15-4592

A useful elementary text book based on established principles of accounting. The discussions and exercises have chiefly to do with the construction, organization and interpretation of accounts. Aside from the clerical aspects of the work, a larger aim has been to teach the principles of business organization and procedure as the experience of business men has prescribed.

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ap 28 '16 150w

BELL, ARCHIE. Spell of Egypt. (Spell ser.) il *$2.50 Page 916.2 16-6703

"Account of a leisurely journey down the Nile, interspersed with information on present-day and historic Egypt, given in a rather wordy form. Tells of an interesting visit with Maspero, the famous Egyptologist. The narrative is made less prominent than in most of the series."—A L A Bkl

+ A L A Bkl 12:474 J1 '16

"Relatively few of the innumerable books written about this ancient land more vividly recreate its historic past. . . . The illustrations are well chosen, and those in color delightful. But one confesses a natural surprise at seeing the Colossi of Abu-Simbel transported to the Ramesseum, and the Osiride columns of the latter claimed for the rock-hewn temple of Abu-Simbel!" F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 26 '16 630w

"Where historical or statistical information is given, it is given not for the sake of information, but for the sake of an impression—for the sake of the permanent value of the thing itself. Mr. Bell is the kind of a person one would like to travel with. The publishers' share in the book would have been more satisfactory had the covers been more carefully executed and had several photographs of poor quality or artificial pose been omitted, It is a pity as most of the illustrations are excellent."

+ Lit D 52:1710 Je 10 '16 350w

+ Nation 103:307 S 28 '16 400w

N Y Br Lib News 3:74 My '16

BELL, AUBREY FITZ GERALD. Portugal of the Portuguese. (Countries and peoples ser.) il *$1.50 Scribner 914.69 A16-423

"That the Portugal of the future may be a Portugal of the Portuguese is the earnest wish of the author and doubtless of many of his fellow countrymen. Whether monarchy or republic is evidently not of so great moment as that there shall be a modern, tolerant, progressive government which may unite and solidify all but the few extremists in one common cause—and that of Portugal's best interests." (Boston Transcript) There are discussions of religion, education, literature, etc., with a closing chapter on Portugal of the future.

"Good for reference because comprehensive and up to date (1915), but unattractive like others of the series and less readable than the author's 'In Portugal.' Smaller libraries having that and Hume's attractive account will not need this."

+ — A L A Bkl 12:423 Je '16

"Many excellent photographs are included."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 15 '16 360w

"Some space is taken by such vital facts as the population of districts and per cent of wooded areas, but A. F. G. Bell tells also of the picturesque life of the peasants and enlivens his guidebook by amusing scenes from the sixteenth century but still living pages of Gil Vicente."

+ Ind 86:182 My 1 '16 50w

Pittsburgh 21:205 Ap '16 40w

+ R of Rs 53:374 Mr '16 110w

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 8 '16 300w

BELL, EDWARD. Architecture of ancient Egypt. (Origins of architecture) il *$2 (4c) Macmillan 722 A16-543

"We are told that this handbook was begun in the attempt to trace architectural tradition from its remoter origins. It represents recent information at present dispersed in special books and papers. Though little more than an outline and pretending to no technical treatment, it 'notes the changes in aesthetic ideals which, notwithstanding the innate conservatism of the Egyptian race, took place at one or two periods of their history.' An appendix is added in the shape of a paper by Lepsius, dealing with some features of Egyptian art, which has not been translated before."—Int Studio

+ A L A Bkl 12:368 My '16

"On technical points Mr. Bell supplies much which will be valuable to the lay reader. The book is brought well up to date, a special appendix being devoted to Prof. Naville's Osireion and another to the views of Karl Lepsius on Egyptian art, in which careful use is made of M. George Foucart's researches into the 'Histoire de l'ordre lotiforme.'"

+ Ath 1915,2:484 D 25 420w

"The aim of the author in general has been to give unlearned or ordinary readers the benefit of the fruits of later research work."

+ Int Studio 58:75 Mr '16 120w

Library Association Record 18:121 Mr '16 50w

"In one or two cases a whole body of important material has escaped him—for example, in his treatment of the obelisks. . . . The old standard treatises on the history of architecture are of course long since out of date, and in the meantime Mr. Bell's volume will hardly serve to fill the serious gap which the student of architecture must continue to meet until some very competent archaeologist, like Borchart, has given us a careful history of Egyptian architecture."

+ — Nation 103:243 S 7 '16 350w

"The book is finely printed and published, with a great number of photographs; and to be

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BELL, EDWARD—Continued

copiously illustrated is, in a closely compressed account of a difficult subject, to win half the battle. . . . The book as a whole is one to be kept for reference rather than for casual reading; where the period under consideration is so exceedingly long, it is impossible for a writer to deviate at all from the strict path of fact; neither has he time or opportunity to stir our imagination."

+ Spec 115:547 O 23 '15 250w

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p52 F 3 '16 800w

BELL, JOHN JOY. Cupid in oilskins. il *$1
Doran 17-84

"J. J. Bell's new book is an engaging account of the romance of a gunner in the English navy who has been told that he must sink a U-boat to win a certain Lydia with a 'lovely pigtail.' The author of 'Wee Macgregor' touches the war theme very lightly, and the real interest of this little volume is to be found in the personalities of the hero and his friends."—Ind

+ Ind 88:466 D 11 '16 70w

"Mr. Bell is master of the thrilling episode no less than of the lightsome narrative. In these dark days, however, we have cause for thankfulness in the sunny atmosphere of the story, and in its beautiful picture of that beautiful thing—friendship between men."

+ N Y Times 22:5 Ja 7 '17 300w

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 19 '16 120w

BELL, JOHN KEBLE (KEBLE HOWARD, pseud.). Forked lightning. *$1.25 (3c) Lane
16-8461

A novelized version of "The green flag," an English comedy. The English title refers to the railway signal which may mean "All right" or may mean "Danger," according as the flag is waved one way or another. "Now I am the man with the green flag," Sir Hugh Brandeth says to Janet Grierson in his efforts to warn her back from danger. For she is about to defy convention and leave the country with her lover, Lord Milverdale. It is Lady Milverdale, an unpleasant combination of venom and jealousy, who almost outwits Sir Hugh's well-meant efforts to save her own home, at the same time disturbing the peace of his own by rousing the suspicions of his young wife. The situation is saved by circumstances and the wisdom of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Kesteven.

"In light comedy form and under another name the incidents and characters in this English production are said to have been favorably received in London. The novelized version has been cleverly managed, except for the frequent insertion, in the latter part, of extracts from certain popular hymns."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '16 230w

"Within the covers of a novel it loses something, though it is cleverly written and more than a little amusing."

+ — N Y Times 21:199 My 7 '16 250w

"A pleasant and easily told story, not a piece of hackwork, as such things often are."

+ Sat R 122:138 Ag 5 '16 220w

+ Spec 117:217 Ag 19 '16 30w

"The complications are attended by ingenious maneuvering, hairbreadth escapes from compromising circumstances, and skillful conversational parrying. Mr. Howard has done his work well and the story is light and altogether diverting."

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 230w

BELL, LILIAN LIDA (MRS. ARTHUR HOYT BOGUE). About Miss Mattie Morningglory. *$1.35 (1c) Rand 16-8459

Miss Mattie kept a millinery shop. She was a genius at copying smart models and customers flocked to her shop and money accumulated in her till. Miss Mattie is forty, but for all her sweetness, has never had a lover. It is not surprising that in her simplicity she accepts in good faith the scoundrel who has designs on her money. The disclosure of his treachery is a shock too great to be withstood and Miss Mattie finds herself in a hospital in a state of nervous collapse. Here she becomes a convert to mental healing, or rather works out a system of her own based on faith and prayer and good will, and when she returns to her home and shop she reconstructs her life on new lines. She takes three unfortunate children into her home, works some small miracles in her neighborhood, and also wins for herself a true lover who appreciates her real worth.

Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '16 190w

"It will be peculiarly welcomed by Miss Mattie's fellow-believers. The reader standing outside the cult will find much to perplex him, and will be likely to become a little weary before he finishes the 529 generous pages which tell of the wonderful doings and happenings of the miracle-working heroine."

+ — N Y Times 21:272 J1 2 '16 250w

R of Rs 54:235 Ag '16 100w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 27 '16 210w

BELL, RALCY HUSTED. Philosophy of painting. *$1.25 (2½c) Putnam 750.9 16-6062

In his preface the author enumerates his reasons for writing this book. Among them are these: To sketch the course and progress of the art in an easy perspective; to assemble some scattered material which is interesting and convenient to have in small compass; to hit some absurdities which have long been shameless bores; to suggest some theories which may be proved or disproved by more competent students. Chapters on Art, Painting, A theory of painting, and The origin of painting are followed by a treatment of the development of painting from prehistoric times to the present. There is a closing chapter on Ideals.

"A book which is logical and honest. What this particular book contains will prove of inestimable service to the public. For its author has a clear terse style; he defines art, as well as anyone ever can define it; he gives us a theory of art which is far more coherent than the theories of many writers on the same subject; and he then proceeds to trace the development of painting from the prehistoric days, down to our own period of impressionism. This book ought to be in every library; it ought to be in every school where the history of painting is studied."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 22 '16 450w

+ Educ R 52:425 N '16 30w

"He altogether misses the opportunity offered him to discuss futuristic art, and ends his survey with the impressionists. The book, while readable enough, and containing much information, falls far short of any realization of its lofty promise."

+ — Ind 86:117 Ap 17 '16 60w

"Consists of a theoretical and an historical part. The general discussion of the aesthetics of painting is, though unsystematic, frequently vivid and suggestive. After what would make a capital brochure on general considerations, it is disappointing to plunge into an outline history of the world's art which is by no means distinguished above its fellows. It is not the first time that a good essay has become by accretion a mediocre book."

+ — Nation 102:655 Je 15 '16 140w

+ R of Rs 53:763 Je '16 170w

"His résumé is accurate from the historical viewpoint, and his comment frequently of much solid worth."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 30 '16 300w

"The sketch would be of much more value if it had illustrations. His opening chapters on Art and Painting generally afford a remarkable example of verbiage arranged decoratively round a very small modicum of thought. Even when he is treading the hard road of fact Dr. Bell is too apt to wander off, with a far-away look in his eyes, into side paths of mazy rhetoric that lead nowhere."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p179 Ap 13 '16 350w

BELL, RALCY HUSTED. Taormina. il $1.25
Hinds 914.58 16-2126

Taormina is an ancient Sicilian town with a long history. The author of this book however is more concerned with its present aspects than with the past. "The author now finds that all of Taormina's living interest today lies in her matchless beauty. . . . Poets are not much concerned with the dry bones of history, but the author and enthusiast finds space for a brief account of Taormina's past, in which history is mingled with tradition." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bkl 13:28 O '16

Boston Transcript p22 Ja 26 '16 250w

+ Cleveland p157 D '16 40w

Reviewed by P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 61:25 Je 22 '16 140w

+ Ind 86:182 My 1 '16 40w

+ — Sat R 122:351 O 7 '16 330w

"Dr. Bell's photographs, at least, are good enough to make one lament the literary opportunity that he has missed."

— + Spec 117:217 Ag 19 '16 80w

"Dr. Bell is more of an artist and poet than of a statistician. He has delved into all the ancient writings that touch this once-proud city, and historians, poets, philosophers march before us."

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 280w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Elements of the great war; the second phase. diags *$1.50 (2c)
Hearst's int. lib. 940.91

The volume preceding this, presenting the first phase, was in a way introductory. Its purpose was to describe "the general historical position when the shock came." This second book presents a study of the battle of the Marne, regarded by the author as one of the turning points of human history. The turning back of the Germans when almost within sight of Paris, one of the puzzles of the war, is explained on the grounds of a German blunder and French readiness in taking advantage of the situation created by it. Contents: The battle generally considered; The details of the battle; The battle of the "Grand Couronné"; The battle of the Ourcq and of the two Morins; The battle of La Fère Champenoise; The rest of the line; The stationary right wing; The Aisne. The book is illustrated by diagrams showing positions and movements.

+ A L A Bkl 13:115 D '16

"His book is a fascinating study of the strategic problem, and a demonstration of the supreme importance of this crisis in the history of the war. But we wish he would give the British army credit for what it unquestionably achieved on the Marne."

+ Ath p438 S '16 170w

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 9 '16 1350w

+ Ind 88:204 O 30 '16 420w

Lit D 53:1180 N 4 '16 930w

Nation 103:306 S 28 '16 780w

"What he has done is to establish a solid framework within which the details lacking now may be inserted after the war by the countless military historians who are certain to follow." Gerald Morgan

+ New Repub 8:332 O 28 '16 1250w

"The author has given us here and there pieces of vivid writing—the Kaiser watching the battle of the Grand Couronné, the turning of the German force at the Ourcq, the forty-second division held back until the last minute at La Fère Champenoise—they are unforgettable."

+ N Y Times 21:432 O 15 '16 1050w

"The analysis is remarkably simple, considering the complexity of the subject. The author has reduced the situation to its lowest terms for the benefit of the non-military mind. And the diagrams, in which he has not been afraid of being too elementary, will be of great aid in visualizing it." M. K. Reely

+ Pub W 90:847 S 16 '16 500w

"His candid admission [ig] that there are two schools of elucidators, and that, though he is firm for his school, he admits there is a good deal to be said for the school he rejects."

+ Spec 117:318 S 16 '16 1850w

"Clear and entertaining, but somewhat over-speculative style."

+ Springfield Republican p13 S 24 '16 450w

"Mr. Belloc, like other military experts, has often been wrong in his predictions of the course of military events; but he certainly is one of the best of our exponents of the events which are known to have occurred. . . . We see from his pages what the hurried newspaper reader would never have succeeded in seeing."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p339 Jl 20 '16 900w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Verses. $1.25 Gomme 821
2 16-24232

Mr. Kilmer in his introduction says: "Hilaire Belloc is a poet. Also he is a Frenchman, an Englishman, an Oxford man, a Roman Catholic, a country gentleman, a soldier, a democrat, and a practical journalist. . . . In all these characters he utters his poetry." So much then for a promise of variety in his book of poems. Of their character Mr. Kilmer says further: "Hilaire Belloc is not the man to spend much time in analysing his own emotions; he is not, thank God, a poetical psychologist. Love songs, drinking songs, battle songs—it is with these primitive and democratic things that he is chiefly concerned."

"Mr. Kilmer's edition of Belloc's verses is very welcome. His introduction is charming; the tribute of an understanding lover. . . . Perhaps we can take issue with him in his estimate of Belloc's importance as a poet. . . . His 'The south country' will make splendid many an anthology. But who shall say that his handful of verses, witty, debonair, bacchanalian and tender, is his most important contribution?" C. D. M.

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 30 '16 2000w

+ Lit D 54:207 Ja 27 '17 950w

+ — N Y Call p15 D 24 '16 530w

"A book that will rest the mind weary of the 'strong note' in poesy, and give a jolly hour of pure intellectual enjoyment."

+ R of Rs 55:212 F '17 120w

BEMAN, LAMAR TANEY, comp. Selected articles on prohibition of the liquor traffic.
*$1.25 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 178 15-27670
For descriptive note see Annual for 1915.

A L A Bkl 12:211 F '16

+ Ind 85:235 F 14 '16 30w

N Y Br Lib News 3:26 F '16

Pittsburgh 21:306 Je '16

R of Rs 53:380 Mr '16 20w

St Louis 14:146 Ap '16

"The book seems hastily put together but a careful debater, by following the bibliography and speeches, could arrive at a comprehensive survey of the subject. As books of this class are apt to fall into the hands of school boys, one wishes that these young debaters could be guided concerning the true efficacy of a measure, could be shown that the main point is not whether such and such a measure violates state rights, personal liberty, etc., but whether on the whole it works toward the conservation of humanity. 'There is only one solution,' says Dr. Jon Alfred Mjoen of Sweden, 'race hygiene.'" Elizabeth Tilton

+ — Survey 35:590 F 12 '16 200w

"Excellent in every way and will be heartily welcomed in all libraries used by debaters."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:88 F '16 40w

BENECKE, ELSE C. M., tr. Tales by Polish authors. *$1.25 Longmans (Eng ed A16-379)

"The first hundred pages of this little volume are given to a story, 'Bartek the Conqueror,' by Henrik Sienkiewicz; the other sixty, to five brief tales and sketches by Stefan Żeromski, Adam Szymanski, and Waclaw Sieroszewski. The two last-named have both had experience of exile in Siberia, and the materials of their present tales are Siberian."—Nation

BENECKE, ELSE C. M., tr.—Continued

"'Bartek the Conqueror,' by Henrik Sienkiewicz, is included in Curtin's translation of that author's work. . . . All excel in word pictures and, like all Polish writers, have a remarkable feeling for the various aspects of nature."

+ Cleveland p18 Mr '16 60w

Ind 83:394 Mr 13 '16 50w

Nation 102:197 F 17 '16 150w

N Y Br Lib News 3:28 F '16

"The first and longest story is 'Bartek the Conqueror.' M. Sienkiewicz describes as only he can. The whole tragedy of Poland is compressed into this brief story of her dumb and helpless peasantry led to the shambles at the pleasure of their masters. The other tales are pictures like those of Millet's peasants, sombre, hopeless, infinitely pathetic. The one which tugs most at the readers' heartstrings is Szymanski's sketch, entitled 'Srul, from Lubartow,' a picture of the homesickness of two exiles to Siberia. The translator seems to have preserved well the spirit of the originals. They are more than literature: they are life, life wrung with pain or beaten into dull insensibility. They are Poland."

+ N Y Times 21:114 Mr 26 '16 280w

"In all the writing has style and atmosphere, though the later is one of extreme melancholy. Perhaps the strongest of the tales is M. Henryk Sienkiewicz's pitilessly realistic psychological study of 'Bartek the Conqueror.' M. Wacław Sieroszewski's stories of the Yakut and Tunga tribes have a welcome touch of colour and romance."

+ Spec 116:230 F 12 '16 120w

BENEDIALL, BRIDGET YVA. Blind sight. il
*$1.35 (1½c) Dodd 15-16232

A young London clerk is asked to go down to a country house to act as private detective and watchman for the wedding gifts of one of the daughters. He is to mingle with the guests and pose as one of them, watching in the meanwhile for the possible thief. His discovery of this person is of importance only as it goes to show the solidarity of the Nutons and their ideals of family honor; for the culprit is one of themselves. The real interest of the story however lies in the relationship that grows up between Hunter, the amateur watchman, and Ursula, the eldest daughter of the house. She has been blinded by an accident and in spite of the kindness of those about her is much alone in spirit. Between the young man from outside and the lonely girl a chord of sympathy is immediately struck. Family solidarity is again brought into play in an attempt to break up an unequal match, but fate deals kindly with the lovers.

"While the initial situation of the love between the blind girl and the man of the people is a little improbable, the author has woven her subsequent situations and has portrayed her characters with considerable skill."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 2 '16 500w

N Y Br Lib News 3:37 Mr '16

"A story that is interesting in itself, but is all the more pleasing because of the clear, fresh eyesight with which the author has viewed her people and a certain humanly sympathetic quality with which she has portrayed them."

+ N Y Times 21:13 Ja 9 '16 450w

"The author writes well for a newcomer to fiction; her story of a blind girl's love is light-hearted, if undistinguished."

+ Spec 115:373 S 18 '15 22w

BÉNÉZET, LOUIS PAUL. Story of the map of Europe; its making and its changing. (Lake history stories) il *60c (1½c) Scott 911

16-6002

An elementary work, attempting to set forth in simple terms the conditions in Europe out of which the present war resulted. It is based on a series of talks on the causes of the war given to audiences that ranged from grade pupils to the general public. In assembling the material into a book an attempt has been made to provide a work suitable both for school use and for reading by adults. A series of maps, over twenty in number, give a graphic presentation of the changes and developments described in the text.

+ Ind 87:231 Ag 14 '16 70w

"He illustrates his text by a large number of maps, but they are so sketchy that it is doubtful whether they will convey any very clear notions. There are also many inaccuracies in the text itself. . . . It is doubtful whether a more satisfactory brief account of the underlying causes of the war exist which may be recommended for immature high-school pupils."

+ Nation 102:sup496 My 4 '16 300w

"The best feature of the book is the series of admirably clear maps. The author believes in national divisions along racial lines and devotes one whole chapter to a rather naive exposition of this doctrine."

+ School R 24:328 Ap '16 70w

Springfield Republican p15 Jl 23 '16 170w

BENGTON, NELS AUGUST, and GRIFFITH, DONEE. Wheat industry. (Industrial ser.) il *65c (1c) Macmillan 633 15-20575

A supplementary reader for use in upper grades. It was written "in response to a demand for a connected treatment of the activities of wheat production." The growing of wheat, marketing, and milling are all covered, and a chapter is devoted to each of the wheat countries of the world. The book is unusually well illustrated. There are several maps; review questions follow each chapter, and there is an index.

"Many illuminating illustrations."

+ A L A Bkl 12:293 Mr '16

Educ R 51:533 My '16 30w

"A very interesting volume, which we put down with the feeling that the authors have done their work well and produced something that will be of much value to teachers." E. J. R.

+ Nature 97:79 Mr 23 '16 300w

School Arts Magazine 15:443 F '16 70w

BENHAM, ALLEN ROGERS. English literature from Widsith to the death of Chaucer. *$2.50 Yale univ. press 820.8 16-15608

The author's purpose has been to provide a source-book which will be to literary history what the usual source-book is to general history. He says: "From an anthology my book differs in that it concerns judgment and scholarship rather than taste and appreciation. . . . From a text-book it differs in that it gives a direct rather than an indirect report of its field." The volume is made up of two parts: From the beginnings to the Norman conquest; From the Norman conquest to the death of Chaucer. In each part the material is arranged under the following headings: The political background; Social and industrial background; The cultural background; The linguistic background; Literary characteristics; Representative authors. The author is associate professor of English in the University of Washington and the book is issued as one of the volumes of the Yale university publications under the Henry Weldon Barnes memorial foundation.

+ Ath p590 D '16 130w

"The reader cannot avoid the conclusion that the book lacks balance because the writer's main interest and specialized knowledge were in Middle English. With this exception, the work is all that such a book should be, being faultlessly arranged and wholly trustworthy. Its physical make-up is no less satisfactory."

+ Dial 61:357 N 2 '16 330w

N Y Br Lib News 3:140 S '16

St Louis 14:437 D '16 10w

"A volume of 600 pages, illuminating not only the literary content and achievement of the times, but the broad social and historical sides as well."

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 11 '16 140w

"Disappointing. Much in this volume might with advantage be omitted, and its place more profitably filled by other material. . . . It would be tedious to lengthen out the list of Professor Benham's omissions. It is regrettable that they should spoil what would otherwise be an interesting and valuable book."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p4 Ja 4 '17 900w

BENJAMIN, RENÉ. Private Gaspard, a soldier of France; tr. by Selmer Fougner. *$1.35 Brentano's 16-14050

A novel of the war by a young French writer. "Gaspard is a snail-merchant, we are told. But, after all, what else is the hook-nosed little man, surcharged with energy and wit, terrible of idiom and tender of heart, but the traditional Frenchman, the Gallic Cock of legend? This time it is no Chantecler, disillusioned and consoling himself with the hope of 'making the sun rise in human hearts.' Gaspard is of the older, the recurrent stock. He comes from out of the heart of the Parisian people, undisciplined, irrepressible, quick at any task he sets himself to accomplish. . . . We quit Gaspard on the Avenue Alexandre III, hobbling along in the tranquil evening light. He has lost a leg; his bunkies, Burette the journalist, Meusse the savant, have been killed at his side. But with him are his mother and his wife. Before him hops another undisciplinable, irrepressible little Gaspard. And, together, they go—'towards the dome of the Invalides.'" (New Repub) The French title is "Les soldats de la guerre, Gaspard." The book was awarded the Goncourt prize for 1915.

+ A L A Bkl 13:122 D '16

"M. Benjamin has in individual characterization the skill peculiar to many of the best French writers, and for this we admire his book; but it is difficult to find in the doings of one or two men the keener interest, not to say enthusiasm, that we receive from broader treatment of scenes and episodes—from a more general view, in fact, of the war, or even a part of it."

Ath p544 N '16 70w

"From the new literature of war the captains and the kings depart, and the common soldier reigns in their stead. Such is the spirit underlying the first epic story of the cataclysm." E. P. Dargan

+ Dial 61:311 O 19 '16 1000w

"France has found its Kipling. René Benjamin has sprung from a field of rather meager literary accomplishment into the proud position of creating the one literary masterpiece of the war. This is the sum of the French verdict, according to Mr. Alvan F. Sanborn, who writes for the Boston Transcript."

+ Lit D 52:567 Mr 4 '16 1100w

"The sensation of things actually felt that it imparts would alone have served to distinguish the book. But with only that to recommend it, it would never have been 'Gaspard.' Whether present consciously or unconsciously, there is in the book a spirit that evokes immediately the France that has so marvellously disappointed her enemies, the France recreated by the war. Without any straining after allegory, without the slightest departure from the forms of a fine and nervous narrative, by virtue of just this pervading buoyancy and courage and vigor, the little story is a fitting symbol of the land that produced it." P. L. Rosenfeld

+ New Repub 7:335 Jl 29 '16 1350w

"With such poignant and human tragedy and comedy is this story told. The translation is free, and abounds with American slang phrases and colloquialisms. Also some parts of the original are left out or much abbreviated. But even the translation palpitates with the real spirit of Gaspard and of the French."

+ N Y Times 21:267 Jl 2 '16 650w

+ Sat R 122:535 D 2 '16 450w

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 8 '16 260w

"We follow Gaspard, with wonder, amusement, and increasing affection, through a war which brings to him two days' fighting against an unseen enemy and disablement for life. There is no plot save that which he himself supplies."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p30 Ja 20 '16 900w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Gates of wrath. *50c (1c) Doran

"Gates of wrath: a melodrama" was published in England in 1903. The American publisher calls it, on the book-jacket, a "fantasy," but a melodrama it remains. Arthur Forrest, an English art-critic and idealist marries Sylviane Drew, the beautiful young widowed daughter of Mrs. Cavalossi, an adventuress. The marriage was planned by this woman and her ally Dr. Colpus because they knew Arthur Forrest to be heir to the millions left by Carl Peterson, a fact of which they believed him to be ignorant. He was however fully informed in the matter and refused now as formerly to claim the fortune. Mrs. Cavalossi, having already accomplished the death of her husband and first son-in-law, now plans the death of her second son-in-law and also that of Arthur Peterson, his friend and the present inheritor. The madness of the last helps to complicate matters and the story ends with his death and that of Dr. Colpus and the exile of the would-be-murderess to South America.

"As a mingling of farce and melodrama it is ingenious, but its ingenuity is of the sort of which any competent workman in fiction is perfectly capable. It is a story to laugh at rather than to laugh with, although it must be confessed that the reader who finds his way into its opening pages will want to read through to the end in order to satisfy his curiosity over the outcome." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p6 Ja 22 '16 500w

"It intrinsically ranks no higher than the average blood-and-thunder thriller, although, of course, it is more coherent and more gracefully written than the majority of its prototypes."

— Springfield Republican p15 F 13 '16 260w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Lion's share. *$1.50 (1c) Doran 16-22855

A novel to be classed with "Helen with the high hand" and "Denry the audacious" rather than with "The old wives' tale." Audrey Mose of Flank Hall, Essex, is nineteen when her father's death leaves her in possession of a fortune. Audrey has never had control of a penny of spending money in her life. She has been allowed neither responsibility nor liberty, but with a wedding ring on her finger and Miss Winnie Ingate as a companion she sets out to see the world, beginning with Paris. It is Miss Ingate's proud boast that she once played a barrel organ all the way down Regent street and escaped without being arrested, and before the story is half over she has Audrey involved in the militant suffrage cause too. In the adventures that ensue an attractive young suffragette, Jane Foley, "the most dangerous woman in England," is a leader, but a young Parisian violinist, an elderly yacht owner, two American women and the head gardener at Flank Hall are also implicated.

+ A L A Bkl 13:174 Ja '17

"Mr. Bennett has not given us of his best. He has taken a theme, suffrage, with great possibilities, and has, for him, made little of it. . . . When we are allowed to forget suffrage, and Mr. Bennett gives us some of his cameos which so vividly portray men and women, with their idiosyncrasies, we thoroughly enjoy the book."

— + Ath p421 S '16 630w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Bookm 44:507 Ja '17 550w

Reviewed by E. E. Hale

+ Dial 61:466 N 30 '16 750w

Ind 88:366 N 27 '16 380w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 103:508 N 30 '16 140w

+ Nation 104:107 Ja 25 '17 460w

"The novel is too detailed, too slow in movement for a story of this type. Some of it indeed is distinctly labored, as though the author were striving to be gay and blithesome, and finding it very hard work. This is a pity, because many of the scenes are pure comedy, deftly handled. Of course, there is a certain flavor of ancient history about it all."

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BENNETT, ARNOLD—Continued

+ — N Y Times 21:477 N 12 '16 830w

+ N Y Times 21:504 N 26 '16 90w

Pub W 90:2070 D 9 '16 400w

"It is a satire—detached and unimpassioned after Mr. Bennett's wont—on various aspects of modern feminism, in which special prominence is given to the suffragist movement. On this subject, Mr. Bennett may claim to speak from a certain amount of inside knowledge, seeing that for several years he was editorially connected with Woman, a periodical which bore the somewhat enigmatical motto of 'Forward but not too fast.' That, however, was in the 'nineties.' . . . Mr. Bennett has never been more frankly materialist, or perhaps it would be fairer to say more concerned to show that happiness depends on the command of money."

— + Spec 117:588 N 11 '16 1250w

"The story goes into all the minute details that Mr. Bennett delights to explore, but it is a spirited book notwithstanding—a tale of the 'Buried alive' type."

+ Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 650w

"The book is not altogether the farce that it pretends to be. It provokes questions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p450 S 21 '16 900w

BENNETT, THOMAS PENBERTHY. Relation of sculpture to architecture. il *$4.50 Putnam 730 (Eng ed 16-10936)

"Mr. Bennett's main object is to comment on the use of sculpture, whether it is used as an integral portion of the design of buildings, or as an accessory to the fabric, and especially to discuss the placing of monuments and the influence of surroundings, whether the monument is on a great or national scale, or if it consists of a single figure statue or bas-relief treatment. . . . The pictures in the book are confined to 110 illustrations, principally from photographs, but including several reproductions from drawings, etchings, and water-colours."—Ath

Ath p346 J1 '16 800w

"The book is throughout illustrated by examples of all dates and from all countries. . . . One fault we have to find with the book is that some of the modern features of architecture illustrated, no doubt to make clear a particular form of adaptation of statuary to masonry, are not, in themselves, entitled to the tribute paid them by their inclusion in this very serviceable and thoughtful treatise."

+ Int Studio 60:154 Ja '17 200w

Pittsburgh 21:484 N '16 40w

St Louis 14:435 D '16

"An admirably clear and common-sense book on a recondite and controversial subject. . . . It contains illustrations that really do illustrate. It must be remarked, however, that in several cases, though the examples chosen point the moral, they do not always adorn the tale. The same points might have been as well or better illustrated by the representation of finer works."

+ Spec 117:160 Ag 5 '16 1000w

"The chief defect of his book is that it is mainly concerned with modern sculpture and architecture, which seldom go hand in hand because neither is really alive. His account of the past is too summary to be of any value. Thus he gives about two pages to Gothic and about three to the Italian renaissance."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p137 Mr 23 '16 1000w

BENOIS, ALEXANDRE NIKOLAEVICH.
 2 Russian school of painting; with an introd. by Christian Brinton. il *$3 Knopf 891.7 16-24585

"Russian art, concerning which comparatively little has been printed in English, is treated by M. Benois, under the following heads: The eighteenth century, Classicism, Romanticism, Alexander Ivanov and religious painting, Realism and purpose painting, History and fairy tale, Landscape and free realism, and Contemporary state of Russian painting. The work has been translated from the original Russian by Abraham Yarmolinsky. . . . M. Benois is a writer and dramatist, as well as a painter, and his interpretation of Russian art is neither narrow nor technical."—R of Rs

"It must be remembered that the original of Mr. Benois's work was written in 1904 and it is unfortunate that the development of the past twelve years is not included in a supplementary chapter. The volume contains thirty-five well-selected full-page half-tone illustrations reproducing paintings mentioned. There is no index. The spelling of Russian names follows the usual examples of individual idiosyncrasy of transliteration. The book is valuable; the criticisms are eminently fair; the author knows what he is writing about and he adds appreciably to the hitherto desultory fund of information regarding painting in Russia." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 20 '17 1700w

"M. Benois is well suited for the difficult task in hand, for as one-time director of the Ballet russe, as co-author of 'Le pavillon d'Armide' and 'Petrouchka' and a painter himself, we may be certain that he has found everything of significance which this rather barren field offers."

+ Dial 62:29 Ja 11 '17 300w

+ N Y Times 22:10 Ja 14 '17 200w

+ R of Rs 55:219 F '17 100w

BENSON, ALLAN LOUIS. Inviting war to America. *$1 (2c) Huebsch 355.7 16-16321

This is a vigorous protest against militarism made by the candidate for president of the Socialist party. Mr. Benson points out the profits that would accrue to some militarists unless the government took over the manufacture of munitions, discusses what he considers fundamental errors in the policies of ex-President Roosevelt and President Wilson, and maintains that the press is under control of the capitalists and the politicians. In the chapter 'Policies that make for war' he advocates the recognition of the independence of the Philippines, the abolition of the Monroe doctrine, and the neutralization of the Panama canal. Mr. Benson was a member of the anti-preparedness committee which met in Washington, January, 1916, now the American union against militarism.

"Contains some good common-sense arguments against preparedness based on statistics and authoritative statements, which, however, lose much force because coupled with personal attacks, bitter arguments against capitalism, and propaganda for the socialist cause."

+ — A L A Bkl 13:58 N '16

"In it he proves nothing but his inability to grasp the logic of the situation. . . . Mr. Benson's book has no more influence than Mr. Dixon's, and it is to be taken no more seriously as an argument against preparedness than 'The fall of a nation' may be held to be effective for it." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '16 140w

Ind 88:506 D 18 '16 40w

"If his idealism does not contribute any more towards international organization—he merely seems to substitute a non-competitive national organism for a predatory one—it at least shows far greater insight into the reckless forces that an American preparedness without policy will let loose in the world. . . . Few socialist writers have so much psychological insight to color their vehemence. It is a genuine power for analysis of current history that makes Mr. Benson so interesting a pamphleteer." Randolph Bourne

New Repub 9:131 D 2 '16 430w

— N Y Times 21:301 J1 30 '16 170w

"The book is full of intemperate nonsense about the war, and about every non-socialist being an enemy to his country. Nevertheless there are many ideas here which might well arrest the thoughtful adherent of either side, and chief is one with which the reviewer is heartily in accord—the same system that kills the workingman in war robs him in peace, the conflicting economic interests of capitalists." Algernon Tassin

— + Pub W 89:1326 Ap 15 '16 700w

R of Rs 54:115 Jl '16 20w

Springfield Republican p6 Jl 11 '16 670w

BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER. Father Payne. *$1.50 (1½c) Putnam 828 16-2129

There is a very slight thread of narrative running thru this book. It tells of an experiment in communal life conducted by a layman known to his followers as Father Payne. He is interested in writing but has himself failed in his early attempts at creative literature. In middle life an estate and a small fortune fall to him and he gathers about him a small number of young men who wish to write, offers them the hospitality of his home and the benefit of his own critical faculty, which is strongly developed, asking in return only earnest endeavor. Much of the book is made up of a report of his conversation and table talk as recorded by the one of the young men who is most near and dear to him. The first edition of this book was published anonymously. In the second English edition Mr. Benson put his name on the title-page.

A L A Bkl 12:373 My '16

"Epigrams, suggestive turns of thought, and happy illustrations abound; most of the pages challenge opposition. The man's whole outlook is stimulating. It would be easy to show that his criticism of life virtually ignores the conditions under which the majority of human beings live; what he gives is a body of counsel for the relatively detached and free. Still, one may suspect that most people are somewhat freer than they choose to believe; and few will be so dull as not to derive invigoration from these pages."

+ Ath 1915,2:458 D 18 550w

"The book is of great interest. Short shrift here for the spineless 'temperamental' hero who may be found squirming his way through so much of our current fiction." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:203 Ap '16 650w

"He constructs no plot, yet from beginning to end he makes 'Father Payne' without any apparent effort a complete story. Many a novelist who prides himself upon his intricately woven plots would do well to profit by Mr. Benson's example, and take a lesson in the art that conceals art." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 2 '16 1850w

+ Dial 60:283 Mr 16 '16 310w

"Whether that writer be Benson or not—we incline to think not—he writes essays that are suggestive as well as entertaining."

+ Ind 87:103 Jl 17 '16 60w

+ Nation 102:387 Ap 6 '16 350w

+ R of Rs 53:506 Ap '16 90w

"The lessons flow from the authority of profound knowledge and experience, yet the rich quality of humor makes them highly entertaining. A grateful antidote for the popular prejudice against being serious. Published namelessly. Ascribed to A. C. Benson, if rightfully, his chef d'oeuvre." O: Heller

+ St Louis 14:137 Ap '16 100w

+ Sat R 121:68 Ja 15 '16 120w

"The whole book leaves the reader with a very pleasant impression, for all that there is something very unreal about it. It is difficult, as the well-worn saying goes, to be a Christian on under £1 a week. It is impossible, we should say, to be a 'Father Payne-ite' under two thousand a year. Still, plenty of people have plenty of money, and such should certainly go to school to Father Payne."

+ Spec 116:607 My 13 '16 1250w

"'Father Payne' is an anonymous work. That the author is A. C. Benson is as certain as that Shakespeare wrote Shakespeare. And the charm of the concrete has come back to Mr. Benson's sensitive pages. Perhaps, after all, the chief trouble with several of his books of essays has been that he told too few anecdotes."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 30 '16 950w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. David Blaize. *$1.35 (1½c) Doran 16-11581

Mr. Benson is the son of an archbishop and went as a boy to Marlborough, the public school founded for the sons of clergymen. David Blaize is the son of an archdeacon, the friend of a bishop's nephew, and this is a story of their friendship and life at a public school. Possibly the tale may be reminiscent of the author's own youth. It tells of cleanliness, physical and moral, of the self-restraint learned from one another by boys who were to be among the future leaders in England, of many hours of swimming and cricket, of how the far-seeing "Head" did away with cribbing and some boys learned that "people like Sophocles matter more than any house-match" and that the Oedipus Coloneus is "better even than Swinburne's Atalanta." The story with its boyish slang and its boyish appraisements is of today, save that there is in it no discussion of politics.

+ -- A L A Bkl 13:33 O '16

"This school story comes near a place of distinction among its kind. The last three chapters are worse than superfluous; they reveal the 'sloppiness' of which we had felt something more than a suspicion before. . . . Apart from the blemishes—relatively small—that we have mentioned, the book contains much excellent stuff, and shows an intimate acquaintance with schoolboy psychology."

+ — Ath p194 Ap '16 110w

"A study of developing character."

+ Bookm 44:63 S '16 600w

"Mr. Benson has never written anything so filled with dignified pathos and high human courage as the last chapter of 'David Blaize.' . . . Whoever fails to read 'David Blaize' will miss the reading of a book that seems destined to become a classic of boyhood." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 26 '16 1450w

Ind 87:315 Ag 28 '16 100w

"It is curious to note the differences in the English and American school habits, sports, and systems."

Lit D 53:1041 O 21 '16 150w

"A story of uncommon sincerity and charm."

+ Nation 103:222 S 7 '16 230w

"Its verisimilitude and the skill and artistry with which it is done ought to win for it a place beside that classic of English adolescence, the 'Tom Brown' books of Thomas Hughes. But there is this difference between them, that Mr. Benson's story is more psychologically inquiring and interpretative than the old-time tales, while they are more superficially pictorial and more concerned with the telling of their story."

+ N Y Times 21:281 Jl 16 '16 600w

+ R of Rs 54:346 S '16 80w

+ Springfield Republican p15 S 17 '16 420w

"Fresh from reading 'David Blaize' we are inclined to say that David's days at Helmsworth are the finest piece of imaginative creation that Mr. Benson has achieved. How well he understands becomes yet clearer when David goes to Marchester, a public school. Many old public school men have tried their hand at preserving the magic of school friendships. In David and Maddox, with David and 'Bags' for complement, Mr. Benson has done it better than it has ever been done before."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p154 Mr 30 '16 350w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 60w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Michael² (Eng title, Mike). *$1.35 (1c) Doran 16-19218

A story of English life before and during the war. Michael Comber is the son of Lord Ashbridge and heir to the title. Family tradition requires that he enter the army, but finding the life distasteful, he resigns his commission after three years and goes to London to devote himself to music, his one great passion. Michael, who is awkward and ungainly and quite lacking in social graces, has never made friends, but in the musical circles to which he now gains admittance, he becomes a new person. He grows particularly intimate with Hermann and Sylvia Faibe, two young German musicians. The friendship grows and his feeling for Sylvia deepens, but just as he learns that his love is returned, the war comes, shattering all international ties. Hermann and Michael separate to meet again face to face in the trenches, but Sylvia's love for Michael proves strong enough to survive even the tragedy that results from this meeting.

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC—Continued

"Mr. Benson is as adept as always in his analysis of the spirit and soul of man. It is only in his plot that he is in fault." E. F. E.
+ — Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '17 1450w

"Does not rank with Mr. Benson's best work. There is a certain heaviness to it, a lack of spirit and of spontaneity, while the minor characters are most of them disappointing."
— + N Y Times 22:21 Ja 21 '17 970w

Spec 117:347 S 23 '16 1450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p416 Ag 31 '16 420w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Oakleyites.
*$1.35 (1½c) Doran 15-21416

This story of an English country town is pitched in a minor key and lacks the popular happy ending. Its central character is Dorothy Jackson, a woman in her mid-thirties whose wealth of love and maternal affection has been given out bit by bit to those about her rather than expended in one great passion. The coming of a popular author, who wins for himself the liking and approval she has not accorded his books, brings a new interest into her life. It seems for a time that the lot of other happy women is to be hers too, but a younger sister, spoiled and utterly selfish, steps in to shatter the romance and the seeds of an illness sown long before in the days that Dorothy devoted to an invalid mother, come to life and complete the tragedy.

A L A Bkl 12:338 Ap '16

+ Ath 1915,2:294 O 23 190w

Reviewed by Wilson Follett

— + Atlan 118:499 O '16 80w

"His story is a series of caricatures. It is not an exposition or description of life in an English country town, and neither is it a faithful portrayal of the people who live there. The town itself is well visualized, but if we take Mr. Benson at his word it is inhabited not by normal human beings, but by a group of men and women who are dominated by the passions of jealousy and selfishness to an extraordinary degree, and who all move through the pages of Mr. Benson's novel as if they were figures in a farce. . . . 'The Oakleyites,' with all its faults is a novel of many excellencies. In fact it is a novel so good that we deplore it because it is not better. It is by a novelist so ingenious and so versatile that we regret he is not able to bring his skill to a revelation of genuine humanity." E. F. E.

— + Boston Transcript p23 F 9 '16 1500w

"The drama is independent of its setting. We welcome in this book an advance over the author's customary attitude in a deeper note of reverential appreciation of things religious."

+ Cath World 103:401 Je '16 220w

+ — Nation 102:386 Ap 6 '16 500w

"Notwithstanding its final tragedy, from which it must be said the heroine's abundant and cheerful serenity takes away much of its painful character, the story is pleasing and cheerful and is told with much humor. Sometimes in the dialogue there are touches of that sparkling vivacity that made 'Dodo' a thing of joy. But they are merely touches, and one finds them only occasionally. For the most part the conversations are prone to run into rivers of words. Mr. Benson enjoys himself immensely, and the reader shares his pleasure, with the people of the town."

+ N Y Times 21:42 F '16 550w

"On the character of Miss Dorothy Jackson Mr. Benson has lingered with loving and painstaking care. And he has limned for us a really beautiful and vital creation. She is alive and true. . . . Perhaps we ought not to complain if Mr. Benson's story as a whole seems a little artificial, a little faded."

+ — Sat R 121:332 Ap 1 '16 450w

"We have lately been afraid lest Mr. Benson was descending to the happy, lazy, pot-boiling way of successful and prolific writers. Here is evidence that he is not: his style is still as fresh and energetic as in his earliest novels."

+ Spec 115:481 O 9 '15 230w

+ Springfield Republican p15 J1 23 '16 430w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:271 Je '16 50w

BENSON, LOUIS FITZGERALD. English hymns: its development and use in worship. *$3.50
Doran 245 15-11888

"Dr. Benson would have us remember, first of all, that the hymn is more than literature; it is liturgic verse, and as such belongs with the things of the spirit, in the special sphere of worship. His book is replete with just such fundamental deductions, with a restating of values, with the restoration of a proper perspective for hymnological study in the world of literature, church history, and liturgics. . . . It suggestively traces the history of the Christian church through three turbulent centuries and exhibits hymns as factors in these controversial times."
—Am J Theol

"Unquestionably the most valuable contribution to the history of hymns and the evolution of congregational song since the publication of Julian's 'Dictionary of hymnology.' . . . Particularly admirable is the inspirational message which glows from every page, but which in no way detracts from the scholarly viewpoint. Indeed, the book is unique in this blending of judicial temper with quiet hortatory values."
H. A. S.

+ Am J Theol 20:475 J1 '16 250w

"Everywhere we find a full use of the latest authorities, the references are numerous and clear, and there is an index of thirty-four pages."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p292 Je 22 '16 1250w

BENSON, STELLA. I pose. *$1.25 (1½c) Macmillan 16-1273

That we are all guilty of posing, that the boundary line between posing and sincerity is not always discernible and that our poses take various forms—we pose as posing and again we assume the pose of not posing—are some of the considerations brought to mind by this novel. It is the story of the Gardener, posing for the time as the merry vagabond, who takes a journey into the world in company with the Suffragette. Their wanderings take them out to the semi-tropical islands of the Antilles and throw them into company with other posers. About the Gardener there is little doubt; in his growing affection for the Suffragette sincerity creeps in, but in general the Gardener's existence is all one joyful pose. It is the Suffragette who puzzles, even to the moment of her last desperate act of militancy. How much of her pose was prompted by a relentless sincerity?

+ — A L A Bkl 12:382 My '16

"The larger part of the book is as wearisome an exercise in preciosity as any we have seen. Fortunately for the reader, the author is at last tired into sincerity, and we have, towards the end of the book, a few pages of description of slum-land and its inhabitants which are obviously drawn from personal observation."

— Ath 1915,2:461 D 18 190w

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ — Bookm 43:325 My '16 350w

Boston Transcript p24 Mr 1 '16 280w

"To be an author at the age of twenty-two, even when one is the niece of a novelist, is an achievement of which Stella Benson may be proud. . . . There is no denying to her effectiveness in original treatment, and clever characterizations, stimulating by their novelty, but the slender thread of plot with which the epigrammatic bits of satire are held together is disappointing and the 'pose' becomes tiresome."

+ — Lit D 52:721 Mr 18 '16 220w

"An exuberant and at times witty, but too often merely sprightly extravaganzas of unreal life. . . . The thrill of the book is furnished at the moment of their subsequent tryst, when, with wedlock a few moments away, the Suffragette blows up herself and other things with a bomb. The Gardener is, we gather, left looking rather foolish."

+ — Nation 102:225 F 24 '16 260w

"If the author has a fault, and, of course, she has, it is a tendency to be too smart, too epigrammatic. She poses, too, and particularly in the first portions of her story. But she does it all thoroughly well; she is really witty, her turn for metaphor is fresh, her dialogue sparkles. What is still better than the sparkle is the fact that it interprets those who speak it. . . . You finish with the conviction that this particular story could only have been written by the particular person who wrote it. It is original and striking, as true originality must needs be. You feel that it would be very easy to get the habit of reading books by Stella Benson, and that the habit would be hard to break. Presumably this is her first. You will earnestly hope that it will not be her last."

+ N Y Times 21:42 F 6 '16 830w

"A literary moving picture amazingly clever and entertaining."

+ R of Rs 53:370 Mr '16 110w

"Miss Benson's talent is beyond question. But while she inspires admiration for her wit, her attitude and method render it hard to welcome her without reserves. . . . It may be urged that to criticize 'I pose' seriously is to break a butterfly on the wheel, if not indeed to misinterpret its aim entirely. And the objection would hold good if the tone of the opening pages were maintained throughout. 'I pose' begins as an extravagantly fantastic comedy, but it is not long before we discover a vein of deadly earnest behind a mask of somewhat feverish levity."

+ — Spec 115:795 D 4 '15 900w

"Not only a clever book in the best sense of the word, but one possessing characteristics making it well-nigh unique among contemporary fiction."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 23 '16 680w

BENTON, JOSIAH HENRY. Voting in the field: a forgotten chapter of the civil war. il $3.50 priv ptd Clarke 324 16-2039

"The 'forgotten chapter' Mr. Benton has contributed to the history of the American civil war contains an account of what was done, North and South, by way of meeting the demand that the soldiers in the field be permitted to participate in the state and national elections." (N Y Times) "He has shown not only the conditions which existed in the different states at the beginning of the civil war, but what the people did, how they did it, who supported or opposed legislation to right the wrong, the grounds of support and opposition, the result of the elections, presidential and state, how and where the results were affected by the vote of the soldiers in the field, and the party alignments on this important question." (Boston Transcript)

"It is one of the few monographs that treats the country as a whole, discussing identical questions arising in the northern and southern states. The material is definitive as far as it goes, and the gaps are recognized, and are such as can be filled in only by accidental discoveries. Especially commendable is the extensive use of judicial decisions. On controverted points he is generally convincing, in fact he carried the reviewer at every point. The background is not always sure, but detracts little from the essential merit of the contribution." C. R. Fish

+ Am Hist R 21:860 Jl '16 430w

"Mr. Benton's book forms a large octavo, handsomely printed and bound with a map and thirteen portraits. While no one may find fault with the size of a privately printed edition, the number in this case, one hundred, seems entirely inadequate to the demand for such an important contribution to civil war history, which ought to have a large circulation among the libraries and should be in the hands of every student of this period of our national history." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 15 '16 1250w

"Mr. Benton takes up each state by itself and shows precisely how it proceeded to bring about soldier voting and how its plan of soldier voting worked. There are some very interesting facts brought out in these detailed stories, notably in those relating to Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, and Maryland."

+ N Y Times 21:62 F 20 '16 250w

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. These Lynnekers. *$1.50 (1c) Doran 16-8462

The Lynnekers are typical of many English parsonage families who uphold the traditions of their country. When the Lynneker blood was running a little thin there was born into the family a throwback to the vitality which had earlier given virility to this line. Young Richard is introduced to the reader at the call of an older brother who takes him from his absorbing task of rabbit-hutch making to solve a problem in quadratics. Richard finds the answer in the key wrong, and dres in the face of the sacred pronouncements of Todhunter, to proclaim the mistake. Whereupon the upholder of the system of authority chastizes him for his cocksureness, and both resort to physical force. Richard triumphs. The incident is typical of the hero's struggle among unimaginative kin, in an atmosphere of inertia, to throw down custom. His failures and successes as a complete image breaker give permanence to the tale.

A L A Bkl 13:33 O '16

+ Ath p126 Mr '16 480w

+ Bookm 44:62 S '16 700w

"Of it Clement K. Shorter writes in a recent issue of the Sphere: 'It is in his genius for detail that makes up ordinary lives that Mr. Beresford is with Arnold Bennett and one or two other of the clever moderns. To read "These Lynnekers" is like sitting down to a pleasant autobiography.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 17 '16 350w

"Both as a social study and as a novel, 'These Lynnekers' offers still further evidence of Mr. Beresford's technical skill, of his story-telling qualities, and of his knowledge of life." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 12 '16 1450w

+ Cleveland p126 N '16 60w

"Richard Lynneker is rather the best of the modern figures in which recent English novelists have tried to present the emergence of the twentieth century from the smoothed-over chaos of Victorianism." E. E. Hale

+ Dial 61:141 S 7 '16 1250w

+ Ind 88:464 D 11 '16 80w

+ Nation 103:179 Ag 24 '16 630w

"Able and not exciting and miles ahead of the ordinary novel." P. L.

+ New Repub 7:280 Jl 15 '16 1200w

"There is, of course, a love story, and it is the one unsatisfactory part of the book, for Sybil Groome is the only one among all its many people who does not seem real. . . . The effect of ease and artistry is more pronounced in this most recent of Mr. Beresford's books than in any of the others. He has always had something to say and never from the very first has he said it badly; only he is learning to say it better and better."

+ N Y Times 21:273 Jl 9 '16 1700w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 90:844 S 16 '16 810w

"A fine novel of excellent artistry by J. D. Beresford, who will be remembered for two works in particular—"The house in Demetrius road" and the trilogy 'Jacob Stahl.'"

+ R of Rs 54:235 Ag '16 130w

"In writing of the struggle between traditionalist and reformer there is little chance of preserving the attitude of impartial observer, and the author does not conceal his delight in the progress of the changeling Lynneker."

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS—Continued

+ Sat R 121:211 F '26 '16 870w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ag 6 '16 750w

BERG, ERNST JULIUS, and UPSON, WALTER LYMAN. Electrical engineering, first course. il *$4 McGraw 621.3 16-7505

"The authors' effort here has been to make this text a concise record of ideas that should sink in during lectures rather than a full and clear exposition, which treatment they reserve for oral presentation in the classroom. The book contains a large number of problems, many worked out fully or in part. . . . There is no particular novelty in the ground covered—direct-current generators and motors coming first (with a few necessary fundamental topics), then the ballistic galvanometer, alternating-current waves, symbolic method in calculations, properties of alternating-current circuits, the wattmeter, electrostatics and finally alternating-current machinery."—Engin N

Engin N 76:311 Ag 17 '16 130w

N Y Br Lib News 3:93 Je '16 10w

"The work is based upon lectures delivered in Union college and presupposes a knowledge of the calculus and of elementary physics."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p9 My '16 100w

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p11 N '16 80w

Pittsburgh 21:290 Je '16 10w

BERGSON, HENRI LOUIS. Meaning of the war, life and matter in conflict; with an introd. by H. Wildon Carr. *40c Macmillan 940.91 (Eng ed War15-162)

"'Shall the splendid material progress which has marked the scientific achievement of the last century be the forging of a sword to destroy the freedom which life has won with it from matter?' The author attempts to answer this question in a brief but eloquent address, delivered in 1914 before the Académie des sciences morales et politiques."—A L A Bkl

A L A Bkl 12:277 Mr '16

+ N Y Times 20:317 S 5 '15 800w

+ Spec 115:248 Ag 21 '15 150w

BERLIOZ, HECTOR. Gluck and his operas; with an account of their relation to musical art; tr. from the French by Edwin Evans. il *$1.50 Scribner 782.1

"These essays and criticisms by Berlioz are drawn from his volume called 'A travers chants,' which in turn was largely made up of his contributions to contemporary periodicals, especially the Journal des Débats, of which he was the accredited critic. Berlioz's reputation as a critic is paired with Schumann's, among creative musicians; and a wider opportunity for English-speaking people to become acquainted with his critical writings is very welcome."—N Y Times

"These articles are in Berlioz's most brilliant and entertaining manner, full of anecdotes, of wise and brilliant criticism, of unusual information. Every modern musical critic should study them as object-lessons in the art."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 15 '16 180w

"Filled with rare sympathy and understanding, warm appreciation, and high enthusiasm. It is creative and constructive criticism of the first order; and as such is worth the careful study of all music-loving people. It may be said that Berlioz is not always accurate as to historical matters, and that his judgment is not invariably to be accepted as final in them."

+ — N Y Times 20:397 O 17 '15 170w

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX, SAINT. Book of St. Bernard on the love of God; ed. with translation and notes by Edmund G. Gardner. il *$1.25 Dutton 231

"Students and admirers of the learned Saint Bernard of Clairvaux, who was an authority on theology and the early church, will be interested in this new and complete translation of his 'Book on the love of God.' . . . The book was written during the early days of Bernard, about 1131, before the many unhappy controversies and heresies arose which caused him so much anxiety. The Latin text is given and Mr. Gardner's introduction tells of the doctrine of love in mediæval mysticism. Critical and explanatory notes add much to the value of the work."—Boston Transcript

"It is strange to think that this treatise of St. Bernard's has not, as a whole, been translated into English before. . . . This edition of one of his most characteristic works should certainly command a welcome. Dr. Gardner's introduction is excellent, and so are the notes. . . . We regret that it is not possible to praise the translation. St. Bernard's Latin is not easy to render."

+ — Ath p324 Jl '16 650w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 19 '16 110w

St Louis 14:384 N '16 10w

BERRIDGE, W. S. Wonders of animal life. il *$2 (4c) Stokes 590.4

A series of unrelated chapters on animal life, dealing, to a large extent with curious and unusual forms. Contents: The courtship of birds; Fish that walk, fly, and live out of water; Animal giants; Animal dwarfs; Animal aviators; Feathered architects; Animal worship and superstitions; Nature's "Peter Pan"; Birds that cannot fly; How animals express their emotions; Some curious snakes; Some curious lizards; A Kentish butterfly farm; Our poor relations; Animals verging on extinction; The grotesque in nature. There are a number of good illustrations from photographs.

+ Dial 61:548 D 14 '16 40w

+ Lit D 53:1612 D 16 '16 50w

+ R of Rs 55:221 F '17 30w

"A popular treatise on zoology to be a success must be well illustrated, with, at the same time, a noticeable lack of purely technical terms. W. S. Berridge has combined the above factors in his book. The chapters on the reptiles and primates are exceptionally interesting."

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 19 '16 80w

BERRY, ELMER. Baseball notes for coaches and players. il $1.50 Am. physical education assn. 797 16-8242

A series of outlines on the points of baseball playing, designed for coaches and students of the game. The author is baseball coach for the International Y. M. C. A. college at Springfield, Mass., and he has made use of the notes here presented in his lectures. He felt that this concise form of presentation had advantages over full discussion. Blank pages are left for additional notes and suggestions. The subject matter is arranged under the following headings: Batting; Bunting; Base running and stealing; Position play; Offensive team play; Defensive team play; Battery strategy; Training a college team; Organized baseball. The book has illustrations, diagrams, reading references, and an index.

BERTAUT, JULES. Napoleon in his own words; tr. from the French by H. E. Law and C. L. Rhodes. il *$1 McClurg 848 16-15808

The translators say: "This collection of Napoleon's sayings, which M. Jules Bertaut has presented under the title of 'Virilities,' is one of the latest, as in some respects it is one of the most important, of late contributions to the subject [Napoleonic literature]. It is not that he has discovered new facts about Napoleon. . . . What M. Bertaut has done, is to enable us to see, as it were, through Napoleon's own eyes. . . . He has given us . . . what Napoleon said about the things he did, the reasons he gave for doing them (which are often only the reasons he wanted believed), and the purposes he had in mind." The sayings of Napoleon are grouped under: On success; Psychology and morals; Love and marriage; Things political; Concerning the fine arts; Administration; Concerning religion; War; Sociology. The book was published in France shortly before the war.

"The recorded correspondence of Napoleon, which was begun in the year 1858, fills thirty-two volumes, and even this great mass contains only a part of the Napoleonic ideas and aphorisms. . . . Although here is no new material, the work is of distinct and real value in that it makes the material available."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 2 '16 270w

+ Ind 88:34 O 2 '16 60w

"The collection does not pretend to be complete nor to add anything new, but it is sufficient to mirror the man of action in a striking way. The aphorisms, of course, lack consistency and continuity, because Napoleon had no profound moral convictions. . . . The translations are good, but many a reader would like to have the date, chapter, and verse cited; for half the significance of a saying often lies on the occasion on which it was uttered."

+ Nation 103:206 Ag 31 '16 200w

BETTS, FREDERICK WILLIAM. Billy Sunday, the man and method. 25c (2c) Universalist 16-10862

It is perhaps safe to say that this is the most sincere and searching study that has appeared of that "most astonishing performance," the Billy Sunday movement. Dr. Betts is pastor of a Universalist church in Syracuse, N. Y., and the chapters of this book were written for publication in the Universalist Leader during and immediately following the Sunday campaign in that city. He considers the movement as a social phenomenon, taking into account not only the man himself and his amazing methods, but also the elements of crowd psychology involved, the attitude of the churches and the church conditions, which in the last analysis, are responsible for the whole phenomenon. "He is where he is, and his movement is what it is, because of conditions which run wide and deep into the vital fabric of organized Christianity as it exists to-day in America."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ag 19 '16 430w

"He probes for the weakness in the churches that makes such methods seem needful and thereby gives food for reflection to church leaders."

+ Ind 88:34 O 2 '16 50w

BETTS, GEORGE HERBERT. Fathers and mothers. il *75c (4c) Bobbs 173 15-17841

Prof. Betts was for seven years superintendent of schools in Iowa and since 1902 has been professor of psychology in Cornell college, Iowa. This book on the management of children treats of the necessity for the study of child nature and of the character and needs of each child by its parents. Heredity is considered under The child and its ancestors and Immediate heredity. Other chapters treat of The roots of disposition: From innocence to morality; Training in religion; Passing over from childhood, etc. The style is simple and non-technical.

+ A L A Bkl 12:312 Ap '16

"Admirable, fresh presentation of the responsibilities of parenthood and of the needs of the child as he develops. One of the best books on the ethical side."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:36 Ja '16 27w

BEVERIDGE, ALBERT JEREMIAH. Life of John Marshall. 2v il *$8 Houghton 16-22175

"Senator Beveridge, in his monumental biography of the great Chief Justice, the first two volumes of which, complete in themselves, have just been issued, sufficiently transcends his theme to retell, in the light of fresh material, the whole story of the revolutionary epoch. Marshall's life is itself carried through his early years, his services in the revolution, his legislative career and his embassy in France, to the moment of his induction to the Supreme court bench in 1800. Senator Beveridge has had access to masses of unprinted documents and has illuminated his material not only by his knowledge of the manners and customs of the fathers of the republic, but by his own intimate experience of public affairs."—Lit D

"Other volumes are to follow; the set will be too bulky and expensive for small libraries. Bibliography (14p.)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:218 F '17

"The chief excellence of the work, perhaps, lies in the careful record of the growth of Marshall's mind."

+ Cath World 104:534 Ja '17 770w

+ Lit D 53:1543 D 9 '16 130w

"The peculiar merit of Senator Beveridge's study is that it presents the vital epoch of our history in which John Marshall is a shining figure, so that we always see it in perspective through the lanes of the present."

+ Lit D 53:1716 D 30 '16 900w

+ Nation 104:132 F 1 '17 1100w

+ N Y Times 22:14 Ja 14 '17 730w

"It is plain to see that the 'Life of John Marshall' is interpreted for us by a man who has himself known first the mainsprings of political life and action in one of our typical states, and has then known the conflicting motives that sway the party leaders—the lawmakers and the executives—in government circles at Washington." A. S.

+ R of Rs 54:619 D '16 1600w

"A less temperamental writer might have been more judicious—and also more dull. Mr. Beveridge at least makes Marshall's career vivid and his times interesting to the average reader of to-day."

+ Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 1100w

BEYENS, EUGÈNE, 2d baron. Germany before the war; tr. by Paul V. Cohn. *$1.50 Nelson 943.08 War16-116

"Baron Beyens has studied the causes and beginning of the war from his own personal observation of two years at the German court immediately before the war broke out. He places the responsibility for the world catastrophe, not upon economic causes but directly upon the Kaiser himself and his war party advisers. He has tried, he says, to remain impartial and to make allowances for external events influencing German action and for the policy imposed upon the nation for the last fifteen years."—N Y Times

+ Library Association Record 18:179 Ap 15 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:157 O '16 40w

"Though his judgment can naturally not be called impartial, his book is remarkable for its dignity and its effort to be fair. His book is generally informative and personally admirable. In his written style, which is clear and thoroughly readable, there is little distinction, but in his just and dignified attitude there is much."

+ N Y Times 21:493 N 19 '16 150w

BEYER, DAVID STEWART. Industrial accident prevention. il *$10 Houghton 614.8 16-5648

"The book, in its fifty-four chapters, covers a large variety of topics, from compensational legislation to fire prevention, lighting, ventilation, building construction, machine construction, accident prevention in special industries, fire hazards, occupational diseases and first-aid equipment. The text is illuminated by numerous excellently drawn and printed illustrations of safeguards, machinery, etc., taken from official sources and from the practice of large industrial plants. A considerable part of the book is made up of quotations from official documents, reports and instructions of various official accident-prevention bodies."—Survey

"The author is manager of the Accident prevention department of the Massachusetts employees insurance association."

Cleveland p112 Ag '16 50w

BEYER, DAVID STEWART—Continued
N Y Br Lib News 3:59 Ap '16

"Well illustrated treatise, the most comprehensive yet published in English. (1916.)"
+ Pittsburgh 21:415 O '16 20w

St Louis 14:227 Je '16

"The best chapters are those on machine construction and guards for machine hazards, punch presses, machine shop and blacksmith shop equipment, abrasive wheels,—and the whole section on Accident prevention in special industries, with the exception of the last chapter of thirteen lines on mining." G. M. Price
+ Survey 36:395 Jl 3 '16 470w

BIDDLE, RICHARD. Memoir of Sebastian Cabot; with a review of the history of maritime discovery. ll $2.50 Chas. Biddle, 505 Chestnut st., Phila. 16-3492

"A reprint of the 'Memoir of Sebastian Cabot,' published in 1831. . . . The modern critical study of the voyages of the Cabots dates from Biddle's memoir, and the work therefore has a place of permanent importance on that account."—Boston Transcript

"It is not—let it be admitted frankly—a work to be read through at one sitting, unless the would-be reader seeks oblivion from sorrow in a task that demands his every energy. Taken in small doses, 'to taste,' it will be found agreeably spiced in many parts." B. S. B.
+ Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '16 1050w

+ Nation 103:330 O 5 '16 140w

"Has an unflinching interest, although much of it is detailed criticism of the errors of previous writers on the subject of Cabot and his contemporaries."
+ Spec 116:609 My 13 '16 40w

BIDWELL, PERCY WELLS. Rural economy in New England at the beginning of the nineteenth century. (Transactions, v. 20) pa $2 Conn. academy of arts and sciences, New Haven, Conn. 330.974 16-14687

"The author in his analysis of New England's rural economy recognizes three phases: (1) the self-sufficing stage that reached its best exemplification about the beginning of the nineteenth century; (2) the period of transition to commercial agriculture, stimulated by the growth of manufactures, which continued down to its interruption by the civil war; and (3) the period of decline extending from the civil war to the end of the century. . . . This monograph deals with the first phase, limiting the field of study to the three states of southern New England. The author promises monographs to follow which will cover the second and third periods." (Am Econ R) "Mr. Bidwell shows clearly that the geographical location of the inland towns of New England in respect to the accessibility to markets for their produce had a very important bearing on the home life and even on the community life in those towns." (J Pol Econ)

"We welcome this contribution to the economic and agricultural history of rural New England. . . . Aside from Weedon and McMaster, Flint's 'Eighty years of progress,' Colman's 'Agricultural survey of Massachusetts,' Carver's summary in Bailey's 'Cyclopedia of agriculture,' a few monographs on colonial land tenure and related topics, and some fugitive government reports on specific agricultural industries, we have little or no careful writing on New England's agricultural development. . . . The source material is varied and extensive; the monograph is well and carefully written; a well-chosen and helpful bibliography is appended. The monograph deserves the attention of agricultural teachers and economists." A. E. Cance
+ Am Econ R 6:885 D '16 630w

"This essay should prove equally interesting and valuable to the student of sociology and to the economic historian. The book is peculiarly interesting in that it sets forth in a clear way the manner in which the economic changes resulted in corresponding social transitions."
+ J Pol Econ 24:328 O '16 240w

BIGELOW JOHN. World peace; how war cannot be abolished, how it may be abolished. *$1.50 (4c) Kennerley 172.4 16-6667

The author first attacks the illusions of the pacifists and shows why arbitration and other proposed plans for bringing about world peace are bound to fail. He then develops his own plan, that of a world state. "Nothing short of world sovereignty, which means the abandonment of national sovereignty, will suffice for a world nation, which alone can give assurance of world peace," he says. The texts of certain important documents are given in appendices. There is a bibliography and an index.

Lit D 52:1286 My 6 '16 300w

"An eminently hard-headed book. Major Bigelow crushes ruthlessly the various straws at which pacifism has eagerly clutched. . . . On many points he will fail to convince the devotees of one or another remedy, but his argument is so cogently stated and so well reinforced by concrete examples from history that it must always be seriously considered."

+ Nation 102:713 Je 29 '16 400w

"In many ways he is far clearer-sighted and far more honest than the majority of those who devise methods of abolishing strife between nations, and yet, in the end, he puts forward as his solution of the problem the most radical and the most unlikely of all remedies."

+ N Y Times 21:148 Ap 16 '16 830w

"When an American army officer gives as many years to the study of the problem of world peace as Major Bigelow has given, his conclusions are deserving of serious attention."

+ R of Rs 53:628 My '16 90w

BIGELOW, MAURICE ALPHEUS. Sex-education; a series of lectures concerning knowledge of sex in its relation to human life. *$1.25 Macmillan 612.6 16-14606

"Dr. Bigelow, who is a professor in the Teachers' college of Columbia university, is a disciple of that pioneer in social hygiene, Dr. Prince A. Morrow, and has inherited from him a strong belief in the essential goodness of humanity. . . . Dr. Bigelow believes that two great factors enter into the right kind of sex instruction—a balanced and thoroughly qualified teacher, and a judicious amount and selection of teaching. He feels that the recent wave of interest in sexual subjects has done harm by opening the gates wide for too much instruction and encouraging instruction from half-trained individuals."—Springfield Republican

"The most important contribution yet made to the subject of sex instruction. . . . Well worked out bibliography adapted to the parent, the educator, the married, the boy or girl, given at end of the book."

+ A L A Bkl 13:152 Ja '17

"The most satisfactory text that has appeared in this field. It is very comprehensive, goes beyond most such books in having a clear biological foundation, and is sufficiently conservative, and at times vague, to avoid offense."

+ Ind 87:349 S 4 '16 40w

+ New Repub 8:197 S 23 '16 520w

N Y Br Lib News 3:125 Ag '16

"The book is based on the surest and most tried pedagogic principles, and is largely the result of some years of experiment in the field of sex education and social hygiene. It is cautious and sane at all times. An excellent bibliography accompanies each chapter."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 20 '16 230w

"He has been associated with Morrow, Balliet, Elliot and Keyes in the development of sex education, and has been in a position to obtain the views of trained women in close contact with the problem. Clearly, his equipment is unusual. . . . As might be expected, his views in regard to the characteristics essential to a teacher of sex knowledge are extremely valuable." Hugh Cabot, M. D.

+ Survey 37:437 Ja 13 '17 1050w

"The fullest and most satisfactory work yet published. . . . The spirit of the book is broad, sane and wholesome; the language is conservative but seldom vague. Though written primarily for teachers and parents, young men and women could profit from it; it should not be given to children or adolescents."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:407 N '16 90w

BIGGERS, EARL DERR. Agony column. il *$1.25 (5c) Bobbs 16-22299

Geoffrey West, American, sat eating his breakfast in a London restaurant and reading the Agony column (personal notices) of the Daily Mail when a young woman, beautiful and evidently of his own country, took a seat near him, opened out her morning paper and began to read these amazing personal appeals aloud to her father. A cleverly worded notice in the next morning's paper brought a partially satisfactory reply; the young woman would allow Geoffrey to write her one letter a day for seven days to prove that he is an interesting person and worth knowing. With the second of the seven letters the mystery in which Geoffrey becomes involved begins and it is carried out thru the remaining letters to an unexpected conclusion.

"The story is hardly more than a 'noveltee,' but it is a notably good one." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:647 F '17 580w

"Will go straight thru the family." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 90:2069 D 9 '16 450w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Coast of adventure (Eng title, Risky game). il *$1.30 (1½c) Stokes 15-19410

"The inevitable English adventurer takes a hand in engineering a change of government in a Latin-American republic. Associated with him is a youthful American, also in search of adventure. The two enter a contract to supply arms to a simon-pure Central American patriot, who is at odds with the incumbent government of his country. It is a dangerous undertaking, particularly as American capitalists—unscrupulous in gaining their ends, of course—are interested in keeping a certain clique in control of the governing power. The softer element is introduced at an early point in the story and keeps pace with the more stirring phases. The twin romances end as all romances should."—Springfield Republican

"Rather unconvincing but readable."

+ — A L A Bkl 12:338 Ap '16

"The story begins and ends in the Spanish-Indian town of Rio Frio, the action changing meanwhile to Maine, Florida and Cuba. Of all these places Mr. Bindloss has written bits of charming description."

+ Boston Transcript p25 F 23 '16 330w

"Those who are familiar with Mr. Bindloss's previous novels will have a tolerably clear idea as to what they will find in this one. And they will not be surprised or disappointed. Here are the same workmanlike if rather mechanical methods, the same abundance of action and happy ending. So it may be assumed with perfect safety that those who liked the author's other books will enjoy this one."

+ N Y Times 21:50 F 13 '16 220w

"In his latest romance, Harold Bindloss goes to quite another scene than that of his familiar tales. It is the tropics. This story is rather better than the stories Mr. Bindloss has been writing of late. It will keep the reader's attention well keyed up throughout."

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 27 '16 190w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Johnstone of the border (Eng title, The borderer). il *$1.35 (1c) Stokes 16-17183

Canada, the scene of so many of this author's novels, furnishes only the starting point for this story. When he first has news of impending war, Andrew Johnstone, whose career as a soldier was early cut short by an accident, returns to his home in Scotland hoping that there will be work there even for a man who cannot fight. His friend Whitney, an American who has been his partner on many a Canadian trail and waterway, goes with him. Johnstone also has a personal reason in going home. His young cousin Harry, for whom he feels responsible, has fallen under unfortunate influences, and it is in keeping a close watch on the two men who are distrusted as companions for the younger man that Johnstone's opportunity to serve his country comes, for they prove to be her enemies as well.

A L A Bkl 13:122 D '16

Reviewed by P. G. Hubert, jr.

Bookm 44:279 N '16 90w

"A thoroughly healthy tale of adventure, told in a vivid and matter-of-fact way. . . . It is also a story of human problems."

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 20 '16 300w

"The story moves a little too slowly for a tale of this kind. It is half submerged in an overabundance of detail, and there are moments when the behavior of certain of the characters is rather irritating, but there is a lively climax, and the story winds up in a satisfactory manner."

+ — N Y Times 21:347 S 3 '16 280w

"It is the best story Mr. Bindloss has furnished in some time."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 330w

BINGHAM, ALFRED, ed. Handbook of the European war, v 2. (Handbook ser.) *$1.25 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 940.91 (14-30977)

Volume 1, edited by Stanley S. Sheip and published shortly after the beginning of the war, dealt mainly with the causes and events that led up to the conflict. This book deals with effects. Battles, incidents and events of the war have been practically ignored. The book is divided into three sections: Germany and her allies, Great Britain and her allies, The United States and the war. "These divisions," the preface states, "are at best arbitrary because many of the articles reproduced might have been included in either or all of the sections." To the section on the United States most space is given. It is made up of the following sub-divisions: Neutrality of the United States; Shipment of arms; War contraband; The war and commerce; Effect on literature; Peace movements. A bibliography has been omitted for the reasons that a complete one is impossible and a selected list would at best be "fragmentary and unsatisfactory for permanent use."

A L A Bkl 12:376 My '16

Ind 88:30 O 2 '16 40w

Long Beach Press p9 My 20 '16 120w

"It is rather a motley but convenient collection that can be used for easy reference to matter which can only be found in newspaper files or in books that are not likely to be in school libraries."

+ Nation 102:sup497 My 4 '16 170w

N Y Br Lib News 3:55 Ap '16

R of Rs 53:502 Ap '16 60w

St Louis 14:217 Je '16 10w

"A useful book for any library."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:185 Ap '16 50w

BINGHAM, EDRID A. Heart of Thunder mountain. il *$1.35 (1½c) Little 16-6816

A story of the Far West with the usual eastern heroine and western hero. It differs from the usual tale however in that it is the girl who is determined, the man reluctant. Marion Gaylord gives her heart at once to Philip Haig and has no compunctions about letting him know it. She is the guest of Claire Huntington, her cousin, and between Seth Huntington and Haig there exists a bitter feud. But Marion defies her cousin and nurses Haig through an illness. A second time she saves his life under dramatic circumstances and is finally rewarded with his love. The enmity between the two men is also overcome.

"Rather crude, but will meet the demand for western stories."

+ — A L A Bkl 12:427 Je '16

BINGHAM, EDFRID A.—Continued

"Besides the excellence of the development of the story, and its clever portrayal of character, there are many lovely descriptions of the Rocky mountains."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '16 300w

Reviewed by E. E. Hale

Dial 61:26 Je 22 '16 770w

"A spirited, cleverly told tale that will appeal to many readers."

+ N Y Times 21:125 Ap 2 '16 140w

"Mr. Bingham's unmistakable love for the majestic beauty of the country where his scene is laid has inspired his pen. His descriptions of nature are admirable. They have atmosphere. A capably written, engrossing story."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 13 '16 380w

"The action is always stirring and both the hero and heroine are brave 'virile' types, but wholly of fiction."

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 180w

BIRGE, WILLIAM SPOFORD. True food values and their low costs. *50c (1c) Sully & Kleinteich 613.2 16-18923

"My object," says the author, "is to give, in a clear and practical way, such information as may enable the ordinary individual to simplify the art of living and get his money's worth." Attention is given to the properties of various foods and their nutritive value. The relation of diet to health is considered and there are miscellaneous chapters on, False economy, Easy ways to prevent waste, Skill in the preparation of foods, How food frauds may be frustrated, etc. Altho it is not a cook book a number of the chapters give recipes, all of which the author says have been tested in his family.

+ A L A Bkl 13:153 Ja '17

"One chapter, 'Vagaries of diet,' is alone worth the cost of the book, for it answers a question often asked, the effect of diet on temperament, disposition and endurance."

+ Cleveland p151 D '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:580 D 31 '16 70w

St Louis 14:432 D '16

"Dr. Birge takes an old subject and instills new life into it, so that it appeals strongly to the lay reader."

+ Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 160w

BISHOP, FARNHAM. Our first war in Mexico. il $1.25 (3c) Scribner 973.6 16-16923

A popular account of the Mexican war and its causes based largely on Rives' "The relations between the United States and Mexico, 1821-1848." The author also quotes from Grant's "Memoirs," Polk's diary, and other sources. In dealing with the causes of the war he begins with the earliest history of Texas. He is particularly explicit on the part played by slavery. There are eight illustrations and two maps.

"The author's brief account of the preceding history of Mexico, and especially of the governmental developments following its war of independence, throws much light on the Mexico of to-day." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 44:206 O '16 350w

"The events which culminated in these causes and finally brought on the war are set forth in a way that never fails to hold the attention of the reader; and the revelations of the manner of carrying on the war may not especially please Americans, but they should be profitable reading for us. The book is written in an attractive style and it gives ample evidence of the careful scholarship of the author. Such a volume is timely."

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 9 '16 300w

Lit D 53:901 O 7 '16 160w

"This account of the war of 1846, while not exhaustive, has at least avoided the pitfalls of many of its predecessors, most of which either exaggerated the valor of the American troops or were one-sided in condemnation of both the motives and the conduct of the war."

+ R of Rs 55:107 Ja '17 90w

BISHOP, FARNHAM. Story of the submarine. il $1 (2c) Century 623.8 16-5977

"This book has been written for the nontechnical reader—for the man or boy who is interested in submarines and torpedoes, and would like to know something about the men who invented these things and how they came to do it." (Preface) Contents: In the beginning; David Bushnell's "Turtle"; Robert Fulton's "Nautilus"; Submarines in the civil war; The Whitehead torpedo; Freaks and failures; John P. Holland; The Lake submarines; A trip in a modern submarine; Accidents and safety devices; Mines; The submarine in action; The submarine blockade; The submarine and neutrals. There are numerous illustrations and diagrams and an index.

A L A Bkl 12:362 My '16

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '16 350w

+ Ind 86:346 My 29 '16 170w

+ Lit D 52:1287 My 6 '16 500w

"An interesting subject and an excellent style combine to make 'The story of the submarine' an unusually readable little book."

+ Nation 103:424 N 2 '16 180w

+ R of Rs 53:502 Ap '16 130w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 100w

Wis Lib Bull 12:147 Mr '16 40w

BISHOP, JOSEPH BUCKLIN. Presidential nominations and elections. il $1.50 Scribner 329 16-10134

"A vivid and readable account of American political conventions, national campaigns, inaugurations and campaign caricature. . . . The author devotes his chapters mainly to the spectacular and human elements in political campaigns and conventions and the personal triumphs and disappointments of prominent Americans, such as John Adams, Clay, Webster, Lincoln, Blaine and others, yet this does not detract from its historical importance. . . . He has drawn liberally from Stanwood's 'History of the presidency,' Col. A. K. McClure's 'Our presidents and how we make them,' the volumes of the American statesmen series, and the biographies of prominent political figures during the past 100 years." (Springfield Republican) A portion of the material appeared in the author's 'Our political drama,' published in 1904.

"It is not misleading, in the sense of misstating facts, but it does tend to mislead by emphasizing what is unimportant and frivolous in political history, and by repeating forgotten scandals. . . . The most of the cartoons which he presents are harmless, simply because to men of the present generation they are meaningless. . . . But it is a serious offense to reproduce such caricatures as those of Lincoln and Blaine, to mention no others, ridiculing or heaping moral condemnation upon men whom a large number of the present generation hold in respect. Something similar must be said of the text. The general effect is to bring out all the littleness of our public men, and to omit whatever explains the prominence they achieved in their line."

+ Am Hist R 22:204 O '16 500w

"A gossip interesting account containing little or nothing original. . . . Enlarged from a book entitled 'Our political drama,' published in 1904 and now out of print, which consisted mainly of articles from the Century."

A L A Bkl 13:90 N '16

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:756 N '16 90w

"Should not be termed a history. It has neither the coherency nor the chronological orderliness to so dignify it. But the gravest fault comes when we compare Mr. Bishop the chronicler of the past, with Mr. Bishop the partisan of the present. He does not stand far enough away from the convention of 1912 to write about it fairly, nor is there any real attempt to do so. . . . Leaving out this unfairly partisan chapter, Mr. Bishop's book is a valuable contribution to political literature. The description of the arrogance of Roscoe Conkling in 1880 is the best we have ever seen."

+ Boston Transcript p11 My 27 '16 420w

"Many facts with reference to the early conventions are of great interest, and furnish an introduction for what is the most readable portion of the volume—that which deals with the defeated aspirations of Webster, Clay, and Blaine."

- + Dial 61:317 O 19 '16 310w
- + Ind 86:404 Je 5 '16 40w
- + Lit D 53:618 S 9 '16 400w
- Nation 103:178 Ag 24 '16 1750w
- + — N Y Times 21:288 JI 16 '16 70w
- Pittsburgh 21:300 Je '16
- R of Rs 53:755 Je '16 40w

"The work contains 43 illustrations, including a valuable collection of campaign cartoons that date back to the days of Jackson. There is also an interesting chapter on the 'Genesis of American political caricature,' and another on 'Weekly and daily journal cartoons.'"

- + Springfield Republican p13 JI 2 '16 430w

BISLAND, ELIZABETH (MRS. CHARLES W. WETMORE). Case of John Smith; his heaven and his hell. *$1.25 (2c) Putnam 16-11040

An account of the revelations vouchsafed John Smith, commuter, that transformed his dun colored world into the radiant kingdom which every son of man may claim as his birthright. The Spirit of understanding shows this disciple how many in all lands and in all ages have renounced their love of human beings, fasted from all but such food as mere life demanded, closed their ears to earthly melodies, immured themselves from sunshine and beauty, maimed and tortured their bodies—in short assumed the pains of hell here in order to attain the pleasures of heaven elsewhere. Then the same Spirit shows the marvelous potentialities of man, shows him the lavish splendors of his inheritance and teaches him to use the wealth of his kingdom for his health, his happiness, his contentment. A philosophy of peace, power and plenty abounds, but the best part of it is that it is put in shape for everybody to take and to use.

"The chief defect to be urged against it is its inordinate length. Materially shortened the book will be found worth reading."

- + — Boston Transcript p7 Ag 26 '16 140w
- Dial 61:69 JI 15 '16 350w

"She lays aside the tendency to epigram which marked her book, 'At the sign of the hobby horse,' and becomes simple to a degree. Perhaps she realized that perfect simplicity was necessary for any understanding whatever of the ambitious work which she had in mind. . . . Mrs. Wetmore's book will doubtless set many to thinking, and will help some to derive contentment from hard conditions."

- + Nation 102:624 Je 8 '16 430w

"One can but feel that she speaks with an assumed infinite authority, and that the healing she brings is a bit hazy. But to many the book will bring an uplift, in spite of the fact that it is of rather a hybrid nature."

- + — N Y Times 21:275 JI 9 '16 170w
- + — Springfield Republican p6 S 26 '16 530w

"The thing is handled with a good deal of literary skill, and not allowed to suffer in its effect by the contrast between the naive Americanisms of the pupils and the very high seriousness of the Spirit."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p322 JI 6 '16 150w

BITTING, ARVILL WAYNE, and BITTING, MRS. KATHERINE GOLDEN. Canning and how to use canned foods. il National canners assn., Washington, D. C. 664 16-11997

This book "gives an interesting account of how foods are prepared and the methods employed in modern canning, and indicates that canned products should be considered stock upon which to build culinary operations, rather than as foods that are complete and ready to use. . . . The work discusses in detail the processes of canning and tells how some canned and other prepared foods may be used in ways to lighten work in the preparation of various dishes, and especially how they may be used in more appetizing ways than the ordinary heating. A large number of recipes are given for preparing dishes from various canned products."—Springfield Republican

- N Y Br Lib News 3:143 S '16
- Pittsburgh 21:420 O '16 60w

"Both authors are doctors of medicine."

- + Quar List New Tech Bks Ja '17 50w
- St Louis 14:397 N '16
- Springfield Republican p15 Ag 6 '16 270w

BJÖRNSON, BJÖRNSTJERNE. Poems and songs; tr. from the Norwegian in original meters by A. H. Palmer. (Scandinavian classics) $1.50 Am.-Scandinavian foundation 839.8 15-20614

"Björnson's poems are so closely interwoven with the spiritual fibre of his countrymen that they form almost a catechism of patriotism. . . . The volume with its copious notes and illuminating preface, gives a splendid picture of Björnson the folk-leader and enriches English literature with a collection of imperishable lyrics in a beautiful translation."—Yale R

- + A L A Bkl 12:275 Mr '16
- + Lit D 51:781 O 9 '15 250w

"In the version of Professor Palmer the first impression upon the reader familiar with the original must be one of admiration for the adroitness with which he has surmounted the technical difficulties. In the main, lovers of Björnson will be grateful to the translator for the sympathetic loyalty with which he has adhered to the words as well as the spirit of the original." H. A. Larsen

- + Yale R n s 5:430 Ja '16 700w

BJURSTEDT, MOLLA, and CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Tennis for women. il *$1.25 (4c) Doubleday 796 16-11285

Accuracy and speed from the base line are the secrets of success in tennis for women. The net game is for men. This is the main point made in Miss Bjurstedt's discussion of the game. Another interesting feature of her book is her analysis of the strong and weak points of her own game and those of other women players whom she has met in America. Contents: The woman's game; Taking up tennis; The strokes that win—the drives; Aces or double faults—the service; The volley and the lob; Putting a twist on the ball; Playing the game—singles; Playing the game—mixed doubles and women's doubles; At the top of one's game; The test of the tournaments; What not to wear; The practice that helps; Mostly personal.

"The author, who is the national indoor, clay court, metropolitan, and middle states woman champion 1915, gives from her experience and in a readable manner, much definite advice on how to play the game."

- + A L A Bkl 12:464 JI '16

"A clear, practical and modest discussion of training of the different strokes and of the play desirable for women."

- + Ind 86:403 Je 5 '16 50w
- Nation 102:651 Je 15 '16 90w

"Enlivened by anecdotes of interesting and amusing incidents of her contests here and abroad."

- + N Y Times 21:278 JI 9 '16 60w
- + Wis Lib Bull 12:269 Je '16 60w

BLACK, CLEMENTINA, ed. Married women's work; being the report of an enquiry undertaken by the Women's industrial council. il *$1 Macmillan 331.4 (Eng ed 16-6676)

"The investigations on which this book is founded were undertaken in 1909 and 1910, and the volume, although only published in 1915, was completed before the outbreak of the war. It is therefore with married women's work in normal England that the writers are concerned, not with the extraordinary developments of women's work that have taken place since the end of 1914. . . . The London investigation, which is the most extensive, was undertaken chiefly by Miss Black. . . . Miss Black also writes the introduction, in which is summed up the general conclusions reached. . . . The general conclusion reached by Miss Black and by all her eleven collaborators is in favor of paid work for married women. The evil is not in the work but in overwork and underpayment."—Pol Sci Q

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BLACK, CLEMENTINA, ed.—Continued

"Comes at an extremely opportune time in view of the growing interest in the problems of the married woman at work and represents collections of an enormous amount of extremely valuable material."

+ N Y Call p14 My 21 '16 920w

"There is an honest endeavor to select cases that are fairly typical and so to present a true picture of the work and conditions of married women in different localities and trades." A. G. Porritt

+ Pol Sci Q 31:329 Je '16 930w

BLACKALL, CHARLES W. Songs from the trenches. 1l *75c Lane 821 16-2579

"In the following rhymes," says the author, who holds the rank of captain in the British army, "I have endeavoured to portray life in and around the trenches as I have seen it during several months of personal observation. Rejoining, as I did, my old regiment after several years in the theatrical profession, and coming, as it were, straight from the artificial to the real, enabled me to realise more fully than ever the wonderful pluck, endurance, and unflinching cheerfulness of our men. . . . I may mention that all the incidents described in this little volume are either facts or founded on fact." (Preface)

"Full of life and observation, and appreciation not only of the tragedies that cloud every day, but also of the small comedies that afford relief in time of trial."

+ Ath 1915,2:360 N 20 310w

"The little volume is just a peep into the hard reality of an existence that millions of men are enduring in Europe today, from which will arise a new civilization and a new humanity." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 12 '16 530w

+ Spec 116:662 My 27 '16 80w

BLACKWELL, ALICE STONE, tr. Armenian poems. $1.50 Chambers, Robert, Ford bldg., Boston 891.54

"Alice Stone Blackwell has rendered into English verse a group of 'Armenian poems.' Love songs, cradle songs, songs of patriotism and of exile; these date from the tenth century to the present and show the inner life of this now ruthlessly slaughtered people. All proceeds go to the Armenian relief funds." (Ind) "It is a new and enlarged edition, containing more than twice as much material as the little book published twenty years ago." (Woman's Journal and Suffrage News)

Ind 88:505 D 18 '16 50w

"The book has a double interest, that of literature and that of life."

+ Woman's Journal and Suffrage News 47:390 D 2 '16 250w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Julius LeVallon. *$1.50 (1½c) Dutton 16-15507

Mr. Blackwood's new novel is built on the theory of metempsychosis. It opens at the point at which Professor Mason receives the summons to join LeVallon. his "friend of a million years," in an out of the way valley of the Jura mountains, but from that point it goes back to the time when the two schoolboys, John Mason and Julius LeVallon, looking at one another, remember the previous stage of existence which they have shared together. The record of these schoolboy days in which the past is bit by bit pieced together until it is clear that they two and one other, a woman, were involved in some tremendous crime which has never been expiated, occupies one half the book. The second half, beginning with the meeting in the Jura mountains is concerned with the attempt at restitution.

"While one can scarcely call the story convincing, its intensity keeps it alive even when reason rebels against it. If there be justification for the term 'prose-poetry,' Mr. Blackwood's writing provides it."

+ Ath p276 Je '16 450w

"He has accomplished a remarkable feat, and has displayed rare imaginative powers, but our mind dwells more on the wonders of Mr. Blackwood's mind than on the wonders of his story." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 20 '16 1350w

"The book is, in point of fact, a will-o'-the-wisp, superficial yet dangerous. . . . The chief objection to it is not the story, preposterous as this is, but the religious philosophy as expressed by Julius Le Vallon."

— Cath World 104:392 D '16 760w

"Mr. Blackwood would have us understand that there is a life of the soul. It is one of the hardest things to do—this presentation of what everybody believes—and that Mr. Blackwood should even in some measure be able to do it gives his book a position apart from many books that we approve for other reasons." E: E. Hale

+ Dial 61:397 N 16 '16 700w

+ Ind 88:234 N 6 '16 70w

"It is a theme of gressome suggestiveness, such as might have been briefly and strikingly handled by a Poe or a Hawthorne. Mr. Blackwood makes a labored and long-drawn and rather tiresome business of it."

— + Nation 103:422 N 2 '16 550w

"To be frank, the book is a preposterous farago of amateur philosophy, crude symbolism masking itself behind scientific terminology, skilful narrative and powerful description. . . . If the result is a strange blend of absurdity and tenderness and fine moments, it is a result which a much greater genius than Mr. Blackwood, stirred by the same impulse, could in all human probability not surpass. The weakness is not in the instrument." Harold Stearns

— + New Repub 9:sup9 N 18 '16 1250w

+ N Y Times 21:361 S 17 '16 700w

+ R of Rs 55:104 Ja '17 230w

Spec 117:348 S 23 '16 20w

+ Springfield Republican p13 S 24 '16 350w

"We creep out of his story, brains in a whirl, hearts palpitating."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p246 My 25 '16 900w

BLAKE, CLINTON HAMLIN, Jr. Law of architecture and building. *$3 (3c) Comstock 692.9 16-7030

This "consideration of the mutual rights, duties and liabilities of architect, owner and contractor, with appendices and forms" is based on a series of articles contributed to Architecture in 1913 and 1914. The author's purpose has been to provide the architect with a statement of the rules of law governing the practice of his profession "in a form which would be at once sufficiently free from special legal phraseology to be understood by a layman, and at the same time sufficiently comprehensive and detailed in the citation of cases to enable the reader to refer to the leading cases if desired." (Preface) There is a special introduction by Aymar Embury II, member of the American institute of architects.

+ A L A Bkl 13:14 O '16

"Fundamental principles are carefully treated and the case citations are comprehensive and thorough. The appendices contain the complete decisions in a number of leading cases, copies of the standard documents approved by the American institute of architects, the canon of ethics, and the forms used in lien proceedings."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p3 My '16 80w

BLAKESLEE, GEORGE HUBBARD, ed. Problems and lessons of the war. *$2 (1½c) Putnam 172.4 16-13196

The twenty-five addresses that make up this book were delivered at a conference held at Clark university, December 16-18, 1915. G. Stanley Hall in his introduction says: "It should be clearly understood at the outset that the university has simply offered a free platform, and invited the frankest expression of opinion, but has assumed responsibility for no man's views." The papers are grouped under the following headings: Preparedness; Economic aspects; Proposals for restricting or eliminating war; The test of the war; Naturalized Americans; British and German viewpoints; Pan-Americanism; The Red cross.

"The volume is pregnant with the best of contemporary thought in this country upon both the war in Europe and the lessons of the conflagration for the United States." F: A. Ogg
+ Dial 61:349 N 2 '16 500w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16

"It is of special interest to Americans, since so much of it deals with the influence of the war upon their ideals, methods of life, and national character. Six of the addresses are concerned with one or another phase of American preparedness. They vary greatly in theme and almost as much in point of view, as may well be guessed when it is known that the six speakers were Norman Angell, George Haven Putnam, Ira N. Hollis, Arthur Gordon Webster of the Naval consulting board, Congressman Warren Worth Bailey of Pennsylvania, and William I. Hull."

+ N Y Times 21:266 J1 2 '16 550w

R of Rs 54:117 J1 '16 60w

"Of course, the several addresses vary in strength and value. But the book represents a dispassionate and reasonable attempt to arrive at the truth in regard to the fundamental problems of the conflict. Not one of the writers contributes in a violent or wholly partisan spirit."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p468 S 28 '16 210w

BLAND, EDITH (NESBIT) (MRS. HUBERT BLAND). Incredible honeymoon. il *$1.30 (1½c) Harper 16-22596

A charming story of the irresponsible wanderings and adventures of two attractive young people. When Edward Basingstoke fell heir to a fortune, he at once retired from active business and started out to see life, and he didn't mean "getting drunk and being disreputable"; he had never been able to see why "that sort of beastliness" should be called life. To him it meant sunshine and the open road and chance adventure. At first his only companion is Charles, his dog, but very shortly he picks up the Girl, helps her to escape from an irate maiden aunt, and then fares forth with her to whatever the road may have in store for them. A mock marriage, designed to make the whole episode appear more plausible and to ease the mind of another, and better loved, aunt, turns out to have been a real marriage, legal and binding.

A L A Bkl 13:174 Ja '17

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:508 Ja '17 280w

"A story of most singular charm. . . . Her children's books deserve to be classics. Her latest novel is primarily for 'grown-ups.' Yet to enjoy it sincerely one must forget all sophistication, and enter a world far too good to be true." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 22 '16 470w

+ Dial 61:588 D 28 '16 220w

Ind 88:466 D 11 '16 50w

BLANTON, BEN H. Credit, its principles and practice. il $2 Ronald 332.7 15-9952

"Mr. Blanton has gathered together and presented in logical order, and in non-technical language, the various functions of the credit department, including collection procedure, and the qualifications required in the man whose work it is to preside over this important department of business. The subject is discussed almost wholly from the viewpoint of the wholesaler, only one chapter being devoted to bank credit. An appendix contains the text of the national bankruptcy act."—Am Econ R

"... The comparison which the author makes between this agency and the two old and well-known commercial agencies, Dun and Bradstreet, is rather unfavorable to them and not wholly fair in that it is made to appear as though they did not include trade investigations in their system of credit investigation. The usefulness of the work would unquestionably have been increased if, for the sake of the novice in credit management, the author had given more space to the analysis of credit reports including a fuller discussion of the credit seeker's financial statement." Lee Galloway

+ — Am Econ R 6:136 Mr '16 250w

"This is a book whose purpose is expressed in its sub-caption as 'a practical work for credit men, presenting the principles and practice involved in modern credits and collections, together with an explanation of bankruptcy proceedings.' As a treatise for the use of credit men it would appear as of a rather elementary character. Nearly all of the first two parts would be information that every credit man must necessarily possess in order to be a credit man at all. Only a very inexperienced beginner would be specially enlightened. This does not mean, however, that the book itself has not a distinct value. It has—but its value would be greater to the seeker than to the grantor of credit. The impression exists that this book in the hands of the merchant doing business in a comparatively small way would be of much value. The last two parts are more distinctively helpful to the credit man than the first two, but the book is readable and instructive to any one who has any interest in commercial affairs." E: L. Suffern

+ Journal of Accountancy 20:73 J1 '15 450w

Pittsburgh 21:115 Mr '16 50w

BLEYER, WILLARD GROSVENOR. Types of news writing. *$1.40 Houghton 808 16-15223

"This book has been prepared with the purpose of furnishing students of journalism and young reporters with a large collection of typical news stories." (Preface) The material of the book is arranged under such chapter headings as, Fires and accidents, Police news and crime, Criminal and civil courts, Speeches, interviews, and reports, etc. In each case there is an introduction followed by actual news stories selected from papers in different parts of the country. These are put forward not as models for the student to follow, but as examples to be studied and analyzed. The author is professor of journalism in the University of Wisconsin.

"Furnishes good illustrative material for those studying the writer's 'Newspaper writing and editing.'"

+ A L A Bkl 13:101 D '16

Cleveland p103 Ag '16 30w

+ Ind 88:331 N 20 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:172 N '16

BLYTKE, SAMUEL GEORGE. Western Warwick. *$1.35 (1½c) Doran 16-11587

A novel that reveals the inner workings of the game (or the business) of politics. The "Warwick" of the story is Senator Paxton, a party leader of long standing, who tells, in the first person, how he made James Jason Rogers president of the United States; how he marshalled his forces, stamped the convention and swept his candidate on to victory on a great popular "prosperity" wave. And then follows the story of his undoing and retirement to private life where he has time and leisure to think it over. Incidents in the story suggest the campaign of 1896. At least we must go back to that date to find a "king-maker" to whom Paxton measures up.

BLYTHE, SAMUEL GEORGE—Continued

A L A Bkl 13:33 O '16

"An extremely frank and witty and disheartening picture of national morals and national politics." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:534 J1 '16 500w

"Thoroughly familiar with the twists and turns of official life in Washington, this popular writer has here used the knowledge gained in newspaper experience in constructing a very entertaining story. The book is to be taken as a racy romance, founded (more or less) on fact." H. S. K.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '16 420w

"A fascinating study of the political game, vivid, convincing, admirably done and crowded with caustic sayings which tempt to quotation."

+ N Y Times 21:239 Je 11 '16 670w

"The story is frequently humorous and generally goes ahead, save when the author pauses to lecture of the duties of the presidency, the chicanery of politicians, the greed of office-seekers and the unscrupulousness of the 'money power.'"

+ — Springfield Republican p13 My 28 '16 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p547 N 16 '16 790w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:322 J1 '16 70w

BOGART, ERNEST LUDLOW, and THOMPSON, CHARLES MANFRED, eds. Readings in the economic history of the United States. *$2.80

Longmans 330.9 16-15563

"The authors' object has been to provide collateral reading in a course on the economic history of the United States, supplementing any text-book used. The material is mainly drawn from contemporary sources. A quarter of the book deals with 1600 to 1808; about half with 1808-1860; and the remaining quarter with the civil war."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"This volume of 'Readings' gives the impression that the editors have tried to cover too much in a limited space. An unfortunate result has been the unsatisfactory treatment accorded the important economic problems which have arisen since the civil war. . . . To aid in estimating the value of that part of Bogart and Thompson's 'Readings' dealing with the period 1606-1860, one may fairly compare the material it presents with a collection covering practically the same period edited a few years ago by the late Professor G. S. Callender ('Selections from the economic history of the United States, 1765-1860,' Ginn and company, 1909). . . . The editors of the present volume seem to have been influenced more largely by the chronological principle in the arrangement of their material. Consequently the treatment of an important subject such as internal trade sometimes lacks unity and coherence. The documents reprinted by Callender were chosen to emphasize the causes and effects of economic conditions as well as to show simply the facts themselves. In this particular aspect Bogart and Thompson's 'Readings' suffers by comparison." P. W. Bidwell

+ — Am Hist R 22:380 Ja '17 820w

A L A Bkl 13:58 N '16

+ Educ R 52:530 D '16 40w

Pittsburgh 21:510 N '16

Pratt p11 Ja '17 20w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p370 Ag 3 '16 50w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:408 N '16 50w

BOLENIUS, EMMA MILLER. Teaching literature in the grammar grades and high school. (Riverside textbooks in education) diags

*$1.25 (1c) Houghton 807 16-1022

A book for teachers. It recognizes that the chief aim in the teaching of literature is to impart an appreciation of and love for books that will outlast school days. It recognizes too that because of the great number of pupils who leave school before completing the high school course, this appreciation must be acquired early. Ellwood P. Cubberley, who contributes an introduction to the work, says that it combines the three most important things in a teacher's equipment: "(1) knowledge of the subject-matter, in this case, literature; (2) methods for imparting the subject-matter to a class; and (3) suggestions for humanizing the study of literature and for correlating it with the lives of boys and girls." Different literary forms, the ballad, the epic, the short story, the novel, the drama, etc., are treated in separate chapters. There is a bibliography.

+ A L A Bkl 12:416 Je '16

+ Cleveland p128 N '16 70w

"This style seems to spring from the author's theory of getting all the 'thrills' possible. Apart from these vicacities the book offers a good many useful suggestions. The reading lists are full and pertinent, and the general method of working out with the class, before reading a poem, the necessary background, historical or linguistic, is excellent."

+ — Nation 102:sup491 My 4 '16 130w

Pratt p30 Ap '16

"A work which is based on a broad conception and on thorough knowledge and experience. It presents literature in practical lessons and yet does not deprive it of its power to please and inspire. It can be used by country as well as city teachers. References to sources are exact, and there is a good index."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:145 Mr '16 56w

BOLLES, FRANK CRANDALL; JONES, EDGAR CLYDE, and UPHAM, JOHN S. Soldier's catechism. il *$1 Doubleday 355

16-18579

"The question-and-answer method of conveying information makes for conciseness, and 'The soldier's catechism' can be recommended for this reason. Its three compilers are officers of the United States, and an introduction to the book has been written by Major-general Hugh L. Scott. The book is a complete manual for the soldier, is endorsed by the Army war college, and covers in simple language not only the strictly military phases of a soldier's life, but also such subjects as sanitation, first aid, and the military history of the United States."—R of Rs

"Less general than Andrews, intended rather for the private than the non-commissioned officer; fuller on some subjects, such as first aid, giving many illustrations. The two are sufficiently different so that they could be included together if needed."

+ A L A Bkl 13:147 Ja '17

N Y Br Lib News 3:155 O '16

N Y Times 21:395 O 1 '16 70w

R of Rs 54:461 O '16 90w

St Louis 14:381 N '16

BOLMAR, LYDIA, and MCNUTT, KATHLEEN. Art in dress, with notes on home decoration. il pa 35c Manual arts press 646

16-14652

"A pamphlet designed for high-school students of domestic art, but useful also for the woman who wishes to improve her methods of dressing. Besides a brief but clear presentation of the principles of good dressing there are illuminating drawings of faulty lines in dress, in hair-dressing and millinery."—Wis Lib Bull

+ A L A Bkl 13:203 F '17

Cleveland p151 D '16 30w

"A helpful contribution to the material out of which, after a few more years of experience, a standard text book will be evolved."

+ School Arts Magazine 16:45 S '16 50w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:451 D '16 50w

BOLTON, HERBERT EUGENE, ed. Spanish exploration in the Southwest, 1542-1706. (Original narratives of early American history) maps *$3 (2c) Scribner 973.16 16-6066

This volume, says the editor is the logical successor in the series of which it is a part to the one on "Spanish explorers in the southern United States, 1528-1543," edited by Hodge and Lewis. Only about one-third of the documents have appeared before in English. About one third have been printed only in Spanish, and the remaining one-third appear here for the first time in print. "In the selection of the documents it was decided to illustrate with some fullness the cardinal episodes in the history of the region and period covered, rather than to treat more lightly a larger number of topics." (Preface) The book is made up of four parts: Exploration and plans for the settlement of California; Exploration and settlement in New Mexico and in adjacent regions; Exploration and settlement in Texas; Arizona: the Jesuits in Pimería Alta.

"Professor Bolton's book is of such importance and usefulness to students of the southwest and of the Pacific slope as to be indispensable." F. W. Hodge

+ Am Hist R 22:201 O '16 470w
+ A L A Bkl 12:376 My '16

"The book, like Miss Stephens's 'Mastering of Mexico,' ought to throw open to the average reader who likes true tales of courage and adventure a new source of enjoyment."

+ Bookm 43:421 Je '16 580w

"Brief historical introductions to the twenty-two documents are presented increasing their interest and intelligibility by giving a connected view of the development of the whole northern frontier in New Spain during the period covered, as well as furnishing biographical and bibliographical data."

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 29 '16 300w
+ Cath World 104:536 Ja '17 520w
Ind 87:390 S 11 '16 60w

"Foot-notes in abundance, with bibliographical apparatus, enlarge the usefulness and usability of the collection."

+ Lit D 52:1852 Je 24 '16 220w

"Frequent cross references and a complete index add to the value of the text. Altogether the study is a valuable contribution to a comparatively unworked field, and a most fitting closing volume to this valuable series."

+ Nation 103:159 Ag 17 '16 300w

"Two of the maps published with the book have never before been reproduced; a third is a useful guide in following the course of the various expeditions. They all add to the value of the volume along the line of original research. For the student of history the author has provided a necessary addition to his library; to the layman, a book he will read with pleasure and solid profit."

+ N Y Times 21:180 Ap 23 '16 470w
+ N Y Times 21:524 N 26 '16 170w
+ R of Rs 53:500 Ap '16 80w
St Louis 14:200 My '16
+ Springfield Republican p8 Je 8 '16 300w

BOLTON, HERBERT EUGENE. Texas in the middle eighteenth century; studies in Spanish colonial history and administration. (Pub. in history) il $3.50 Univ. of Cal. 976.4

A16-4

"The principal divisions of this work are: 1. A general survey, 1731-1788, which summarizes the general history of Texas during the period indicated; 2. The San Xavier missions, 1745-1758; 3. The reorganization of the lower Gulf coast, 1746-1768; 4. Spanish activities on the lower Trinity river, 1746-1771; 5. The removal from and the reoccupation of eastern Texas, 1773-1779.

Although these studies necessarily deal largely with the details of the ecclesiastical and civil occupation of the regions under discussion, measures for their defense, and their vicissitudes of fortune, yet these phases by no means exhaust the interest and value of the treatment. Civil and ecclesiastical administration, economic conditions, French-Spanish international relations, Spanish-Indian policy, receive their due share of attention; more notable than any of these, perhaps, is the contribution of the studies to ethnological knowledge. The twelve maps and plans are an exceedingly valuable part of the work. Ten are copies of contemporary maps, ranging in date from 1717 to 1771; of these, eight have never before been published, being here reproduced from tracings or photographs of the originals in the Archivo general de Indias, Seville, and the Archivo general, Mexico. The other two, a small map of the San Xavier missions and a large general reference map, are compilations of the author, based upon fresh source-material and upon personal explorations." (Am Hist R) There is a bibliography of some twenty pages.

"One of the most satisfying characteristics of the book is the sharpness of its geographical definition: the clearness and definiteness with which eighteenth-century activities are interpreted in terms of twentieth-century geography. Particularly is this true of the San Xavier mission group, in the fixing of whose sites Professor Bolton is a pioneer. . . . The bibliography, although not annotated, is an excellent guide to material for the period under consideration; and there is an adequate index."

+ Am Hist R 21:816 Jl '16 700w

"To these studies there has been prefixed a valuable and interesting introduction tracing the expansive movements in four directions—in central Texas, along the coast about Matagorda bay, on the Trinity river, and at Nacogdoches on the extreme north-eastern frontier." M. A. H.

+ Ann Am Acad 66:274 Jl '16 200w

"The splendid research work being done in western history by the University of California is evidenced by the handsome volume on 'Texas in the middle eighteenth century.' This is based not only upon the study of manuscripts in the archives of Mexico City, Seville and Austin, but upon twenty-five thousand miles of travel by train, horse, and foot in search of material and verification of sites."

+ Ind 86:117 Ap 17 '16 60w
+ Nation 103:263 S 14 '16 260w

"The chief value of the book lies in the fact that it takes up a vastly interesting period that has hardly been treated before."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Je 8 '16 300w

BOLTON, REGINALD PELHAM. Power for profit. $2.50 R. P. Bolton, 55 Liberty st. N. Y. 621 16-749

"The purpose of this book is to set forth in non-technical fashion, for the benefit of real estate owners, the principles which affect expenditures of capital in connection with the services involved in the conduct of modern buildings, and the operation of heat and power generating machinery. Problems which modern inventions and habits have fastened upon ownership of real estate are dealt with, as, for example, expenses of sub-basements, cost of free services, depreciation of machinery, re-use of steam and water, operation of elevators, gas as fuel, handling of labor, load factor, sanitary systems, and the deceptive appearance of unit costs. Necessarily the treatment is often rather summary."—Am Econ R

"On the whole, the book answers a definite need. The author has approached his problem in a common sense and practical manner and has for the most part succeeded in vitalizing the principles with matter of concrete rather than general nature. The arrangement of material is convenient. In addition to a comprehensive index the margins of the pages are annotated in red." M. J. Shugrue

+ Am Econ R 6:385 Je '16 200w

"Any who desire an extreme statement of the case against private isolated utility-service plants need Mr. Bolton's book although it is aimed at the real-estate operator particularly. Attempting to reach this class of expected readers probably explains the dilute matter, smooth style and ex cathedra presentation. While not the primary object of the book, yet no chance is lost to criticize municipal ownership."

Engin N 75:319 F 17 '16 250w

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p11 My '16 70w

BOND, ALEXANDER RUSSELL. On the battle front of engineering. il $1.30 (2½c) Century 16-18905

Two boys are given an unusual opportunity to see some of the great engineering wonders of our day in process of construction. Some of the chapter headings will give an idea of the variety of their experiences: Harnessing Thunder river; Light and heat from snow; Besieged by a river of ice; Righting a tilted grain elevator; The world's greatest bridge; Damming a sea of mud; New York's Culebra cut. The author says, "All the adventures recounted are actually based on fact, although they have been altered and modified to fit the special requirements of the narrative. But no liberties have been taken with engineering data." The author is managing editor of the Scientific American and the chapters have been appearing in St. Nicholas.

BOND, ALEXANDER RUSSELL—Continued

"Interesting for older children and adults, with good illustrations partly photographs."
+ A L A Bkl 13:129 D '16
+ Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 250w

BOND, PAUL STANLEY. Engineer in war. il
*$1.50 McGraw 623 16-13863

"The book is a revision and amplification of the series of articles entitled 'National defense—for engineer and contractor,' which appeared recently in the Engineering Record. Many new illustrations have been inserted and important additions made, particularly in regard to military map-making and sketching and sanitation. . . . The author begins with chapters on the military policy of the United States and the economics of military engineering. The main body of the book, however, is devoted to such subjects as tools and equipment, stream crossings, military roads, field fortifications and sieges, demolitions, reconnaissance, sketching and surveying, sanitation, mobilization of industrial resources and hints on how the engineer and contractor may prepare to meet the military obligations of citizenship." (Engin Rec) There is a bibliography.

Cleveland p151 D '16 20w
Engin N 76:311 Ag 17 '16 40w

"Many of the strictly military engineering manuals already in print are explicit in instructions regarding technical practice, but they fail to link up these features with the broad economic principles of modern warfare. It is in this respect that Major Bond's book is of particular value."

+ Engin Rec 73:841 Je 24 '16 630w

"Reviewed in Journal of the Western Society of Engineers, April, 1916, p. 368; in Electrical Age, July, 1916, p. 65; in Mining and Scientific Press, July 15, 1916; in Machinery, Aug., 1916, p. 1108."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p14 Ag '16 160w

Pratt p13 O '16 30w

+ St Louis 14:394 N '16 60w

BONGER, WILLIAM ADRIAN. Criminality and economic conditions; tr. by H. P. Horton, with an editorial preface by E. Lindsey, and with an introd. by Frank H. Norcross. (Modern criminal science ser.) *$5.50 Little 364 16-11274

"Mr. Bonger is a Dutch publicist and a pupil of Professor von Hamel, one of the founders of the International union of penal law and one of the most eminent Dutch students of criminology. He was born in 1876. . . . The original publication of this book was made in 1905, under the auspices of the University of Amsterdam. The author frankly declares himself at variance with opinion in the English-speaking countries, as to the etiology of crime. . . . His book is in sharp opposition to the view-point which approves and supports sterilization as a means of reducing crime. He holds that the progress of sociology has shown more and more clearly that the roots of crime are located outside man and in society."—Boston Transcript

"In the rapidly expanding literature relating to the economic factors of criminality Dr. Bonger's elaborate investigation is without a peer. Thoroughness of research, clearness of analysis and keenness of interpretation reveal the hand of the trained expert. . . . However, the author does not show adequate knowledge of American writings and statistical collections. . . . The author believes that his 'ideas about the etiology of crime will not be shared by a great many readers of the American edition.' He is surely mistaken so far as the educated public is concerned. As to the rest, he has provided the needed lesson." G: E. Howard

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:785 N '16 1500w

"The American institute of criminal law and criminology has rendered an invaluable service to the science of criminology by placing this book before the English-reading world. It ought to stand on the shelf beside Lombroso, Garofalo and Aschaffenberg in every collection of criminological literature in the country." J. P. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 67:310 S '16 300w

Boston Transcript p8 My 20 '16 500w

"The author has brought his review of the literature up to the date of June, 1914. The bibliography begins with Sir Thomas More's 'Utopia.' The second part of the work presents the author's own views on the relation of environment to crime. His conclusion is expressed in the words of Quételet, 'It is society that prepares the crime.' We absolutely disagree with his conclusion, and yet much valuable help is to be found in his collation of the literature, and everyone will sympathize with his subsidiary conclusion given in the words from Manouvrier who, treating of the prevention of crime, said: 'The maxim to apply is, act so that every man shall always have more interest in being useful to his fellows than in harming them.'"

+ Cath World 103:540 Jf '16 450w

"No one can read this book without feeling the manifest bias of the author. . . . The causes of crime seem to be too readily reduced to one underlying cause thoroughly to convince the open-minded reader. Nevertheless, the book should impel men and women to consider at once a practicable programme for improving the economic environment."

+ Dial 61:272 O 5 '16 420w

+ Ind 87:422 S 18 '16 270w

"The book is essential both to the makers and the administrators of law because of its depth and breadth of view. An extensive bibliography raises the value of the volume."

+ Lit D 53:417 Ag 19 '16 370w

N Y Br Lib News 3:90 Je '16

N Y Times 21:312 Ag 6 '16 60w

"Half of the volume is given to extracts from various authors representing the two schools of thought, and the evidence for each is so carefully distinguished and explicitly set forth that the value of the work is not diminished for those who disagree in social philosophy with the latter half of the volume."

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 19 '16 600w

BONNER, GERALDINE. Black Eagle mystery. il *$1.30 (2c) Appleton 16-4388

Hollings Harland, a wealthy New York corporation lawyer commits suicide by jumping from the eighteenth story of the Black Eagle building. The act follows his quarrel with Johnstone Barker, the copper pool magnate. The pool breaks and Johnstone Barker disappears. A suspicion of foul play causes the office of Wilbur Whitney to take up the case. Molly Morgenthau Babbitts, "the girl at central" is again employed, together with her husband (a reporter), Jack Reddy (Mr. Whitney's assistant), and others. The mystery turns on the relation of the beautiful young Miss Carol Whitehall, manager of the Azalea Woods estates, to both Harland and Barker, her office being directly below that of the murdered man. There is plot within plot and sensation after sensation until the final surprise to the reader of finding Harland alive in Canada, the self confessed murderer of Barker.

"An average detective story. The idea is better than its execution. Reprinted from Collier's Weekly."

+ A L A Bkl 12:427 Je '16

"Sufficiently clever to compel a reader once embarked in the reading to go through to the finish and not to skip as the coils are thrown off one by one."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 1 '16 160w

"The tale is ingenious and interesting, and its solution is one that will surprise and delight the average lover of detective stories. In other words, 'The Black Eagle mystery' contains a number of surprises, is cleverly worked up, and will be found agreeable entertainment for an unoccupied evening."

+ N Y Times 21:100 Mr 19 '16 250w

"Those who read 'The girl at central' will meet old acquaintances in Geraldine Bonner's latest mystery story. Much of the tale is hardly credible, but this is forgotten in the pleasant excitement induced by unfolding events."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 19 '16 230w

BOOK of Belgium's gratitude. il *$2 Lane 940.91 16-6248

This book is published "in recognition of the help and hospitality given by the British empire and of the relief bestowed by the United States of America during the great war." It is made up of articles by representative Belgians, followed by the English translation, and is illustrated by Belgian artists. Maeterlinck, Verhaeren, Cammaerts, Henri Davignon and Eugène Ysaeye are among the contributors. The names of Earl Curzon, the Earl of Cromer, May Sinclair, Mrs. John Lane, Alfred Sutro, William J. Locke and other distinguished English and American men and women appear among the translators.

+ Ath p40 Ja '16 160w

"Offering from Belgian viewpoints many new impressions of England and the English."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 1 '16 470w

"The gratitude of the humble is shown in the numerous anecdotes—sometimes humorous, more often pathetic—which add much to the vividness and sincerity of the book."

+ Dial 60:558 Je 8 '16 270w

"An uncommonly beautiful compilation."

+ Ind 87:316 Ag 28 '16 50w

R of Rs 53:628 My '16 50w

"The editors have been helped by the most representative Belgians, and the translations are all well done by women and men of distinction. Musicians will read with interest what Eugène Ysaeye writes about art and the war, and what Arthur de Greef says of the British musical temperament. Among the most original contributions we place a thoughtful paper by the Comtesse van den Steen de Jehay on national character as shown in dying soldiers—French, British, and Belgian. There is much for historians to glean from these brief essays, the Book of Belgium's courtesy being also in the main a book of history written by eyewitnesses."

+ Sat R 121:164 F 12 '16 450w

+ Springfield Republican p7 My 4 '16 300w

BOOTH, EDWARD CHARLES. Fondie. *$1.40 (1c) Appleton 16-15843

For an understanding of the title of the book one must refer to the Yorkshire dialect in which it is written. For in Yorkshire the word "fond" retains its old Middle-English meaning, simple or foolish. And since Fondie Bassiemoor never answered to his baptismal name, Enos, but was known always by the nickname the village had given him, it is not difficult to divine at the outset something of Fondie's true nature. "Fond" he was in his simplicity and humility, his lack of aggressiveness, his lack of cunning in driving a bargain and getting the better of the other fellow, "fond" above all in his devotion to Blanche. Blanche is the heedless, headstrong daughter of the vicar, bound on her unrestrained and undisciplined way to ruin, on to the disastrous end where Fondie, foolish to the last, is her only friend.

"The humour is delightfully spontaneous, adding beauty and tenderness even to the pathetic scenes. . . . Mr. Booth's delineation of these Holderness people is, to a reviewer who has been reading novels daily for years, the truest and most humorous picture of country life since the earlier novels of George Eliot."

+ Ath p325 J1 '16 1950w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:180 O '16 740w

"In it, as in his three previous novels. 'The post girl,' 'The doctor's lass,' and 'Bella,' he has made Yorkshire the centre of a very real world. . . . Nothing could be truer and more hackneyed than Blanche's fate, but nothing could be truer and more unconventional than the manner of its telling by the novelist. His story is filled with abundant pathos; it is told with a singular fine restraint and discretion." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 16 '16 1700w

+ Ind 88:127 O 16 '16 50w

"Fondie has his own strength. But we are well content to have done with him. In the end it is the girl Blanche, smiling, doughty creature, so easily, with all her bravery, a victim of fate—it is she, who after the story of her is laid down, strangely haunts the memory, a shape of pity and of terror."

+ Nation 103:399 O 26 '16 340w

+ N Y Times 21:313 Ag 13 '16 1000w

+ Springfield Republican p15 O 15 '16 450w

"Unfortunately, even in the most critical passages, his besetting tendency, intruding, suggests something of the blithe inquisitiveness of the Whivvle native himself. It is almost as though someone in the audience had laughed, precisely when laughter was unpardonable; one is conscious of a distinct dis-ease, as before a man's profanation of his best qualities. But beside the disorderly and exasperating facetiousness is the accurate and irresistible humour; the profusion, the richness."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p286 Je 15 '16 780w

BOOTH, HERBERT. Toys and things. *$1 (3c) Doran 252 16-21252

A book of sermons for children. They are in substance the talks which the author, who is a son of General Booth of the Salvation army, has given to many audiences of young people or to the young people of his general congregations before the beginning of the regular sermon. As a starting point he has taken the things with which children are most familiar, their toys, dolls, tops, balls, balloons, kites, etc. "These talks are not of course intended for the very young children. That is to say, unless they are simplified and further explained by those reading them. Children between the ages of seven and seventeen will best appreciate their teaching, as they are old enough to grasp the principles which I have sought to associate with the toys." (Foreword)

BORCHARD, EDWIN MONTEFIORE. Diplomatic protection of citizens abroad; or, The law of international claims. $8 Banks 341 15-14593

"Dr. Edwin M. Borchard is law librarian of Congress and was lately assistant solicitor of the Department of state. His work deals with a subject that lies partly in the field of international private law, in so far as it involves claims brought by individual citizens, and partly in the field of international public law. The work is divided into four parts: Part 1 which deals with the rights of citizens and of aliens and with the international responsibility of the state; Part 2 which deals with the exercise of diplomatic protection; Part 3 which treats of the object of protection—the person and property of citizens; and Part 4 which defines the limitations on diplomatic protection." (Am Pol Sci R) Bibliography of general works, p. xxvii-xxxvii; Appendix: General and national bibliographies on the law of aliens, p. 865-927.

Am Pol Sci R 9:580 Ag '15 180w

"Dr. Borchard in this scholarly, comprehensive work has made a most important contribution to the knowledge of international law as practically applied. He has mined thoroughly in a vast field of facts and precedents, particularly in the decisions and acts of the Department of state.

BORCHARD, EDWIN MONTEFIORE—Cont.

The method employed by Dr. Borchard in treating this great subject is open to criticism. His method is somewhat confusing. He is often abrupt, uncertain, and inconclusive in his arguments. Evidence of the structural defect of this book is to be found in the table of contents. In spite of these strictures one cannot fail to recognize the immense value of Dr. Borchard's work. It should prove an authoritative manual of reference for diplomats, consuls, lawyers, teachers and students of international law. It might well serve as the basis for an advanced course of study and research in that field. Supplementing with fresh and well chosen material the digest by John Bassett Moore, to whom the book is most appropriately dedicated, this work should prove of the greatest importance in the immense task of crystallizing and formulating those exact principles and rules of international law which shall control the conduct of nations." P. M. Brown

+ — Am Pol Sci R 10:182 F '16 880w

"His volume, owing to its freedom from excessive technicality as well as from the fact that it deals with international relations, will interest others besides professional lawyers."

+ Nation 103:157 Ag 17 '16 870w

"The American material is admirably supplemented from the contributions of foreign writers, whose books and articles are listed in exhaustive bibliographies. The only adverse criticism I would suggest of this accurate, painstaking, well arranged and well written work is that the author has sometimes failed to disentangle his principal conclusions from the detail of his discussion, and so they have to be hunted out at the cost of some labor."

+ New Repub 7:70 My 20 '16 2000w

BOSHER, MRS. KATE LEE (LANGLEY) (KATE CAIRNS, pseud.). People like that. il $1.25 (2c) Harper 16-10117

A young woman of the upper classes who finds her life unsatisfactory moves down to a poorer part of the city, determined to learn something of the "other half" and to think things out for herself. She makes many new friends in Scarborough square and becomes involved in the affairs that make up their lives. Her old friends look askance at her adventure. Selwyn Thorne in particular is most intolerant of what seems to him a mad scheme. "He had been reared in a school honest in its belief that a woman is too fine and fair a thing to face life frankly," and to see the girl he loves doing so outrages all his cherished traditions. But when he himself is drawn into the affairs of the Square thru the indiscretions of a younger brother, he gets a new point of view, and the two lovers come to a better understanding on some of the fundamental issues.

"The situation is sentimentally treated but worked out with considerable dramatic force and without objectionable details. It presents a plea for more intelligent understanding and greater sympathy on the part of sheltered women toward their unfortunate sisters."

+ — A L A BkI 12:479 JI '16

Reviewed by P. G. Hubert, jr.
Bookm 43:540 JI '16 110w

"The book is anything but unusual, it is sentimental in the extreme, and its plot, a mingling of the sociological and the romantic, is too commonplace to be considered of any great significance."

— Boston Transcript p6 Ag 30 '16 230w

+ Cath World 104:267 N '16 240w

Ind 86:405 Je 5 '16 50w

"The author's earnestness and sincerity, the bigness of her theme, and the high importance of the truths which every now and then flash out from her pages go far to make amends for whatever artistic shortcomings the story may show."

+ N Y Times 21:258 Je 25 '16 770w

Springfield Republican p15 JI 30 '16 330w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p251 My

25 '16 50w

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:322 JI '16 60w

BOTTOM, PHYLLIS. Dark tower. il $1.35 (1½c) Century 16-18907

Scenes in England, the Swiss Alps and Belgium during the first days of the war are pictured in this novel, a recent serial in the Century. It is the scenes in Switzerland that are most vivid. It is here, to Davos, that Winn Staines, having "crocked" a lung as a result of two English winters, is sent to endure unaccustomed leisure and idleness. The winters in England were a concession to his wife's prejudices against India but far from assuming any responsibility, Estelle feels aggrieved and remains in England, and Winn, going out to Davos alone meets Claire. It is the familiar situation of the man meeting the right woman after having married the wrong one. It is a situation for which the first days of the war provide a solution.

"A few people might object to this. Appeared in the Century."

+ A L A BkI 13:122 D '16

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 21 '16 1100w

"This is the purest, cleanest-cut, and finest example of the novelist's art among the books in this group. The writer has thought clearly, and she has chosen a subject worth thinking about."

+ Dial 61:399 N 16 '16 500w

+ — Ind 88:234 N 6 '16 80w

+ — Nation 103:610 D 28 '16 120w

"An excellent light-hearted sentimental novel, clouded in the last three or four chapters by the shadow of the war."

+ New Repub 8:253 O 7 '16 390w

+ N Y Times 21:386 O 1 '16 270w

"A well-written problem novel."

+ Pratt p47 Ja '17 4w

"A clever and diverting story. . . . Much of the dialog is natural and a little amusing."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 29 '16 300w

"Some small libraries might have trouble with this book."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 110w

BOUCHER, CHAUNCEY SAMUEL. Nullification controversy in South Carolina. $1.50 (2c) Univ. of Chicago press 973.5 16-14135

"To relate the story of the nullification controversy in South Carolina as it is found in the writings of the men who were participants in it, is the object of this monograph." (Preface) In preparing the work the author has examined much new material, including files of leading newspapers on both sides of the controversy. Contents: The origin of the conflict (1824-29); Nullification advocated and denounced (1830); The first test of strength (1830-31); A year of campaigning (1831); The nullifiers capture the legislature (1832); Nullification adopted (1832); Jackson and nullification (1832-33); Nullification suspended (1833); The compromise tariff and the force bill (1833); The test oath (1833-35). There are eleven maps and a bibliography of seventeen pages.

"The book is not a history of the nullification controversy; it is a valuable, though limited, contribution to the data upon which a history might be based." N. W. Stephenson

+ — Am Hist R 22:408 Ja '17 700w

+ Educ R 52:530 D '16 40w

Ind 88:286 N 13 '16 50w

"In these respects the volume is a real addition to knowledge of the subject. The main course of the nullification controversy, however, remains as Mr. Houston outlined it. One misses, in Professor Boucher's work, a certain broad view of the episode which distinguishes the 'Critical study'; and the important question of the economic conditions which underlay the nullification movement is only lightly touched."

+ — Nation 103:425 N 2 '16 350w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:119 Ag '16

St Louis 14:406 N '16 10w

BOUDIN, LOUIS BOUDIANOFF. Socialism and war. *$1 New review pub. 940.91 16-1448

"An interpretation of the great war from the socialist viewpoint, together with a discussion of the general problems of socialism and war, nationalism and internationalism." (R of Rs) "Contents: Clearing the ground; The economic causes of the war; The ideologic causes of the war; The immediate causes of the war and the stakes involved; The war and the socialists; Socialist vs. bourgeois theories."

Reviewed by V; E. Helleberg

— Am J Soc 22:272 S '16 250w

A L A Bkl 13:29 O '16

"Mr. Boudin's writings well illustrate the vital fact which prevents socialism, as a political factor, from gaining any considerable measure of success—the fact of non-agreement. The author claims to be an orthodox socialist, and yet he is strongly opposed to some of the cardinal principles upon which the body of the orthodox socialists base their claims to a hearing. He has no sympathy for nor fellowship with those who attempt to place the blame for the present war, upon capitalism; neither does he hold capitalism or capitalists responsible for wars in general."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 11 '16 250w

"The finest single example of Marxian analysis that has appeared since the death of Marx. And it contains one notable original contribution in the form of positive theory. The present warlike stage of capitalistic civilization is the result of the increased production of iron and steel to the point at which those products become the dominant elements in determining the economic policy of the producing country."

+ New Repub 7:97 My 27 '16 2000w

N Y Br Lib News 3:38 Mr '16 30w

Pittsburgh 22:48 Ja '17 50w

R of Rs 53:503 Ap '16 20w

Springfield Republican p13 F 7 '16 90w

"In regard to the intensely interesting question of the war and socialism—socialism which its severest critics now appear to have relied on to prevent the war—Mr. Boudin's very general lectures, delivered in 1914 and published under the title of "Socialism and war," cannot give much material for concrete study." E. G. Balch

— Survey 37:91 O 28 '16 50w

BOUGHTON, ALICE C. Household arts and school lunches. il 25c Cleveland foundation. Survey committee; Russell Sage foundation. 370.91 16-16579

"This volume deals with the household arts and school lunches, bringing together all of those activities of the school which can be classified under cooking and sewing. Cleveland began in 1893 to give courses in the domestic arts. The work has been steadily developed, until now Cleveland has in all of the elementary schools this type of work for the girls in the seventh and eighth grades. . . . The very large foreign element which is to be found in the Cleveland population dictates an emphasis on this sort of training that is not always recognized in cities where the foreign population is less numerous and where the urgent problems of home economy are less obvious than they are in Cleveland. The book contains an account of the development of this work not only in the elementary schools, but also in the high schools."—El School J

El School J 17:80 O '16 650w

Pittsburgh 21:500 N '16

BOURGET, PAUL CHARLES JOSEPH. Night cometh (French title, Le sens de la mort); tr. by G; F: Lees. *$1.35 (2½c) Putnam 16-11229

This French novel has the traditional three characters, in this case a famous surgeon, his young wife, and the wife's cousin. But the trend of the novel is philosophic and its purpose seems to be to find a meaning in the sacrifice that France is now making. The two men of the story are called on to face death, one from an internal malady, the other from wounds received in battle. The doctor, whose professional and humanitarian instincts prompt him to give his services up to the last moment of his life, is quite without religious belief. The young soldier, on the other hand, lives and dies in simple and unquestioning faith in God's goodness. In the one case death is meaningless; in the other it has a glorious significance. Even so is it with France, the author seems to say; unless there is some eternal purpose back of the sacrifice, it is a reckless waste.

+ A L A Bkl 13:33 O '16

"Morbidity to the last degree, and proving that the spiritual change brought about abroad by the present war evidently cannot move the elder French artists out of their self-appointed ways."

— Army and Navy Journal 53:1513 Jl 22 '16 50w

+ Bookm 43:622 Ag '16 690w

"Such a novel as this is one to stir the reader to intellectual activity. 'The night cometh' is a novel that is founded on life as it is. It is fiction at its best; it is French fiction in its highest estate." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '16 1300w

"An excellent translation of Paul Bourget's latest novel, 'Le sens de la mort.'"

+ Cath World 103:827 S '16 330w

"One could hardly desire a book more representative of the author. It embodies the later breadth of view of Bourget with the earlier manner."

+ Dial 61:67 Jl 15 '16 680w

+ Ind 87:70 Jl 10 '16 50w

"A well-executed translation."

+ Library Association Record 18:176 Ap 15 '16 70w

+ Nation 103:38 Jl 13 '16 500w

+ New Repub 7:205 Je 24 '16 900w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 Jl '16

+ N Y Libraries 5:126 Ag '16 270w

"The characters are admirably handled, and the tale of love and agony, the moral problem, and the tangled human relations drawn with the sure skill of a master craftsman. Nevertheless, there are certain flaws which cannot be overlooked."

+ N Y Times 21:230 Je 4 '16 800w

+ N Y Times 21:502 N 26 '16 100w

"In the narration of final passion of death—two deaths so strangely contrasted—Bourget rises to the climax of rare artistic creation. One feels that Catherine Ortégue is France hesitating between her loyalty to science and the religious nostalgia that the war has poured into her heart. Bourget writes—and here we must remember the fact of his own religious conversion—that no one can prove experimentally that the faith of religious belief in the future is not well founded. Our very pain in the search after truth is a prayer. When we feel the need of God, it is because He is quite close to us."

+ R of Rs 54:124 Jl '16 300w

Spec 117:163 Ag 5 '16 10w

Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 250w

"Only those who read novels to live more fully or think more deeply will care for this one."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 100w

BOURNE, RANDOLPH SILLIMAN. Gary schools; with an introd. by W: Wirt. il *$1.15 (4c) Houghton 371.4 16-7521

The author first makes it clear that the school system of Gary is not a unique institution evolved to meet peculiar conditions. Gary is in no essential way different from any other American commercial or industrial community. Second, he shows that the Gary system is not an experiment. Superintendent Wirt had worked out the plan at Bluffton, Indiana, in the eight years preceding his coming to Gary. Mr. Bourne then goes on to an exposition of the educational idea on which the system is based. Contents: The community setting; The school plant; educating the whole child; Work, study, and play; the school as a community; Programs; the school as a public utility; Organization; Curriculum: learning by doing; Discipline: the natural school; Criticisms and evaluations. An appendix gives dates concerning expenditures, etc.; also Superintendent Wirt's report on the reorganization of the New York schools.

BOURNE, RANDOLPH SILLIMAN—Continued
+ A L A Bk1 12:404 Je '16

"Valuable where special study is being made of the system: many libraries will find sufficient material in Dewey's 'Schools of to-morrow' or the government document by Burris."
+ A L A Bk1 12:404 Je '16

"None of the reports that have come under the writer's notice has maintained the note of enthusiasm and at the same time succeeded in pointing out the shallows. 'The Gary schools' is no exception. This book is by all odds the most complete study yet published by an investigator aiming at interpretation and evaluation. Its clear analysis, admirable arrangement of material and adequate style are altogether up to what we have learned to expect of the young author. . . . Now what is the danger which this critic as well as others fails to chart properly?"
+ — Dial 61:108 Ag 15 '16 590w

"The arguments set forth by Mr. Bourne are not convincing. He thinks the problem solved. . . . Probably the author has not thoroly grasped the idea that he describes." F. A. Fitzpatrick
+ Educ R 52:524 D '16 1250w

+ Ind 87:348 S 4 '16 40w

"One cannot read Mr. Bourne's book or the chapters on Gary by Professor Dewey, of whom Superintendent Wirt was formerly a pupil, without sensing some speciousness. The language used has much the same smoothness, even unctuousness, which on the tongues of ordinary pedagogues has often degenerated into cant." H. de W. Fuller
+ — Nation 102:698 Je 29 '16 2400w

+ N Y Times 21:296 J1 23 '16 90w

+ Survey 36:541 Ag 26 '16 670w

BOURNE, RANDOLPH SILLIMAN, comp. Towards an enduring peace: a symposium of peace proposals and programs, 1914-1916; with an introd. by Franklin H. Giddings. Am. assn. for international conciliation 172.4 16-21154

"What means have been suggested and what constructive measures have been put forward to bring about a lasting peace between nations, the student of international conciliation will find fully discussed in this compilation. . . . In addition to articles from writers, such as Charles W. Eliot, Norman Angell, Rudolph Eucken, John A. Hobson and A. Laurence Lowell, the book contains the various peace proposals and programmes published during the past two years in Europe and the United States."—Cath World

A L A Bk1 13:144 Ja '17

"It presents thoroughly the best thought of the radical peace writers and workers, and gives a comprehensive view of their aims and means. . . . But while the thinker will appreciate, he cannot always commend. . . . It is most lamentable to see how religion, as an efficient agency for peace, has been forgotten or deliberately put aside by modern thinkers. By their silence they are denying the one thing necessary."
+ — Cath World 104:404 D '16 330w

"We know of no book that will more speedily and more accurately inform the inquirer of what is hoped for by those eager men and women who are looking beyond the present heavy clouds of war."
+ Educ R 52:530 D '16 60w

+ Ind 88:243 N 6 '16 100w

"A very useful compilation of essays and documents, many of which are not easily accessible elsewhere."
+ Int J Ethics 27:268 Ja '17 80w

"The interesting thing about these various peace proposals is their striking unanimity. . . . A large number of them insist upon at least the following points: no annexation except with the consent of the population annexed, popular control of international relations, development of international arbitration courts, limitation of armaments."

+ Nation 104:47 Ja 11 '17 160w

BOUTROUX, ÉMILE. Philosophy and war; auth. tr. by Fred Rothwell. 11 *4s 6d Constable & co., London 940.91

(Eng ed 16-18503)

"While combating the idea that German philosophers of the past can be held responsible for the use which is now being made of their doctrines, it does not follow, says M. Émile Boutroux, 'that there is nothing in the writings of these great men to afford the slightest pretext for the present aberrations.' In his chapters on 'German thought,' 'German science,' 'Certitude and truth,' and 'War and sophistry' he traces the influence of those writings on the German people, until they have come 'to regard the war as the culmination of their philosophy.' Other articles are 'The spirit of France,' 'The French conception of nationality,' and 'After the war.'—Spec

"It is a pity that M. Boutroux did not amplify this comparison of German philosophy with Greek philosophy and the Greek spirit. All that he says upon this subject is admirable. His condemnation of German politics, German warfare, the German nation, suffers from his application of his philosophical conclusions without further contact with evidence. And he comes very near to glorifying war for its own sake (pp. 139, 151). His chapters on this war, and on the virtues of his nation, reveal all the conventional attitudes." T. S. Eliot
+ — Int J Ethics 27:128 O '16 350w

N Y Br Lib News 3:154 O '16 30w

N Y Times 22:10 Ja 14 '17 670w

"Philosophy in its technical aspect is beyond readers who have not been trained to it; but if it can be made accessible to such readers, it will be by books like this, which exhibit the admirable lucidity and clearness of the trained French mind."
+ Sat R 122:186 Ag 19 '16 220w

+ Spec 117:136 J1 29 '16 140w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p233 My 18 '16 750w

BOWEN, MARJORIE, pseud. (GABRIELLE MARGARET VERE CAMPBELL). Shadows of yesterday. *$1.50 Dutton 16-24323

"Twelve costume-stories of passion and incident, supposed to be woven round the trinkets in an old museum. The regency, the reign of Charles II, eighteenth-century Venice, Paris in 1747, the battle of Sedgemoor, Exeter in 1719, Spain early in the seventeenth century, Scotland and Florence at the same date, provide the setting; and we come across Lady Castlemaine, Lord Muskerry, Lord Pawlet, Cardinal Duplessis, and others known to history."—Ath

Ath p286 Je '16 70w

+ Boston Transcript p12 O 28 '16 470w

"Her subjects are apt to be a bit gloomy, dealing with degeneracy, sudden death, and love unrequited; but she can be moving as well as startling, as her 'Petronilla' proves; and she does at times show a strain of grim humor as in 'The town lady,' which even at its grimmest is relatively mirth-provoking."
+ Dial 61:588 D 23 '16 520w

+ Ind 88:127 O 16 '16 50w

"The reader who insists upon pleasantness will find little or nothing to her taste here, but there is a good deal for a reader who has a relish for the sombre side of romance. The tales are skillfully told, with an occasional slip in point of style. The writer's trick of paragraphing almost every sentence gives an effect of cheapness which is less than the stories deserve."
+ — Nation 103:466 N 16 '16 250w

+ N Y Times 21:380 S 24 '16 330w

+ Spec 117:107 J1 22 '16 30w

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 19 '16 220w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (BERTHA MUZZY SINCLAIR) (MRS. BERTRAND WILLIAM SINCLAIR). Heritage of the Sioux. il *$1.35 (2½c) Little 16-18915

Another story of the Flying U, and the moving picture business. The members of the "Happy family" are in New Mexico making pictures under the direction of Luck Lindsay. All might have gone well had not Luck unwittingly hurt the feelings of Annie-Many-Ponies who was already inclined to be jealous of Jean Douglas, the leading woman. He made a mistake too in giving Ramon Chavez a part in the bank robbing scene, for it opened up the way for a real robbery, and when Ramon disappears with the gold he takes Annie with him, deceiving her with offers of marriage. The "heritage of the Sioux" is the spirit which prompts the Indian girl to work revenge on her enemy when she finds him out and to give her life for her true friend.

"An entertaining tale, exciting and amusing and just a little tragic."

+ Ind 88:76 O 9 '16 40w

"The story is mildly entertaining, and will no doubt please those who enjoyed the earlier books."

N Y Times 21:395 O 1 '16 230w

+ — Springfield Republican p15 Ja 14 '17 240w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (BERTHA MUZZY SINCLAIR) (MRS. BERTRAND WILLIAM SINCLAIR). Phantom herd. il *$1.30 (2c) Little 16-8232

Luck Lindsay, manager of a Los Angeles film company, has an idea for a big picture. He wants to produce a picture of the real West that was, in the days of the wide and open ranges. But his employers, sure that the public wants only the make-believe West crude melodrama, refuse to listen to his plans. He falls in with the "Happy family" of the Flying U, just as they are hungry for adventure. They give him their loyal support and the story of the making of their great picture is the one the author has to tell in this book.

"Fairly good western story with plenty of action and with no love interest."

+ A L A Bk1 12:432 Je '16

"A good story—one of the best."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 3 '16 270w

Reviewed by E. E. Hale

Dial 61:26 Je 22 '16 160w

"In realism of detail, she leaves little to be desired. She writes with a good deal of vigor and handles her story well. What she lacks is a sense for character."

+ — Nation 103:156 Ag 17 '16 250w

+ N Y Times 21:244 Je 11 '16 250w

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 150w

BOWERS, CLAUDE GERNADE. Irish orators. il *$1.50 (1c) Bobbs 941.5 16-11590

The story of Ireland's fight for freedom is told in the lives of nine Irish orators, Henry Flood, Henry Grattan, John Philpot Curran, Lord Plunkett, Robert Emmet, Daniel O'Connell, Thomas Francis Meagher, Isaac Butt, and Charles Stewart Parnell. The author says: "I have tried to set forth through the studies of these nine men all the essential facts in the history of Ireland from the middle of the eighteenth to the beginning of the present century." A brief concluding chapter covers the quarter of a century between the death of Parnell and the present. The author leaves the situation as it was at the beginning of the war, saying in conclusion, "The Irish race, looking back over the century and a half that we have traced, has no apology to make to history—and the fight goes on!"

A L A Bk1 13:30 O '16

Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '16 400w

+ Cath World 103:833 S '16 340w

"The author writes in a glowing, vigorous, and eloquent style, and has produced a most interesting work; but the instincts of the historian, whose purpose is to present all the truth, he apparently does not possess. There is another side to the Irish question, which is also important, but which Mr. Bowers wholly ignores."

+ — Dial 60:554 Je 8 '16 550w

N Y Br Lib News 3:90 Je '16

"The recent émeute in Ireland gives to Mr. Bowers's volume a peculiar timeliness, for the work enables the reader to get in a book of five hundred pages a fairly comprehensive review of the political conditions and developments that have evolved the Ireland of today."

+ — N Y Times 21:242 Je 11 '16 650w

"It is impossible not to be inspired and uplifted by the account of the lives of these Irish leaders."

+ R of Rs 54:119 Jl '16 300w

BOWERS, EDWIN FREDERICK. Alcohol, its influence on mind and body. *$1.25 (3½c) Clode, E. J. 178 16-13755

Valuable for prohibition propaganda as well as for individual enlightenment on the evils of modest drinking this volume entirely discredits the stimulant-value, food-value and therapeutic-value theories of alcohol. The writer cites experiments which show that alcohol does not stimulate mental quickness but is rather a depressant; that, taken as a food or as medicine, it destroys all organic life; and that industry sustains huge losses because of the inefficiency induced by even the moderate drinking habit. The last chapter is on constructive and remedial lines, postulating that for every drunkard in the world there is a cure.

A L A Bk1 13:55 N '16

Ind 87:103 Jl 17 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:108 Jl '16

"The book is full of meat and the meat is spiced with epigram." Elizabeth Tilton

+ Survey 36:528 Ag 19 '16 220w

"Not superior to earlier books but differs considerably in content from any other, and is written in very popular style."

Wis Lib Bull 12:318 Jl '16 60w

BOWERS, EDWIN FREDERICK. Side-stepping ill health. *$1.35 (3½c) Little 616 16-7510

"The author discusses the more common ailments and their causes, presenting the important facts a person should know about them. Thus he explains the various kinds of colds and what to do for them, the reasons for 'that tired feeling,' and how to overcome it, and the causes of headache and how to avoid it. Two important chapters are devoted to a thorough discussion of insomnia and nervousness."—Springfield Republican

Reviewed by M. P. Allison

+ Bookm 43:207 Ap '16 240w

"Dr. Bowers writes 'good stuff' from the standpoint of any editor who is supplying his readers with points on how to prevent sickness and, in less degree, how to cure one's self when stricken down. He has a popular and racy style. In places he even becomes real 'sassy.' Some of his chapter headings are illuminating: 'Side-stepping stoutness,' 'Push the health button,' 'The quest of beauty.'"

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 22 '16 530w

+ Ind 88:30 O 2 '16 50w

+ Lit D 52:1852 Je 24 '16 160w

"An ill-balanced jumble of truth and error which the well-informed reader may disentangle, if he thinks the effort worth while, but what the uninformed reader may make of it is a curious matter of speculation."

— Nation 102:sup501 My 4 '16 200w

"A most useful book to have in the home. The chapters on insomnia and on the care of the teeth are worth the price of the book."

+ R of Rs 54:123 Jl '16 110w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 20 '16 130w

"As casual readers, we might enjoy the clever things of the book. As critics, we cannot overlook the erratic and inaccurate statements that fill these pages."

— + Survey 37:178 N 18 '16 240w

BOWLEY, ARTHUR LYON. Nature and purpose of the measurement of social phenomena. *3s 6d P. S. King, London

"This little volume of some 240 pages contains the substance of five public lectures given in the Faculty of economics in the University of London in 1914." (Ath) "Some of the subjects discussed are: the best method of dividing geographical area for the purposes of enumerating the population; the classification of persons according to the occupation and industry in which they are engaged; the division of the population into economic families; the social classification of the population; the classification of families according to income; the nature of family income; the measurement of consumption; the definition of the standard of living; the relation of the minimum standards to poverty; the methods of measuring the economic progress of a nation. The difficulties and pitfalls which the investigator must avoid are pointed out with great clearness and while few direct rules are laid down, many necessary lines of procedure are pointed out in a more or less definite way." (Am Econ R)

"The book actually deals with the United Kingdom, but the principles laid down are, in most respects, equally applicable to similar studies conducted in other nations. The chief merit of Mr. Bowley's work lies in the fact that the topics covered are dealt with more specifically and definitely than in the writings of his predecessors and that the ideas presented are brought together and discussed as a unit rather than in scattered fragments. Governmental officials engaged in statistical inquiries should find the work especially helpful." W. I. King
+ Am Econ R 5:915 D '15 330w

"The author has departed from the standard of his previous books and attempted to write a popular book on statistics. The result of his effort is an interesting combination of statistical technicalities and explanations of the most elementary character. The book was aimed to reach a group of social workers. It is improbable that they will get from it a working knowledge of statistical method."

— Ann Am Acad 61:295 S '15 60w

"The book is very lucidly written. But here and there a concise phrase, charming to the mathematically trained mind, may trouble the mind of the earnest, but non-mathematical reader. A few explanatory words would smooth the way for him, and might well be added in the new edition that will certainly be called for."

+ Ath 1915,1:460 My 22 1300w

"A most useful manual for the thoughtful social servant." R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 13:904 JI '15 50w

"The book is thoroughly readable. Its brevity, its pleasant lecture style, its skilful epitomizing of statistical rules and principles permit one to read the whole work over at a sitting. Mr. Bowley of the standard of living. He has touched the subject at only one or two points, it is true; but what he has written is consistent, incisive, and clarifying." J. A. Field

+ J Pol Econ 24:408 Ap '16 730w

"Especially those who gather data, but also those who seek to weigh the significance and limitations of facts already gathered, will find these pages full of illuminating suggestions and timely warnings, meant to promote the scientific character and practical results of their work." R. E. Chaddock

+ Pol Sci Q 31:334 Je '16 430w

BOWLEY, ARTHUR LYON, and BURNETT-HURST, ALEXANDER ROBERT. Livelihood and poverty; with an introd. by R. H. Tawney. (Ratan Tata foundation) *$1.40 Macmillan 331.8 (Eng ed 15-13866)

"Northampton with its shoe industry, Warrington with its iron and steel, its chemical and its brewing industries, Stanley, as a center of the coal trade in the great mining county of Durham, and Reading, a large center in the biscuit trade, are typical English industrial towns. . . . In each of these large towns . . . the method of investigation has been to take a certain proportion of the working-class homes and make house-to-house inquiries in accordance with a uniform schedule of queries. . . . Householders generally were surprisingly ready to submit to unofficial investigation. . . . Most of the large employers of labor were equally accommodating in checking or supplementing wage figures. The result of an enormous amount of careful investigation, on lines much like those adopted in the Rowntree investigation at York, is a volume of data—all skilfully marshaled in text or tabular form—of great value in determining working-class conditions in England."—Pol Sci Q

"Cautiously written, thoroughly considered, well founded upon carefully planned tables, this book is one which inspires confidence. It is full of interesting facts and fertile suggestion." F. H. Streightoff

+ Am Econ R 5:899 D '15 820w

"In the short space of two years the Ratan Tata foundation (University of London) has produced a valuable series of reports on uninvestigated aspects of poverty. The latest of its publications does not so much open up a new subject as supplement existing knowledge. . . . If, for purposes of illustration, we nevertheless regard the manual labourers of the four towns as living in one, we find that 32 per cent. of the adult males at the time of inquiry (1913) were earning less than 24s. a week, and that 27 per cent. of the children were living in families which fail to reach the standard taken as necessary for healthy existence."

+ Ath 1915,1:309 Ap 3 400w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

Hibbert J 13:904 JI '15 130w

"With the outbreak of the war the Bowley-Burnett-Hurst study of economic and social conditions in these four towns has a value that its authors could not have contemplated when they were engaged on their field research; for at the end of the war a new epoch in English history—political, economic and social—will begin which must outrank in importance the epochs that began with the revolution of 1688, the American revolution, the end of the Napoleonic wars and the Reform act of 1832." E. Porritt

+ Pol Sci Q 30:518 S '15 630w

"To those who are arming themselves for battle against the poverty in our midst that weakens us as a nation at the core it will provide an array of facts and figures that will be of good service."

+ Spec 115:667 N 13 '15 670w

BOWSFIELD, COLVIN CULLEN. How boys and girls can earn money. *$1 (1½c) Forbes 331.3 16-21570

"There are bad ways and good ways of earning money," says the author. His purpose in this book is to point out, particularly for the benefit of those young people who want to pay their way thru school and college, some of the better ways in which they may turn their time and talents to account. Home-made candies, basketry, raffia wares, photography, flowers, medicinal plants, pop corn, vegetables, canned fruits, poultry, Belgian hares, woodwork, etc., are suggested as means of adding to one's income.

+ A L A Bk1 13:180 Ja '17

+ Dial 61:548 D 14 '16 100w

+ Ind 83:406 D 4 '16 50w

+ Lit D 53:1612 D 16 '16 70w

"This book covers a variety of subjects rather superficially, but may be suggestive to some boys and girls of means of earning and saving money and, as the author suggests, may indicate aptitude and fitness for some permanent vocation." Useful in city or country."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 40w

BOX, REV. GEORGE HERBERT. Virgin birth² of Jesus. *$2 (4c) Young ch. 232

"A critical examination of the gospel-narrative of the nativity, and other New Testament and early Christian evidence, and the alleged influence of heathen ideas." (Sub-title) The author is lecturer in Rabbinical Hebrew, King's college, London, and the book has a foreword by the Bishop of London, who gives the following summing up of the author's achievements in the work: "He proves to demonstration that the story arose in the Judaeo-Christian atmosphere, an atmosphere entirely inconsistent with the suggestion that the story was a repetition of a heathen myth; he once again deals with the argument brought against the story from the 'silence' of St. Mark, St. John, and St. Paul; he shews how mutually destructive are the theories of those who try to explain how the story arose from mythical or legendary antecedents, and, in a concluding section, draws out the doctrinal significance of the great belief."

"These contentions form the bulk of Mr. Box's case, which is argued with great sobriety and abundant scholarship. But at this point the reasoning takes a sudden leap: 'As no source for these stories has been discovered, the facts as related must be historical.' This conclusion is much too dogmatic. . . . Perhaps the most important pages in the book are those given to the canticles in Luke, chaps. 1, 2; the treatment here is excellent. On the other hand, singularly little space is devoted to the value of the doctrine in question; many readers will wonder justly how such importance was gained by a tenet which (p. 136) formed no part of the apostolic preaching." B. S. E.

+ — Am J Theol 20:624 O '16 400w

"In this little book by G. H. Box, the well-known Hebraist, author of a commentary on Isaiah, some lesser volumes, and learned articles in magazines and Bible dictionaries—we have a contribution of great value. . . . The examination of the Talmud and of Christian Apocrypha is interesting and suggestive. The whole book is written in a clear and pleasing style, tangled questions being relegated to the notes and appendices. The volume ought to find a place on the shelf of the parish priest." C. C. E.

+ Bull of the General Theological Seminary 3:104 D '16 330w

BOYD, CLARENCE EUGENE. Public libraries and literary culture in ancient Rome. *$1 Univ. of Chicago press 027.437 15-24935

A monograph concerned with the history, equipment, contents, management, object and cultural significance of the Roman public library. While the first four centuries A. D. comprise the entire period under consideration, it is with the first one hundred and fifty years of the empire that the treatise has chiefly to do. The writer finds from his sources—miscellaneous data gleaned from classical literature, inscriptions and monuments—that of the twenty-eight, possibly twenty-nine, libraries flourishing in Rome in the fourth century, only nine can be identified in name and only seven in location.

Ath p537 N '16 70w

Cleveland p144 D '16 30w

"The book shows laborious scholarship and patient research, with an impressive array of classical quotations, chiefly in the form of footnotes. Two pages of bibliography and five of index conclude the volume."

+ Dial 61:31 Je 22 '16 230w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16

Pittsburgh 21:364 J1 '16 20w

Pratt p5 Ja '17 10w

+ Springfield Republican p8 S 22 '16 80w

BOYD, ERNEST A. Ireland's literary renaissance. *$2.50 (2c) Lane '820.9 16-22856

"The purpose of this book is to give an account of the literature produced in Ireland during the last thirty years, under the impulse of the Celtic renaissance." (Foreword) The first chapter is devoted to the precursors of the movement, James Clarence Mangan and Sir Samuel Ferguson; the second and third to sources, the fourth to the transition period and the fifth to the revival itself. Three chapters are then given up to the poems, plays and prose writings of Yeats, and then follow chapters on: The revival of poetry; The Dublin mystics; The poets of the younger generation; The dramatic movement (three chapters); and Fiction and narrative prose.

"Bibliography (14p.)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:209 F '17

"The writer's view of Mr. Yeats is acute and just."

+ Ath p590 D '16 70w

"The historical and biographical data in the book he has at first hand, and he is personally acquainted with the men of whom he writes—a circumstance which puts him in possession of facts which would not be so readily at the hand of other writers. It is, in brief, a history of the great Irish literary movement from the inside." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '17 1350w

Reviewed by Van Wyck Brooks

+ Dial 61:459 N 30 '16 540w

"Beyond question, Ireland's literary renaissance is the most comprehensive, the most authoritative, and altogether the best book on its subject. . . . Those who look for a reference book, however, have a grievance. There is no index—a lack for which we see no sufficient excuse."

+ Ind 89:196 Ja 29 '17 190w

"The chief shortcoming of this otherwise serviceable work is the author's assumption of too much knowledge on the part of the reader. In order to profit fully from the book, one must have a fair familiarity with the old Irish myths and cycles as well as with the more important writers in the present movement." Philip Tillinghast

+ Pub W 90:848 S 16 '16 850w

"An index is wanting."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p551 N 16 '16 100w

"Rather a useful work in literary history than an enlarging or vivifying creation in criticism. But a useful book, a sound book, and a level book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p31 Ja 18 '17 1450w

BOYD, WILLIAM. With a field ambulance at Ypres. il *$1.25 (5c) Doran 940.91 16-22441

Letters written from March 7 to August 15, 1915. In the writer's own words the record "is a diary, written in the kitchens of French farm-houses, in muddy dug-outs, and other unromantic places, and sent home to friends from time to time. In most cases the account was written within twenty-four hours of the events described. Its sole justification is that it is a record of facts, experiences, and emotions, before the facts had become tinged with fiction, the experiences had lost their original sharpness, and the emotions had been erased by the moving finger of time." The writer says courageously that war is the great tester; that it brings out the best that is in a man, even as it also brings out the worst that is in him.

"The author of 'With a field ambulance at Ypres' is professor of pathology in the University of Manitoba. . . . He writes with a physician's quiet frankness, setting down with no effect of personal revulsion the most revolting and telling details. And his descriptions of the beauty of the quiet Belgian country, as background for these agonies, give an added force to his book."

+ N Y Times 21:575 D 31 '16 150w

"Prof. Boyd reads much of his philosophical trend of mind into his records of his French experiences, and so the book possesses a degree of distinction."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Ja 2 '17 150w

BOYLESVE, RENÉ. Gentlewoman of France; 2 tr. by Aphra Wilson. *$1.35 Brentano's (Eng ed 17-2202)

"Under its French title of 'Madeleine' this novel was crowned by the French academy and it has been printed in many French editions.

BOYLESVE, RENÉ—Continued

... Madeleine is a young Frenchwoman of the middle classes, born and reared in the province of Touraine. Because of the family poverty, her dowry is small, and at last she makes a marriage of convenience with an architect whom she scarcely knows, but who is willing to take her without a dowry. . . . In Paris she finds that her husband's friends are of a gay money-making set, and she is introduced to the gayest and fastest set of people whom she has ever imagined. . . . It is when she first discovers friends who enjoy what she enjoys that she comes into the circle where she meets the man whom she finally loves."—Boston Transcript

"The delineation of Madeleine and of the poignant emotions through which she passes is a triumph for any author to have achieved."
D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 O 14 '16 900w

"The author in this story has made a more artistic but not more thoughtful and interesting use of the theme of Canfield's 'The bent twig.'"

+ Cleveland p142 D '16 110w

N Y Br Lib News 3:183 D '16

"Although the character of the heroine-narrator is well drawn and has a certain amount of novelty, it is by no means an extraordinary piece of work, and while the analysis of her motives and feelings is both clever and subtle, it becomes tedious through innumerable repetitions."

+ — N Y Times 21:393 O 1 '16 600w

Pittsburgh 21:565 D '16 50w

"The stilted translation is particularly annoying. If the reader is able to paraphrase the translation at his pleasure he will find in 'A gentlewoman of France' what appears to be a rather conventional novel of uneven interest."

+ — Springfield Republican p13 N 19 '16 350w

BOYNTON, PERCY HOLMES. Principles of composition. *$1 Ginn 803 15-17819

This text-book is perhaps best adapted for freshman classes in college. The standard classifications have been retained in arrangement of material; there are chapters on The whole composition, The paragraph, The sentence, Diction, etc. One particular in which it departs from other texts is that it recognizes "the vital difference between reproductive statement of fact and interpretative writing." The author says, "the conviction has been growing . . . that the inclination of the high school and undergraduate mind to consider fundamentals should be turned to account, and that interpretative writing with reference to the larger concepts of life should be encouraged in rational form under guidance."

"Occasionally a book on English composition has a touch of originality and more rarely of genius. The latest book of this kind to reach us is 'Principles of composition' by Professor Percy H. Boynton of the University of Chicago."

+ Educ R 51:103 Ja '16 60w

"The greatest merit of the book seems to us to be its freedom from the conventional atmosphere and terminology of the textbook and the classroom. Its fresh and hearty tone has been secured because Professor Boynton is obviously a born teacher. The book constantly goes at the most fundamental aspects of its subject."

+ Nation 102:521 My 11 '16 1100w

"For so far as in plan and scheme he has been merely orthodox, he has been wise; and so far as in method and form he has been original, he has been constantly illuminating."

... The entire chapter on 'Sentence interest' is admirably handled. So one might go on through the book. And as he went on he would be found to comment on the vigor of the style. The objections, when one considers the value of the whole book, are trivial. No college teacher of rhetoric can afford to overlook the volume; and few but will use it somehow."
J. W. Linn

+ School R 24:80 Ja '16 800w

BRADBEER, WILLIAM WEST. Confederate and southern state currency. il $3.50 (To public libraries $3) W: W. Bradbeer, 165 N. Fulton av., Mt. Vernon, N. Y. 332.5

16-1092

This book of 162 pages contains historical, biographical, and financial data relating to the confederacy, its currency, and the men represented on the notes. There are 29 half-tone reproductions of confederate and state notes and a catalog descriptive of more than 1000 notes. The book has already found a place in leading university libraries and a second printing is called for.

J Pol Econ 24:1023 D '16 140w

BRADBY, E. D. Live of Barnave. 2v il $5.75 Oxford 15-18272

Barnave was a "noble-minded, patriotic youth of twenty-seven who came up from Dauphiné in 1789 to help establish in France a constitutional government. . . . No one, not even any Frenchman, has made so exhaustive a study of the famous Dauphiné deputy as E. D. Bradby. Mr. Bradby has been to Barnave's papers in the Archives nationales, to all the contemporary newspapers which reported the great debates in the Constituent assembly and in the political clubs, and to the mass of other material relating to the early years of the French revolution. He gives a just and convincing picture of Barnave's character—one of the most able, eloquent, genuine, and even lovable figures among the members of the Constituent assembly."—Nation

"The book is of value not only as a picture of Barnave but as a vivid account of the Constituent assembly. The background is as interesting as the main figure; there is so much of it, however, that at times Barnave himself is almost lost from sight." Eloise Ellery

+ Am Hist R 21:348 Ja '16 900w

"There are few good English biographies of French revolutionary leaders. This book adds one to the short list. It is written with complete control of the relevant printed and manuscript sources, and though there are a few weak points in the setting and gaps in the bibliography—which is of course inevitable—one could hardly wish for a more satisfactory treatment of the central figure. An important contribution not only to the study of his policy but also to the general history of the revolution is made by Miss Bradby in the sections dealing with the colonial question. The technical side of the book—notes, bibliography, list of Barnave's speeches and index—is very complete."
J. H. Clapham

+ Eng Hist R 30:733 O '15 1950w

+ Nation 101:294 S 2 '15 380w

"His misgivings as to the past and the future of the revolution are plainly to be read in the letters and speeches which Miss Bradby's book lays open to us, probably for the first time in English."

+ Spec 115:146 Jl 31 '15 1350w

BRADFORD, CHARLES BARKER. Determined angler and the brook trout. il $*1 Putnam 799 16-13666

The second edition, enlarged and illustrated, of an anthological volume of trout fishing, trout histories, trout lore, trout resorts and trout tackle—everything that the profound angler would know. The fine scorn which the angler entertains for the fisherman is everywhere apparent—a scorn which grows out of the contrast between the quantity fisher and the quality angler. The gentle philosophy of restraint permeating the volume, killing only so far as ordained by nature herself, is as valuable to the training of the real angler as the technical instruction itself.

N Y Br Lib News 3:108 Jl '16

R of Rs 54:122 Jl '16 30w

"The book is a compilation. First, the author has gathered several articles by himself that have appeared in other publications. In a way this has been an unfortunate idea. It has resulted in repetitions and redundancy that detracts from the pleasure of the book."

+ — Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 230w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL, Jr. Portraits of women. il $2.50 (5c) Houghton 920.7 16-21548

The women Mr. Bradford has chosen for portraiture are, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Lady Holland, Miss Austen, Madame d'Arblay, Mrs. Pepys, Madame de Sévigné, Madame du Defand, Madame de Choiseul, and Eugénie de Guérin. The word "portrait," he points out, is as unsatisfactory here as it was in his two earlier books. "Psychograph," he says, is the word that would better describe what he tries to give in his biographical sketches. The sketches, which are reprinted from the North American Review, the Sewanee Review and other periodicals, are preliminary to a series he expects to write on American women.

+ A L A Bkl 13:172 Ja '17

"While the essayist writes with fairness and sympathy, he seems upon his own statement to be watching the evolution of the modern woman with amusement, to say the least." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 2 '16 1100w

+ Dial 61:473 N 30 '16 210w

"One new face appears. . . Mrs. Pepys is a newcomer, and the chase for her thru the pages of her husband's diaries is a truly entertaining exercise."

+ Ind 88:506 D 18 '16 60w

"The most serious criticism of the book is that it is rather a collection of anecdotes than of portraits. . . But, so that I may not be classed with those feminine mockers whom Mr. Bradford so deeply fears, I hasten to add that the book is an agreeable, readable piece of work, in spite of its light blue cover and gilded fan, full of good things about women in whom most educated persons feel a lively interest." A. D. Miller

+ — New Repub 9:sup3 N 18 '16 780w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL, Jr. Union portraits. il $1.50 (2½c) Houghton 973.7 16-11059

A companion volume to "Confederate portraits," made up of studies of McClellan, Hooker, Meade, Thomas, Sherman, Stanton, Seward, Sumner, and Samuel Bowles. The papers are reprinted from the Atlantic Monthly, the American Historical Review and the Yale Review. Two of them, those dealing with McClellan and Hooker, called forth considerable protest on their first appearance and the author confesses that an examination of new evidence led him to modify his judgments somewhat in the case of Hooker. He has found no occasion, however, for altering his portrait of McClellan.

"Without, perhaps, conscious purpose, Mr. Bradford, in these essays, is making a study of 'Americanism.' Here is his real contribution." N. W. Stephenson

+ Am Hist R 22:187 O '16 690w

A L A Bkl 12:477 Jl '16

"He views them from both the standpoint of a later generation and of their own time. He realizes that there are two sides to every question, and especially to the all-important question of a man's deeds, motives and character, and he summons to his aid those who knew, who have spoken and written about these men. . . Mr. Bradford makes his essays as reliable as history and as picturesque as fiction." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 24 '16 1350w

+ Ind 88:74 O 9 '16 70w

Lit D 53:416 Ag 19 '16 210w

+ Nation 103:206 Ag 31 '16 340w

"At the end of one of Mr. Bradford's studies you have before you the clearest, most sharply defined portrait of the man you have ever seen."

+ N Y Times 21:259 Je 25 '16 1700w

Pittsburgh 21:294 Je '16

"In his capacity as biographer Mr. Bradford has made diligent use of the abundant materials that have come to light during the half-century that has elapsed since the close of the war. Such works as the 'Diary of Gideon Welles' and the 'Life and Letters of General Meade' have been freely drawn upon."

+ R of Rs 53:754 Je '16 170w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 580w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p27 Ja 18 '17 800w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:271 Je '16 40w

BRADLEY, WILLIAM ASPENWALL. French etchers of the second empire. il $1.50 (5½c) Houghton 767 16-25112

Essays reprinted from the Print-Collector's Quarterly to which they have been contributed within the past four years. The author says, "Though not planned as a series, they derive a certain unity from the fact that all deal with a group of French graphic artists, mainly etchers, viewed against the background of French life and letters under the second empire." Contents: Meryon and Baudelaire; Charles Meryon, poet; Maxime Lalanne; Some French etchers and sonneters; The Goncourts and their circle; Some French artists during the siege and commune; Corot as a lithographer. There are over fifty illustrations.

"A beautiful little book which will be highly prized by all artists and lovers of art." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 30 '16 950w

"The most significant pages are certainly those devoted to Mr. Bradley's estimates of Corot as a lithographer and Lalanne as an etcher. . . The entire book has distinction, that of literary style and selection."

+ Dial 62:29 Ja 11 '17 350w

"Among the illustrations of this little volume are reproductions of several etchings that have won international fame."

+ R of Rs 55:219 F '17 30w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. And thus He came; a Christmas fantasy. il $1 (8½c) Putnam 16-21938

A group of fanciful little Christmas tales. They might be called miracle stories, for in all of them the Christ appears, assuming various guises, a babe, a young boy, a workman. The stories were first copyrighted by the Pictorial Review.

Dial 61:480 N 30 '16 80w

+ Ind 88:467 D 11 '16 40w

Nation 103:520 N 30 '16 30w

"Some of the sketches are a little too melodramatic to be convincing, but Dr. Brady is a deft story-teller, and the spirit of his book is excellent."

+ N Y Times 21:523 N 26 '16 80w

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 19 '16 70w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. Baby of the frontier. il $1.25 Revell 15-20593

"One of Cyrus Townsend Brady's thrilling stories of adventure. The western prairies of pioneer days are the scene, and a stirring fight between a small party of United States troops and a large band of Cheyenne Indians forms the principal incident. This occurs at the outset while the troops are escorting an officer's wife across the plains to an army post. . . When attack is imminent, a trooper is dispatched on a wild ride to a fort for help. Then ensues a marvelous defense against tremendous odds, and, to complicate matters, a child is born to the officer's wife while the fight is under way. . . The child born amid these circumstances is later kidnapped by the Indians, and ultimately becomes the focusing object of the narrative."—Springfield Republican

"This is a familiar field to the author, who narrates a well-unfolded tale, with genuine enthusiasm and realism."

+ Ind 85:237 F 14 '16 50w

"In a note, Dr. Brady attests to the truth of the facts underlying his plot. His principal object, however, is to pay a deserved tribute to the 'hard-fighting, uncommon soldiers of the small but 'unmatched regular army' who braved the perils of the frontier and conquered the aborigines to make homes for the growing population. It is a live and characteristically entertaining Brady story."

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND —Continued

+ Springfield Republican p13 D 20 '15 290w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. and BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND, JR. Web of steel. il *$1.35 (1½c) Revell 16-8231

Of the two authors of this story, father and son, one is a novelist, one a civil engineer. The story they tell is that of the Meades, father and son, who are associated in the building of a bridge. Bertram Meade, senior, is an engineer of international reputation. Bertram Meade, the son, is just at the beginning of a promising career. The bridge means much to him in his profession; but it means something more, for Helen Illingworth is to become his wife at its completion. But the work goes wrong; there has been a miscalculation, and the bridge falls. The shock kills the older man and the younger, to save his father's name, assumes the responsibility. His career is ruined, but, unable to leave the profession he loves, he takes a place as rodman on a piece of construction work in the West. Here, in a crisis, he redeems himself, and in the meantime Helen, who has never believed him to blame, has succeeded in clearing him of responsibility in the other case.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 24 '16 420w

"The hero and the story alike are marred by leading the hero into a series of downright lies to save the reputation of his dead father at the expense of his own reputation, the happiness of the heroine and scientific truth."

+ — Engin N 75:750 Ap 20 '16 650w

"The first eight chapters of the novel are tedious reading, but after the authors reach the dramatic incident of the bridge failure and the consequences the story moves rapidly and holds the reader's interest to the end."

+ — Engin Rec 73:555 Ap 22 '16 200w

"The Cyrus Townsend Bradys have taken two magnificently dramatic romances of engineering and diluted them with a very bad love story. 'Web of steel,' so long as it deals with engineers in the wilderness is interesting. The fall of a great bridge and the heroic struggle to save a dam are well told. The men in these scenes are real, but we could dispense with the other characters without a tear."

+ — Ind 68:220 My 8 '16 70w

"The descriptions of both bridge- and dam-building are too lengthy, but the story is 'gripping.' Bertram's devotion and loyalty to his father are appealing. The younger of the authors has made clear the engineer's complete obsession."

+ — Lit D 53:75 J1 8 '16 260w

+ N Y Times 21:190 My 7 '16 830w

Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 150w

BRADY, WILLIAM. Personal health: a doctor book for discriminating people. *$1.50 (1c) Saunders 613 16-19438

"An experience of fifteen years' private and hospital practice, writing on medical subjects for the popular magazines, and especially conducting a daily 'Health talk' department in the press through the efficient management of the National newspaper service, is the author's warrant and assurance for offering this little book." (Preface) The book is popular in the best sense; it is sane and wholesome and its advice if followed would promote better living. Among the subjects considered are: The teeth and the mouth; The catching "cold"; Adenoids and tonsils; Catarrhal conditions; Heat and ventilation; The air we breathe and how we don't; The hygienic answer to the question: What shall I wear? Underweight and overweight; First aid in emergencies; The medicine cupboard.

BRADY, WILLIAM A. Fighting man. il *$1.50 (3½c) Bobbs 16-22056

"I practically began my career as a 'peanut butcher' on the Southern Pacific railroad," says

William A. Brady, theatrical manager, in this book of reminiscences. "To-day I am paying the railroads of the United States something like four hundred thousand dollars a year for the transporting of my companies of players and properties." The statement is characteristic of the whole book. Its author is a successful man who measures his achievements in terms of magnitude and money. He is the man who managed "Way down east" for nineteen years, making the play yield a million or more in profits. His other undertakings were on an equal scale. His reminiscences are concerned with stars of the stage and the prize ring and he has no hesitancy in revealing the methods by which success is sometimes attained in both these spheres.

"In his revelatory book, doctored here and there, one suspects, by a shrewd press-agent (it reads like a heart-to-heart talk over a bar), Mr. Brady shows himself a typically impulsive and generous American. He does not show himself as exactly an arbiter of taste in the drama."

New Repub 8:306 O 21 '16 500w

+ N Y Times 22:6 Ja 7 '17 460w

"There are frequent crudities in the telling, and the story is somewhat marred by traces of the author's self-satisfaction, but for all that the narrative seldom fails to be vivid, picturesque and entertaining."

+ — Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 550w

BRAGDON, CLAUDE FAYETTE. Four-dimensional vistas. *$1.25 Knopf 133 16-7943

"'Four-dimensional vistas,' by Claude Bragdon, author of 'Projective ornament' and 'A primer of higher space,' is the outcome of Mr. Bragdon's practical experience as an architect and of his research in science, psychology, and metaphysics. It endeavors to throw light on the mathematical concept of the fourth dimension, to show us a fourth dimension of space that is the home of our future freedom. . . . Transcendental physics, Curved time, Sleep and dreams, The night side of consciousness, Eastern teaching, The mystics, Genius, and The gift of freedom are some of the chapter headings."

—R of Rs

Cleveland p85 J1 '16 10w

"His most notable trait is inability to distinguish between words and facts, and between vague desires and actual circumstances."

— Nation 103:244 S 7 '16 750w

Pittsburgh 21:594 D '16 30w

"Marvelously interesting book."

+ R of Rs 54:236 Ag '16 140w

BRAGDON, CLAUDE FAYETTE. Projective ornament. il $1.50 Knopf 745 15-19313

"Mr. Claude Bragdon, the architect, suggests a new 'form language' for the decorative arts, to be developed from geometry. He maintains his thesis more successfully by means of illustrations than by his text. This volume, added to Mr. Bragdon's 'Primer of higher space,' and 'The beautiful necessity,' will suggest to the decorative artist many new and beautiful, as well as artistic, forms of design."—Dial

+ — Dial 60:85 Ja 20 '16 70w

+ R of Rs 53:764 Je '16 200w

"From the equilateral triangle, square, pentagon, and curves derived from number sequences, the author evolves fascinating designs recalling the work of the Moors but surpassing in ordered complexity their most intricate patterns. The text is learned; some of the terms used are impressive—pentanedroid, hypertetrahedron, and icositetrahedroid, to say nothing of hypercube and tesseract; but the argument is conclusive, and the illustrations, pen-drawn by Mr. Bragdon himself, are of sparkling beauty."

+ School Arts Magazine 15:298 D '15 200w

BRAILSFORD, HENRY NOEL. War of steel and gold; a study of the armed peace. *80c Macmillan 940.91

"An admirable discussion of world politics, of the real causes of the war, of the stakes of diplomacy, the balance of power, the forces which control foreign policies, especially the part played by finance. The original work was written before the war. To this, the third edition, the author has added a postscript on peace and change with occasional notes to the original chapters, and a tentative outline of a federal league."—Ann Am Acad

"Suffices to establish its author's reputation as a political seer and prophet of the first class. This thoughtful work is to be classed with a few others, like Perris' 'War traders,' 'War and democracy' by Messrs. Seton-Watson, Wilson, Zimmern and Greenwood, and J. A. Hobson's 'Imperialism,' books that reveal some of the most fundamental forces underlying the rivalries of modern states and producing the present struggle for world-empire." C. H. Levermore
+ Am Econ R 6:430 Je '16 280w

"A keen analysis of the economic problems of imperialism, war and peace, written in a brilliant style with a masterly grasp of the vital issue. It is the best book of its kind that has recently appeared." K. F. G.
+ Ann Am Acad 65:312 My '16 120w

"A brilliant and suggestive study of British foreign policy of recent years." R. P. Farley
+ Hibbert J 14:196 O '15 90w

"While the book will not be accepted by economists and students of public law as an authoritative exposition of the problems with which it deals, it does give expression to a suggestive point of view concerning the relation between foreign investment and international affairs."

+ — Pol Sci Q 30:546 S '15 260w
+ Spec 113:676 N 14 '14 20w

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM STANLEY, comp.
Anthology of magazine verse for 1916, and year book of American poetry. $1.50 Gomme 811.08

In the introduction to the 1916 anthology Mr. Braithwaite considers the influence of the more radical schools of verse-writing on the general trend of modern poetry. In his own judgments he tends towards the conservative, but he recognizes that the innovators have infused something new into poetry. He says, "I have found in my examination of the magazines for the past year that a freer movement has taken place all through our poetry. There is less of the strict conventional regularity, which does not mean that the traditional patterns of verse have been abandoned, but that the poets are using rhythm with more flexibility." In addition to the poems selected from the magazines of the year, the book contains a list of volumes of poems published during 1916, a list of books about poetry, reviews of fifteen important volumes of poetry, and a list of magazine articles and reviews.

"As a book of reference, it is invaluable; the compiler has an unbelievably catholic taste." Clement Wood

+ N Y Call p15 Ja 21 '17 2000w

"If there is a single impression left by the anthology of the best poems of the year it is one of sincerity." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 90:2082 D 9 '16 700w

BRASSEY, THOMAS BRASSEY, 1st earl.
Brassey's naval annual, 1916; conducted by Earl Brassey; ed. by John Leyland. war ed il '10s Clowes, London 359

"A work of reference on naval affairs generally, with a capable exposition of the course of the war, from both the naval and diplomatic points of view. The strategy of the war is discussed, with a study of the blockade question, new developments of machinery, and aircraft. The ship tables, diagrams, and ordnance section are compiled to May 1. The final part includes a collection of official British, American, and German papers on the question of blockades, armed merchantmen, submarines, &c., as well as the official dispatches on the operations."—Ath

+ Ath p279 Je '16 90w

"The British ship plans and pictures which appeared in last year's issue have 'by order of the admiralty' been withdrawn from the present volume. . . . In our judgment, in many respects, the most important of the chapters in Part 1 is that on 'The neutrals and the war.' This is from the competent and incisive pen of Sir Francis T. Piggott, late chief justice of the supreme court of Hong-Kong, and, as the preface says of him, 'a high authority on the rights of belligerents and the position of neutrals.' It is at once luminous in exposition and trenchant in argument, and yet it is judicial and authoritative in both aspects. It should be read by everyone who wishes to understand the substantial foundation of equity, justice, and positive rights on which has been gradually built up the blockade and contraband policy of the Allies and the comparative weakness of the criticism with which that policy has been assailed in the United States."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p267 Je 8 '16 1050w

BREARLEY, HARRY CHASE. Fifty years of a civilizing force. il $2.50 (3½c) Stokes 368 16-13170

An historical and a critical study of the work of the National board of fire underwriters. It is claimed for the National board that its history exemplifies American business evolution. Unregulated competition tended gradually toward organization; organization developed to the point of monopolistic control; then, thru the abuse of monopolistic power, disintegration began and a reorganization on a basis of public service was brought about by natural causes. One of the claims which the National board makes to the title "civilizing force" is based on this process of evolution. It was the first business organization that learned "to read self-interest in the larger terms of public service." Further it has been a force that has worked for "conservation." There is an introduction by Wilbur E. Mallalieu, general manager of the National board of fire underwriters, and historical appendices, compiled by D. N. Handy, librarian of the Insurance library of Boston.

A L A Bkl 13:147 Ja '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '16 270w

N Y Br Lib News 3:108 Jl 16

St Louis 15:10 Ja '17

BREASTED, JAMES HENRY. Ancient times, a history of the early world. il $1.60 Ginn 930 16-17392

In this work, called in its sub-title "an introduction to the study of ancient history and the career of early man," the author has attempted to adapt style and subject matter to the comprehension of first-year high school pupils. He says: "In dealing with each civilization a sufficient framework of political organization and of historical events has been laid down; but the bulk of the space has been devoted to the life of man in all its manifestations—society, industry, commerce, religion, art, literature. These things are so presented as to make it clear how one age grows out of another, and how each civilization profits by that which has preceded it." The five parts of the book take up: The earliest Europeans; The Orient; The Greeks; The Mediterranean world in the Hellenistic age and the Roman republic; The Roman empire. Bibliographical references for each chapter are given at the close. A part of the author's treatment of the ancient world in "Outlines of European history, part 1" has been incorporated in this work.

+ Ath p549 N '16 80w

"From its astonishingly beautiful frontispiece to its last footnote, the book is of absorbing interest. . . . The reader is not only enticed to read, but compelled to remember. Dr. Breasted has succeeded in saturating the whole volume with his own fascinating personality."

+ School Arts Magazine 16:126 N '16 170w

"Has an excellent pronouncing vocabulary. This, taken in connection with the many valuable illustrations accompanied by careful and

BREASTED, JAMES HENRY—Continued
full explanations, the copious supply of colored maps, the scholarly treatment, and the interesting style, makes it a textbook of a very high type for schools still desiring to follow the course of study proposed by the Committee of seven, some eighty years ago, which, it should be said, an enormous majority are yet following." R. M. Tryon

+ School R 24:772 D '16 380w

"The book is concise, comprehensive and simply worded, three excellent virtues in a text book. . . . A large bibliography adds to the usefulness of the book."

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 12 '16 150w

BREBNER, PERCY JAMES. Master detective.
*$1.35 (1½c) Dutton 16-8226

The first collection of "Christopner Quarles" stories was published in 1914. This book is made up of fifteen short stories that chronicle his later adventures. Christopher Quarles is a professor of philosophy in a London college. Criminal investigation had at one time been his hobby, but he has long since given it up. Young Murray Wigan of Scotland Yard, baffled by the case of Sir Grenville Rusholm, whose body ready for burial has disappeared from its coffin, succeeds in rousing the professor's interest and tempting him back to his old pursuits. Once roused he is not satisfied until this and several more mysterious cases have been settled.

"Above the average in interest and ingenuity."

+ A L A Bkl 12:428 Je '16

"The whole network of clues and dramatic surprises hold the reader's interest through the entire series of stories."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 20 '16 160w

+ Cath World 103:407 Je '16 40w

+ Ind 86:305 My 22 '16 60w

"Some of the tales are very poor, but others puzzle and mislead the reader quite successfully, especially 'The disappearance of Mme. Vatroski' and 'The affair of the jeweled chalice.'"

+ N Y Times 21:236 Je 4 '16 200w

"Each story is interesting, and the professor's methods of investigation create an atmosphere of excited anticipation."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 23 '16 150w

BRENT, CHARLES HENRY, bp. Master builder. il $4 Longmans 16-4588

The term "master builder" is here applied to Henry Yates Satterlee, bishop of Washington, by his biographer, bishop of the Philippine islands. "His book evades the coolly selective and somewhat official reserve of Dean Hodges's recent biography of Bishop Potter, if it may not be said to include almost too much of personal fact. . . . Dr. Brent observes the practice of letting the subject speak at almost every point for himself." (Nation)

"His later letters from Nauheim are full of interest even to the casual reader, and reveal better than anything else the real nature and the greatness of the writer." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p9 F 26 '16 790w

"The book is well illustrated and indexed."

+ Dial 61:72 Jl 15 '16 170w

"The deserved appreciation of Dr. Satterlee's constructive ability, declared in the very title, has led the biographer to see the whole material in its light."

+ Nation 102:547 My 18 '16 670w

St Louis 14:198 My '16

"Anything from the pen of the bishop of the Philippine islands is worthy of serious consideration. In 'A master builder,' Dr. Charles H. Brent has entered most successfully into a new field of literary endeavor."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 16 '16 1500w

"He rightly keeps in view the larger interests of the church to which he belongs and enables the reader to learn much of its work and methods. This gives the book a special value to the English reader, who frequently finds it difficult to understand the organization and spirit of that branch of the Anglican communion which has its home in the United States. Here he will learn much of its parish work in country and city as well as gain a clearer notion of the larger problems which confront its leaders."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p164 Ap 6 '16 1450w

BREWER, DANIEL CHAUNCEY. Rights and duties of neutrals; a discussion of principles and practices. *$1.25 (3½c) Putnam 341.3 16-4435

International law as it now stands has been largely framed by belligerent nations while in an abnormal state of stress. It should be directed and controlled by neutral nations in a normal state. But neutral nations to enforce their will on the belligerents must have force behind them. Hence Mr. Brewer's argument leads up to the necessity for preparedness. The book, based partly on articles written for the Army and Navy Journal, has chapters on: Neutral influence and freedom of the seas; The doctrine of search; The "Lusitania" matter; Belligerent use of neutral flags; Blockade; Carriage of contraband, etc.

"His discussion of the unsatisfactory character of the present rules of contraband and the difficulties encountered in their practical application forms the most interesting part of the book. The style is obscure and the few conclusions drawn are wholly negative."

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:580 Ag '16 130w

Reviewed by K. F. Geiser

+ Ann Am Acad 69:288 Ja '17 70w

Boston Transcript p24 Mr 8 '16 500w

+ Educ R 52:424 N '16 30w

"It is hard to reach any other conclusion than that the author's knowledge of his subject is very superficial. . . . He refers, for example, to the somewhat untrustworthy Oppenheim as his principal authority, while he passes over in silence Professor Oppenheim's master and predecessor, the great John Westlake. . . . Again, in the discussion of contraband, no reference is made to reprisals, which are the very heart of the matter. Yet the author has a good sense of proportion, and presents some of the more difficult questions in a readable form."

+ Nation 104:53 Ja 11 '17 300w

N Y Times 21:132 Ap 9 '16 330w

R of Rs 53:501 Ap '16 100w

St Louis 14:177 My '16

Reviewed by the Earl of Cromer

Spec 116:606 My 13 '16 370w

"One new feature is discussed which has not heretofore had the attention of international lawyers. This has to do with the plotting of foreign belligerent agents in a neutral country."

Springfield Republican p6 Jl 10 '16 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p179 Ap 13 '16 80w

BREWER, JOHN M. Oral English. *$1 Ginn 808.5 16-6014

The purpose of the course of study outlined in this textbook is to fit pupils, not for public speaking careers, but for the demands of everyday life. It aims to give them "the point of view of the modern, active man or woman of the world, who must talk a great deal and wishes to do it with businesslike simplicity and brevity." Part 1, devoted to Planning and delivering the common kinds of talks, has chapters on: Argument for beginners; The speaker's appearance before the audience; Improving the vocabulary; Simple business talks, etc. Part 2 takes up Argumentation and parliamentary law. Appendixes give directions for arranging and conducting a debate, Propositions for debate, etc.

Dial 61:32 Je 22 '16 130w

Ind 87:233 Ag 14 '16 70w

"A really good book."

+ Nation 102:sup490 My 4 '16 180w

Pratt p35 Ja '17 10w

"Best fitted to high-school use."

+ School R 24:406 My '16 60w

BRIDGES, HORACE JAMES. Some outlines of the religion of experience; a book for laymen and the unchurched. *$1.50 Macmillan 201 16-17482

"Not experiential religion, but the experience of mankind with religions is the concern of the lecturer of the Chicago ethical society, in his latest volume. The social significance of the book is its emphasis upon 'religion and nationality.'" (Survey) "He would have the church emphasize its function as an educator and unifier of the nation; accept whole-heartedly the principle of freedom of thought for clergy and laity; carry out experiments in the use of liturgies and rituals; and give up activities of an institutional or social character that are irrelevant to the church's special function as an interpreter of God and of the meaning of human life." (Ind)

+ A L A Bkl 13:145 Ja '17
Ind 89:30 Ja 1 '17 120w

"He is right in maintaining that the one thing for the religious teacher to aim at in these days is to put his doctrine on the positive basis of psychological experience. But—and here Mr. Bridges is only a victim of the age—it does not appear that he has any experience to offer that is really religious in its nature."

+ Nation 103:490 N 23 '16 380w

N Y Br Lib News 3:156 O '16 30w

"Perhaps no bolder challenge to atheism, no more definite exposition of a rational faith than this treatise of Mr. Bridges' has come from any free-thinker in recent times."

+ No Am 204:761 N '16 1000w

"Not since Elisha Mulford wrote 'The nation' and 'The republic of God' have religion and nationality been so vigorously and fundamentally identified and their interdependence so effectively reassured." Graham Taylor
Survey 37:314 D '16 140w

BRIDGES, JOHN HENRY. Illustrations of positivism: a selection of articles in science, philosophy, religion, and politics; with a preface by E. S. Beesly; ed. by H. Gordon Jones. *$1.50 (1c) Open ct. 146 16-15074

A second edition of a collection of essays published in 1907. They appeared originally in the Positivist Review. "The essays have now been classified in accordance with the nature of their subject-matter, and there have been added a number of posthumous papers by Dr. Bridges, many of which were originally delivered as lectures or addresses." (Hibbert J)

"The essays are well worth preserving." G. D. Hicks

+ Hibbert J 14:430 Ja '16 350w

"To the present-day readers some of these essays may seem to breathe the breath of bygone controversies. Others, on the contrary, as, for example, the brief account of Captain A. T. Mahan's book, 'The influence of sea-power upon history,' will be read with special interest to-day. Whatever topic he wrote on, Bridges was never dull. Their sanity and directness of presentation and their simplicity of style have done much in this country to win acceptance for positivist doctrine." E. H. Strange

+ Nature 96:699 F 24 '16 220w

+ R of Rs 54:460 O '16 120w

BRIDGES, ROBERT, comp. Spirit of man: an anthology in English and French, from the philosophers and poets. *$1.50 Longmans 808.8 16-6701

The English poet-laureate offers this anthology as a means of relief from the "insensate and interminable slaughter" of the war. "The contents are arranged according to subjects in four large sections having sub-divisions, and, that the reader may not be distracted from the substance by the names of the authors, identifications are consigned to an index. This will prove annoying to some and a source of entertainment to those who like the harmless game called Who wrote this and so? The title of the book is a trifle misleading, for, though English and French are the languages of the text, selections in English translations from writers of other nationalities, for example, Thucydides and Spinoza, are also included." (Nation)

+ A L A Bkl 12:372 My '16

"Rarely have we experienced such delight as this book yielded us. It almost deserves to be classed among spiritual books."

+ Cath World 103:394 Je '16 730w

+ Educ R 52:205 S '16 110w

"Amiel, the Bible, Blake, Coleridge, Dixon, Dolben, Kabir, Keats, Milton, Shakespeare, Shelley, Wordsworth and Yeats are drawn upon largely, many pieces being mutilated to fit into the scheme. Nothing at all from Browning."

+ Library Association Record 18:123 Mr '16 80w

"As this is professedly a volume recording the author's own preferences, and not all of them, it is not to be judged upon the basis of completeness; but for its quality and variety it may be cordially recommended."

+ Nation 102:260 Mr 2 '16 180w

"The success of his chosen order is obvious if we will read his book as he would have us read it, beginning at the beginning and going straight ahead. He leads us in all ease from mood to mood, takes us with him all the way, leaves us rested and bettered by the journey." P. L.

+ New Repub 9:332 Ja 20 '17 1050w

"At any time this would be an anthology of distinction. The unusual—in all probability unique—scheme of the book arrests the reader's attention. Mr. Bridges has undertaken to show that spirituality is the basis and foundation of human life. His method of showing this truth is by bringing forward a cloud of witnesses to it, and of arranging their testimony appropriately, logically, and attractively. . . . It has qualities to distinguish it from the ordinary collection of excerpts. One of these is the innovation of omitting from the text the names of the authors. These names are given in an elaborately annotated index, so arranged as to be most convenient."

+ N Y Times 21:105 Mr 26 '16 2000w

"The most important anthology of the year."

+ N Y Times 21:509 N 26 '16 40w

"We do not think the poet laureate's notes quite so admirable as the 'Golden treasury's' in conciseness; nor perhaps always in absolute essentiality; but they are choice, they are instinct with rare lore, and there is a sense of personality about them which we do not recall having been impressed by in Palgrave's."

+ Sat R 121:91 Ja 22 '16 550w

"The first thought of the reader upon opening Mr. Robert Bridges's new anthology is one of disappointment. All authors' names have to be sought in the index. . . . Here, however, our criticism ends. The collection itself is a delightful one, and the French prose and verse particularly happily chosen."

+ Spec 116:608 My 13 '16 280w

"The little volume is meant for reading and meditation, not for literary study. The work reads more like a confessional than an anthology, but, as the experiences are common to mankind it will be prized by all who 'think on these things.' And Mr. Bridges's literary conscience is as sensitive as his spiritual conscience. The work serves beauty as well as character."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 550w

"It is not the mere succession of self-contained poems and fragments of prose that gives this anthology its intrinsic meaning, however valuable and beautiful they may be in themselves. It is their interrelation and intercommunion one with another. There is no absolute isolation. Every page echoes, colours, or refines its neighbour, and all these pages are needed to make up one book in its completeness."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p49 F 3 '16 3200w

"The most spiritual of all English anthologies not avowedly religious, and in literary merit ranks with the 'Golden treasury.'"

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:407 N '16 110w

BRIEUX, EUGÈNE. Woman on her own, False gods and The red robe; the English versions by Mrs. Bernard Shaw, J. B. Fagan, and A. Bernard Miall; with an introd. by Brieux. *$1.50 Brentano's 842 16-14122

In the first of these three plays, "Woman on her own," the economic independence of woman is the theme. "False gods" treats of a modern religious problem, and "The red robe" is concerned with legal procedure.

"Propaganda they are and as propaganda they must be judged if they are to be judged honestly. But it is hard to smother the vision of what each play might have been, especially 'False gods,' which just misses greatness, if it had been impelled by a whiter flame and the imagination of the artist." O. M. Saylor
+ Dial 61:98 Ag 15 '16 2600W

N Y Br Lib News 3:122-Ag '16

"It contains (under the absurd and craven title 'False gods') 'La foi' probably the ablest play on religion in contemporary drama. . . . It was in this inadequate translation by Mr. Fagan that 'La foi' was played in London some years ago. It was first presented at Monte Carlo, underlined by Saint-Saëns's score. America has never seen it. Some day it will."
+ N Y Times 21:368 S 17 '16 650W

"'Woman on her own,' a translation by Mrs. Bernard Shaw of 'La femme seule,' will be new to most people. We cannot consider it a very successful example of M. Brieux's work."
+ Spec 117:sup609 N 13 '16 170W

"'Woman on her own' is highly colored—too highly colored, in our opinion, not for decency, but for sense, for plain fact. . . . Mr. Brieux here in 'False gods' comes to life; and while discussing with wisdom and patience and from many points of view a very big subject, he makes a thing of beauty and passion."
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p475 O 5 '16 1700W

BRIGGS, REV. CHARLES AUGUSTUS. History of the study of theology; prepared for publication by his daughter, Emille Grace Briggs. (Studies in theology ser.) 2v ea. *75c Scribner 207 (Eng ed 17-1174)

"This is a rapid but clear sketch of the progress of theological study from the time of Jesus Christ to the present, attention being given with encyclopedic comprehensiveness to writers, schools of writers, theological centers, universities and seminaries."—Bull of the General Theological Seminary

Reviewed by H: P. Smith

+ Am J Theol 21:140 Ja '17 670W

"The subject matter is obviously complex in detail, but is reduced to order with the skill of a master of constructive work. Progress is clearly indicated by a series of numbered propositions printed in italics, each followed by elaborate texts. There is also an index to each volume. The result of this method is a model text-book which is at once a simple guide and a mine of information nowhere else available in such convenient compass." F. J. H.

+ Bull of the General Theological Seminary 3:106 D '16 200W

N Y Br Lib News 3:156 O '16

St Louis 14:426 D '16

BRIGHOUSE, HAROLD. Garside's career; a comedy in four acts. *$1 (4½c) McClurg 822

Peter Garside is a Lancashire operative whose heroes are himself, the socialists Blatchford and Hyndman, and the labor leader Keir Hardie. Under the influence of Margaret Shawcross, a school teacher and his affianced wife, he studies for and obtains his B. A. degree. Elated by the consciousness of his own ability and by the hope of class advancement he accepts the nomination of the labor party for member of Parliament. He proves himself a self-willed, enormously egotistical demagogue, leaves Margaret in the hope of marrying the daughter of Sir Jasper Mottram, mayor of his provincial town, neglects his parliamentary duties that he may add to his income by lecturing and ruins his public career. After his return home the influence of Margaret brings him to his better self and to his real work as an artisan. The author knows the people and locality of which he writes. His plays "Lonesome-like" and "Hobson's choice" have been staged in America.

"Though not a work of genius, it is an honest and intelligent study of live people. The play has excellent acting qualities." H. E. Woodbridge

+ Dial 60:471 My 11 '16 230W

"With Horace Annesley Vachell, Mr. Brighthouse is just now the most discussed of the English dramatists who are establishing reputations. 'Garside's career' can hardly be said to go far toward the establishment of the reputation in question. There is an improbability about this story of a swollen-headed British workman with an A. B. that appreciably lessens its power of carrying conviction. There is also an exaggeration of the type that seems every now and then to go beyond the limits of the necessary and desirable. The play should have been made either a pronounced satire or a more straightforward comedy. But there are some clever burlesque passages."
+ Springfield Republican p15 F 13 '16 330W

BRIGHOUSE, HAROLD. Hobson's choice; a three-act comedy; with an introd. by B. Iden Payne. (Drama league ser. of plays) *75c (3c) Doubleday 822 16-10341

A comedy of Lancashire life. The introduction says "though local in setting its intrinsic universality cannot be questioned." Maggie, the heroine, is the hard-headed, practical daughter of a hard-headed Lancashire shoe-maker. The comedy comes in the clash between these two, so much alike in nature. Maggie, after twenty years of service in her father's shop, marries one of his workmen, sets her husband up in business for himself and compels her father to come to terms by taking away his best trade. Incidentally she finds husbands for two younger sisters.

+ A L A Bkl 13:19 O '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:92 Je '16

"Four acts of Maggie Hobson's brusquerie and terrifying capacity for managing everybody and everything are a little wearying, but in spite of that the play is worth reading."
+ Spec 117:sup398 O 7 '16 80W

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:319 Jl '16 60W

BRINK, BENJAMIN DEANE. Body builder; Robert J. Roberts; with an introd. by Luther H. Gulick. il *$1 Assn. press 613.7 16-14926

This book is "a collection of drills and health hints, and appreciations of the man who blazed the trail for physical education in the Young men's Christian association." This man was Robert J. Roberts, who entered Y. M. C. A. work in 1869 in Boston where he still conducts classes. Contents: The man; His work; The development of gymnastic apparatus; Drills that have stood the test of time; Health hints that live; Out of the lives of men.

N Y Br Lib News 3:139 S '16

BRINTON, CHRISTIAN. Impressions of the art at the Panama-Pacific exposition. il *$3 (14c) Lane 708.1 16-5696

Mr. Brinton prefaces his book of impressions with an essay on The modern spirit in contemporary painting in which he traces the continuous development of an idea from Manet to the ultra-modern futurist and expressionist. There is also a brief chapter given to the Panama-California exposition, the example of which, he hopes, other expositions will follow. The remainder of the book is then given up to the art of the larger exposition, with sections devoted to the exposition as a whole, to sculpture, and to American and foreign painting. These are accompanied by over eighty illustrations, five of them color plates.

"Expensively made-up, printed in large type on heavy tinted paper. Bibliography (5p.)."

+ A L A Bkl 12:369 My '16

Cleveland p119 Ag '16 10w

+ Ind 86:24 Ap 3 '16 70w

"It is far more than a mere record. It is a document of sound and significant criticism. Its opening essay, 'The modern spirit in contemporary painting,' is the best brief statement of the animating motives of the newer art that I have read in English."

+ Int Studio 57:sup132 F '16 380w

+ Lit D 52:914 Ap 1 '16 270w

+ Nation 102:654 Je 15 '16 200w

Pittsburgh 21:200 Ap '16

+ R of Rs 53:764 Je '16 150w

St Louis 14:230 Je '16

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 27 '16 350w

BRISCO, NORRIS ARTHUR. Fundamentals of salesmanship. *$1.50 Appleton 658 16-18787

A book especially designed as a text book for classes on salesmanship. Its purpose is to explain "the fundamental principles underlying salesmanship." These principles have been worked out, the author says, from analyzing the experiences of successful salespersons. Part 1, devoted to The salesperson and efficient salesmanship has chapters on Salesmanship, Persuasion and conviction, Human nature, Health, Appearance, Character, Memory, Imagination, etc. Part 2 is devoted to The manager and efficient salesmanship. Questions and references follow each chapter.

Cleveland p153 D '16 10w

+ Ind 88:331 N 20 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:172 N '16

R of Rs 54:572 N '16 90w

"The author is head of the School of commerce in the State university of Iowa. The importance of trained salesmanship and the qualities which constitute it are set forth in a way that any one can appreciate and understand." E. W. B.

+ St Louis 14:434 D '16 40w

BRISTOL, LUCIUS MOODY. Social adaptation. (Harvard economic studies) *$2 (2c) Harvard Univ. press 301 16-2899

"Dr. Bristol shows the modern science of sociology from its foundations. His book was awarded the David A. Wells prize for the year 1914-15, and it contains a preface by Professor Thomas Nixon Carver and a very comprehensive bibliography. . . . Dr. Bristol starts with Auguste Comte and discusses the social theories of the writers who have been most influential in the development of this doctrine of adaptation in an order which is, so far as is possible, both historical and logical. After considering the early development under Auguste Comte and Herbert Spencer, he continues his study under four main heads—passive physical and physio-social adaptation, passive spiritual adaptation, active material adaptation, and active spiritual adaptation." (Boston Transcript) Bibliography.

"Constructed on the plan of Barth's 'Die philosophie der geschichte als sociologie,' which has long been one of the best introductions to the general field of sociological literature, Professor Bristol's volume offers the advantage of another viewpoint, and will be useful either as a supplement or a substitute for that book." C. D.

+ Am Econ R 6:351 Je '16 170w

Am J Soc 22:119 Jl '16 930w

"The author has given us a timely and valuable résumé of the ideas of the more prominent students of the last century. I do not know of another book in which one may find such an accurate and readable digest. . . . Students will find it helpful and suggestive. I am a bit surprised that no mention is made of such works as Ammon, 'Die natürliche auslese beim menschen'; Hildebrand, 'Die philosophie der geschichte als sociologie'; or the writings of Schallmeyer, Reibmayr, Haycraft, Ritchie, or the last book of A. R. Wallace, 'Social environment and moral progress.' No reference is made to these even in the very excellent bibliography." Carl Kelsey

+ Ann Am Acad 66:261 Jl '16 630w

"The index gives three references to Bergson, all of which are wrong."

+ — Ath p234 My '16 80w

Boston Transcript p22 F 9 '16 480w

Cleveland p20 Mr '16 40w

+ Ind 83:394 Mr 13 '16 30w

"The tenets of this or that sociological or other writer are not infrequently expressed more clearly and simply here than in the original. The book is a valuable and useful one. But this does not at all imply that we find ourselves in agreement with all the individual estimates made, nor yet with the views and theories of the author."

+ — Nation 103:61 Jl 20 '16 1350w

+ Pittsburgh 21:102 Mr '16 30w

R of Rs 53:380 Mr '16 40w

+ — Springfield Republican p17 My 19 '16 500w

BRODIE-INNES, JOHN WILLIAM. Tragedy of an indiscretion. *$1.25 (1½c) Lane 16-13748

Ronald Warrington is about to run away for two weeks with Mrs. Greville, whose husband thinks she is motoring with friends, when his secretary, Ralph Essendine, tells him that his uncle, whose heir he is, is dying. Warrington goes to his uncle, Essendine goes to explain to the lady. Warrington and Mrs. Greville were registered at the Terminus hotel under the name of Essendine. Mrs. Greville has suddenly died of heart disease. Essendine is taken for her husband, has no clue to her real name, and, to save scandal, accepts the position and buries her as his wife. He then sails on an exploring expedition with Warrington. Meanwhile Mrs. Greville's husband begins to get uneasy. A woman drowned in the Thames is wrongly identified as Mrs. Greville and Mr. Greville is condemned to death as her murderer. Word reaches Essendine and Warrington (now Duke of Glenstaffen) in time for them to come back and clear up the mystery. Mrs. Greville was really Essendine's wife before she was Greville's and Essendine, being a Catholic, never thought that the divorce she obtained was valid.

"The reader who likes mystery tales may puzzle this one out for himself. There is no character drawing and no dialogue worth mentioning. But the story is amusing and boasts a remarkable plot."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Je 10 '16 300w

"Entertaining from its initial paragraph."

+ N Y Times 21:253 Je 8 '16 270w

Springfield Republican p15 Jl 30 '16 150w

BRONSON, WALTER COCHRANE, ed. American prose (1607-1865). il *$1.50 Univ. of Chicago press 810.8 16-15361

"An extremely varied selection is made by Professor Bronson. It represents, with especial stress placed upon historical narrative, the varied writings of American authors and chroniclers from 1607 to 1865, and it is intended as a companion volume to the same editor's 'American poems' and to be used especially by pupils in schools and colleges. . . . To the main contents of his volume Professor Bronson adds a series of helpful notes upon obscure historical and verbal points, together with an extract here and there from the contemporary criticism of the writer's own period."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 13:73 N '16

"Only thirty-seven American writers of prose have been chosen by Professor Bronson for the making of a volume of more than seven hundred pages. In the strict sense of the word, the majority of them are not writers, although what they have written has taken its place in the archives of American history. William Bradford, John Winthrop, Roger Williams, Increase and Cotton Mather, John Dickinson, Patrick BRONSON, WALTER COCHRANE, ed.—Cont. Henry, Jefferson, Washington, Webster and Lincoln represent this group in Professor Bronson's pages, while among those who are entitled to be called men of letters are Benjamin Franklin, Washington Irving, Poe, Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau, Holmes and Lowell. It is, of course, a restricted selection, but it is thoroughly representative." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 9 '16 300w

"A selection always interesting, frequently entertaining, and especially successful in the colonial period."

+ Ind 87:232 Ag 14 '16 50w

"We are particularly sorry that no way was found to include any nineteenth-century writings except tales, essays, and orations: American prose without Cooper, with nothing from Hawthorne's romances, and with not a page from Prescott, Motley, or Parkman seems hardly its full self. Whether or not there should have been more criticism is also a question. . . . As it is, Lowell's essay on Carlyle is the sole specimen of literary criticism. But the plan of the book is entirely consistent, and the volume is sufficiently large, and hardly anything in it could well be spared."

+ Nation 103:239 S 7 '16 250w

"The author is professor of English literature in Brown university."

St Louis 14:400 N '16 10w

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 17 '16 100w

BROOKE, CHARLES FREDERICK TUCKER, ed. Common conditions. *$2.50 Yale univ. press 822 15-27755

"What promises to be a series of Elizabethan club reprints, issued by the Yale university press, begins auspiciously with an edition of 'Common conditions' by Prof. Tucker Brooke. A 'lamentable comedy,' published in 1576 and presumably written not long before, 'Common conditions' sets forth in carefully rimed fourteeners the adventures by land and sea of an exiled prince and of two pairs of lovers. . . . The basis of the present text is the quarto which recently made its way from Lord Mostyn's ancestral library into the possession of the Elizabethan club at Yale. This copy has nearly five hundred lines at the beginning and end which do not appear in the fragmentary Chatsworth-Huntington copy, belonging really to another edition, which was reprinted, with some imperfections, by Brandl."—Nation

"In his treatment of the new text, in the comparative study of the two manuscripts, in the introduction and the carefully prepared appendixes and notes, Professor Brooke throughout reveals the true scholar's enthusiasm and love for his task."

+ Dial 60:479 My 11 '16 150w

"This play raises some interesting questions of authorship which Professor Brooke discusses without dogmatizing. The black-letter page is, on the whole, fairly readable. The notes run a little into diffuseness."

+ Nation 101:552 N 4 '15 200w

"With the publication of 'Common conditions,' the Elizabethan club of Yale university emerges from its seclusion as a local academic luxury and becomes an institution of interest and importance to the scholarly world." W. A. Neilson

+ Yale R n s 5:864 Jl '16 570w

BROOKE, RUPERT. John Webster and the Elizabethan drama. *$1.50 Lane 822 16-23961

This essay, written by Rupert Brooke in 1911-12, is the dissertation with which he won a fellowship at King's college, Cambridge. The essay proper is divided into five chapters: The theatre; The origins of Elizabethan drama; The Elizabethan drama; John Webster; Some characteristics of Webster. The remainder of the book, about one half, is given up to appendixes made up of critical notes and commentary on the plays. At the close there is a bibliography.

"He overlooks the spiritual and tragic greatness of the 'Duchess of Malfi,' and even of the evil characters in 'The beautiful white devil' and 'The devil's law-case.' Nevertheless, this is a thoughtful and penetrating study that helps us to understand the greatness of this exalted poet."

+ Ath p590 D '16 110w

"To the substance of his essay Mr. Brooke adds a series of appendixes that reveal his scholarly understanding. The essay itself shows him to be one of the skilful critics of the drama who recognize the closeness of the stage to life, and its dignified position among the arts."

E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 27 '16 1650w

+ Ind 89:118 Ja 15 '17 70w

"The chief interest of the book at the present time is in the light which it throws upon the figure of the young poet who has so recently gone, under his freshly gathered laurels, singing into the darkness. . . . And our conclusion is that when Rupert Brooke was writing his dissertation his passionate nature, which could not feed on Elizabethan scholarship and was still unsure of an appropriate outlet in poetry or active life, luxuriated in imaginary violence and took pleasure and pride in the black morbidity of his insight into life."

Nation 104:109 Ja 25 '17 390w

"As a critical study the present essay has value. Moreover, it presents the literary time-spirit of Webster's age. Yet a deeper interest springs from the exposition it affords of things that called to and found answer in the author's mind."

+ Sat R 123:16 Ja 6 '17 690w

"It is good for a young man to write such things, but not to publish them. The work is readable, thanks to the author's style and spirit, and there is an abundance of cleverness in the observations; but, as a whole, it is immature and unimportant."

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 26 '16 550w

"One recognizes the note—the unwholesome note of fretful immaturity which taints some portion of Rupert Brooke's poetry."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p571 N 30 '16 1700w

BROOKE, RUPERT. Letters from America. il *$1.25 (4c) Scribner 917.1 16-2594

"These letters by the gifted youth whose untimely death last year so touched the heart of all the English-speaking world were written to the Westminster Gazette during 1913. They record his impressions of New York and Boston and Niagara Falls, of several Canadian cities, then of people and country as he traveled westward across the Canadian prairies and Rocky mountains and thence on to Samoa. Special interest attaches to the little book, which otherwise would be of less consequence, by reason of the tender and affectionate appreciation of Mr. Brooke's character and talent with which it is prefaced by Henry James."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 12:285 Mr '16

"The 'legendary light' emanating from the manner of Rupert Brooke's death has given his friends, and through them the contagious sympathy of the English and American public, every opportunity to blur the man's outlines of body and mind. It remained for Mr. James to obscure them completely in the elaborately complicated texture of his introduction to these letters." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p9 F 5 '16 2050w

Cath World 103:267 My '16 300w

"To see the world renew its youth through his young eyes is a refreshing experience. It is plain from the outset that America is to be viewed with no coldly critical scrutiny, prosaic realities and ugly blemishes are to be thrust into no offensive prominence. Even the plain and undeniable facts of our too commercial, too careworn, too paltry existence are sometimes overlooked, sometimes even denied." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 60:165 F 17 '16 1650w

"Principally important in the book is the really brilliant introduction by Henry James. In it there appears a judgment that is breathlessly fine, warm in praise, charming in its diction. It is, beyond all doubt, the most comprehensive and satisfactory review which has yet appeared of the life and work of the dead young poet."

+ — Evening Sun [New York] F 19 '16 570w

"To suggest that humor is the predominant strain in the book would be an injustice to the poet in the man. There are places where the sheer beauty of the description and the delicacy of the comment would be hard to surpass in the whole range of English writing. Particularly in telling of the northwest, where Brooke got to the frontier and the mountains, and of Samoa, does the poet break away from the journalist—tho either rôle sits well on him. A few papers come to their conclusion with a lovely falling cadence that recalls Ruskin. . . . Of the preface by Mr. James one is inclined to say little, remembering the blow that has fallen upon him. There is a subtle study of the relation between Brooke and his heritage and environment, but that curious style which was once a matter of admirable, tho often tedious precision, has here lost itself in a sad welter of words."

+ — Ind 85:316 F 28 '16 900w

+ Lit D 52:735 Mr 18 '16 230w

"They are not 'letters' in the proper sense of the term, which implies a confidential carelessness; they are deliberate records of the reactions of travel upon an artist's temperament; and they were prepared for the eye of a special public. . . . Where he really finds himself, where he is exquisite and unsurpassable is in his descriptions of Canadian scenery."

+ Nation 102:259 Mr 2 '16 1000w

"What Rupert Brooke's so exalted tradition conferred was not an ampler sympathy and a swifter understanding. It was, if anything, a pleasant though stuffy immunity. He did not disdain. He brightly, humorously mirrored. But he did not sufficiently penetrate. The love of truth in him was not so keen as to compel him to make profitable conjecture. He was tolerant, very, but not really receptive. He could observe. . . . The South Sea islands captivated him. For all the interestingness of his earlier chapters, it is this chapter, and the concluding moment of reverie on the declaration of war, that help him abide." Francis Hackett

+ — New Repub 6:23 F 5 '16 1650w

"The first four or five letters, dealing with New York and Boston, are inferior to the rest of the book, and if Rupert Brooke had lived he probably would not have published them in book form without much revision. For they are sophomore, given to sweeping generalization upon the slightest basis of observed fact, thin and meagre in their impressionistic quality. . . . The most striking and most interesting thing about the letters; more interesting by far than their content of observation and comment, is the way in which the writer seems to develop mentally as he proceeds on his way."

+ N Y Times 21:33 Ja 30 '16 2150w

"Here [the South Sea islands] he is at his lovable best, with all his forces in delectable play—his jocund sweetness, his flashing swiftness of view, his invincible buoyancy, his high spiritual valor, his wit, his perpetual and subduing charm. Here the self-consciousness, the rawness and slightness, of the earlier chapters are gladly forgotten, and we face the golden and conquering lad of the tradition, 'proud, clear-eyed and laughing.'" Lawrence Gilman

+ No Am 203:454 Mr '16 1450w

Pratt p39 Ap '16 30w

+ R of Rs 53:372 Mr '16 300w

+ Spec 116:353 Mr 11 '16 1800w

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 6 '16 1900w

"Over it all broods, with affection and wonder, with infinite tenderness, and with a flash or two of wise old irony, the great master of human elaboration and civilized beauty [Henry James] who has just left us. A valediction from all who care for what is loveliest in nature and man goes to them both."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p114 Mr 9 '16 800w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:184 Ap '16 80w

BROOKES, LEONARD ELLIOTT. Automobile handbook; rev. and enl. by Harold P. Manly. il $2 Drake, F: J. 629.2 16-13751

"The fact that this 'manual of practical information for automobile owners, repair men and schools' is here offered in its fifth edition is good evidence of its tested value. The arrangement of material is alphabetical or cyclopedic, lending itself to ready reference, and the scope of the volume is broad, with emphasis always upon the current problem rather than the theoretic basis. Because intended for the layman rather than the automobile engineer mathematical formulae and detailed discussions of principles are omitted."—Pub W

"The language used is exact, but clear and intelligible even to the novice. . . . The subject headings used, in the great scarcity of cross-references, are sometimes a little blind. . . . The illustrations are numerous and clear. The present edition contains a full summary of the various starting systems as well as the magnetic gear shift and other up-to-the-minute developments." F. R.

+ — Pub W 90:605 Ag 19 '16 350w

BROOKS, ALFRED MANSFIELD. Dante, how to know him. il $1.25 Bobbs 851 16-15109

"The purpose of this book is to make some of the unparalleled beauty and common sense of 'The divine comedy' accessible to many who are wholly unfamiliar with the poem, or are kept from it by its reputed difficulties." (Preface) These difficulties and other matters relating to the poet and his times are considered in an introduction. In the pages following the author presents the substance of the three parts of "The divine comedy" by means of paraphrase and quotation. Passages have been chosen which "give the complete unfolding of the story, together with its moral and philosophical significance."

"The translations are faithful though uninspired, and the book is designed for the novice. Fletcher's interpretation and criticism (Booklist, 13:74, N '16), on the other hand, assumes some acquaintance with Dante and treats his poetry by subject."

A L A Bkl 13:112 D '16

"The exposition is painstakingly thorough. The author seems to look for none but the most rudimentary education in his readers, nor does he place too much faith in their intelligence. There is a profusion of footnotes designed to meet a lack which, if existent, would seem to preclude their necessity, as it is improbable that people thus handicapped would turn their attention to the study of Dante. Those who are looking for some such manual, however, will find one here that is wholly trustworthy and leaves no point untouched or obscure."

+ — Cath World 104:267 N '16 200w

"Popular in purpose. . . . The introduction and comment read simply, and smoothly; and the prose of the translations, while not distinguished, is quite tolerable."

+ Dial 61:272 O 5 '16 130w

"For the novice and none other, more to be commended in plan than in performance. . . . Mr. Brooks has evidently an excellent knowledge of Italian—the mistranslations are few and slight—but he lacks both style and scholarship."

+ — Nation 103:354 O 12 '16 480w

N Y Br Lib News 3:122 Ag '16

+ N Y Times 21:357 S 10 '16 270w

+ School R 24:563 S '16 130w

+ Springfield Republican p15 S 10 '16 130w

BROOKS, CHARLES STEPHEN. Journeys to Bagdad. il $1.50 (6½c) Yale univ. press 814 15-26981

This is not a volume of travels, altho the first essay does dwell on the joys of truantry and a later one is entitled On traveling. It is made up of ten essays, some of them reprinted from the New Republic and the Yale Review, and there are accompanying illustrations from wood-cuts by Allen Lewis. Contents: Journeys to Bagdad; The worst edition of Shakespeare; The decline of night-caps; Maps and rabbit-holes; Tunes for spring; Respectfully submitted—To a mournful air; The chilly presence of hard-headed persons; Hoopskirts and other lively matter; On traveling; Through the scuttle with the tinman.

BROOKS, CHARLES STEPHEN—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 12:372 My '16

"Mr. Brooks's essays are not lacking in the shrewd and practical touch with which the American intelligence is apt to go about any of its activities, even sitting by the fire and dreaming, while genial humour and witty turns of thought and phrase sparkle all through them. But in content, in manner, and in temper they are quite unlike the work of any other American essayist. And also, leisurely and unconcerned with practical affairs though they are, they are just as unlike the typical English essay." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 42:726 F '16 430w

"He writes with amusing discrimination, giving back to us many long-forgotten fancies, and visions long hidden from older eyes."

+ Boston Transcript p26 Ja 19 '16 450w

"Much of the quiet humor, the delightful drollery, the ingratiating intimacy of personal confession, the seventeenth-century turn of expression, that make the 'Essays of Elia' so pleasing, will be found in the several brief disquisitions composing the 'Journeys to Bagdad.'"

+ Dial 60:125 F 3 '16 450w

+ Ind 86:186 My 1 '16 50w

"It is not the substance but the manner which draws the reader onward. The phrases exude a quiet content, of lingering redolence. . . . One delightful feature of the book is the illustrations. They are the 'original woodcuts' of Allen Lewis. They not merely illustrate some passage in the vagaries of the author, but add their own quizzical expressiveness and humorous subtlety to the thought of the essayist."

+ Nation 102:200 F 17 '16 550w

"With the woes of the world it meddles not at all, but discourses at great length on the smell of old tarred rope, the course of evolution from night-caps to sleeping porches, and the eating of cream puffs. Without the least intention of doing good, Charles S. Brooks and Allen Lewis leave their reader's mind the better for contemplation of their pretty knack of words and wood-cuts, and improve his heart by exhibiting a thousand sources of fine enjoyment which no one but an imaginative child would ordinarily stop to explore."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 30 '16 500w

"Determinedly vagabond, he shrugs off responsibility with every syllable. If you begin to make demands of him, he kicks up his heels and disappears over the nearest hillock." G: Soule

+ Yale R n s 5:871 Jl '16 500w

BROOKS, EUGENE CLYDE. Woodrow Wilson as president. il $1.60 Row, Peterson & co. 16-16334

"Professor Brooks's main contention is that President Wilson has labored to establish the reign of justice with peace in domestic affairs and in foreign relations; that he has won solid and enduring success at home; that in the wider international fields his aim has been lofty and his policy, so far, effective, with substantial promise of much greater results in the future. The argument in support of this contention is very earnest and fervent, but it is dignified and candid."—N Y Times

"Frankly eulogistic."

Nation 103:350 O 12 '16 800w

"In regard to the vexed question of Mexico and the even more perplexing and harassing questions arising from the war in Europe, the facts are succinctly but clearly stated and the inferences are strongly sustained."

+ N Y Times 21:443 O 22 '16 1050w

BROOKSHIRE, ELIJAH VOORHEES. Law of human life; the Scriptures in the light of the science of psychology. $2.50 (1½c) Putnam 220.6 16-9169

"The author of this book submits a psychological interpretation of the Scriptures; and so denominates his interpretation, because the Scriptures in their essential nature are psychological, and not historic." (Introd.) The Bible is looked on as the record of the evolution of the human soul, and in support of his thesis the author selects for analysis important passages of allegory and story from both the Old and the New Testaments.

Ind 86:555 Je 26 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:75 My '16

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p323 Jl 6 '16 50w

BROWN, ALICE. Prisoner. $1.50 (1c) Macmillan 16-26545

Jeffrey Blake, in order to satisfy the demands of an extravagant wife, becomes a defaulter and is sent to prison for a term of years. He develops rapidly under his misfortune and leaves prison with the determination to reconstruct his life. He wants to go West where he is not known; but the appeal of his ailing father to remain at home keeps him in the New England town that saw his first prosperity and his downfall. Here he fights his battle under circumstances made the more trying by the presence in the town of his selfish and unhappy wife. Into the plot of the story enters the mystery of a diamond necklace which introduces the De Maupassant motif only with more variations.

+ A L A Bkl 12:479 Jl '16

"The book is a novel that can be read for pleasure and refreshment, even if its philosophy makes no direct appeal."

+ Ath p534 N '16 500w

"His second liberation, that of the spirit, is alone important. And he achieves it through the old, old paradox of self-fulfillment through self-abnegation, freedom through obedience to the law." Wilson Follett

+ Atlan 118:496 O '16 750w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:618 Ag '16 630w

"She throws over all her characters a veil of obscurity that makes them seem to be ghostly dwellers in a land of shadows. None of them, from Jeffrey Blake to the coachman Denny, is it possible to visualize as a vitally consistent human being who dwells in a world like our own. Miss Brown would be much more successful as a novelist if she gave us a real world with real people in it." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '16 1450w

+ Ind 87:166 Jl 31 '16 190w

+ Lit D 53:471 Ag 26 '16 420w

"It is significant that while at first glance, as sketches, these persons are distinct and plausible enough, the more we see of them the less we believe in them."

— Nation 103:222 S 7 '16 380w

+ New Repub 8:48 Ag 12 '16 700w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 Jl '16

"Good as Alice Brown's fiction has always been, in her new novel she has done far and away the best, the largest visioned, the ripest work that has ever come from her pen."

+ N Y Times 21:245 Je 18 '16 1100w

+ N Y Times 21:505 N 26 '16 90w

+ R of Rs 54:233 Ag '16 270w

+ Spec 117:378 S 30 '16 1100w

"The story covers so wide a scope that it is not surprising to find that its details do not perfectly cohere. In spite of this, however, it is a notable volume of contemporary fiction, and one that will repay a second reading. For one thing, it appeals to that element of our population which shrinks from the 'sordidness of politics' to take up its share of the task of keeping America American."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Jl 2 '16 470w

"It has the same quality of interest as the author's other psychological stories, and will hardly be popular with novel-readers in general."
 Wis Lib Bull 12:322 J1 '16 50w

BROWN, CHARLES RAYMOND. Northern confederacy according to the plans of the "Essex junto," 1796-1814. pa *75c Princeton univ. press 973.5 15-23139

"A dissertation presented to the faculty of Princeton university in candidacy for the degree of doctor of philosophy. The topic is one of particular interest to Massachusetts, for the name was first applied to a little group of politicians in Essex county in that state by Governor Hancock, and soon came to have a nationwide significance. In this work the author has shown the workings of the "Essex junto" as an active political body. According to his view the junto sought to control national affairs, and by misrepresentation of the party in power to arouse the New England people to the point of dissolving the Union and forming a New England confederacy. The primary sources of information have been letters, public and private, written by members of the junto themselves." (Boston Transcript) There is a six-page bibliography.

"Dr. Brown is the first to bring out a monograph on the inner ring of Massachusetts federalism and its disunion schemes. Unfortunately he has only scratched the surface. No new material has been brought to light; no manuscript sources, not even the Pickering papers in the Boston historical society" (p. 118), have been utilized." S. E. Morison
 — Am Hist R 21:634 Ap '16 380w

"The theme is interestingly discussed, and while many of the statements are still open to controversy it is apparent that the author has attempted to sift the mass of evidence with a view to ascertaining the exact facts of a great political movement. There are some slips, as where the author credits the 'Boston historical society' with the possession of the Pickering papers."

— Boston Transcript p10 Ja 1 '16 270w
 "Combines much useful substance with a singularly crude and unsatisfactory performance. The author's style fairly bristles with rhetorical defects, while the numerous misprints and erratic punctuation seem to indicate extraordinary carelessness in proof-reading. . . . The material embodied in S. E. Morison's 'Life of Harrison Gray Otis' and in Professor Beard's recent 'Economic origins of Jeffersonian democracy,' necessitates a revision of parts of Mr. Brown's study."

— + Nation 103:65 J1 20 '16 200w

BROWN, EDNA ADELAIDE. Archer and the "Prophet." il *$1.20 (4½c) Lothrop 16-17066

A sequel to "Arnold's little brother." Archer Arnold who was a little boy of nine in that story is now a senior in St. Stephen's school. He is the most popular boy in school, holding his place, not by athletic prowess, as is usually the case with school boy heroes, but by charm of personality and strength of character. He is never afraid to champion an unpopular cause and in this story he befriends a young boy of his own age who is something of a social outcast and stands by him in the face of public opinion. The outcome justifies Archer's faith, and the honor that comes to him at the close of the school year is as gratifying to the reader as it was to his school fellows.

+ A L A Bkl 13:129 D '16
 Reviewed by G. I. Colbron
 + Bookm 44:409 D '16 60w

"It reminds me a bit of that one-time favorite, 'St. Winifreds,' tho entirely of today, and of an American 'prep.'"

+ Ind 88:404 D 4 '16 40w
 St Louis 14:442 D '16 10w
 + Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 60w

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BROWN, GERARD BALDWIN. Arts in early England. v 3-4 il ea *$7.50 Dutton 709.42 (3-18682)

v 3-4 Saxon art and industry in the pagan period.

"The first two volumes of this work [are entitled] 'The life of Saxon England in its relation to the arts,' and 'Ecclesiastical architecture in England from the conversion of the Saxons to the Norman conquest.' . . . After an interval of twelve years a third and a fourth volume have now made their appearance, dealing more fully with the subject-matter of the title. These are paged continuously and practically form one volume, divided into sixteen chapters. The first chapter is necessarily an introduction, while the second is devoted to the artistic aspect of the coinage. The rest of the text deals with (1) the Anglo-Saxon cemeteries of the pagan period, (2) the archaeological evidence connected with migrations. The cemeteries illustrate the arts of early England through the various articles buried with the deceased, which are classed together under the general head of 'tomb-furniture.' This is dealt with in six separate chapters. . . . [There is an] abundance of illustrations, extending to more than eight hundred objects or groups of objects arranged on 158 plates. Most of these are half-tone blocks from photographs, while a few are printed in colour."—Eng Hist R

"While we have much for which to thank Mr. Brown in giving us such a fascinating treatise on Anglo-Saxon art and craftsmanship, we must complain of the wholly inadequate index." W. H. S. Hope

+ Eng Hist R 31:297 Ap '16 1100w

"Of unusual interest are the chapters relating to work in the precious metals and especially the Kentish inlaid jewellery. . . . Maps are added which the student of history and archaeology will find of great value. The two volumes are profoundly interesting, and . . . provide a veritable mine of instructive material which the artist-craftsman of to-day can explore with advantage."

+ Int Studio 58:73 Mr '16 700w

"A monumental work of reference, so crammed with meaty facts and conjectures that it will be a difficult matter for any writer to supersede it for years to come."

+ N Y Times 21:274 J1 9 '16 400w
 St Louis 14:435 D '16

BROWN, HARRY GUNNISON. Principles of commerce. *$1.75 Macmillan 380 16-15475

"This volume really comprises three separate treatises on (1) 'The exchange mechanism of commerce'; (2) 'The economic advantages of commerce'; (3) 'The transportation costs of commerce.' The purpose of the author was to write a book that may be found useful in general courses of commerce, in courses dealing with foreign and domestic exchange, or in courses dealing with trade and trade restrictions, and the relation of transportation rates to trade."—R of Rs

Cleveland p152 D '16 20w

N Y Br Lib News 3:135 S '16 10w

"The workings of the world's money markets are explained with lucidity, and are presented in a manner excellently worth attention at this time, when loans are being floated by the hundred millions and the country is doing a foreign trade in billions. . . . Students of principles of economics and those with idle funds are alike interested in this portion of the book."

What may be called the eyeopeners from Missouri are to be found in the third part which is devoted to transportation treated in the manner of the tariff when discussed by economists rather than by politicians. . . . No one interested in the case of the railways versus the canals is well informed unless he knows of the points the professor raises, and provides himself with a reply if he dissents."

+ N Y Times 21:333 Ag 27 '16 1700w
 R of Rs 54:572 N '16 70w

BROWN, HARRY GUNNISON—Continued

"The author is assistant professor of economics in the University of Missouri."

St Louis 14:430 D '16 10w

BROWN, HARRY GUNNISON. Transportation rates and their regulation. diagrs *$1.50 (1½c) Macmillan 385 16-8091

"A study of the transportation costs of commerce with especial reference to American railroads." The author's aim has been "to present a complete theory of transportation rates and their regulation, to illustrate this theory with a sufficient number of concrete cases arising in actual regulation to make the reader or student feel that the presentation is thoroughly practical, and, throughout, to keep before the reader a realization of the relation of rate making to trade." (Preface) Contents: The cost of transportation; The competition of transportation companies; Transportation monopoly; Economically undesirable rate discrimination among places; Economically defensible discrimination among places; Relative rates on different goods; Discrimination among shippers; Steps in the development of rate regulation in the United States; Rulings of the Interstate commerce commission; reasonable rates; Rulings of the Interstate commerce commission; discrimination among places; Rulings of the Interstate commerce commission; discrimination among different goods and among shippers; Uneconomical government interference with, and encouragement of, transportation.

"As a supplement to the standard works of Professors Johnson and Ripley, this book will undoubtedly meet with favor among those college instructors who are desirous of introducing their students to a more extended study of the reasons of public policy which sometimes do, and which always should, lie back of transportation legislation." Maxwell Ferguson

+ Am Econ R 6:632 S '16 640w

+ A L A Bkl 13:58 N '16

Reviewed by O. L. Pond

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:606 Ag '16 310w

"He makes a distinct contribution to the literature of the subject by applying to all phases of the problem the test of 'economy' from a national standpoint. . . . His frank and able criticism of 'government coddling' of private business by subsidies and other forms of 'protection' is a timely contribution." T. W. V. M.

+ Ann Am Acad 68:325 N '16 300w

+ Cleveland p114 Ag '16 20w

"While the book is of prime value to students in economics, it is worthy of careful reading by railroad executives and traffic officials. To those railroad men who are not well grounded in economics the author's clear analysis of the underlying principles in rate making and rate regulation cannot fail to be helpful and broadening." W. J. Cunningham

+ Engin Rec 74:568 N 4 '16 690w

N Y Br Lib News 3:75 My '16

"There has been no better presentation of the philosophy of rate-making, and its value is enhanced by the orderly citation of decisions by the Interstate commerce commission in illustration of the theories advanced."

+ N Y Times 21:389 O 1 '16 230w

St Louis 14:225 Je '16

"It is an elaborate and painstaking study of the theory and cost of transportation, but while it may be useful and interesting to students, it is not written in a style to appeal to the general reading public. Many of the cases before the interstate commerce commission have been cited by Prof. Brown to illustrate and explain the various theories put forth in his book. The author also gives interesting information and data bearing on the effect of competition between goods transported by land and water."

+ Springfield Republican p8 J1 7 '16 200w

BROWN, HERBERT WILLIS. Living from eggs and poultry. il *75c Judd 636.5 16-13664

"The author addresses poultry beginners who have a limited amount of capital and experience, and to whom the operation of plants of several thousand fowls is of no interest except as an illustration of the possible magnitude of the business. He has selected from his own trying experiences a simple, definite plan, which should prove a safe guide to the novice. Above everything else, he warns the beginner about the danger of being too scientific."—Springfield Republican

"A handbook of practical directions for beginners. It goes into details often taken for granted in larger works."

+ Ind 86:403 Je 5 '16 40w

+ Nation 103:520 N 30 '16 310w

N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16

Pratt p23 O '16 10w

St Louis 14:434 D '16

"One of the few [works] on the subject of poultry raising that does not exaggerate the pleasant features or withhold any unpleasant truths about the business."

+ Springfield Republican p15 S 3 '16 250w

BROWN, IVOR. Years of plenty. *$1.25 (1c) Doran 16-26225

A record of English school and university life. Four years at an English public school and four at Oxford with their effects on the growing mind of young Martin Leigh are described with intimate detail. Martin is an orphan but an uncle's house in Devonshire is open to him and glimpses of a pleasant home life there offer the contrasts needed to set off the pictures of academic seclusion. The story comes to a close with Martin looking back on his 'years of plenty' and forward to India and the civil service.

"As a novel rather inconclusive."

+ — A L A Bkl 12:338 Ap '16

"While one marvels at the uselessness and the ineptitude of the lad's occupations, one must be pleased with the skill, the sympathy and the understanding of youth which the author shows all through his pages. His work has a quality of richness and mellowness unusual in a first novel." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:324 My '16 320w

"Another story of unusual merit, by another new novelist of promise. . . . Part of our interest is in the unusual power of Mr. Brown in analyzing the mind of the university student, and part is in the quality of his style. The two combine to make a novel of unusual strength. His characterizations of Oxford life are memorable and prophesy much for the future." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 9 '16 1150w

"Lacks something of the 'glow and fire' of the ideal story of youth but is truthful in character drawing and atmosphere and very well written."

+ Cleveland p17 My '16 50w

"Treading the same ground over which we have followed the footsteps of the immortal Tom Brown, no two books could offer a sharper contrast than the story of the early Victorian schoolboy of Rugby and that of the lad of the twentieth century. Their minds speak different languages; they belong to different worlds. The narrative bears the stamp of truth, and is written with much eloquence and force. The conversations contain much that is informing, more that is disillusioning. . . . Argue it away as he will, when the great occasion comes the Englishman rises to meet it. It is this knowledge that mitigates the depression with which, without it, we should close this remarkably clever and original book."

+ — N Y Times 21:100 Mr 19 '16 450w

"Cleverly written and 'exactly like.'"

+ Spec 114:854 Je 19 '15 10w

BROWN, JOSEPH HENRY PATRICK. Modern swimming. il *$1 (8c) Small 796 16-14465

The publishers state that the author has been for twenty-five years a successful instructor in swimming. Forty clear illustrations emphasize the instructions plainly given in the text. Among the strokes described are the chest, English side, Australian, trudgeon, and crawl. There are directions for diving, treading water, etc., advice on resuscitation, and a common-sense chapter of Don'ts.

"Some beginners may prefer this to Corson (Booklist, 11:370, Ap '15) which gives methods for group instruction."

- + A L A Bkl 13:70 N '16
- N Y Br Lib News 3:108 J1 '16
- + R of Rs 54:122 J1 '16 20w
- + Wis Lib Bull 12:452 D '16 30w

BROWN, ROLLO WALTER. How the French boy learns to write. *$1.25 Harvard univ. press 407 16-2925

"That teachers of English in American schools can learn much from methods employed by the French in instruction in the mother-tongue is the confident assertion with which Professor Brown of Wabash college submits this adequate survey of French classroom methods. The book, based upon the author's observations, presents the courses of study, an illuminating discussion of ideals of rhetoric and composition, an outline of the aims in foreign-language study, and closes with a chapter on the application of some of the features in America."—School R

- A L A Bkl 12:320 Ap '16
- + Boston Transcript p22 J1 5 '16 330w
- + Dial 60:429 Ap 27 '16 330w
- Educ R 52:206 S '16 70w

"The book is a model of method, written with clearness and ease, dealing with expression in an expressive and pointed way. Professor Brown's purpose was to study the French teaching for the light it might throw on the teaching of English in America. He leaves little doubt that the same systematic method here would produce the same result. There could be few books more fundamentally useful to the American teacher than this brilliant exposition of the teaching of a mother tongue." R. B.

- + New Repub 6:326 Ap 22 '16 620w
- Pittsburgh 21:364 J1 '16 80w

"The book is attractive. Logical in its arrangement and comprehensive in its scope, it presents in readable style Professor Brown's observations." N. E. Bashore

- + School R 24:321 Ap '16 600w
- + Springfield Republican p6 J1 23 '16 170w

BROWN, STEPHEN JAMES. Ireland in fiction. *7s 6d Maunsel, London 016.8 16-14125

"A much enlarged, corrected, and largely re-written edition of 'A reader's guide to Irish fiction' (1910), arranged as an author-list (about 1,500 entries), with title and subject index. Preliminary biographical notes to most authors, with excellent descriptive notes characterizing the literary quality of each book, and the point of view and treatment, as well as the matter. Includes some foreign novels of fiction on Ireland and Irish people, as well as many translations, etc., from Gaelic epic, fairy stories, folklore, etc."—Library Association Record

- Ath p32 Ja '16 80w
- Library Association Record p79 F 15 '16 80w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:108 J1 '16
- St Louis 15:5 Ja '17 30w

BROWNE, ARTHUR BENJAMIN. Handbook of carburetion, il *$2 Wiley 629.2 16-1076

"A scientific discussion of a troublesome subject. Covers theory, carburetor testing, testing of motor vehicles, direct determination of carburetor action, chemistry and physical conditions, with a chapter on the carburetor of the future."—N Y Br Lib News

"For the automobile designer and engineer, not for the chauffeur."

- + A L A Bkl 13:153 Ja '17
- + N Y Br Lib News 3:45 Mr '16 30w

"Discusses in a clear manner, without the use of advanced mathematics, the fundamental theory of this troublesome apparatus."

- + N Y P L New Tech Bks p3 F '16 130w

"Valuable reference for engineers."

- + Pratt p20 O '16 20w
- St Louis 14:190 My '16

BROWNE, BELMORE. Quest of the Golden Valley; a story of adventure on the Yukon. il *$1.25 (2c) Putnam 16-20433

The author of this story for boys has been a member of three expeditions that have attempted to scale Mt. McKinley and he has written of these attempts in an earlier book. To the writing of his first story he brings a first-hand knowledge of the dangers and hardships that appeal especially to the imagination of a boy. His hero, George Draper, comes from Connecticut to make his home with an uncle in Washington. The uncle is a backwoodsman of the pioneer type, and George finds the change from simple village life most interesting; but bigger adventures are ahead of him, for his uncle takes him, in company with another boy of the same age, to Alaska where they prospect for gold.

"The story has plenty of incident, but it is written in a spiritless, undramatic style which makes it on the whole rather dull reading."

- + N Y Times 21:429 O 15 '16 230w
- + Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 160w
- The Times [London] Lit Sup p638 D 28 '16 80w

BRUCE, ANDREW ALEXANDER. Property² and society. (National social science ser.) *50c (1½c) McClurg 330 16-23072

"For some time it has been apparent that the legal and social concepts of property did not square," says Frank L. McVey in his preface. "A new statement is needed that will recognize what has been accomplished by organized society and at the same time point the way to the newer social concept. Judge Bruce has tried to meet this problem of statement in his book." Contents: The legal and social concept of property; The origin of the private property idea; Necessity of extended private ownership to national greatness; Limitations to the right of private property and of personal liberty; The doctrine of public necessity versus the principle of feudal relationship; The right to waste; Employers' liability acts; The right of combination; The right to bequeath and to inherit; Anarchism, socialism, and the American courts; Public opinion versus legislation.

"The author, though favoring the regulation of monopoly, does not realize that the essence of monopoly is control over supply, and that the production of goods is limited in order to attain the highest net profit. . . . If Judge Bruce would study the works of Lavelle, Sir Henry Maine and Foustel de Coulanges, he would soon be convinced that his account of origins is faulty. He would see that force, not justice, determined who should own and who should be the dispossessed." P. H. Douglas

- + N Y Call p14 Ja 21 '17 950w
- R of Rs 55:109 Ja '17 100w

BRUHN, MARTHA EMMA. Müller-Walle method of lip-reading for the deaf. (Bruhn lip-reading system) $2 Nichols 371.9 15-14798

"Consists of thirty lessons, which may be used by adults for home study, by teachers of adults, or by teachers and pupils in schools for deaf children. Miss Bruhn is principal of the Müller-Walle school of lip-reading in Boston, and is the one who adapted the German method to English. The work has the endorsement of leading teachers of the deaf, and the Nation says, 'The spirit of the book is admirable, and in its analysis of the points to be noted by deaf persons who desire to read the lips it is invaluable.'"—A L A Bkl

- + A L A Bkl 12:357 My '16

"Thorough and comprehensive. The spirit of the book is admirable, and in its analysis of the points to be noted by deaf persons who desire to read the lips it is invaluable."

- + Nation 101:341 S 9 '15 520w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BRUNKHURST, HARRIET. Window in the fence. il *$1.25 (2c) Doran 16-9546

An uneventful story for those who are fond of country life and of children. The wife, who tells the story, is an artist. Her husband is a writer. And her story tells how they gave up their comfortable city apartment for a home in the country, how they found their house big and empty and brought in three boys to help fill it. All the good things of life follow their experiment, including a larger measure of worldly success, and also the salutary experiences of sorrow and loss.

"A quiet, pleasant book."

+ A L A Bkl 12:428 Je '16

"The book is written with a peculiarly intimate touch which, in spite of its too fluent romanticism, lends it an air of reality, and makes it fairly interesting."

+ — Boston Transcript p23 Jl 5 '16 130w

+ Lit D 53:471 Ag 26 '16 150w

"The book would be more attractive if the characters had names like human beings, and were not called 'the Man,' 'the Blue Hussar,' etc., etc."

— Spec 117:379 S 30 '16 40w

"It was Mr. Barry Pain, we think, who said of a very sentimental collection of letters which had a great vogue some years ago, that it made you feel as if you had been eating caramels in excess in a moonlit churchyard. This is exactly the feeling produced by this story."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p335 Jl 13 '16 130w

Wis Lib Bull 12:322 Jl '16 60w

BRYAN, WILHELMUS BOGART. History of the national capital, from its foundation through the period of the adoption of the organic act. 2v v 2 *$5 (2c) Macmillan 975.3 (14-7093)

v 2 Volume 1 was published in 1914. Volume 2 carries the history of the city of Washington down to 1878, closing with the adoption of the commission form of government which has been in operation since that date. Social life in the national capital during the period covered is given considerable attention and the record of events during the civil war years is of particular interest.

"The second volume of Mr. Bryan's history of the District of Columbia is better than the first volume. . . . The volume itself grows better as it proceeds and the chapter next to the last, in which Mr. Bryan deals with the Shepherd régime, is the most interesting. The whole book, however, is interesting. A third volume bringing the history up to the present date is to be hoped for." Gaillard Hunt

+ Am Hist R 22:182 O '16 1450w

"The references to authorities are extremely numerous, foot-notes are on almost every page, and the index is well arranged."

+ Ath p437 S '16 w

"The peculiar characteristic of this history is that, in a way, it is double. That is, the local history is inextricably involved with the history of the nation. . . . The work is the product of careful research, and the very numerous citations of authorities vouches for its authenticity. It meets the need for a comprehensive history of the nation's capital."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Jl 1 '16 400w (Review of v 2)

"The same discursiveness and lack of larger organization which marked the previous volume are apparent in this one, which nevertheless forms a rich collection of information for students of particular questions as well as for those specially interested in the city of Washington."

+ — Dial 61:215 S 21 '16 220w

+ Ind 87:69 Jl 10 '16 30w

+ Lit D 53:475 Ag 26 '16 720w

+ Lit D 53:1543 D 9 '16 300w

+ N Y Times 21:333 Ag 27 '16 60w

R of Rs 54:348 S '16 110w

BRYAN, WILLIAM ALANSON. Natural history of Hawaii. il *$5.50 W: A. Bryan, P. O. box 38, Honolulu, Hawaii; for sale by Stechert 508.96 15-27637

"The origin of the Hawaiian race is shrouded in obscurity. . . . Yet their natural history is of extraordinary interest. And to this history, Mr. Bryan has devoted many years of study—as naturalist, museum curator and professor of zoology and geology—and now presents, for the first time, within one volume and in simple and readable form, an account of the early history and manners and customs of the Hawaiian race; the topography, physiography, geography and geology of the islands, especially those facts anent the history of the great Hawaiian active and extinct volcanoes, and wonderful volcano-wrought scenery; and the native and introduced plants, animals, birds and insects found in the archipelago." (Boston Transcript) Bibliography.

"The book is indeed a work of vast scope and detail. Yet so simple and cogent is Mr. Bryan's arrangement that the great mass of data never overwhelms or ennuies. The text is free from those technical and scientific terms which too often in books of this kind discourage the general reader. When such terms are absolutely necessary they are defined in the text and foot-notes or in the index and glossary. This index and glossary is made a special feature of the book and will prove invaluable both to the general reader and to the student."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 1 '16 530w

+ Lit D 53:467 Ag 26 '16 230w

"Readable, useful, and trustworthy. . . . The section on the people is disappointing in some respects. . . . In dealing with the flora and fauna the author never loses sight of the problems of distribution. . . . Another good feature of the book is the careful manner in which native species are distinguished from introduced species."

+ Nature 98:46 S 21 '16 520w

+ N Y Times 21:319 Ag 13 '16 60w

"All information has been sifted and studied by the author who for many years has led an active naturalist's life in the islands. The volume is elaborately illustrated with half-tones from original photographs, and includes 117 full-page plates from 435 negatives. Many of the plates are extremely beautiful. All through the book are scattered native legends which add greatly to its interest. It is written in a style which even the professor of English at Harvard would, I think, like to claim for his own." L. O. Howard

+ Science n s 43:571 Ap 21 '16 1350w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p191 Ap 20 '16 80w

"A volume which contains an immense amount of information. But we wish that we could say that he had risen to the height of his subject. The book is overshadowed by the spectre of the 'popular' reader. Having thus forfeited the chance of being of great scientific value the work, on the other hand, is too laboriously comprehensive to be read for pleasure. Nor does the author show the qualities of style to produce an enchanting volume."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p244 My 25 '16 1400w

BRYANT, MARGUERITE (MRS. PHILIP MUNN). Felicity Crofton. il *$1.35 (1½c) Duffield 16-1395

Felicity Crofton is the mother of a grown daughter but she has kept marvelously the spirit of youth and she finds her happiness in the friendship and companionship of young people. There are half a dozen of them in the story, some of them her brother's pupils, to whom she is "Madre," and it is when one of these, Adam Preston, her favorite, loses faith in her and is quick to believe evil of her, that she loses her grip on herself. All the time she is shielding another, and altho she continues to do so to the end, taking another's punishment on herself, her splendid vitality of spirit reasserts itself, and she is left at the story's end a splendid figure even in the face of defeat. Another element of interest in the story is the strong spirit of comradeship that exists between Felicity and the man who marries her daughter.

"The characters are all real, are interesting types, and the atmosphere and feeling are given with few but strong and effective touches."

+ A L A Bkl 12:287 Mr '16

+ Ath p242 My '16 100w

"There is also a wonderfully fine piece of character work in the depiction of a romancing, morbid girl, whom Mrs. Crofton endeavors to protect from the consequences of her wrongdoing." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:85 Mr '16 570w

"Mrs. Munn gives a study of extraordinary kindness and sympathy in the character about which her intensely human story revolves. . . . The absorbing analysis of human nature, its credible inconsistencies, its incredible consistencies, is the novel's chief appeal. But it holds as well, charming bits of description."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 5 '16 350w

+ Cleveland p17 Mr '16 80w

"Although the book is too long, it is fairly interesting, and a good deal of thought has evidently gone to the making of it. Felicity herself is drawn carefully, but she somehow fails to be so lovable as the author apparently intended to render her. The trouble is not the lack of fine qualities, but the fact that she never seems altogether real."

+ — N Y Times 21:90 Mr 12 '16 350w

"This story has absorbing interest for those who enjoy character study, but it has few of the elements that make for popularity among novel-readers in general."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:90 F '16 50w

BRYANT, SARA CONE (MRS. THEODORE FRANZ BORST). Stories to tell the littlest ones. il $1.50 Houghton 16-23208

This book of stories has been compiled from the many that the author has told to her own little girl and boy. Some of them are adaptations from old tales, but most of them are original stories that "grew spontaneously out of the mood of the hour." The author says, "It has seemed to me that the best of them might prove of value to other teachers and mothers of very little children, for the demand is continuous, and the supply of material suitable for tiny hearers is exceedingly small." A number of poems and action rimes are also included. The pictures are by Willy Pogány.

+ Dial 61:548 D 14 '16 70w

"Readers will understand the value of the cumulative tale, and will see exactly how vital are those verses and poems which bring in the physical activities of the child, on reading some of these little stories."

+ Lit D 53:1560 D 9 '16 130w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 200w

BRYNER, EDNA. Garment trades. il 25c Cleveland foundation. Survey committee; Russell Sage foundation 370.91 16-11596

"This report of the Cleveland survey deals with the garment trades and outlines the social and economic situation of the workers in this field. This volume points out the fact that there has been a rapid growth of this industry and that the development of machinery has created a demand for a certain type of skill which was not required in the early days of the simpler industry. . . . The conclusion which is reached by Miss Bryner is that the present work which is given in the schools does not prepare for the garment-making industries. There ought to be something else undertaken which shall prepare those who are going into these trades for more skilful participation in them. The book therefore recommends the establishment of a school similar to that which has been successfully carried on in the Manhattan trade school for girls."—El School J

El School J 17:77 O '16 1350w

Pittsburgh 21:414 O '16 20w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Nelson's History of the war; with preface by the Earl of Rosebery. 13v maps ea 60c Nelson 940.91 War15-86

"A continuous narrative history which admirably answers its purpose as a contemporary record, gives maps and plans in the text, documents in the appendixes, but no index." (A L A Bkl) v. 1, From the beginning of the war to the fall of Namur; v. 2, From the battle of Mons to the German retreat to the Aisne; v. 3, The battle of the Aisne and the events down to the fall of Antwerp; v. 4, The great struggle in West Flanders, the two attacks on Warsaw, and the fighting at sea down to the battle of the Falkland islands; v. 5, The war of attrition in the west, the campaign in the Near East, and the fighting at sea down to the blockade of Britain; v. 6, The campaign on the Niemen and the Narev, the struggle in the Carpathians, Neuve Chapelle, and the first attempt upon the Dardanelles; v. 7, From the second battle of Ypres to the beginning of the Italian campaign; v. 8, The midsummer campaigns and the battles on the Warsaw salient; v. 9, The Italian war, the campaign in Gallipoli and the Russian retreat from the Warsaw salient; v. 10, The Russian stand and the September offensive in the west; v. 11, The struggle for the Dvina and the great invasion of Serbia; v. 12, The retreat from Bagdad, the evacuation of Gallipoli, and the Derby report; v. 13, The position at sea, the fall of Erzerum and the battle of Verdun.

"It will serve the needs of the average small library better than the New York Times 'Encyclopedia of the war,' which is published every six months and gives collections of documents and extracts with no explanatory text or comment."

+ A L A Bkl 12:278 Mr '16 (Review of v 1-7)

"Mr. Buchan is perhaps at his best on the Russian campaigns."

+ Ath 1915,2:7 Jl 3 530w (Review of v 1-4)

"In the present volume he combines straightforward simplicity with great and accurate knowledge, especially of localities."

+ Ath p292 Je '16 140w (Review of v 12)

"Yet another excellent volume, containing a good account of the Baralong incident, and a fine passage on the work of our navy."

+ Ath p387 Ag '16 50w (Review of v 13)

+ Ind 84:194 N 1 '15 140w (Review of v 1 and 2)

"Intellectually, he is the writer of the type of W. M. Sloane. . . . It stands quite apart from every other book on the war thus far published, being as it is a well-ordered, comprehensive narrative of the operations in all fields and done with literary skill and power of unusual kinds."

+ Lit D 52:1285 My 6 '16 550w (Review of v 1-10)

"Free from any . . . ked bias, and combines evident accuracy of fact with unusual zest of style."

+ N Y Times 20:452 N 21 '15 520w (Review of v 1)

"We admire without reserve the way in which Mr. Buchan has collated his material, viewed it as far as possible . . . relation and perspective, and avoided excessive emphasis upon this or that feature of the campaign. There is no better contemporary record than this of Mr. Buchan."

+ Sat R 119:sup6 Je 19 '15 170w (Review of v 1-4)

"After reading it we have, above all things, a sense of the ease of Mr. Buchan's writing."

+ Spec 114:300 F 27 '15 2300w (Review of v 1)

+ Spec 114:412 Mr 20 '15 120w (Review of v 2)

+ Spec 114:626 My 1 '15 90w (Review of v 3)

"John Buchan was formerly private secretary to Lord Milner, who was high commissioner of South Africa during the Boer war. . . . This is perhaps the most compact and concentrated of the various works of the kind that have been undertaken."

BUCHAN, JOHN—Continued

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 25 '15 470w
(Review of v 1)

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p371 Ag 3
'16 40w (Review of v 13)

BUCHAN, JOHN. Power-house. *$1.25 (4c)
Doran 16-14863

Mr. Pitt-Heron disappears. His wife's cousin, Tommy Deloraine, sets out to find him. The search takes him to Moscow, Bokhara and other unknown places, but his friend Leithen, who stays at home in London, has just as much fun out of it as he does. For Leithen, a barrister, unravels the plot and unmasks the secret society, known as the "Power-house," that was behind Pitt-Heron's disappearance.

+ A L A Bkl 13:220 F '17

+ N Y Times 21:496 N 19 '16 250w

+ Spec 116:693 Je 8 '16 750w

"As thrilling a tale as the most thrill-and-mystery-loving reader could wish."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 29 '16 190w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p246 My
25 '16 440w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 40w

BUCK, ALONZO MORRIS. Electric railway. il
*$3 McGraw 621.3 15-18706

"The purpose of this book is to present to advanced students a course on the underlying principles of electric-railway design and operation. The subjects discussed are general considerations, the mechanics of traction, tracks, rolling stock, signals, power stations, transmission, substations and distribution circuits. These subjects are treated in an elementary way, clearly and without neglecting the most recent practice. A good perspective is given to the descriptive parts of the work by brief outlines of historical development, which enable the student to better appreciate the reasons for existing practice. . . . Nearly one-fifth of the book is devoted to the mechanics of train movement."—Engin N

+ A L A Bkl 12:408 Je '16

"With the exception of thirty-nine pages on cars, fourteen pages on electric locomotives and nine pages on track, the 390 pages of this book deal with the electrical requirements of urban and suburban transportation. Little except in a general way is given on operating costs, maintenance of equipment and systems, and nothing on handling cars when not in service. If these points can be overlooked in a textbook designed for the operating engineer as well as the student, and purporting to cover a field such as that coming under the heading of the 'electric railway,' then the book is well written."

+ Elec World 66:988 O 30 '15 210w

"The book is not in any sense a reference or practical man's book, neither is it always authoritative in technical matters, although it is only fair to say that the few such features to which exception might be taken are not sufficiently important to mar the work. It is essentially a students' textbook, readable, clear and instructive. The practicing engineer, tied to a particular small field in his profession, will find this book useful to broaden his outlook and bring him up to date in his general knowledge of other fields. Others, more fortunate in being able to keep abreast of the times, will find it too elementary to be of much use to them." W: A. Del Mar

+ Engin N 75:121 Ja 20 '16 520w

"For the advanced student and practicing engineer—a fundamental knowledge of mechanics being assumed."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p10 S '15 40w

BUCK, CHARLES NEVILLE. Destiny. il *$1.35
(1c) Watt 16-4582

O. Henry once wrote a short story on a theme something like that of this novel. He called it "The roads we take" and gave in it two contrasting pictures of what might have been had either one rather than the other of two roads been taken. Mr. Buck's story opens on a barren, rocky farm in the White mountains. Ham Burton, a boy of about sixteen, feels within himself the stirring of mighty powers; he recognizes in himself a child of destiny. He forces from his hard-pressed father the means for an education and goes out to conquer the world. Book 2 of the novel follows the progress that would have been his in the world of finance. He wields his power ruthlessly, but lifts his family out of poverty; makes of his brother a great musician and of his sister a famous beauty. Then comes the crash. Book 3 gives briefly the other picture, showing Ham's life on the farm where his splendid energy and strength could be utilized in building up a community.

"For readers who like an ingenious plot and can overlook exaggerations and improbabilities."

— A L A Bkl 13:82 N '16

"Beloved of the movie film men, who eagerly wait upon each new product of his pen, Mr. Buck here offers stimulant for more intense and heart-racking thrills than ever before. His magic wand has amazing power."

— Boston Transcript p8 Je 24 '16 200w

N Y Times 21:107 Mr 26 '16 450w

"The story is well designed to hold the attention of the reader from start to finish, but it is inferior in point of workmanship to Mr. Buck's Kentucky mountain stories."

— Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 200w

BUCK, GERTRUDE. Social criticism of literature. *$1 (7c) Yale univ. press 801 16-22564

An elementary contribution to the social theory of literature and to the conception of literature underlying it. In her opening chapter, "The muddle of criticism," the writer enumerates the six warring conceptions of criticism: viz., scientific, judicial, comparative, impressionistic, appreciative and æsthetic, and offers some constructive suggestions about what was done to secure rational order and to cause the long war of critical theories to end in active peace and cooperation. Three further chapters discuss the larger criticism, the standards of criticism, and the functions of the critic.

+ A L A Bkl 13:209 F '17

"The book was worth doing for the sake of the college student, who ordinarily is badly in need of enlightenment as to the nature of criticism and his proper relation to it. More important is the service it will render in defining and dignifying a new type of criticism. The university instructor who was moved to exclaim recently, 'If we only knew why we are teaching literature!' would do well to read and ponder this thoughtful volume." H.

+ English Journal 5:715 D '16 500w

+ Ind 89:119 Ja 15 '17 70w

"Her literary theory, as she avows, springs out of the social philosophy of John Dewey. . . . What Professor Buck offers us is not a social criticism of literature, but a literary criticism of society."

Nation 104:80 Ja 18 '17 440w

+ N Y Times 21:482 N 12 '16 900w

"The last chapter, 'The function of the critic' must give the critic pause. . . . The argument is interestingly presented, but it fails to win conviction, chiefly because Miss Buck leaves the question of taste out of the account."

+ Springfield Republican p8 N 10 '16 970w

BUCKHAM, JOHN WRIGHT. Mysticism and the modern life. *$1 Abingdon press 149.3
15-26890

"Professor Buckham has given us a book that meets a need. He considers his subject primarily in reference to the life of the present generation. The book falls into three parts: 'New forms,' 'Tests,' and 'Values of mysticism.' Professor Buckham believes that mysticism is not an exclusive religious gift reserved only for a favored few, but in some form is available for every one who will cultivate the capacity for it. . . . An important chapter is devoted to 'Health mysticism.' He holds that the church has made a critical mistake in trying to propagate itself rather than having manifested such a fundamental interest in all humanity as to make its ministry necessary to practical life. The new health mysticism needed today, therefore, is 'a new influx of love.' When this mysticism of the heart becomes sound and controlling, there will be a new temper of hope and health among Christians.'—Bib World

+ A L A Bkl 12:449 J1 '16

"The practical chapters on 'Lessons from the mystics' and 'Mysticism and modern society' are sane and wholesome. This book is heartily to be commended to all who seek to know the way in which God is to be appropriated and his power made effective in human life."

+ Bib World 48:63 J1 '16 170w

+ Ind 87:351 S 4 '16 40w

"A book that is both sane and sympathetic in a field of study where sympathy and sanity seldom lie down together. . . . The chief criticism to which the book is open is the wavering and uncertain use of the word mysticism itself."

Fortunately, this all-inclusive use of the term is confined to two or three chapters; and if in these the reader is on his guard, he will carry away from Professor Buckham's book as clear a notion of what mysticism is as he is likely to get from any book of its size on this rather involved subject."

+ Nation 103:42 J1 13 '16 420w

BUCKROSE, J. E., pseud. (MRS. ANNIE EDITH [FOSTER] JAMESON). Round-about, $1.25 (1½c) Doran 16-9063

It has been said that in English middle-class life the passing of three generations brings the family back to the place from which it started. This is the 'round-about'—the merry-go-round of life. The setting of this story is in Yorkshire, the time is from 1870? to 1914, the characters are the more or less common-place children and wives of men who by their tenacity and shrewdness had forced their way to material advantage. To this older generation—sitting as it did under vivid, stern nonconformist teaching, one thing was preeminent: "Religion was a real thing—a part of life—as much so as money and housekeeping and business." The future life was as assured as the present. Alice Taylor rebels against the social climbing of her parents, which would sacrifice the personal happiness of their daughters to the family ascent, and marries Tom Barnet, the upright, clever son of a local tradesman. The revolving events of English life bring her freedom, opportunity, and comfort. She spares her children all the sacrifices demanded from her own youth, and thinking to lead them into the newer democracy allows each to develop an intense individualistic philosophy. The coming of the Great war teaches these young people what those of the first generation had, with all their faults and short-comings, known so well—the love of locality (now broadened into love of country) and the "power of an endless life."

A L A Bkl 13:82 N '16

+ Bookm 44:65 S '16 400w

"Despite a few tedious chapters in the first third of her book, Mrs. Buckrose has written a remarkable novel. She has depicted for us the backbone of England, real Englishmen and Englishwomen, with their aims, their ideals, their honesty, their lack of expression and, last of all, their unflinching heroism. This book places Mrs. Buckrose in a class with Galsworthy, E. F. Benson and other contemporary novelists." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 27 '16 420w

+ Nation 103:261 S 14 '16 370w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 J1 '16

"It is 'rich in veined humanity,' every character becoming as real to the reader as though they all walked in the flesh among us. There is the dull usedness taking the place of married happiness; there is the glow of young love; there is the arid middle age of the unmarried; there is the . . . love of middle life fairer than the passion of youth, and, finally, the call of England, in response to which so much dross is burned away. It is, in very truth, a wheel of life."

+ N Y Times 21:246 Je 18 '16 620w

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:322 J1 '16 60w

BULLARD, ARTHUR. Diplomacy of the great war. $1.50 (1c) Macmillan 327 16-2575

The author calls this an introductory text-book saying that it has "the same relation to a treatise on diplomacy that a high school 'algebra' has to a text-book in 'celestial mechanics.'" It does present a simplification of the European tangle for which the "average" or "general" reader will undoubtedly be grateful. Book 1 of the volume, The struggle of a generation, outlines the developments of European politics following the Congress of Berlin in 1878. Book 2, The new elements of diplomacy, considers some of the new ideas about diplomacy that have grown up in the last generation, with chapters on The rights of nations, Dollar diplomacy, The colonial world, and The growth of public opinion. Book 3, The liquidation of this war, which the author describes as "pure hypothesis," suggests a solution in which these modern ideas of diplomacy are made to apply to the problems raised by the war. Book 4, The United States and Europe, has chapters on Our traditional policy; The problems of the war; National defence; The United States and peace. The chapters of this part are based on articles that appeared in the Century.

"In his account of affairs Moroccan, Mr. Bullard unfortunately follows Morel—a mere disaffected political pamphleteer—too closely and confidently. . . . The volume contains a critical bibliography which shows that Mr. Bullard has read widely and deeply on the causes of the war. The value of this bibliography is somewhat lessened by the failure, in most cases, to mention the time and place of publication. . . . If Mr. Bullard has failed to produce a satisfactory text-book (his mode of treatment being much too subjective or impressionistic), he has succeeded in writing a very entertaining and stimulative volume." A. S. Hershey

+ — Am Hist R 22:158 O '16 770w

+ A L A Bkl 12:471 J1 '16

"At once takes its place among the distinctive additions to war literature which have recently been published. . . . The bibliography appended contains a list of books in English, French and German, interesting and not likely to be known to the general reader." E. R. Turner

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:384 My '16 980w

"No one can read this book with an open mind and not feel that he tells the truth so far as it can be determined by historical evidence; and on the speculative side—the second half of the work—he frankly tells us 'I can cite no evidence for my beliefs.'" K. F. Geiser

+ Ann Am Acad 65:311 My '16 300w

Boston Transcript p9 Mr 11 '16 750w

"Among the already large number of books dealing with the diplomatic history of Europe immediately prior to the outbreak of the present war, Mr. Arthur Bullard's is easily the most interesting and in some respects the most valuable. The point of view of the author is singularly fair and judicial."

+ Dial 60:338 Mr 30 '16 430w

"Bullard treats of the Barbary coast or the Spanish Americas with sure touch and vivid portrayal that come from actual association and intimate understanding. Nowhere have we seen a better brief account of the Moroccan crises and the conference at Algeiras."

+ Nation 102:385 Ap 6 '16 1650w

"Mr. Bullard's book is neither an account nor an exploration of the diplomacy of the great war. It is a general and deliberately elementary survey of international relations since the Congress of Berlin. . . . There may be more expert accounts of European relations from 1878 to 1914. It would be hard to find one more lucidly informative, vivid and concise. . . . In the last three sections of this book Mr. Bullard discusses the newer elements in diplomacy, the way they may affect the decision when war is concluded, and our own policy in a world where international issues can be violently joined. This part of the book is, in a sense, Mr. Bullard's contribution. . . . The opinionative section of this book, especially in regard to our war policy, is built on unstable foundations. Events have shifted too quickly to leave it four-square."

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BULLARD, ARTHUR—Continued

+ New Repub 7:69 My 20 '16 980w

"Its forceful statement, fresh point of view, clear and pungent thinking, and entire lack of reverence for fame and station make it an entertaining as well as an informing volume. The excellent bibliography with critical and expository notes which Mr. Bullard includes deserves a word of praise."

+ N Y Times 21:67 F 27 '16 600w

Pittsburgh 21:357 J1 '16 80w

R of Rs 53:502 Ap '16 70w

"It is full of good ideas, such as an international conference on the difficult questions involved in naturalization laws, and the last twenty pages on National defense and The United States and peace should be widely read and considered." E. G. Balch

+ Survey 37:91 O 28 '16 90w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Ap 27 '16 70w

"A decidedly useful work. The author has kept a fairly judicial attitude, 'not expecting to find superhuman virtue or vice on either side.'"

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:185 Ap '16 60w

BULLENS, DENISON K. Steel and its heat treatment. il *$3.75 Wiley 669 16-6272

"Emphasizing the importance of the 'human factor,' this book is practical with sufficient theory to insure an understanding of principles. Completely and attractively illustrated with many photomicrographs and charts. Covers the subjects of testing structure, annealing, hardening, case carburizing and hardening, treatment of the different kinds of steel (including tool steel), pyrometry, and heat generation and application. The data on the principles of furnace construction are particularly noteworthy. The chapter on miscellaneous treatments refers to gears, springs, oil-well bits, safe and vault steel, steel wire and forgings."—N Y Br Lib News

+ Cleveland p115 Ag '16 40w

"A collection of valuable information is found between its covers, not only to the professional man but to the layman as well. . . . Modern requirements demand some very large solid forgings on which it would be interesting to have data. This book deals lightly with anything larger than a car or locomotive axle, but as a whole it is valuable."

+ Engin N 76:309 Ag 17 '16 130w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:74 My '16 90w

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p17 My '16 80w

Pittsburgh 21:292 Je '16 20w

+ St Louis 14:435 D '16 40w

BULLOCK, EDNA DEAN, comp. Selected articles on trade unions. *$1.25 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 331.87

A second edition of one of the volumes of the 'Debaters' handbook series." In an explanatory note the compiler says, "The general subject having been quite thoroughly covered in the first edition, only a few additional reprints are included in the second edition. The bibliography has been brought down to date by careful selection from a bewildering wealth of publications which have appeared since 1912."

BUNKER, MILTON NEWMAN. Physical training for boys. il *$1 (7c) Lothrop 613.7 16-17740

The author presents a system of physical training which the individual boy working alone and without apparatus can follow. Thruout, the high ideals of physical perfection of the ancient world are held up for the emulation of modern boys. There are 36 plates that accompany the exercises and in addition there are several other illustrations from photographs of boy athletes.

+ Cleveland p133 N '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:139 S '16

+ N Y Times 21:423 O 8 '16 40w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 100w

BUNNER, HENRY CUYLER. Stories. 2 series il ea *$1.25 Scribner 16-11385 (1st ser.) 16-26544 (2d ser.)

A new edition in two volumes of the stories of H. C. Bunner, with an introduction by Brander Matthews. "Bunner is old only because he is of yesterday rather than to-day. A real treat—a literary and human treat—is in store for those who form their acquaintance with Bunner from these volumes." (Springfield Republican)

"Contains the stories, which were formerly published in five volumes, 'The story of a New York house,' 'The midge,' 'Jersey street and Jersey lane,' 'Love in old cloathes,' and 'The Zadoc pine labor union.' For libraries where all the stories are desired, this two volume edition is cheap and acceptable, with readable type and good paper."

+ A L A Bkl 12:489 J1 '16

+ Ind 86:486 Je 19 '16 80w

"The place that Bunner holds in the history of the American short story is secure, and is much the same place as that held by Aldrich, Cable and Stockton. . . . In these two volumes we have the inimitable 'Love in old cloathes,' probably the best short story ever written in epistolary form."

+ Nation 103:159 Ag 17 '16 350w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 J1 '16 80w

"He is one of the few writers who help us to remember the old landmarks of New York that were long since swept away. For pathos, for charm, insight, natural grace and sentiment, Bunner is still unequaled by the writers of the younger generation."

+ R of Rs 54:123 J1 '16 370w

"The best thing about Bunner, accomplished craftsman as he was, was that he had something to write about. Bunner's art is not cosmopolitan. It is American, but, being true to human character, it is universal."

+ Springfield Republican p13 My 28 '16 850w

BURGESS, ERNEST WATSON. Function of socialization in social evolution. *$1.25 (1c) Univ. of Chicago press 301 16-15817

There are three factors involved in social evolution, says the author, geography, heredity and socialization. His thesis in this book is "that socialization, rather than either geography or heredity, is the dominant factor in social evolution." Socialization is defined as "the participation of the individual in the community of thought, feeling and action of the group." In the three parts of the book consideration is given to the role of socialization in discovery and invention, in social progress, and in personal development.

"His book is technical, and will be appreciated to the full only by serious students of the subject. It is a thorough, consistent and substantial piece of work."

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 6 '16 370w

Ind 88:167 O 23 '16 50w

"It contains a considerable number of facts and extracts that have their interest in which respect they somewhat differ from the whole to which they contribute."

+ Nation 103:243 S 7 '16 240w

N Y Br Lib News 3:138 S '16 60w

St Louis 15:7 Ja '17 40w

BURGESS, FREDERICK WILLIAM. Old pottery and porcelain. il *$2.50 (2c) Putnam 738 16-22795

This is the second volume of the Home connoisseur series, following "Antique furniture," by the same author. The aim in this book has been "to provide home connoisseurs with a handy book of reference embracing general features of interest in all the groups and periods into which ceramics are usually classified." (Preface) There are introductory chapters on The potter's art, Materials and identification, Decorations and glazes, Prehistoric pottery, Roman and Romano-British. Twenty chapters are devoted to English pottery. Irish pottery has one chapter, continental pottery four chapters, oriental pottery three. There is a final chapter on Prices and the book ends with Glossary and Index.

+ Ath p430 S '16 100w
Cleveland p155 D '16 50w
+ Dial 61:478 N 30 '16 170w

"The title of the book is liable to the same criticism as that which we made in the case of the earlier volume, 'Antique furniture'; it is too comprehensive; the whole subject of old pottery and porcelain is not dealt with systematically. The chapters on oriental porcelain cover about 30 pp.; the chapters on British manufacturers fill about half the book. There is no objection, of course, to such a programme, but collectors should know what they have to expect."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p442 S 14 '16 110w

BURGESS, GELETT. Romance of the commonplace. $1.25 (2c) Bobbs 814 16-6013

A new edition of a volume of essays published in 1902. In a new preface the author says: "How innocent, how irresponsible do these slight essays now appear! And yet I can not redress them in the sophisticated diction of my prime. . . . And, too, even in middle age I see no great flaw in their optimistic reasoning, such as it is, for to view life romantically I have found the surest cure for cynicism and ennui."

"His views, which he now calls 'slender boyish dreams,' are undiminished in freshness and originality."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 5 '16 70w

"Good reading, particularly where they verge, as they often do, on the autobiographical."

+ Dial 60:428 Ap 27 '16 180w

BURGESS, GELETT. War—the creator. il *60c (4½c) Huebsch 940.91 16-16724

A reprint of a story that appeared in Collier's in 1915. "Because he was my friend, because he was so lovable, because he suffered much, I want to try to tell the story of a boy who, in two months, became a man," says the author. It is the story of Georges Cucurou, the son of a shoemaker of Toulouse, who went with the first troops to the front, fought in the action at the Marne and was severely wounded there.

"Such a story takes on—such is the vast number of Cocos—not a little significance. For Mr. Burgess, the writing of the story was an exercise in friendship, as well as in journalism; and as journalism it is of the best modern sort, skillfully wrought and sympathetic."

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 6 '16 400w

"Its distinction from the mass of such tales lies in the fact that it tells of the terrible months of the French retreat."

+ Ind 88:33 O 2 '16 50w

"There is much strength and vivacity in this little book. . . . The story of Georges's adventures is interesting, but not especially significant; there have been hundreds of narratives as picturesque and as well told in the material sent back from the front by the war correspondents."

+ N Y Times 21:336 Ag 27 '16 470w

R of Rs 54:461 O '16 40w

BURGESS, JOHN WILLIAM. Administration of President Hayes; the Larwill lectures, 1915. il $*1 (3c) Scribner 973.8 16-8605

Four lectures delivered at Kenyon college in 1915. The author is of the belief that "the personality and administration of Rutherford B. Hayes have not been duly and sufficiently estimated and appreciated by his countrymen and the world." This belief was stated in his work on "Reconstruction and the constitution," published in 1902, and the invitation to deliver a series of lectures at the college which was President Hayes's alma mater offered him a long wished for opportunity to give it further and more full expression. The four lectures, in which the entire Hayes administration is reviewed are: The political, economic, and social situation in the year 1876; The election of 1876 and the inauguration; The Southern policy and the financial policy; The re-establishment of the government upon its constitutional foundation.

"Of particular interest is the praise accorded Hayes's financial policy, which covered the subjects of resumption of specie payments, free coinage of silver, and refunding of the debt." E. L. B.

+ Am Econ R 6:620 S '16 160w

"This curiously technical and hypothetical way of characterizing the bitter party contests of 1879-1880, in which the Senate was in no danger of being subordinate to the lower house, and the president, supported by more than one-third of each branch, occupied an impregnable position, cannot but seem artificial. . . . The student of government will find interesting and suggestive material, but little to suggest the great underlying tendencies of the time or to show President Hayes's share in them or his relation to his party." T. C. Smith

+ — Am Hist R 22:208 O '16 430w

A L A Bkl 13:75 N '16

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 15 '16 570w

Dial 61:29 Je 22 '16 500w

Ind 87:69 Jl 10 '16 90w

"The unconventional method employed is due to the fact that this volume is made up of a course of four lectures delivered at Kenyon college, the alma mater of Mr. Hayes. The same circumstance will account also for the oratorical element injected into the text at intervals, and for the eulogistic note observable everywhere. Especially is this emphasized by the writer's neglect of any discussion of the approval of the Arrears of pensions act."

+ — Nation 102:596 Je 1 '16 870w

Pittsburgh 21:359 Jl '16

R of Rs 53:755 Je '16 20w

"The author confesses a great personal admiration for the 19th president, which, happily, can be said to be well founded. This admiration, however, may explain the possibly too light dismissal of the election contest, a contest which even to-day is a subject of debate among persons whose attitude is impartial."

+ — Springfield Republican p10 Je 22 '16 650w

BURKE, KATHLEEN. White road to Verdun. 2 il $*1 (6c) Doran 940.91 16-24442

Miss Burke, of the Scottish women's hospitals, describes her journey from Paris to Verdun in the summer of 1916. Earlier in the year she had visited America in the interests of the hospital work in France and Serbia. Her chapters are brief and largely anecdotal in character. She writes of: The true philosophers; Life behind the lines; Devotion to animals; Value of women's work; Poilu and Tommy; At the headquarters of the Generalissimo, etc.

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p627 D 21 '16 110w

BURKE, THOMAS. Nights in London: an autobiography. $2.50 Holt 914.21 16-13199

"A collection of essays, about the most picturesque nocturnal aspect of Mr. Burke's favorite city. Every prose study is prefaced by a lyric." (Lit D) "He likes best, perhaps, to write of the London of sailors in port, of Shadwell, Limehouse, the West India docks, the Isle of Dogs, Blackwall, and sees there the sort of sights a Dickens might see." (Nation)

"'Hoxton' and 'Blackwall' give revelations of what horror can exist in certain quarters that seem almost beyond the law. 'A charitable night: east, west, north, and south,' is a scathing résumé of the nauseous activities of certain would-be benevolent people."

BURKE, THOMAS—Continued

+ Ath 1915;2:242 O 9 500w

"Incidentally—and wholly unconsciously—the essays reveal a delightful personality whose love of living pulses bravely through all of the adventures." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 3 '16 600w

Lit D 52:1228 Ap 29 '16 240w

"Add that the brisk and saucy pen runs readily with indignation against the 'rude throng at war with beauty and with truth,' and can turn a pretty verse, and we have here a generous flood of good talk on an inexhaustible theme."

+ Nation 102:522 My 11 '16 420w

BURLEIGH, LOUISE, and BIERSTADT, EDWARD HALE. Punishment; a play in four acts; with an introd. by T: Mott Osborne. *$1 Holt 812 16-10923

The action of the play takes place in Riverside prison. The new warden has entered on his duties firm in the belief that punishment must be meted out to offenders whatever its effect on them as individuals. His wife, a woman of ardent spirit and broad humanitarian sympathies, sees that punishment which is not regenerative is a travesty of justice, and the incidents of the play all serve to bring her husband to this point of view. The last act closes just as the real fight is about to begin, the fight with the forces of graft outside that will oppose the warden's new stand, but assurance of victory is supplied by the hearty cooperation which the men inside the walls are ready to give. Thomas Mott Osborne vouches for the accuracy of the prison life depicted.

+ A L A Bkl 13:19 O '16

"Deals with the vital problem of prison reform in a way that is at once vivid, accurate, and genuinely dramatic. It is almost as grim as Galsworthy's 'Justice,' but it is more hopeful."

+ Ind 87:104 J1 17 '16 50w

"In the place of the artful realism and logical progression of successive incident to the crowning catastrophe in Mr. Galsworthy's piece, we have emotional and manifestly tricky sensationalism. The moral and motive of the piece are unexceptionable."

+ Nation 103:522 N 30 '16 300w

N Y Br Lib News 3:92 Je '16

"It is an excellent reading play."

+ R of Rs 53:763 Je '16 130w

"The dialog is interesting and in some places even striking, and in no place does the play descend to melodrama."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 17 '16 250w

Wis Lib Bull 12:319 J1 '16 60w

BURNAP, GEORGE. Parks; their design, equipment and use; with an introd. by R: B. Watrous. (Landscape architecture ser.) il *$6 Lippincott 711 16-22994

The author is landscape architect of public buildings and grounds, Washington, D. C., and this book on parks is addressed particularly to executives who have the development of parks in their charge. The chapters are devoted to: Park design in city planning; Bringing up a park the way it should go; Principles of park design; "Passing-through" parks; Neighbourhood parks; Recreation parks; Playgrounds in parks; Effigies and monuments in parks; Architecture in parks; Decorative use of water; Planting design of parks; Park administration in relation to planting design; Seats in public parks; Disposition of flowers in parks; Park utilities. The illustrations, 163 in number in addition to the colored frontispiece, show photographic views of parks at home and abroad.

"The volume is profusely illustrated with well-chosen and finely executed views, of which there is one opposite each page. . . . The illustrations and their explanations are, as a rule, very poorly correlated with the text. . . . There would have been a gain in utility and little if any loss aesthetically if the illustrations pertinent to each chapter had been placed at the chapter end. . . . If the subject matter of the text seems inadequate to any readers of this notice, they should take cognizance of the fact that three companion volumes are in preparation—on 'Gardens,' 'Pictorial planting' and 'Landscape art.'"

+ Engin N 77:109 Ja 18 '17 400w

+ N Y Times 21:523 N 26 '16 80w

Pittsburgh 21:569 D '16

BURNET, DANA. Shining adventure. il *$1.30 (2½c) Harper 16-22049

He was one of the fortunate ones who possess keys to Gramercy Park. The park was his playground, but he could not be happy there because of the little children outside who peered in between the iron palings. So he bought the park with his pennies and went out to find the other children and bring them in. That was how it happened that little Maggie O'Connor was cured of her lameness, that Mr. Terrence O'Connor was elected alderman, that the United charities society changed the form of its annual resolution, and that Miss Philomena Van Zandt learned to be a human being instead of an institution.

"Children, the least sentimental of all created beings, have been the innocent cause of most modern sentimental literature. Mr. Burnet's story errs almost unpardonably in this respect."

— Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '16 190w

"There is just a bit of sentimentality in 'The shining adventure' but not enough to cloy. . . . Mr. Burnet has given a craftsmanlike quality to his book that raises it a little beyond the ordinary mass of work on similar themes."

+ Dial 61:470 N 30 '16 2100w

+ N Y Times 21:577 D 31 '16 360w

+ Pratt p47 Ja '17

"Here and there the author indulges a satirical sentiment, but generally the prevailing tone is rather poetic, with a leaven of humor, and the moral is unmistakable."

+ Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 300w

BURNETT, MRS. FRANCES (HODGSON) (MRS. STEPHEN TOWNSEND). Little hunchback Zia. il *75c (10½c) Stokes 16-16689

A gift book for the holiday season. Zia is a little cripple on whom the curse of leprosy is laid. Turned out of doors by the cruel old woman with whom he has lived, he wanders into Bethlehem. He is one of the first to kneel at the manger of the Christ child and the very first to receive healing at His touch. The story appeared in the Century for December, 1915.

"It was unnecessary to place the author's name on the title page of this little book. No one but Mrs. Burnett could possibly have written it. With a skill, as delicate as it is finished, is recreated for us the Judean country of 'those days when Herod was king.'"

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 22 '16 320w

"It is an ambitious task that the author has set herself. She fulfills it creditably, at least with earnestness and tenderness. Her treatment is not entirely in consonance with Catholic tradition and sentiment, but there is no actual irreverence, even unintentional."

+ Cath World 104:112 O '16 190w

"Admirably adapted for reading aloud."

+ Nation 103:520 N 30 '16 60w

+ N Y Times 21:342 S 3 '16 520w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 8 '16 180w

BURNHAM, MRS. CLARA LOUISE (ROOT). Instead of the thorn. il *$1.25 (2c) Houghton 16-8227

A pretty and spoiled Chicago girl comes after her father's death to live with her aunt on the Maine coast. For the financial troubles that brought on her father's fatal illness, she blames his young business associate, Bertram King. King has long been in love with Linda, but unable to explain the true state of her father's affairs, he cannot urge his suit. But during her summer amid simple, austere surroundings, Linda's point of view is altered. She listens to the teachings of her friend Mrs. Porter and changes her ideas of right and wrong, good and evil, and when finally she learns the truth about King and his relations to her father, she is ready to make reparation.

"A lively, wholesome love story. The moralizing tends to the Christian science ideas but can offend no one."

+ A L A Bkl 12:479 J1 '16

"The author succeeds in keeping a large proportion of the usual sentimentality out of her love story, thus making of it a rather light, amusing summer novel."

+ Boston Transcript p23 Ap 19 '16 110w

"The morality is a trifle obvious, the story a trifle dull."

+ Ind 86:343 My 29 '16 60w

"The story is full of messages of cheer and hope."

+ Lit D 53:77 J1 8 '16 250w

"A couple of amusing people, Miss Barry and her little maid of all work, Blanche Aurora, do something to relieve the decidedly saccharine quality of the book."

+ N Y Times 21:275 J1 9 '16 230w

St Louis 14:197 My '16

"A fairly diverting machine-made romance."

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 170w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:271 Je '16 50w

BURNS, CECIL DELISLE. Morality of nations: an essay on the theory of politics. *$1.50 (2½c) Putnam 320.1 16-6491

Institutions change more rapidly than the concepts by which we manage them. It is this consideration which has led to the writing of this book. The author sees that the nature of the state and the relation between states has undergone a change, while the idea of the state of an earlier day still prevails and controls international policy. He writes of: Morality and nationality; The state and other institutions; The state and other states; The state and nationality; Foreign interests; Foreign policy; Alliance; International rivalry; The morality of nations at war; Peace relations; Needs of the state; The comity of nations. To these is added a concluding chapter.

A L A Bkl 13:8 O '16

Educ R 52:316 O '16 30w

"To sum up, it may be said that Mr. Delisle Burns's ideals, with which practical politicians may very heartily sympathize, can, even on his own admission, only be realized by the gradual growth of a more enlightened public opinion in all countries. This is quite true, but is it not a truism? Surely most men of ordinary intelligence have arrived at much the same conclusion without any study of the teaching of philosophers from Xenophanes to Mr. Delisle Burns. Before leaving this work there is the casual remark made by Mr. Delisle Burns which calls for observation. 'The entry of England,' he says, 'into full alliance with France and Russia cannot yet be fully explained, since the necessary documents are not yet public.' I happen to be very fully acquainted with all the circumstances which led to the entente with France in 1904, and I am fairly familiar with all that occurred in the course of the subsequent negotiations with Russia. To the best of my knowledge and belief, no documents in connexion with either of these transactions remain unpublished which would throw any light upon them other than that which is contained in such papers as are already in the possession of the public. If Mr. Delisle Burns will refer to the papers laid before Parliament (Cd. 7467), he will find convincing proof that in July, 1914, the government of his country was wholly free from any engagement to support France or Russia in the event of war."

[Earl of] Cromer

+ Spec 116:257 F 19 '16 2900w

"Speculation of Mr. Burns's kind, so long as it does not encroach on the concrete, is truly educative, for it appeals to the mind. Mr. Burns, of course, is not to be accepted without large reservations, and it is to be regretted that he at times seems impatient of disagreement. But it should be said that the idealism which pervades his teaching, and which he learned from T. H. Green, is as greatly needed by the citizen as a mere command of facts, though the use of the imagination might be precarious and even dangerous if carried to the extremes which he bespeaks for it."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Mr 13 '16 700w

"This interesting book fairly bristles with contentious points, but we must resist the temptation to discuss them. We cannot conclude, however, without expressing our surprise and regret that Mr. Burns should join in the prejudiced hue and cry against the spirit of British diplomacy. . . . The Foreign office, as an institution for the promotion of peace and peaceful intercourse, may be defective, but to suggest that its labours have not been directed to the maintenance of good relations with foreign states is particularly unfortunate—to say the least of it—at the present time. It is also not true."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p26 Ja 20 '16 2800w

BURPEE, LAWRENCE JOHNSTONE. Sandford Fleming, empire builder. il *$3.40 Oxford A16-716

"It is not given to many men to have as large a part in building up a new country as Sandford Fleming had in building up Canada. With his name must be forever associated the two trunk lines which bind the provinces of the dominion together in economic and political unity. Such achievements of a railway engineer demand commemoration; and they are fittingly recorded by Mr. L. J. Burpee. As a biographer, he enjoyed the peculiar advantage of intimate acquaintance with the subject of his biography. In fact, the book was constructed under Sir Sandford Fleming's eye, and submitted to his revision, chapter by chapter, almost to the inevitable finis."—Nation

A L A Bkl 12:425 Je '16

"The chapters on the Intercolonial and Canadian Pacific railways and on Sandford Fleming's labours in connexion with the Pacific cable and the 'All-red' line will be read with interest; but a biography written in the lifetime of its subject is rarely a satisfactory form of literature. The account of Sandford Fleming's diplomatic mission to Honolulu and of the attempt to annex Necker island for the purposes of the cable is singularly characteristic both of the vigorous enterprise of the British individual and of the 'vis inertie' of Downing street with which he is liable to be confronted." H. E. E.

+ Eng Hist R 31:344 Ap '16 110w

"Mr. Burpee has produced a readable account of an important life, refraining from comment and allowing the man's deeds to speak for themselves."

+ Nation 102:461 Ap 27 '16 1000w

+ Pol Sci Q 31:359 Je '16 300w

BURR, AMELIA JOSEPHINE. Life and living. *$1 Doran 811 16-17093

In this, the author's third volume of verse, there are a number of beautiful examples of the lyric, the verse form in which she first attracted notice, as well as more ambitious attempts in narrative poetry and dramatic monolog. Many of the poems are reprinted from the Century, the Bellman, the Poetry Review and other periodicals that stand for the best in contemporary verse.

"Her fervent sympathy with life, grown deeper, has also grown steadier. Her new work is all the more important because she no longer allows impulsiveness to compromise spiritual force. . . . Fearless observation of life is reflected in the collection throughout."

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 16 '16 1550w

"Miss Burr, without losing anything of the deftness of her art, has gained a new intensity of feeling and a greater sense of kinship with the rest of humanity."

+ Lit D 53:463 Ag 26 '16 400w

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

BURR, AMELIA JOSEPHINE—Continued

"Full of strength and beauty and vivid with an almost cruel sense of the keenness of living and the tragic romance of it."

+ N Y Times 21:457 O 29 '16 290w

"It is certain that the quality which makes her poetry viable is her quick humanity. . . . The 'Poppies,' unquotable except entire and not to be desecrated by attempted description, is very notable." G. C. Hopkins

+ Poetry Review 2:7 N '16 2250w

"Her style at times is poignant and colorful, and in several poems in the volume she has trapped the spirit of the present war and expressed it emotionally."

+ Springfield Republican p13 S 24 '16 160w

BURR, WILLIAM HUBERT. Elasticity and resistance of the materials of engineering. 7th ed, thoroughly rev il $5.50 Wiley 620.1 15-21585

"This book is divided into two parts—1, Analytical; 2, Technical—the intention evidently being to cover the subject of the mechanics of materials in the first part and to give the practical applications, together with the results of tests, in the second. . . . Part 1, has been partly re-written and enlarged by about 80 pages."—Engin N

"In addition to the practical development of the subject gives considerable space to the mathematical development of the formulae used."

+ A L A Bkl 12:300 Mr '16

"Presents the subject in a much clearer and more logical style than did the previous edition. The book contains about 140 fewer pages than the old edition, due to the omission of the tables from the Cambria steel co.'s handbook and copies of various standard specifications, which are easily obtained by the student and are much more convenient to use in separate form. The greatest objection to the book is its lack of system in notation. A symbol may be given a meaning in one article and have an entirely different meaning in a preceding article to which reference is made. It is surprising that the chapter on concrete-steel members has not been revised so that the notation will agree with that recommended by the Joint committee on concrete and reinforced concrete. The notation used is not uniform, even throughout the chapter, and its lack of conformation renders the chapter very difficult to read, especially to one accustomed to the ordinary usage. The work should make a valuable reference book for the practicing engineer, as the interpretations of tests are generally sound and the suggestions as to details of design are good." C. T. Morris

+ Engin N 75:317 F 17 '16 1050w

"The present edition has been completely re-written and re-arranged, much of the older matter has been displaced by new topics of greater present practical importance, and a new book has virtually been created. Although smaller than the last edition, it still contains 928 pages. To those familiar with the older editions, a list of the chapter headings will indicate the character of the revision. . . . Some typographical errors have crept in, equation 3 on page 662, for example, containing two. The author is not always consistent in the use of his symbols. This classic work has long been regarded as the leading American authority in the field of the elasticity and resistance of materials. It is a source of gratification to the engineering profession that Professor Burr has been willing to undertake the arduous task of revision, and has completed this work in so thorough and satisfactory a manner." F. H. Constant

+ Engin Rec 73:24 Ja 1 '16 1000w

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 F '16 100w

BURRILL, EDGAR WHITE. Master Skylark; or, Will Shakespeare's ward. il $1 (3½c) Century 812 A16-537

A dramatization from the story of the same name by John Bennett, long a favorite with young people. The story tells of the kidnapping of Nick Attwood, a young boy of Stratford-on-Avon, by a company of players. He is taken to London, becomes famous as a choir-boy singer, appears before Queen Elizabeth, meets Shakespeare and is restored by him to his home. The five acts of the play follow this story closely. The play is adapted to amateur performance, but permission for production must be obtained from the author. The 8 illustrations are by Reginald Birch.

+ A L A Bkl 12:387 My '16

"The reproduction of the Shakspearian background is very accurate; to schools and amateur societies it should prove a boon, for it is easily acted, is of sufficient worth that the time spent on its production will not be wasted, and on the whole it will make an excellent little acting play."

+ Boston Transcript p24 F 23 '16 210w

"The story is a pretty one, and Mr. Burrill has dramatized it with a good deal of skill. But the action lacks continuity. Moreover, Mr. Burrill (or perhaps Mr. Bennett) is never quite at his ease in Elizabethan English, so that the dialogue is often stiff or cumbersome. The play is intended chiefly for amateurs; but it would require considerable resources in the way of setting, and the parts would be wearisome to learn. For reading, the narrative version of the story would, I should suppose, be preferable." H. E. Woodbridge

+ Dial 61:22 Je 22 '16 270w

"E. W. Burrill, has made such a delightful drama of the delightful story that it is used as the commencement play by Wellesley this June."

+ Ind 86:342 My 29 '16 60w

"Dramatically it is not very valuable, or practical, but it is a lively, romantic tale, with melodramatic interludes, and makes pleasant reading, although it would probably prove crude and bald in action."

+ Nation 104:27 Ja 4 '17 230w

N Y Br Lib News 3:43 Mr '16

Pittsburgh 21:123 Mr '16

"An exquisite thing, fine and delicate of sentiment."

+ R of Rs 53:633 My '16 200w

"The story has been done into play form with much grace. It holds no little appeal for the reader or the amateur player."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 200w

Wis Lib Bull 12:145 Mr '16 50w

BURRITT, EDWIN C., pseud. Boy scout Crusoe. il $1.25 Revell 16-22848

"A story well told of adventure in the South Pacific. While this Boy scout patrol is ashore on an uncharted island their ship—the Flying Fish—was swept away from its anchorage. Under the leadership of their scoutmaster this scout patrol had all kinds of problems to solve relating to shelter and food. In their experience with strange animals and at last with queer natives they add greatly to their stock of knowledge of nature and human nature."—Springfield Republican

"Reprinted from Boy's Life, and endorsed by the chief librarian of the Boy scouts of America as a truthful and not too thrilling picture of scout activities."

+ A L A Bkl 13:180 Ja '17

+ Ind 88:465 D 11 '16 50w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 80w

BURROUGHS, EDGAR RICE. Beasts of Tarzan. il $1.30 (2c) McClurg 16-5397

This is the third "Tarzan" story. In the first Tarzan's life as an ape-man was described; in the second he was rescued and taken to London to assume his title, Lord Greystoke. In the present story, powerful enemies first kidnap his young son, then abduct Tarzan himself and leave him marooned on the African coast. Here his early training serves him in good stead; he makes himself king of the jungle and eventually foils his enemies, and returns with rescued wife and child to England.

"This last revival of Tarzan is far from good. It lacks the charm of the other books. It is too blood-stained and brutal. It reads like a perpetual prize fight, and the climaxes are piled one upon another in a most inartistic way."

— Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '16 210w

"From the literary point of view they are perfectly negligible. The style is absurd, the action is mechanical, the characterization is nil. Why, then, do they succeed? . . . They sell because they present in the crude forms assimilable by the crude tastes and intelligences of their special public certain commodities which are in themselves by no means contemptible. Mowgli, John Ridd, Fauntleroy—such are Tarzan's literary prototypes. He was reared by apes, and has superhuman strength and is an English lord to boot."

— Nation 102:386 Ap 6 '16 370w

Springfield Republican p15 Ap 2 '16 220w

BURROUGHS, JOHN. Under the apple-trees. il *$1.25 (1½c) Houghton 814 16-11728

John Burroughs says, "I have given the name of the initial chapter, 'Under the apple-trees,' to the whole collection, because most of the essays were written in my camp under the trees, in the old orchard where I gathered apples as a farm-boy. The wild life about me appealed to my love of natural history, while thoughts and suggestions from beyond the horizon occupied my more philosophical meditations." The essays accordingly divide themselves into two groups, the studies of nature, and the speculative or philosophical essays. To the first belong The friendly rocks, The master instinct, Dame Nature and her children, etc.; to the second, The primal mind, "Fated to be free," Literature and science, "A prophet of the soul." The last named is an essay on Bergson and the philosophy of creative evolution.

"Some of the chapters have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly and Harper's magazine."

+ A L A Bkl 12:458 Jl '16

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:545 Jl '16 350w

"Richly suggestive and richly remunerative essays."

+ Dial 61:56 Jl 15 '16 230w

+ Ind 88:31 O 2 '16 140w

+ Nation 103:114 Ag 3 '16 370w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 Jl '16 50w

"John Burroughs never seems to make the fields his laboratory. Among his furry and feathered friends he is not the coldly scientific student, nor is he the eager spy. He is a visitor—a visitor, it is true, admitted on the most intimate terms by virtue of old acquaintance and—may we say?—congeniality, and a visitor whose hosts regard with tolerant amusement his amiable curiosity and tendency to gossip."

+ N Y Times 21:229 Je 4 '16 2350w

"I admire Mr. Burroughs's clearness of vision and his frankness in report; but I do not equally admire his dogmatism in interpretation. But, without accepting all of Mr. Burroughs's interpretations, I welcome the fundamental truths to which he gives expression, as Henri Bergson has done in 'Creative evolution.'" Lyman Abbott

+ Outlook 113:625 Jl 12 '16 1850w

+ R of Rs 54:122 Jl '16 10w

"There is an essay on Bergson, where the average reader would prefer one on kingfishers."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Jl 16 '16 400w

Wis Lib Bull 12:319 Jl '16 50w

BURTON, ELI FRANKLIN. Physical properties of colloidal solutions. *$1.80 Longmans 541.3 16-13181

"This work forms one of the series of monographs on physics edited by Sir J. J. Thomson, and it is perhaps natural that the author should have practically confined himself to discussing that class of colloidal solutions which has so far proved amenable to quantitative and mathematical investigation—the class known as suspensions. . . . An agreeable feature of the book is the amount of space devoted to presenting the historical development of different branches of the subject, many quotations from the original papers of pioneer workers being given."—Nature

Cleveland p133 N '16 20w

"The chapters dealing with the theory of the Brownian movement—to the physicist the crowning achievement of colloidal science—are admirable and give the best historical account, as well as the clearest presentation, of the mathematical work of Einstein, v. Smoluchowski, Langevin, and Perrin at present available in any text-book. The optical properties are also treated with unusual fullness, while the electrical ones receive ample, but not excessive, attention."

+ Nature 97:397 Jl 13 '16 470w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p4 Ag '16 240w

"Though the book is published in 1916, the manuscript was apparently finished before the middle of 1914. . . . The chief value of the book . . . is in showing what parts of colloid chemistry interest the physicist." W. D. Bancroft

+ Pittsburgh 21:347 Jl '16 50w (Reprinted from Journal of Physical Chemistry)

"Interesting outline of present day knowledge of a subject which is being actively investigated. Extensive bibliographies accompany the various chapters."

+ Pratt p20 Jl '16 20w

BURTON, RICHARD EUGENE. Bernard Shaw: the man and the mask. *$1.50 (2½c) Holt 822 16-23052

Steering between the misappreciation growing out of the more common estimate of Shaw and the adoration of Shaw idolaters, it is the aim of this study to strip him of the mask which his antic disposition² has prompted him to wear and to present him as the able satirist and artist. Some qualities of personality and certain significant happenings that throw light on Shaw's character and views are briefly set forth, while the body of the book treats of his dramas, giving the central idea of each and critical estimates of the force of the main contention, stage value, skill, dramatic clinch and literary execution. A review of Shaw, the social thinker, poet, mystic, and theater craftsman is followed by an estimate of his place in modern drama.

"Contains a bibliography of his dramas and an index. Does not replace Henderson (Booklist, 8:301, Mr '12), but would be most useful for drama class work."

+ A L A Bkl 13:160 Ja '17

"Surely Bernard Shaw could ask for no more enthusiastic apostle than Dr. Burton." E. F. E.

Boston Transcript p8 N 18 '16 1150w

R of Rs 55:214 F '17 70w

BUSWELL, LESLIE. Ambulance number 10. 2 il *$1 (4c) Houghton 940.91 16-22248

The author is one of those young Americans who are doing volunteer service as ambulance drivers in France. These letters written home during the summer of 1915 were first printed for private circulation under the title, "With the American ambulance field service in France." An editor's note says, "So keen was the interest that they stirred, and so many the requests for them which followed, that permission for their publication and sale in America was subsequently asked of the Ministry of foreign affairs in Paris." This permission being obtained, the letters are reprinted with no change save of title.

"A few of the letters appeared in 'Friends of France.'"

+ A L A Bkl 13:163 Ja '17

"No book I have read on the war seemed to have brought me so close to the actual front." Harold Stearns

+ New Repub 9:sup24 N 18 '16 200w

N Y Br Lib News 3:185 D '16

"A book that every American should read."

+ N Y Times 21:574 D 31 '16 530w

Pittsburgh 22:48 Ja '17 40w

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this Issue

BUSWELL, LESLIE —Continued

+ R of Rs 54:684 D '16 40w

+ Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 130w

BUTLER, SAMUEL. Way of all flesh; with an introd. by W. Lyon Phelps. *$1.50 (1c) Dutton 16-13048

The new American edition of a novel written in the seventies and eighties of last century and appearing in England in 1903. Now a generation has come into being for whom this remarkable book with its "future-piercing suggestions" was written. It is a story of four generations of Pontifexes, the sons of the last two of which were educated at Cambridge and took holy orders. The Pontifex of the third generation is saturated with the religion of duty and its extreme rigour and aloofness from every day life. The hero of the narrative, son of the austere Pontifex, is a forcible illustration of the rebellious soul that makes war against the established order. He has a sorry time of it and makes tremendous blunders. But his whole course—from the moment he was inundated by the wave of skepticism that swept over England with the teachings of Darwin and Bishop Colenso, on to his experiment in founding a college of spiritual pathology where one might study sin as medical students study the ills of the body, thru his downfall and imprisonment, up to happiness—not only presents a faithful record of the soul's struggle for right Christianity but strikes the keynote of modern democracy which Shaw has since sounded so acceptably.

"In 'The way of all flesh,' Butler speaks directly to the twentieth century with its own voice. It is throughout a novel that might have been written yesterday. Yet as a matter of fact it was begun in 1872, was continued intermittently until 1884, and was not published until 1903, the year after Butler's death. . . . As in everything else he wrote, almost every page seethes with the effervescence of a soul in revolt. . . . But the better we know and understand Butler, the more we see that his philosophy is constructive as well as destructive." E. F. E.
+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 10 '16 1450w

"The book is full of flippant denials of everything a Christian holds dear, but there is not the slightest evidence of the author's grasp of any of the problems he so glibly comments upon."

— Cath World 103:699 Ag '16 350w

"Granted that in the eighties it might have disrupted households and slain a queen: we have supped on literary horrors since then. What we find here is a harmless and mildly amusing antique."

— Nation 103:324 O 5 '16 390w

"A book to buy, to read, to keep and not to lend. It is unlike any other novel either great or small. . . . The belief in which 'The way of all flesh' is rooted is that hardly anybody knows what he likes and how he feels, and that for everybody the beginning of wisdom is to find out." P. L.

+ New Repub 7:230 Jl 1 '16 1200w

"In 1903, it was published in book form. At first it attracted scarcely any notice. Butler's 'Erewhon' and his 'Life and habit' were more or less known, but this posthumous novel had just that extra touch of greatness that requires time to win for it full recognition. Besides, 'The way of all flesh' is not exactly cheerful reading. Few satires are—and this is satire with a vengeance."

+ N Y Times 21:240 Je 11 '16 480w

BUXTON, CHARLES RODEN, ed. Towards a lasting settlement. *$1 (2c) Macmillan 341 16-7952

Papers by nine English men and women make up this book. The writers are united in one predominant aim, says the preface, "that of securing that a world-catastrophe such as the present shall never recur. . . . While offering no final solution we believe that there exists, however little it may as yet be defined, a common European policy which would be acceptable to reasonable men in all countries if only the present atmosphere of panic and prejudice could be dissipated. Already the outline of such a policy is discernible behind the thick veil of half a dozen censorships, each striving to suppress every sign of reason and moderation among the people it controls. Our book will help, we believe, to make the outline clearer." Contents: The basis of permanent peace, by G. Lowes Dickinson; Nationality, by Charles Roden Buxton; The freedom of the seas, by H. Sidebotham; The open door, by J. A. Hobson; The parallel of the great French war by Irene Cooper Willis; War and the woman's movement by A. Maude Royden; The organization of peace by H. N. Brailsford; Democracy and publicity in foreign affairs, by Philip Snowden; The democratic principle and international relations, by Vernon Lee.

Ath p185 Ap '16 880w

Educ R 52:313 O '16 40w

Ind 86:550 Je 26 '16 120w

"The essays composing this brave and significant book can only be considered separately, as 'each contributor is responsible only for the opinions which he or she expresses.' Two contributions out of the nine stand far above the rest in positive originality and vision: 'The organization of peace,' in which Mr. H. A. Brailsford offers a definite constructive scheme of international arbitration or conciliation, with clear-sighted moderation of statement; and 'The democratic principle and international relations,' by Vernon Lee (Violet Paget) who outlines a whole philosophy of individual self-determination and civic and international co-operation with a fastidious and deliberate finish of diction." F. W. S. Browne

+ Int J Ethics 26:568 Jl '16 630w

"The essays in this inconspicuous little volume are of varying merit and interest, but in all of them is a spirit of loftiness, calm detachment, and sincere desire for the amelioration of humanity. Some of the suggestions appear impractical, and sometimes it seems to us that ideas contained in them are what the authors generously desire rather than what they are able clearly to work out. The most important constructive writing in the volume is Mr. Brailsford's essay on the organization of peace."

+ Nation 102:568 My 25 '16 1400w

N Y Br Lib News 3:38 Mr '16 20w

"It may be assumed that such men as G. Lowes Dickinson, J. A. Hobson, and Philip Snowden, the socialist M. P., express fairly all that the pacifists have to suggest as means to bring about an enduring peace. It must be admitted that much of what they say leaves on the reader the impression of well-meaning but hopeless impracticality at a time when each month seems to intensify the strain and to bring the war nearer our own shores."

— + N Y Times 21:84 Mr 12 '16 680w

R of Rs 53:503 Ap '16 40w

St Louis 14:140 Ap '16

Springfield Republican p17 Mr 2 '16 250w

C

CABELL, JAMES BRANCH. Certain hour^a (Dizain des poètes). *$1.35 (2c) McBride 16-22262

Mr. Cabell is an author who in an age of bare realism insists on writing in the vein of romance. His introduction to this book of tales is a defence of his own form of writing. The stories themselves form a progressive series, ranging from the thirteenth century to modern times. In each the hero is a poet and the story deals with the "certain hour" in his life when his spirit and temper were put to the test. "Judith's creed" is a story of Shakespeare; "Concerning Corinna" of Herrick; "A brown woman" of Pope. There are ten in all, most of them reprinted from magazines, Lippincott's, McBride's, and others.

"There is in these sketches a wistful and magical quality of sentiment and a delicacy of workmanship which cannot fail to arouse pleasurable emotions in anyone who recognizes the master touch. And as stories, many of them are no less than thrilling, and that without the trickery of the magazine writer."

+ Dial 61:469 N 30 '16 220w

"A collection of romantic tales about poets dead and gone, prefaced by a fatuous essay on literature, an 'auctorial induction.' Two poems, far from poetic, are included in the book."

Ind 88:330 N 20 '16 40w

"The tales are written with a purity, a delicacy and restraint of style that is memorable. One can but wish that they might have been published without the 'auctorial induction.'"

+ — N Y Times 22:13 Ja 14 '17 400w

CABLE, BOYD. Action front. *$1.35 (2c) Dutton 940.91 16-14621

In this series of stories from the front the author follows the plan of his earlier book, "Between the lines." He has taken extracts from official dispatches and has written the stories that lie behind these cold business-like statements of fact. In answer to critics who found the first book "too grim and too terrible" he says, "I can only reply that I have found it impossible to write with any truth of the front without being grim," but he has tried to show too that there is a lighter side to war, desiring to let those at home know "that we have our relaxations, and even find occasion for jests, in the course of our business."

A L A Bkl 13:75 N '16

+ Ath p286 Je '16 40w

"These virile, genuine pages are nowhere defaced by the coarseness frequently found in stories of soldier life."

+ Cath World 103:833 S '16 400w

+ Ind 87:390 S 11 '16 50w

+ Nation 103:263 S 14 '16 250w

"There is hardly a tale in the whole fourteen that make up the book that does not bubble and chuckle with the humor, somewhat ghastly though it may be, of the battle front."

+ N Y Times 21:280 J1 9 '16 680w

+ R of Rs 54:461 O '16 90w

+ Sat R 121:sup2 Je 24 '16 400w

+ Spec 117:508 O 28 '16 500w

"The book is a worthy companion to its predecessor [Between the lines]."

+ Springfield Republican p15 J1 9 '16 160w

"His knack of contriving an effective curtain never fails him, but his dialogue is often too crisp and apt to ring as the speech of tired men; we feel that the speakers are addressing the reader. Now and again, too, we suspect Mr. Cable of being didactic."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p281 Je 15 '16 400w

CABLE, BOYD. Doing their bit; war work at home; with a preface by David Lloyd George. *$1 (5c) Dutton 940.91 16-15467

A graphic account of the speeding-up of munition-making in England written for the men at the front by one who had fought with them and seen the awful loss of life which the shortage of ammunition caused. With the assistance of the Ministry of munitions, Mr. Cable was enabled to realize the grip that has been taken of every avenue of output, from the utilization of an old man and his wife in an attic to the new national plant which will cover "a piece of country about twelve miles long and at no part less than a mile across." He writes of works managers whose working days have been 6 A. M. to 11 P. M., of the thousands of women of all classes of society who are straining every muscle and nerve to supply their men at the front and he ends with an appeal to British labor never again to allow a shortage: "The British army doesn't want anything more than a fair show and only the British workers can give it them."

A L A Bkl 13:75 N '16

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

"How she has wrought this marvel of preparation and is to-day safeguarding it Mr. Cable tells in a typically British way, wherein racial reticence, justifiable pride and irrepressible enthusiasm are uniquely blended."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 30 '16 390w

Cath World 104:541 Ja '17 160w

Ind 88:329 N 20 '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:317 Ag 13 '16 1200w

+ R of Rs 54:460 O '16 80w

"Mr. Cable has certainly sustained the reputation he made in his former book, 'Between the lines,' for dramatic and forceful descriptions."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 13 '16 280w

CABOT, RICHARD CLARKE. Layman's handbook of medicine; with special reference to social workers. Il *$2 (1½c) Houghton 616 16-25235

"To boil medicine down to the essentials needed by the general public and yet to avoid making it tasteless is my attempt in this book. . . . Not everything in it is 'practical,' for one of the public's needs, as I see them, is to get a glimpse of some amazingly interesting aspects of medicine which have little or no practical value. . . . Part of the book was given during 1915 and 1916 in the form of lectures to a group of social workers; their needs have guided my selection of subject matter because, as I see it, they best represent the general public." (Preface) Chapter one gives the essentials of anatomy and physiology. This is followed by: Diseases of the respiratory system; Diseases of the heart and arteries; Diseases of the gastrointestinal tract, etc.

"Statements are made concisely concerning known facts, and there is no attempt to set up theories or explanations on insufficient data. Fad and fancy in medicine are swept aside. . . . On finishing the book the reader feels about it as Cabot does about the book on diet: 'Everything in it is true, and there is nothing in it that is not true.'"

+ + Nation 104:48 Ja 11 '17 1550w

"It is rational and helpful. To social workers, teachers and parents it should be almost indispensable. If every layman read the book the efficiency of present-day life would be considerably increased. Not the least merit of the work is the clear and interesting style in which it is written."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 14 '17 160w

CADMAN, SAMUEL PARKES. Three religious leaders of Oxford and their movements. *$2.50 (1½c) Macmillan 274.2 16-6226

The three religious leaders are John Wycliffe, John Wesley and John Henry Newman. The author regards these three men as the foremost leaders in religious life and activity that Oxford has given to the world. He characterizes them as: "Wycliffe, the real originator of European Protestantism; Wesley, the Anglican priest who became the founder of Methodism and one of the makers of modern England and of English-speaking nations; Newman, the spiritual genius of his century who re-interpreted Catholicism, both Anglican and Roman." Each of the three parts of the book is provided with a bibliography and there is a general index. The work is founded on a course of lectures delivered during the Lenten season of 1913 under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of arts and sciences.

A L A Bkl 12:473 J1 '16

"Of the three studies that of Wesley is the most valuable. There is no better monograph than this to be had."

+ Bib World 48:246 O '16 280w

"All readers must commend the spirit in which he undertakes the work of promoting a more truly fraternal feeling among the churches." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '16 880w

"With respect to the manner and spirit in which the historian records the facts and expresses his views, the Catholic will find little to criticize unfavorably and much to commend, though necessarily he will disagree with the viewpoint many times assumed. Catholics will follow closely and appreciatively the author's characterization of Newman who to many was and still is the great enigma. But they will regret to see him misunderstood and under-valued because of his leaning and adherence to dogma and his championship of religion founded on dogma."

CADMAN, SAMUEL PARKES—Continued

+ Cath World 103:683 Ag '16 790w

"Browning alone could have done justice to the tragic poetry of Newman's later years. Only an Englishman, perhaps, can read between the lines of these years; the late Wilfrid Ward might have done that, and one may venture the opinion that no one outside the Anglican church has more successfully done so than Dr. Cadman."

+ Dial 61:111 Ag 15 '16 470w

+ Ind 86:253 My 15 '16 130w

"When one has said this, however, he has said the best he can for the volume. The accounts of the conditions out of which each of the characters grows are jungles of facts and names. Condensation and omission of the irrelevant or unrelated would have done much to improve the volume."

+ Lit D 52:1712 Je 10 '16 250w

"An unusual piece of work, of which the dominant trait is sympathy, intellectual and spiritual."

+ Nation 103:89 JI 27 '16 410w

R of Rs 53:629 My '16 80w

St Louis 14:181 My '16

"The significance of the work and influence of each of the subjects is discussed with insight and breadth of view."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p298 Je 22 '16 90w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p437 S 14 '16 1050w

CÆDMON. Cædmon poems; tr. into English prose by C. W. Kennedy; with an introd. and facsimils. of the il. in the Junius ms. *$2.25 Dutton 829 16-22778

"Dr. Kennedy of Princeton has made a readable prose version of the Biblical poems in Anglo-Saxon long attributed to the monk of Whitby of whom Bede tells us in a memorable passage. The brief hymn is now all that scholars credit to Cædmon; the paraphrases are by other hands, and the 'Genesis,' so much discussed as a possible source of 'Paradise lost,' is a translation from an old Saxon poem. But these early Anglo-Saxon works, whoever wrote them, are of much interest."—Spec

N Y Br Lib News 3:143 S '16

Pratt p28 O '16

R of Rs 54:568 N '16 40w

"Few of us can read these poems in the original, and a rendering of them in sound and sympathetic English is no small gain to literature."

+ Sat R 122:276 S 16 '16 800w

"Dr. Kennedy gives a fairly close rendering, though his prose is dull compared to the irregular alliterative verse of the original."

+ Spec 117:sup398 O 7 '16 140w

"He will be a dull reader who lays down Dr. Kennedy's translation before he has gone quite through it. The book would be a welcome present to a child. For all is also so beautiful. A kindly catholic spirit breathes throughout. Heaven and good attract."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p425 S 7 '16 950w

CAIN, WILLIAM. Earth pressure, retaining walls and bins. il *$2.50 Wiley 627.8 16-9405

"The author, who is professor of mathematics in the University of North Carolina, gives full consideration to earth coherency, developing a complete graphical method, and experimentally verifying the Coulomb theory. He also discusses graphical and analytical methods as applied to non-coherent earth. Chapter six relates to the theory of bins, and appendix one covers stresses in wedge-shape reinforced concrete bins."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

+ Cleveland p150 D '16 30w

"The author again proves himself a master of the theories of engineering mechanics. . . . The author has carried standard nomenclature to an extreme, scattering the values through the volume, a thing very annoying to the user of the book who has not time to make a week's study."

+ Engin N 76:308 Ag 17 '16 1050w

"In this book will be found many practical suggestions, graphical methods, detailed designs and tables of great value. . . . It is a real contribution to its field and should be in the library of every engineer having to do with the design of retaining walls." M. L. Enger

+ Engin Rec 74:88 JI 15 '16 280w

N Y Br Lib News 3:141 S '16

N Y P L New Tech Bks p7 Ag '16 60w

CAINE, WILLIAM. Bildad the quill-driver. il *$1.25 (1c) Lane 16-2218

Bildad is an Oriental, the son of many generations of leather-dressers. To his father's consternation he refuses to carry on the ancient occupation of his house—he loathes the sight, touch and smell of tanned hides. An oracle is consulted and Bildad's unfitness for trade is established; he is destined by fate to be a quill-driver, a poet. The story of his various adventures follows, accompanied by many quotations from his verses and amusing illustrations by H. M. Bateman.

"The humor of the book grows heavy at times in its elaboration. The unceasing continuity, without chapter divisions, grows a trifle wearying, though the heaviness is not without compensating gleams. One regrets that more of the pages were not used for illustrations of equal merit with the half-dozen which the book contains."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 5 '16 260w

+ Ind 86:29 Ap 3 '16 60w

"It is full of wit, of cleverness, of admirable fooling. Yet it is rather a bore. The truth is, it is too patently a thing done and too obscurely a thing felt. The book is best worth looking into for its occasional passages of unforced satire, and for the pseudo-oriental verses, which are often extraordinarily pat and suggestive."

+ Nation 102:410 Ap 13 '16 170w

"Here is a book that will make a success with you or not according to the mood in which you read it. If you are ready for excellent fooling, and do not mind being asked to play a game, you will laugh, and laugh plentifully. If you are of a soberer bent, or if you are not possessed with a power of losing yourself in another's conceit, you may very likely be bored."

+ N Y Times 21:42 F 6 '16 750w

Spec 116:87 Ja 15 '16 40w

"The author tells his story with oriental leisure, making his book one to be picked up at odd moments and laid aside at pleasure rather than read through at a single breathless sitting. In the digressions and frequent quotations from the national literature lie one of the great charms of the book."

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 20 '16 530w

CAINE, WILLIAM. Great-snakes! a variation on a classical theme. *$1 (3c) Lane 16-18484

The author has written a humorous novel about delirium tremens—or rather about a man who thought he had delirium tremens. It all came about because a merry-minded rustic dropped a pink blindworm into the bag of Mr. Wildbore, husband of Mrs. Clarinda Wildbore, the noted temperance lecturer, but young Mr. Bouverie is as effectively cured as tho the real snake had been imaginary, and young Dr. Leyborne who is given the credit for his reformation is rewarded with the hand of Isabel, Mrs. Wildbore's daughter.

"An hour's undiluted fun for the lucky reader."

+ N Y Times 21:352 S 10 '16 270w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CAJORI, FLORIAN. William Oughtred. *$1
 2 Open ct. 510.9 16-18775

William Oughtred was a seventeenth-century divine who followed mathematics as a pastime. He taught mathematics to a select number of pupils, one of whom was Christopher Wren; he wrote "Clavis mathematicae," a work studied by Isaac Newton; and he invented a number of mathematical instruments, among them the slide rule. Professor Cajori, professor of mathematics in Colorado college, has written a sketch of his life with a summary of his published works and other achievements.

Ath p600 D '16 80w

- + Boston Transcript p7 N 4 '16 430w
- + Dial 61:473 N 30 '16 180w
- + N Y Times 21:580 D 31 '16 60w
- + R of Rs 54:570 N '16 40w

CALENDAR, HUGH LONGBOURNE. Callendar steam tables; with steam diagram in pocket. *80c Longmans 16-6331

"Professor Callendar's small book affords a very clear and well-presented set of data on the properties of steam—saturated and superheated. Parallel columns give temperatures in Centigrade and Fahrenheit units. Volumes are stated in cubic feet and cubic meters, and heat quantities are given in both Centigrade and Fahrenheit units, all in parallel columns. . . . The values in the tables are tabulated on the following three systems—foot-pound-Centigrade, foot-pound-Fahrenheit and kilogram-meter-Centigrade."—Engin N

Cleveland p24 Mr '16

"The tables are preceded by about 20 pages of beautifully written explanatory text." C. C. Thomas

+ Engin N 75:321 F 17 '16 100w

"For the present we may, perhaps, assume that, for moderate pressures and temperatures, these tables are more correct than any hitherto published, and if this is so their value to the steam engineer cannot be over-praised. The diagram which accompanies the tables has been arranged for interesting graphical calculation. From this description steam engineers will see that, in addition to what is due for his engine experiments in Montreal, they owe the author a second deep debt of gratitude. The gas and petrol engineers also owe him a large debt. We do not think that there is any case of an experimental physicist since Regnault's time doing even half as much service to engineering." J. P.

+ Nature 96:256 N 4 '15 400w

Pratt p18 Ap '16

CAMBRIDGE history of English literature; ed. by A. W. Ward and A. R. Waller. 14v v 12 ea. *$2.50 (1½c) Putnam 820.9 (7-40854)

v 12 The nineteenth century, 1.

The twelfth is the first of the three volumes which are to be devoted to the nineteenth century and which, with two supplementary volumes, will complete the work. Contents: Sir Walter Scott; Byron; Shelley; Keats; Lesser poets, 1790-1837; Reviews and magazines in the early years of the nineteenth century; Hazlitt; Lamb; The Landors, Leigh Hunt, De Quincey; Jane Austen; Lesser novelists; The Oxford movement; The growth of liberal theology; Historians; Scholars, antiquaries and bibliographers.

+ A L A Bkl 12:372 My '16

+ Ind 86:31 Ap 3 '16 70w

"Not the least interesting chapter in the volume is on 'Reviews and magazines in the early years of the nineteenth century,' dealing with the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, Blackwood's, and the London magazine, and kindred publications."

+ Lit D 52:573 Mr 4 '16 240w

"The discussion of Byron by F. W. Moorman evinces a surer judgment than Mr. Henderson's pages on Scott's poetry. The chapters on Shelley and Keats from the pen of C. H. Herford, however, constitute the best pieces of criticism that the present volume offers. The bibliographies at the end make up nearly a third of the entire volume. They are compiled with great care, but the following additions to the section on Byron seem desirable. . . ."

+ Nation 102:410 Ap 13 '16 1650w

"The most notable chapters of this volume are by Professor C. H. Herford of the University of Manchester, one on Shelley and one on Keats; by Harold Child, on Jane Austen; by Professor A. Hamilton Thompson, on Lamb, and by Professor W. D. Howe of the University of Indiana on Hazlitt. Professor Herford's work reaches a very high level in insight, sympathy, and delicate discrimination. But in each case the critic is equal to his task, and writes with both mind and heart full. . . . Some sixty pages are given to elaborate bibliographies, including an excellent one on the 'Relations of English and continental literatures in the romantic period.'"

+ N Y Times 21:77 Mr 5 '16 700w

+ R of Rs 53:630 My '16 140w

+ Spec 116:577 My 6 '16 1350w

"Best of all are the two chapters 'Lesser poets, 1790-1837' and 'The Landors, Leigh Hunt and De Quincey,' by Prof. Saintsbury (if we may still call him so). There is no living critic to whom English literature owes more than to Prof. Saintsbury."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 1000w (Reprinted from the Nation [London])

CAMEHL, ADA WALKER. Blue-china book. 2 il *$5 Dutton 738 16-24583

"Collectors of old china will greatly enjoy 'The blue-china book.' It is a work of research, diligence, and expert knowledge. No small section of American history is decipherable in these richly illustrated plates and platters and cups and saucers, of which Mrs. Camehl tells us so many interesting things. . . . A check-list of Anglo-American pottery and a description of the White house collection of 'Presidential china,' with other supplementary matters, are appended."—Dial

+ Dial 61:542 D 14 '16 190w

"This is a fascinating subject to the American collector, and save for a thin volume containing a check list and some short descriptions, this is the only full treatment of this most interesting ware. The book is as delightful in type and illustration as it is in topic."

+ Ind 88:505 D 18 '16 170w

+ N Y Times 21:551 D 10 '16 230w

+ R of Rs 55:106 Ja '17 100w

CAMMAERTS, ÉMILE. New Belgian poems: Les trois rois, et autres poèmes; English tr. by Tita Brand-Cammaerts. il *$1.25 Lane 841 16-25289

"M. Cammaerts has collected under the title of 'New Belgian poems' the verses written by him from Easter, 1915, to Easter, 1916. . . . Many moods are reflected in this volume, passionate love of country, a noble indignation, but above all endurance and hope. Several of the poems take the form of portraits, of which the most striking is the contrast between the Kaiser and King Albert, and the most touching that of the old woman, living in a cottage only fifty yards from the German trenches, whom on account of her constant smile the soldiers have nicknamed 'La Jocoppe.'"—Spec

"M. Cammaerts has undoubtedly a place to himself, and however much he may displease those who insist on the stern canons of verse, he will seldom lack the appeal of a poet to those who can welcome poetic thought without undue craving for poetic form in all cases."

+ Ath p471 O '16 360w

"The first group is characterized by the extreme simplicity noted in the previous volume of Cammaerts; in the second, more imaginative, the reader's attention is constantly arrested by striking figures."

+ Dial 62:72 Ja 25 '17 200w

+ R of Rs 55:212 F '17 100w

+ Spec 117:sup391 O 7 '16 290w

CAMMAERTS, ÉMILE—Continued

"M. Cammaerts, though not the greatest of living Belgian poets, is the poet most characteristic of the Belgium that we know and love. . . . The English translations, which are printed opposite the French text, will give their readers some idea of M. Cammaerts's work; but they are not always accurate and have few of the fine metrical and verbal qualities of the originals."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p448 S 21 '16 880w

CAMP, WADSWORTH. House of fear. il *$1.35 (2c) Doubleday 16-17418

Forty years before the opening events of this story, Bertrand Woodford had fallen dead on the stage of Woodford's theater while playing the leading rôle in "Coward's fare." It was said that he had worked himself to death rather than allow another man to step into his part. After that the theater stood empty until a man brave enough to defy superstition came along to lease it. Arthur McHugh was not superstitious, and to prove it he resolved to open the house with a revival of "Coward's fare." His company was engaged and rehearsals begun, but they were no sooner under way than strange things began to happen. It seemed that Bertrand Woodford was still jealous of any man who would attempt to play his part. But McHugh had been a detective before he became a theatrical manager, and he does not give up till he has worked out the mystery.

"The sense of abject fear produced by an unseen foe is well portrayed and for those who like to read with cold shivers running down their backs "The house of fear" is just the book." P. G. Hubert, jr.

Bookm 44:277 N '16 370w

+ Boston Transcript pS S 20 '16 500w

"Mr. Camp's greatest sin as a maker of fiction in this genre is his failure to let the reader into the secret of McHugh's pursuit; the detective work is all, so to speak, off the stage. But the invention of the story is sufficiently ingenious to make good reading."

+ Nation 103:444 N 9 '16 190w

N Y Br Lib News 3:132 O '16

"Something that may not prevent the popularity of it, but must detract from its value to the literary world, is that it is written in slovenly English. . . . But leaving the way it is told out of the question, here is a goodly story of the supernatural practically explained at the end."

+ — N Y Times 21:395 O 1 '16 350w

Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 220w

CAMP, WALTER CHANCEY. Danny, the freshman. il *$1.25 (4½c) Appleton 15-25466

Danny Phipps, as a somewhat younger boy, has been the hero of two earlier stories by Mr. Camp. In this story he is a Yale freshman. Danny is something of a firebrand and his prep school reputation has preceded him to college. He finds that his new coaches look on him with suspicion as a possible trouble maker. His efforts to master his hot temper and to establish a new name for himself form the substance of this story. He is dogged in his determination and his election to the captaincy of the freshman nine comes to crown his perseverance.

A L A Bk1 12:343 Ap '16

"Parents who want to have their boys read good many stories will find this an ideal book."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ja 16 '16 130w

CAMPBELL, GERALD FITZGERALD. Verdun to the Vosges; impressions of the war on the fortress frontier of France. il *$3 Longmans 940.91 (Eng ed 16-11987)

"At the beginning of September, 1914, Mr. Gerald Campbell was sent to France by the 'Times' to be its representative on the eastern frontier, along that great barrier stretching between Verdun and Belfort. No other English newspaper correspondent has remained for any length of time on this portion of the front. . . . Mr. Campbell was not alone in his work for the 'Times.' He had a French colleague of wide experience, M. Fleury Lamure, with whom he wandered from place to place, always with approval from the French military and civil authorities. . . . They were busy together from the first week in September, 1914, to January, 1915, after which correspondents were excluded from the zone of the armies. Nancy was their headquarters. . . . Mr. Campbell came intimately in touch with the 20th army corps and with other magnificent troops, and he asks us all to remember what England owes to the French armies of the east, who have held fast through a succession of grave times."—Sat R

N Y Br Lib News 3:89 Je '16

+ N Y Times 21:441 O 22 '16 370w

+ Pittsburgh 21:431 O '16 110w

"Mr. Campbell may rest assured that his twenty-one chapters will be read and re-read. . . . What his readers will enjoy, what they will rest upon with confidence, is the quiet thoroughness of his pages. . . . His impressions have no affectation of any sort. . . . We are glad to be reminded by Mr. Campbell that Germany invaded France before she invaded Belgium. At Suarce nine Frenchmen were made prisoners of war before war was declared; their names are given by Mr. Campbell, and the story is published in detail for the first time."

+ Sat R 121:352 Ap 8 '16 1500w

"He has written of experiences which no other English correspondent has had, and his book must be placed among the few which are really informing even to those who are familiar with the facts of the war."

+ Spec 116:779 Je 24 '16 2250w

"This book contains, so far as we know, the only careful and trustworthy account of those months of intense fighting which has yet been published. . . . Mr. Campbell has the gift of vigorous and picturesque description."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p162 Ap 6 '16 1650w

CAMPBELL, JAMES HAVELOCK. McClellan. il *$3 (2c) Neale 16-20264

The purpose of this work is to vindicate the military career of General McClellan. To that end it devotes but a brief space to biographical data and plunges almost at once into the subject of controversy. It is the author's belief that the civil war might have been terminated in two years less time had McClellan been given the support of the government. The author is dean of the Institute of law of the University of Santa Clara, California, and he terms his book, "a lawyer's brief."

"The attempt is scarcely successful, for it is plain even from Mr. Campbell's pages that McClellan, skilful soldier as he was, lacked those moral qualities of energy and decision that a great commander needs. But he was a good organizer, and in his account of the formation of the Army of the Potomac Mr. Campbell gives us some really valuable material."

— + Ath p531 N '16 110w

Boston Transcript p8 O 7 '16 850w

Ind 88:242 N 6 '16 60w

R of Rs 54:569 N '16 110w

"The author is bitter and unsparing in his criticisms of Mr. Lincoln and Lincoln's secretary of war, Mr. Stanton. . . . Like many controversial books, this one errs in going too far."

Springfield Republican p10 O 20 '16 500w

CAMPBELL, REV. REGINALD JOHN. Spiritual pilgrimage. *$2 Appleton 16-23058

"A gentle and generous spirit, sensitive, impressionable, thoughtful, deeply mystical, here relates the varied religious experiences which have made him widely known among English-speaking peoples. Migrating from stiff Presbyterianism to Anglicanism, drawn thence to Congregationalism by its liberal and democratic principles, then finding himself in course of years a storm center of theological controversy, he was welcomed back to the Anglican church. Now, as priest of St. Philip's cathedral church, Birmingham, he is a strong accession to the liberal wing of Anglicanism."—Outlook

A L A Bkl 13:218 F '17

Outlook 115:118 Ja 17 '17 80w

"The human side of Mr. Campbell's book will, we think, appeal to most readers more than the theological. His boyhood in the north of Ireland is charmingly described. . . . Companions, relations, teachers, all are drawn in warm colours, in the colours in which throughout his book Mr. Campbell draws his friends, himself, and even his enemies."

+ Spec 118:21 Ja 6 '17 580w

"It stands alone in the realm of spiritual biography. It reflects neither the heat of inner warfare, as does Newman's 'Apologia,' nor the bitter revolt and sarcasm of Robert Benson's 'Confessions.'"

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 14 '17 1300w

"We must leave the reader to follow Mr. Campbell's account of his work at Brighton and at the City Temple. . . . His ordination in the Church of England conveys no condemnation of his former ministry. His old associates will not agree with all he says on the question of holy orders, and indeed some of his new friends will not always be ready to endorse his statements; but all must unite in their appreciation of an apology which is marked by a candour and humility which bespeaks for it a sympathetic study, even if it does not silence criticism."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p473 O 5 '16 870w

CAMPBELL, REV. REGINALD JOHN. War and the soul. *$1.25 (1½c) Dodd 172.4 16-16254

The author, for a number of years minister of the City Temple, London, and now of St. Philip's Cathedral church, Birmingham, has contributed these essays to a London Sunday paper. Some of them have appeared also in the New York American and other newspapers in the United States. They are popular essays, addressed to those who have found their faith undermined by the catastrophe of the war. "They represent a serious attempt to give help and encouragement, and a certain measure of enlightenment, to persons who at present feel their need of these in the abnormal conditions which prevail." Among the subjects are: Religion and the war; Prayers for the dead; War and sacrifice; About pacifism; The illusion of progress; Will our civilisation survive?

"Though this book may be superficial, yet the stories of the war bear the mark of truth, and are well worth reading."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 O 28 '16 340w

Cleveland p147 D '16 40w

Reviewed by T. D. A. Cockerell

+ — Dial 61:466 N 30 '16 350w

"The suggestion [towards permanent peace] is at least worth thinking upon. Not much else in Mr. Campbell's book is."

— + Nation 104:47 Ja 11 '17 350w

+ N Y Times 21:405 O 8 '16 310w

"It is cheering to know that so spiritual a teacher may reach so many minds."

+ No Am 204:759 N '16 1000w

— + Spec 117:378 S 30 '16 710w

"Full of sound sense and the spirit of wisdom."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p281 Je 15 '16 580w

CAMPBELL, THOMAS JOSEPH. Pioneer laymen of North America. v 1-2 il ea $1.75 America press 15-10062

"In these entertaining pages [of vol. 1], Father Campbell has given us a series of clear portraits of those adventurous laymen, the makers of history in the days of the pioneer priests who brought the faith to our shores in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The volume deals with Cartier, Menendez, Champlain, de la Tour, Maisonneuve, Le Moyne and Radisson." (Cath World) "The final volume continues the story of the daring paladins of France who opened up a new world for civilization. Here are full-length portraits of Le Moyne, Perrot, D'Iberville, Frontenac, La Salle, Bienville, La Verendrye, and Dr. John McLoughlin, the Father of Oregon. . . . As described by this eloquent Jesuit these rugged personalities, who are linked so intimately with our earlier history, take on fresh and vivid interest." (Lit D)

+ Cath World 102:250 N '15 270w (Review of v 1)

"The entire volume is full of adventure, of romance, of hairbreadth escapes, which if they appeared in a novel would be quickly voted improbable. The recital records heroic courage, endurance, generosity and perseverance almost beyond belief."

+ Cath World 103:252 My '16 350w (Review of v 2)

"Their latest chronicler has not only availed himself of all that Bancroft and Parkman have recorded, but he has brought to light a large amount of original material which gives the familiar story a certain freshness and novelty. Not that it is meant to be conveyed that the work is of enthusiastic mold. It is of the exactly opposite type—critical, wholly unrheterical, bearing evidence of an impartial, judicial mind, bent wholly upon uncovering the facts of history and caring little for the romantic glamor which must have been unusually seductive."

+ Lit D 52:725 Mr 18 '16 480w (Review of v 2)

CANADIAN almanac and miscellaneous directory for the year 1916; ed. by Arnold W. Thomas. $1 Copp, Clark co. 917.1

The 69th annual volume of the Canadian almanac gives full commercial, statistical, astronomical, departmental, educational and financial statistics for the year.

St Louis 14:148 Ap '16

CANADIAN annual review of public affairs, 1915; ed. by John Castell Hopkins. il Annual review pub. co., Toronto, Canada 917.1

In the fifteenth annual issue of this volume, much space is given to the war and its effects, as the table of contents will show: The world-war in 1915; The British empire in the war; Canada and the war in 1915; The Canadians at the front; The United States and the war; The province of Ontario in 1915; Provincial affairs in Quebec; The maritime provinces of Canada; The province of Manitoba in 1915; Provincial affairs in Saskatchewan; The province of Alberta in 1915; The province of British Columbia in 1915; Transportation affairs in Canada; Dominion political affairs; Miscellaneous incidents and affairs. These sections are followed by the Canadian and United States financial supplement.

+ — Ann Am Acad 69:292 Ja '17 120w

"In spite of the matter-of-factness and absence of passion, the reader detects a certain political bias in the writer. The work cannot be called impartial."

+ — Springfield Republican p6 Ja 23 '17 140w

"More than half the volume, in fact, is devoted to various aspects of the international struggle, and an immense amount of information is here gathered together and put in a readable form. Indeed, some of these articles which are not directly concerned with Canada, claim a high place in the historical literature of the war; particularly we may mention that on the 'United States and the war.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p479 O 5 '16 140w

CANDEE, HELEN CHURCHILL. Jacobean furniture and English styles in oak and walnut. il *$1.25 (10c) Stokes 749 16-19077

The author provides a historical background for the student and collector of Jacobean furniture. The term Jacobean is used to designate the century between the crowning of James I in 1603 and the end of the reign of William and Mary in 1702. Since this was the period of American colonization, it happened that many fine examples of the furniture of the period were brought to America, and the subject thus becomes one of importance and interest to the American collector of today. There are forty-

CANDEE, HELEN CHURCHILL—Continued
three illustrations showing typical examples of Jacobean chairs, tables, etc.

"No index. Needed only in large or special libraries."

A L A Bkl 13:158 Ja '17
+ Dial 61:478 N 30 '16 160w
+ Lit D 53:1543 D 9 '16 130w
N Y Br Lib News 3:169 N '16 10w
+ R of Rs 55:106 Ja '17 40w

"The book contains only fifty-six pages, but historically it is a mass of facts, and as a ready reference to the origin, development and alterations in much prized styles of early English furniture, it is a useful work."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 2 '16 370w

CANDLER, PAT. Testore. il $1.35 Dutton

"This 'Romance of an Italian fiddle maker' was written, so the author tells us in a brief 'Foreword,' after he 'had been led through a vision to procure the fiddle, 1707, mentioned in this story.' Dreams of the fiddle's maker came to him often, dreams so vivid that he presently felt obliged to weave them into a novel, or rather romance, biographical in form. The result is an interesting tale, its scenes laid principally in Italy and about Milan, during the closing years of the seventeenth and the opening of the eighteenth century, with a short excursion into England, where Carlo Giuseppe Testore, fiddle maker of Milan, takes part in a futile endeavor to save the throne for the infant son of James II."—N Y Times

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 20 '16 290w

"A jumble of seventeenth century romance and adventure, the result, apparently, of much reading of similar, and better books."

— Ind 87:315 Ag 28 '16 50w

"Not a noteworthy story, but sweet and romantic."

+ Lit D 53:1040 O 21 '16 210w

+ — N Y Times 21:303 Jl 30 '16 340w

"If this book is, as it seems, a first novel, it deserves high praise. The romantic atmosphere is well sustained and faults of construction, notably a lack of coördination, and certain gaps in the flow of the narrative, are well nigh lost in the picturing forth of a vivid personality and in the melodic quality of the style."

+ R of Rs 54:346 S '16 100w

Springfield Republican p15 S 17 '16 60w

CANNAN, GILBERT. Samuel Butler; a critical study. il 7s 6d Secker, London

(Eng ed 15-16600)

"Mr. Cannan is quite aware that the interest and value of Butler are personal and biographical. . . . When Mr. Cannan is biographical, or personally critical of Butler as an original character, we read with pleasure, and feel it quite possible that he might induce some who have not read Butler to do so."—Sat R

"Mr. Cannan's book is the work of a discriminating admirer of Butler who agrees wholeheartedly with his attitude to English life. Indeed, his sympathy is so close that in expounding Butler he passes insensibly into exposition of himself, and the reader cannot always guess whose views are being put before him. When he is not satirical, Mr. Cannan is often worth hearing. . . . The last page of the book is headed 'Bibliography,' and contains a list of Butler's works which appears to have been copied (with two additions) from a publisher's circular. Not a single date is given. Butler's contributions to newspapers and magazines are ignored. No reference is made to any biography or criticism. We do not know who is responsible for this part of the book; but we can only say that it is a grave disappointment."

+ Ath 1915:1:373 Ap 24 1700w

"Mr. Cannan must have felt at times somewhat hard put to it to write a book of two hundred pages about Butler. He has an entirely correct judgment as to the second-rate quality of Butler's work in philosophy and literature; and it requires literary artfulness to pass off a critical study of such an author so as to conceal the fact of its being just a little superfluous. . . . His particular judgments on Butler are always correct, and he has contrasted the satire of Swift, with its roots deep in human nature, and therefore mighty and enduring, as against the whimsical, paradoxical, freakish satire of Butler, who lacked poetic power and feeling."

— + Sat R 119:sup2 Je 19 '15 1000w

CANNAN, GILBERT. Three sons and a mother (Eng title, Three pretty men). $1.50 (1c) Doran 16-6608

This is the story of Margaret Keith Lawrie, a Scotch widow, who brought up her five children, James, Thomas, John, Margaret and Mary, on £90 a year and then, believing that the way of advancement for them lay in England not Scotland, took them away from their native village to Thrigsby, a thriving industrial city across the border. The fate of each member of the family is followed with considerable minuteness, but the author has bestowed most care on Jamie, the eldest and the one who does not respond to the bracing air of Thrigsby industrialism. Tom and John are at once at home in it. They make fortunes and marry after the manner of honest, respectable citizens. But Jamie, always in revolt, makes but a mediocre success of his life. The time of the story is the middle of the nineteenth century, with the American civil war playing havoc with the English cotton industry.

"It betrays constant effort, and a pretentious effort. Keeness of insight into human nature gives this novel its chief hold upon us. But 'Three sons and a mother' remains a mystifying story. It is an exasperating story. Mr. Cannan's gifts are so evident in it that its shortcomings are no less glaringly on its surface." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Jl 5 '16 1250w

"Mr. Cannan deals with people almost in the spirit. Not that he says absolutely nothing about appearance and form, but he never carries on his account so that we are tempted to visualize it." E: E. Hale

+ Dial 61:142 S 7 '16 1100w

"The present reviewer laid down the book with something like the feeling that he had been imprisoned in an English third-class compartment during a well-nigh interminable journey, in the company of a worthy but tiresome family group."

+ Nation 103:305 S 28 '16 380w

"How many of us would be really interested if we were set down in Manchester of 1850? . . . Mr. Cannan sees it casually and with a hostile humor. You feel its wanness, its coldness, its stolidity. . . . In spite of much solid effort he can't write of Thrigsby except with a tepid, unrevealing distaste such as any of us might have felt." G. S.

+ — New Repub 7:336 Jl 29 '16 780w

"Mentally and morally we see James Keith Lawrie through a microscope—a microscope which shows everything with equal care, equal abundance of detail. And it is this which is the weakness of the book."

+ N Y Times 21:275 Jl 9 '16 850w

"This novel exceeds Mr. Cannan's previous work in realism, characterization and mastery of detail. He has called it a tragic-comedy, for it is a blending of humor and pathos, of satirical wit and poignant incident."

+ R of Rs 54:234 Ag '16 350w

"His book is to be read simply as a story, and not as a thinly-disguised powder-in-jam. 'There you are,' he seems to say, 'that is life as I see it. If you don't like it I can't help it.' And life, as Mr. Cannan depicts it in these pages, is a dour and depressing business enough. . . . There is much fine stuff in the book. It is a novel that arouses and challenges thought."

+ — Sat R 121:162 F 12 '16 680w

"He misconceives humanity in the average. Obsessed by its apparent self-seeking, he disclaims for it any other motive—any devotion, any self-sacrifice, any willingness to give life itself for a cause instinctively recognized as noble. So his canvas is crowded with figures, elaborately painted, but without personality. Clothed upon with the semblance of flesh, they bear themselves stiffly—lay figures, for there is in them no breath of life."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p70 F 10
+ 16 600w

CANTON, WILLIAM. Bible story. il *$2 (1½c)
Doran 220

"The Bible story' presents in narrative form for children the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. For the sake of the quicker narrative, much has been dropped from the King James version and verses and chapters slightly changed. The book is an introduction to the Bible rather than a substitute for it. . . . It has also been edited so as to conform with modern ideas of paragraphing, being divided by stories rather than by chapters. The type is large."—Springfield Republican

"William Canton has succeeded where many have failed in telling 'The Bible story' so that children may understand its teachings and at the same time appreciate its beauty and reverence its power. A simple map of the Holy Land and eighteen particularly good illustrations in color increase the value of the book, which deserves first rank among those stories that every child should know."

+ Ind 85:206 F 7 '16 70w

"A dignified, interesting retelling of both the Old and New Testaments." F. E. B.

+ St Louis 14:172 Ap '16 10w

+ Springfield Republican p19 N 27 '15 120w

"Mr. Canton, the author of 'The invisible playmate,' 'The child's book of saints,' etc., has a singular gift, for touching children on their religious side."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p490 O 12
+ 16 40w

CARDUCCI, GIOSUÉ. Rime nuove; tr. from the Italian by Laura Fullerton Gilbert. *$1.25
Badger, R. G. 851 16-11032

Giosué Carducci, called one of the greatest poets of the nineteenth century, died in 1907, the year after he had been awarded the Nobel prize for literature. In this translation of one of his works, the "Rime nuove," an attempt has been made "to retain the original metres, as nearly as English can reproduce the Italian." The translator adds, "It is the Carducci who loved the natural beauty that he saw with his own eyes, and interpreted it through the classics, whom we find and love in the 'Rime nuove.'"

"The extreme beauty of Carducci's work, its serenity, and again its passionate ardor couched in plastic and still classicism, its flow, its picturing, its constant good taste, its frequent simple sublimity, are all gone. In the place of a poet of the first rank in the Italian, in the English we discover hardly a poet of the second order."

— + Dial 61:110 Ag 15 '16 400w

+ — Ind 89:118 Ja 15 '17 40w

"Vignette,' 'Hellenic springtimes,' and 'The two Titans' are admirable."

+ R of Rs 54:568 N '16 160w

CARHART, ALFREDA POST. Masoud the Bedouin. il $1 Missionary educ. movement
15-18426

"Well worthy of permanent form is this collection of short stories which illustrate the lives and the characters of present dwellers in Bible lands, told by a native. Emphasis has been placed in these stories, not upon the more cultured type of Syrian life which has attended the advance of civilization, but upon the wider and bolder conditions of the East. . . . The stories are arranged in groups with these headings: 'The way of them that dwell in tents,' 'Springs in a dry land,' 'Glances through a lattice,' 'Ensigns upon the mountains,' and 'Where East and West meet.' In the last-named group, the tales relate to missionary work. A considerable number of the stories have before appeared in current publications."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 12:382 My '16

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 15 '16 140w

"A volume of vivid, dramatic pictures of desert life, a few deal with the missionary in relation to the native, but most of them are tales of modern Bedouin life and excellent stories."

+ Ind 86:183 My 1 '16 40w

"The principal charm of the book—at any rate for those who have once heard the East 'a-callin'—will lie neither in plot nor in character drawing, but in the vivid local color which one finds in all the stories. The author has spent almost her entire life in Syria, as a missionary, and she has not used her eyes in vain."

+ Nation 102:714 Je 29 '16 170w

CARLETON, MARK ALFRED. Small grains. (Rural text-book ser.) il *$1.75 Macmillan 633 16-7516

"Mr. Carleton discusses briefly the fundamental principles of plant structure and nutrition, as regards cereals, in his introduction to the general discussion. These are taken up separately and treated, from the standpoint of the individual plant, as to origin, characters, classification, varieties, selection and hybridization. In the chapters that follow, oats, rye, barley and wheat, the four important cereals, are treated together in respect to further subjects of soil and climatic relations, acclimatization, cultivation, irrigation, weeds, insects and fungus pests, and uses. . . . Buckwheat, being botanically different from the four important grains, is treated separately as to all topics, and the same is true of rice. While the work is intended primarily for instruction in colleges and universities, it is adapted for use in any agricultural short course and by farmers and general readers." (Springfield Republican) The book has a bibliography of some forty pages.

Ind 87:421 S 18 '16 30w

N Y Br Lib News 3:77 My '16 10w

Pittsburgh 21:575 D '16 80w

+ St Louis 14:229 Je '16 30w

+ Springfield Republican p10 Je 22 '16 290w

CARLSEN, C. L. Taming of Calinga. *$1.35
Dutton 16-23087

"The scene of this novel is laid in the Philippines, and the time is that period when they were still under the rule of Spain. Calinga was a descendant of Li Choy Sang, whose bones rotted in unhallowed ground. And many generations after his death the old chief of the tribe laid upon his son the burden of returning to holy ground the bones of his fathers. . . . And Calinga was in love with the comeliest maid of the tribe. According to the tribal rite he must present to her a trophy—usually, or preferably, a human head—as a proof of his manly worth. He determined to fulfill his pledge to his father and gain the trophy at the same time. . . . The story is the tale of his adventures and of the attempts of the islanders to 'civilize' him."

—N Y Times

"An exotic romance of originality and power. . . . There is irony here, but an irony that remains inherent in the action, and is in no way 'rubbed in' by the story-teller." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:648 F '17 390w

"We found the story rather tiresome, its style involved, and its setting forced and unnatural."

— Cath World 104:554 Ja '17 80w

"A new writer has a real story to tell."

+ Ind 88:506 D 18 '16 60w

"With all the ironic flavor that this civilization means the story is, nevertheless, sympathetic to the savage viewpoint. The style is not always direct, and the plot is sometimes difficult to follow. There is in it suggestion of beauty and symbolism."

+ — N Y Times 21:530 D 3 '16 280w

CARLSON, ANTON JULIUS. Control of hunger in health and disease. il *$2 (2c) Univ. of Chicago press 612.39 16-20318

"The following pages contain a summary of the work on the stomach, with special reference to hunger and appetite, carried out in the Hull physiological laboratory of the University of Chicago during the last four years. We have aimed to present this digest in the light of the entire biological and clinical literature on the subject." (Preface) Among the chapters are discussions of: The biological significance of hunger; The stomach in hunger; Some accessory phenomena in hunger; The relation of hunger to appetite; Hunger and age; Hunger in prolonged starvation; The nervous control of the hunger mechanism; The chemical control of the hunger mechanism. There is a fourteen-page bibliography.

"The book will prove of value to physiologists and physicians."

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 12 '16 350w

CARLYLE, ROBERT WARRAND, and CARLYLE, ALEXANDER JAMES. History of mediæval political theory in the West. v 3 *$3.50 (5c) Putnam 320.9

The third volume of the "History of mediæval political theory" treats of "Political theory from the tenth century to the thirteenth." Volume 1, published in 1905, dealt with political theories from the second century to the ninth. Volume 2, 1910, was concerned more particularly with Roman and Canon law. Volume 3, carrying on the treatment, takes up, in part 1, The influence of feudalism on political theory, and in part 2, Political theory in the eleventh and twelfth centuries. In this second part a study is made of political theory as illustrated in general literature up to the end of the twelfth century, before the great schoolmen of the thirteenth century had begun to reduce "the world of ideas and theories to a systematic form." The work of these systematic thinkers is reserved for a later volume.

"The quality of this volume is not up to the standard of the first two. An excusable amount of repetition in those, in this becomes an absolute abuse. Perhaps the nervous strain under which most writers in Europe must be doing their work may account for this. . . . The author's greatest fault in this volume, as in his first, is the prejudice which he seems to have against citing secondary authorities. . . . In spite of these shortcomings, however, the book still remains a distinct contribution to the subject." James Sullivan

+ Am Hist R 21:784 J1 '16 820w

"The great defect of all Dr. Carlyle's work is an absence of synthesis and imagination. Writers are considered piecemeal, as if somebody had looked up special topics in an index. . . . The most important chapter is that on the universal empire. . . . The summary of mediæval political principles in the last few pages is admirable." J. N. Figgis

+ Eng Hist R 31:305 Ap '16 950w

"It is an admirable achievement. So far as can be judged from the first installments, there is no doubt that the completion of the series will enrich English political philosophy in a substantial and important history, worthy of Oxford scholarship. . . . This is the barest summary of the conclusions which Dr. Carlyle backs by a wealth of learning in the jurists and lawyers of these centuries. But it will serve to show how systematic his treatment is, and how vital the thought with which he deals." H. J. W. Hetherington

+ Int J Ethics 26:559 J1 '16 800w

+ Nation 103:136 Ag 10 '16 330w

"We touch a defect in a work of unquestioned learning. Dr. Carlyle cites, but does not explain; in the footnotes are large slabs of mediæval Latin, not difficult to construe, but lacking the commentary needed to give their full meaning. We miss the illuminating touches, the vivifying glances, which transform dead erudition into animated matter. . . . Among the most valuable chapters is that treating of the divine nature of political authority, the continuation of a theme discussed in the earlier volumes of this work."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p116 Mr 9 '16 850w

CARMAN, BLISS. April airs. *$1 Small 811 16-11612

"'Make me over, Mother April, when the sap begins to stir!' sang Bliss Carman in the days when he was first gaining the world's attention as a lyrical interpreter of wild nature. And it is with April and springtime that this poet is inevitably associated, and especially with April in New England. . . . It is New England that is reflected in 'April airs.'"—Lit D

"April has always been the symbol and wonder of Mr. Carman's dreams of life and nature. From the first to the last of his poetic utterances he has never lost his responsiveness to her mystery and charm." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '16 1550w

+ Ind 87:201 Ag 7 '16 130w

+ Lit D 52:1472 My 20 '16 520w

"Let us be thankful for a little volume so breathless with earth's rapture, so eager with fresh, unstinted beauty."

+ N Y Times 21:472 N 5 '16 680w

+ R of Rs 54:231 Ag '16 110w

CARMICHAEL, ORTON H. Shadow on the dial: intimations of the great survival. il *$1 Abingdon press 15-27939

"A series of essays written in the form of a journal telling of the love of Dr. Henry Colvin for Vera Meldrum, who died in her youth. Many of these essays describe the things of nature." (Springfield Republican) "Devotion and nature-study and philosophy and poetry mingle throughout the successive chapters, while some notably clean-cut and beautiful half-tones from the great book of nature, as spread open at 'Elmwood' in western New York, help in no small measure to emphasize the meaning of the reading matter." (Dial)

Dial 59:506 N 25 '15 80w

"Mixes in nearly equal proportions delicate delineation of the moods and aspects of nature with sincere and at times not unimpressive musings on immortality. The book would be robbed of much of its interest, if it lacked the illustrations that abound in it."

+ Nation 102:440 Ap 20 '16 290w

"Their charm lies in the simple manner in which they are written."

+ Springfield Republican p19 Ap 7 '16 60w

CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE. Year book for 1916. pa gratis Carnegie endowment for international peace 172.4

This is the 6th annual report of the activities of the Carnegie endowment for international peace. In addition to the report of the secretary, James Brown Scott, it contains the reports of Nicholas Murray Butler, acting director of the division of intercourse and education; John Bates Clark, director of the division of economics and history; and James Brown Scott, director of the division of international law. A list of the publications issued under the endowment is given at the end.

Ath p474 O '16 30w

CARPENTER, EDWARD. Healing of nations and the hidden sources of their strife. *$1 Scribner 940.91 (Eng ed 15-14700)

"The author accepts the general view that Germany precipitated the war, and that the Allies must continue it until German militarism is put out of court. But it points out that Prussia has merely carried out with greater brutality and rigour pernicious principles which other states have practised. The author's hope for the future is that the peoples who have to pay with their lives for war will rise and put a stop to the pompous fooling of diplomacy, when they have freed themselves from class domination."—Hibbert J

+ A L A Bkl 12:376 My '16

"This latest product of Mr. Carpenter's pen should be a welcome gift to those dissatisfied with superficial explanations, which though they may point accurately enough to the immediate causes of the war, will be of little help when endeavours are made to secure a lasting peace. . . . Like all this writer's works, 'The healing of nations' abounds in reflections that are stimulating, alike from their candour and their thought-provoking quality, which, however, is free from any strain of bitterness."

+ Ath 1915.1:461 My 22 650w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

Hibbert J 13:901 JI '15 110w

"The first passages in this book—and some are very fine—touch on aspects of the great war which are apt to be slurred over and neglected. . . . Nevertheless the book is disappointing. There is a lack of cohesion, of definite 'grip.' In the latter half, especially, some supremely important issues, raised by the war, are touched on, in an interesting and suggestive, but curiously haphazard fashion. No doubt the temperament of a seer and poet is antipathetic to the military and political terrain on which part, at least, of the struggle for a 'new world' must be waged; but something more distinctly constructive might have been expected from a socialist of genius. In spite of the noble dignity of outlook, the psychological insight, and luminous beauty of phrase in certain passages, the book cannot in any way rank with 'Towards democracy,' 'The art of creation,' or the essays on the social value and individual variations of love." F. W. S. Browne

+ — Int J Ethics 26:143 O '15 350w

"The studies are interesting, in that they show the workings of a mind of his type before such a soul-shattering experience as the conflict has been to the nations engaged in it. . . . What Mr. Carpenter writes is not very important or particularly worth while reading, except as it shows how one of the theorists of a few months ago finds that he must adjust all his ideas and must bow to the naked force which today dominates so large a part of Europe."

+ — N Y Times 21:53 F 13 '16 350w

Reviewed by E. G. Balch

+ Survey 37:94 O 28 '16 320w

CARPENTER, EDWARD. My days and dreams. 1l $2.25 Scribner 16-24963

"Memories of childhood and of all the years that lie between that period of Edward Carpenter's life and the present go to the making of this autobiographical volume. . . . It includes chapters upon his life at Brighton and Cambridge, his connection with Sheffield and socialism, his work as writer, lecturer, reformer and translator, with a final view of 'How the world looks at seventy.'"—Boston Transcript

Ath p369 Ag '16 2400w

"None of conventional ideas and ideals should open this book. It will cause too vigorous a mental turmoil, and it will be wholly misunderstood. Mr. Carpenter is a revolutionist. His world is as far from a real world as is the topsy-turkey world created by W. S. Gilbert in his famous operettas." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ag 12 '16 670w

Reviewed by Norman Foerster

Dial 61:182 S 21 '16 2400w

"Allusive rather than circumstantial, and full of curious interest."

+ Ind 88:204 O 30 '16 210w

"There are vivid portraits of personal friends and of various workers for knowledge, justice and freedom. But the core of Edward Carpenter's message is intensely individual and, like his style of expression, it combines almost perfectly, spontaneity with dignity. . . . There is a complete and valuable bibliography including translations." F. W. S. Browne

+ Int J Ethics 27:124 O '16 370w

"The book is of importance as a psychological study because of the extraordinary way in which Mr. Carpenter narrates events in his life which most men would gladly conceal. He tells of unusual propagandas in which he has taken a leading part, of strange speeches and strange acts, with what his friends will call engaging frankness and others gross and shameless egotism."

+ N Y Times 21:328 Ag 20 '16 1200w

Pittsburgh 21:422 O '16 140w

"Somewhat disjointed, but it shows powers of writing far above those exhibited in the usual book of reminiscences."

+ Sat R 122:41 JI 8 '16 700w

"Mr. Carpenter is not merely a prophet who has been recognized in his own country. His principal works have been translated into German, Russian, Italian, French, Dutch, Bulgarian, Spanish, and Japanese, and have brought him into touch with a number of correspondents of anarchist, anti-militarist, anti-governmental, cosmopolitan, and internationalist views. . . . As a literary artist Mr. Carpenter is delightful. As a professor of omniscience he is a miracle of complacent ineptitude."

+ — Spec 117:188 Ag 12 '16 2650w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 13 '16 2000w

"In a book which even those who disagree with Mr. Carpenter's premises or conclusions will find as full of sense as of enthusiasm, nothing is more likely to be voted amusing than his shrewd accounts of well-known people of his time. There is a flash of the rapier about these subtle little character-sketches."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Je 22 '16 1300w

CARPENTER, REV. JOSEPH ESTLIN. Phases of early Christianity. $2 (2c) Putnam 270.1 16-12551

A series of lectures delivered under the auspices of the 'American committee for lectures on the history of religions.' These lectures, planned as popular courses somewhat on the order of the Hibbert lectures in England, are delivered in various cities thruout the country. J. Estlin Carpenter, chosen as the 1915 lecturer, is a Unitarian theologian and principal emeritus of Manchester college, Oxford. He has treated of certain phases of the inner development of Christianity in the period from 100 to 250 A. D., assuming that some familiarity with the subject exists or that other works, to which references are provided, will be used to supplement his discussion. The central theme, he says, 'is that of salvation, and the growth of Christian doctrine and the rise of Christian institutions are considered in relation to it.' (Preface) Contents: Christianity as personal salvation; The person and work of the Saviour; The church as the sphere of salvation; The sacraments as the means of salvation; Salvation by gnosis; Christianity at the parting of the ways.

"The plan of the book is somewhat difficult to grasp, and not altogether happy. The author seems to be attempting to do two things at the same time: on the one hand, to distinguish the modes in which the Christian message was apprehended, and on the other, to present an ordered history of the early development. The effect is rather confusing, and at times misleading. . . . The history of the church in its formative period has never been presented more ably and attractively than in Dr. Carpenter's lecture." E. F. Scott

+ — Am J Theol 20:604 O '16 850w

Ath p537 N '16 130w

"A fresh presentation of commonly accepted results stated in a way that will appeal to the general reader."

+ Bib World 48:308 N '16 250w

+ Ind 89:31 Ja 1 '17 90w

+ Lit D 53:415 Ag 19 '16 260w

N Y Br Lib News 3:107 JI '16

"Its historical value is greatly enhanced by the critical scholarship, the freedom from pre-occupations, the literary grace and the reverent

CARPENTER, REV. JOSEPH ESTLIN—Cont. spirit which Dr. Carpenter brings to his task. "Phases of early Christianity" is no labored theological summary but a fascinating story of living beliefs."

+ Springfield Republican p13 J1 2 '16 1400w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p516 O 26 '16 70w

"If Dr. Estlin Carpenter assumes later dates than many will be prepared to accept for the books of the New Testament, and often treats his authorities with a boldness which sometimes appears to be almost violent, his work must be recognized as important, and no student of Christian origins ought to neglect it"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p556 N 23 '16 100w

CARROLL, CHARLES EDEN. Community survey in relation to church efficiency. (Constructive church ser.) il *$1 (5½c) Abingdon press 261 15-27771

"A useful manual for workers in city and country church fields." (R of Rs) "It deals chiefly with city work and is based on a study of Denver, illustrated by charts and samples of cards, etc., used in that survey. The first part deals with theory, but the second part comes on quickly with full description of methods of making a community survey, social or religious, and ending with yet more practical suggestions looking to efficiency, the adaptation of the church to its exact environment." (Springfield Republican) There is a three-page bibliography.

+ A L A Bkl 12:355 My '16
 + Ind 86:184 My 1 '16 80w
 + N Y Br Lib News 3:107 J1 '16
 + R of Rs 53:250 F '16 30w
 + Springfield Republican p17 F 13 '16 100w

"With very practical particularity and yet in a large way, he suggests how to initiate a church survey of the community, as well as what methods and resources for conducting it are available in country, town and city. The schedules for inquiry, the classification, tabulation and graphic display of data and the suggestion of different kinds of surveys are all very helpful." Graham Taylor

+ Survey 35:643 F 26 '16 330w

CARTER, MARION HAMILTON. Souls resurgent. *$1.35 (1c) Scribner 16-18914

Dora Feruseth returns to her Wyoming home after ten years' absence. She has been educated in the east and has grown to young womanhood there. She returns after her father's death to find in his will and in a letter left for her an explanation of his purpose in educating her above the other members of her family. He has left her the bulk of his property and has made her, instead of her weak, indulgent mother, the guardian of the two younger children. She finds her brother a crude and wayward youth who considers himself a man at nineteen and her sister of ten a spoiled, headstrong little girl. The task seems hopeless and indeed she does not succeed in accomplishing her father's purpose altho she comes to an understanding with her brother before his untimely death. On the subject of American democracy and the contributions to it made by the west the author voices some cynical opinions.

"It is intensely human as a whole, but artistically the parts are sometimes ill balanced. . . . But in the main the weaknesses are more than counterbalanced by the fineness of the author's portrayal of Mrs. Feruseth."

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 30 '16 470w

"The character analysis is so conscientious as to be at times positively irritating, but the author shows much knowledge of human nature of all varieties."

+ Cleveland p142 D '16 140w

"A big and unusual book, a book carefully thought out, full of ideas and of a conscientious, dexterous, and psychological analysis. Very long, it never drags, but holds the reader's interest throughout."

+ N Y Times 21:386 O 1 '16 1000w

"A book of sustained strength and commanding interest. . . . A novel that takes a high place in the season's fiction."

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 19 '16 1100w

CARUS, PAUL. Venus of Milo: an archaeological study of the goddess of womanhood. il *$1 (3c) Open ct. 733 16-11156

A study of the Venus of Milo embracing an account of the discovery, meaning of the statue, restorations, and theories concerning the broken arms, is followed by an interpretation of the meaning and cult of Venus-Aphrodite with a view of establishing her special function of mother goddess. "She was at once the Queen of Heaven or Juno, the Magna Mater or Venus Genetrix, the educator and teacher or Pallas-Athene, the eternal virgin or Diana, and the all-nourishing earth-goddess, Demeter or Ceres . . . which divinities were reunited in Christianity in the form of Mary, the Queen of Heaven, the Mother of God, the Lady as an authority and guide in life, and the Eternal Virgin." A closing chapter is devoted to the goddess in art.

"Those portions of the book which are concerned with Greek religion and Greek archaeology had better not have been written. Inadequacy and error are on every page. It is a pity." F. B. T.

— Am J Theol 21:158 Ja '17 100w

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 7 '16 640w

"A most instructive and interesting volume, freely illustrated with 175 cuts and line drawings."

+ R of Rs 55:107 Ja '17 80w
St Louis 14:398 N '16 20w

"The book is well illustrated, and the information is readable."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 120w

CARVER, THOMAS NIXON, comp. Selected readings in rural economics. (Selections and documents in economics) $2.80 (1c) Ginn 333 16-4101

The selected readings are arranged in the following groups: General principles; Agricultural history; Land tenure; Agricultural labor; The farmer's business; Agrarian movements in the United States; Rural organization and marketing; Agricultural policy. The selections have been chosen, the compiler says: "with a view to making available to the student of agricultural economics a mass of excellent material which has been published in widely different places and which, because it is so scattered, is likely to be inconvenient of access. Considerable space has been given to historical material, because a historical background seems necessary to any thorough understanding of present tendencies." (Preface)

"The selections must be accepted as the best to be had; though some of them are only fair and a few are faulty. Some of the reprints are translations, which are generally not available in colleges of agriculture, and others come from sources found only in the most thoroughly stocked libraries. . . . Probably each specialist in this field of study is inclined to give different weight to the various subjects covered, and it is therefore not unfair for the writer to wonder why only two short articles are presented on the fundamental topic of agricultural labor and at least ten on land tenure." J: L. Coulter

+ Am Econ R 6:891 D '16 230w
 + Ann Am Acad 68:323 N '16 140w
N Y Br Lib News 3:106 J1 '16
R of Rs 53:508 Ap '16 70w

"Prof. Thomas Nixon Carver of Harvard university has gathered from a widely-scattered field of rural economic literature the most notable writings on that subject, and has compiled them in a work which has unquestioned cultural value in the study of agriculture. The organization of the work makes it possible for the reader to obtain a wide grasp of the subject."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Mr 27 '16 450w

CARY, EDWARD RICHARD. Geodetic surveying. il $2.50 Wiley 526.9 16-5165

"A brief description of this book might well read as follows: 'A concise, well-balanced textbook embodying the essentials of geodetic surveying, including geodetic astronomy and the method of least squares.' Geodetic surveying proper is confined to the eight chapters which form the main part (three-fourths) of the book, while the appendices are restricted to astronomical considerations and least squares. Many of the methods presented are those of the U. S. coast and geodetic survey."—Engin Rec

"Brief, well-written, well-arranged, up-to-date textbook presenting essentials."

+ Cleveland p111 Ag '16 30w

"The methods of geodetic surveying have been changing rapidly in the past fifteen years. Hence there is much difficulty in keeping a textbook on that subject up to date, as this book certainly is. A convenient, short, suggestive list of books on geodetic surveying, astronomy and least squares is given. Especially to be commended for their freshness are the parts of the volume dealing with precise leveling and the measurement of primary base lines. On each of these topics the reviewer knows of no textbook so fully up to date as this one. The work contains some errors of judgment, such as are inevitable in dealing with so difficult a subject."

+ Engin N 75:747 Ap 20 '16 450w

"The book impresses one as being a first-class, usable text." A. F. Comstock

+ Engin Rec 73:682 My 20 '16 330w

+ Nature 97:539 Ag 31 '16 370w

"Reviewed in Canadian Engineer, March 30, 1916, p. 403."

N Y P L New Tech Bks p7 My '16 50w

+ Pittsburgh 21:347 J1 '16 20w

CASE, CLARENCE MARSH. Banner of the white horse. il $1 (2½c) Scribner 16-18491

A story of the Saxon conquest. The young hero is Aella, son of Horsa, a Saxon noble. With his friend, Kenric, he accompanies his father and the other warriors to Britain. The two lads are separated for a time, for Kenric is taken prisoner by the Picts and Aella is sent back to Jutland as a messenger, but later their fortunes are reunited. The author has tried to give a true interpretation of Saxon character. He has tried also to show that "while possessing a robust worth of its own, [it] still was incomplete because lacking in the more gentle virtues, and that the spirit of Christianity was the element which it needed above all things to transform its vigorous worth into high nobility."

"May be used to supplement Jane Andrews' sketch of 'Wulf, the Saxon boy' in 'Ten boys who lived on the road from long ago to now' (A. L. A. Catalog 1904)."

+ A L A Bk1 13:226 F '17

+ Dial 61:547 D 14 '16 30w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 80w

CASEY, PATRICK, and CASEY, TERENCE. Strange story of William Hyde. $1.25 (2c) Hearst's int. lib. 16-6817

A story of wild adventure whose hero is an English orchid hunter among the lush growths of Borneo. He comes upon the city of Jallan Batoo, sacred stronghold of the Dyaks, with its fetish worshippers, a left over people from the raid of Genghis Khan. A tradition existed among them that one day a descendant of Genghis Khan, his "man-child with blue eyes and red beard," would come either to lead or destroy them. The hero was a "huge monolith of a man with hair red as blood." The people looked into his blue eyes, marveled at his red beard, and made him king. But the course of his kingship with its weird romance ran far from smoothly as the pages of the narrative feverishly record.

"The story suggests a disordered brain, but this latent suspicion does not militate against the creepy fascination and spine-chilling awe awakened in the reader as Hyde unfolds his terrifying experiences."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 250w

CASTLE, AGNES (SWEETMAN) (MRS. EGERTON CASTLE), and CASTLE, EGERTON. Little house in war time. $1.50 Dutton

A16-1367

"'A little house in war-time' is primarily a light book about—or for—the war. It is not a gay book, not an unfeeling book certainly, but it is pleasant, easygoing, 'chatty.' It contains simply those bits of war-time experience that came to a luxurious little country place in the Surrey hills. . . . There are bright little tales of the Belgian refugees, funny extracts from the conversations of amateur nurses, 'learning how,' leisurely dissertations on dogs and gardens and babies and servants. . . . It is, to quote the foreword, 'the true record of an average family during the first year of the war of wars; . . . how the quiet stay-at-home family felt and thought in the days of the titanic conflict . . . the little things that happened in a little country house.'"—N Y Times

"An irrelevant stringing together of little discourses, some pleasant, many overdone, on every conceivable subject from Belgians to butlers."

Ind 88:166 O 23 '16 50w

Lit D 53:1041 O 21 '16 140w

"It is written with sympathy and no small amount of charm. But it is not an important book. . . . There is one marked weakness in this otherwise very readable book—the references to atrocities. . . . These scattered horrors do not make the entire record any more serious or important. They take away from its ability to fulfill its object."

+ N Y Times 21:441 O 22 '16 620w

R of Rs 54:573 N '16 20w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 10 '16 210w

CASTLE, AGNES (SWEETMAN) (MRS. EGERTON CASTLE), and CASTLE, EGERTON. Wind's will. il $1.35 (1c) Appleton 16-16686

A story of Paris in 1816. Geoffrey Swift, a young English officer left idle at the close of the war, is romantically in love with his cousin, the beautiful and haughty Augusta de Vyne. But Augusta scorns Geoffrey's humble offering of pear blossoms in favor of Sir John Armeston's camellias and Geoffrey is left to find what consolation he can with the pretty little flower girl who had sold him the unfortunate offering. He consoles himself readily enough, for his devotion had not been deep and little Colinette is well worthy of the truer love he gives her. Then comes the news, very galling to Augusta, that Geoffrey has succeeded to a title and in her bitterness she tries but without success to revenge herself on her rival.

A L A Bk1 13:82 N '16

"The best feature of the book is the graphic talk throughout. . . . It is a picture of the time quite as much as the adventure of two spirited young lovers." P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 44:279 N '16 210w

"Whatever our opinion of its popular qualities, we must say that the authors' attitude toward characterization is quite primitive."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 14 '16 530w

Cath World 104:122 O '16 100w

"If there is little or nothing in such a plot to arouse a reader's anxious interest, still the unwonted mingling of traditional French types with traditional English types gives the tale a certain picturesqueness."

+ Nation 103:466 N 16 '16 200w

"Lovers of the frankly romantic in fiction will find the novel one of the best the Castles have written in a long time."

+ N Y Times 21:336 Ag 27 '16 430w

"Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Castle go paddling on—like some of the veteran Royal academicians in their annual pictures—with the same old themes, the same old technical merits, and the same old too obvious limitations."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p310 Je 29 '16 150w

CASTLE, WILLIAM RICHARDS, Jr. Wake up, America; a plea for the recognition of our individual and national responsibilities. *50c (2½c) Dodd 321.8 16-7248

The author discusses America's faults and failings as a nation, urges more sense of responsibility on the part of each citizen and advocates universal military service. Contents: Rose-colored spectacles; Leadership; Political parties; Panaceas; National justice; Responsibility; National service; America to-day.

"The book should have been longer in training camp."

— Ind 86:252 My 15 '16 110w

"As far as the author has held to what appears to have been his original idea in writing the book, to show how necessary it is for every citizen of a democratic country to take deep and continuous interest in all its affairs, his pages evidence observation and thought and patriotic feeling. . . . Too frequently also his arguments and judgments betray so prominently the earmarks of artisanism as to destroy confidence in his ability to take a wide and judicial view of affairs."

— + N Y Times 21:172 Ap 23 '16 250w

R of Rs 53:628 My '16 20w

"The trouble with the book is not its querulousness of view, but its style. Mr. Castle is, one believes, a member of the Harvard faculty, or has been until recently. His book has strangely little of the true university temper. It amounts to little more than an ear-splitting scream. Mr. Castle is content principally to call names. Wilson, Bryan, even Taft, fall victims to his shrewish tongue. Moreover, the author does not seem to know what he wants in general, though for the moment he plainly wants military preparedness. That he is an idealist may be taken for granted; but it is doubtful whether he is clear about his ideals."

— Springfield Republican p15 Mr 19 '16 450w

"He is impartial in his criticism of both parties and their leaders, draws a clear picture of our present situation and makes some constructive suggestions. A very readable little book, youthful in tone and spirit."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:268 Je '16 80w

CASUALTY, pseud. "Contemptible." *$1 (2c) Lippincott 940.91 16-23470

Another volume of "Soldiers' tales of the great war." The author was one of the officers of the first expeditionary force, referred to by the Kaiser as "Sir John French's contemptible little army." He writes of: Leaving England; Calm before the storm; The advance to Mons; Mons; The beginning of the retreat, and soon up to the time when the two opposing armies entrenched. Shortly after he was wounded and he gives a vivid account in the third person of a wounded man's experiences and sensations in hospital.

"It is as minute as a diary, as free as an observer's tale. It gives a most satisfying explanation of many things that are mysteries to the outsider, and throws light upon some manoeuvres in the English army that have been criticised by ignorant strangers."

+ N Y Times 21:376 S 24 '16 370w

R of Rs 54:460 O '16 100w

"'Casualty,' who writes as a subaltern in the original Expeditionary force, reveals himself a professional in a number of little touches. His horizon is not much wider than Mr. MacGill's, but what he sees he understands, and he conveys its meaning to his readers."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p302 Je 29 '16 630w

CATHER, KATHERINE DUNLAP. Boyhood stories of famous men. il *$1.25 (3c) Century 920 16-18311

A series of biographical sketches that have been appearing in St. Nicholas. Titian, Chopin, Andrea del Sarto, Thorwaldsen, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Murillo, Stravinsky, Guido Reni, Claude Lorraine, Tintoretto, and Rosa Bonheur are the subjects. The author has based her stories on facts, but she has woven them into narrative form with the hope of making the early years of her great men and women of living interest to the boys and girls of today.

+ A L A Bkl 13:181 Ja '17

+ Dial 61:547 D 14 '16 50w

"Instead of over-fictionizing, as most writers try to do, the present author whets the appetite for further reading in the biographical field. This is an excellent beginners' book which we would place by the side of a volume issued two years ago, by the same publishers, entitled 'More than conquerors.'"

+ Lit D 53:1560 D 9 '16 100w

+ N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 60w

St Louis 14:446 D '16 30w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 180w

CATOR, DOROTHY. In a French military hospital. *80c Longmans 940.91 16-1306

"The author of 'Everyday life among the head-hunters' has written a rather jolly account of her experiences as a nurse in one of the obscure French hospitals. . . . She describes the unutterable conditions prevailing at the time of her arrival, the struggles of the two English nurses with the polite Médecin chef, with the jealous surveilleuses, and the lazy infermiers. Of the French soldiers and of the peasants she speaks with genuine admiration."—Boston Transcript

"As one reads, one prays that her knowledge of nursing be more profound than her aptitude for writing; but if the verbosity and convolutions of her style can be overlooked, the book proves to be of real interest. Among the war books, this little volume will very likely find a place, if not for its literary value, yet as a faithful and humorous description of one of the war's slightly known aspects."

+ — Boston Transcript p9 F 26 '16 200w

"This book is brightly written and gives the impression of letters scribbled home with a flowing pen. What it reveals, above all, is the immense gulf which divides the British from the French, differences which lie deeper than mere divergences of custom—radical differences in thought, in the way of looking at things, in the attitude toward life, which all the ententes and alliances in the world cannot bridge over."

+ N Y Times 21:67 F 27 '16 230w

CAVANAGH, GEORGE ANTHONY. Model aeroplanes and their motors; with an introd. by H: Woodhouse. il *$1 Moffat 629.1 16-17159

"Those interested in the science of aviation will welcome George A. Cavanagh's new book. . . . The complete construction of the propellers, wings, frames and power plants is described in such a way that it should be possible for a novice to build a model that will really fly." (Springfield Republican) The book "contains, besides complete instructions for making aeroplanes, a chapter on their history, a dictionary of terms, and the world's model flying records." (School Arts Magazine)

+ A L A Bkl 13:204 F '17

+ Cleveland p133 N '16 20w

N Y Br Lib News 3:142 S '16

N Y P L New Tech Bks p3 N '16 80w

"The book is profusely illustrated with drawings by Harry G. Schultz, president of the Aero science club of America."

N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 60w

"The author is model editor of the Aerial Age."

St Louis 15:14 Ja '17 10w

School Arts Magazine 16:126 N '16 70w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 29 '16 110w

CECIL, ALGERNON. Life of Robert Cecil, first earl of Salisbury. il *12s 6d John Murray, London 16-1675

"The story of Cecil's life to almost the beginning of his thirtieth year is told in sixty pages. The bulk of the volume deals with the subsequent period of nineteen years ending with his death in 1612. In this portion of the book, the principal topics dealt with, so far as possible in chronological order, include the case of Dr. Lopez; Cecil's relations with Bacon, Essex, and Raleigh, and his secret understanding with James VI of Scotland concerning the succession; his mission to France in 1598; his foreign policy, especially with reference to Spain; the Anglo-Spanish negotiations of 1604; his policy towards Catholics and Puritans; and his expedients to improve the state of the public finances in 1608-1610."—Am Hist R

"A comprehensive biography of Sir Robert Cecil has been badly needed. Mr. Algernon Cecil has made use of the great mass of manuscripts preserved at Hatfield house, of manuscripts at the London Public record office, and of printed sources. The results are presented in pleasing literary form."

+ Am Hist R 21:144 O '15 520w

+ Ath 1915,1:330 Ap 10 1350w

"A solid contribution to historical literature. For the last fourteen years of his life Cecil was by far the most powerful man in England. . . . It is the natural weakness of the author that he tends to invest his hero with almost Victorian respectability. He has not perfectly caught the tone of thought and feeling in Elizabethan England." F. C. Montague

+ Eng Hist R 30:727 O '15 1150w

"His book is enriched by many contemporary quotations, and its great merit is that it gives the reader a passing familiarity with the England of Shakespeare and Raleigh, of Bacon and Hakluyt."

+ Sat R 119:485 My 8 '15 1200w

"Mr. Algernon Cecil does not belong to the school of scientific historians, though his book is remarkably well documented. He is not afraid to reveal his own leanings and prejudices, and though at times overprone to epigram, he has command of a brilliant and caustic style. In fine, he has given us a vivid rather than a judicial biography of a remarkable man."

+ Spec 114:479 Ap 3 '15 2000w

CESARE, O. E. One hundred cartoons. *$3 Small 940.91 16-26992

The one hundred cartoons of the war are so arranged that they present a chronological record of events from Antwerp to Verdun. They are reprinted from the New York Sun and Harper's Weekly.

+ A L A Bkl 13:158 Ja '17

"The name of Cesare is said to be pronounced as if it were French, and not Italian—Cezare, and not Chés-a-re. . . . These Cesare cartoons are direct and powerful; one never can doubt the significance of the satire, the magnificent insolence of the caricature. Skeleton death—Raemaekers uses the same symbolism—is as vital as in a seventeenth-century Todtentanz. . . . A book to prize." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 13 '17 90w

"Aside from a splendid technique, Cesare is possessed of a poetic fervor, imagination, and a keen feeling for beauty. Many of these are drawings of a very noble order, qualified by a sentiment that is not mawkish. Because of his power as much as his fine restraint, Cesare may be said to be an aristocrat among American cartoonists."

+ Dial 61:479 N 30 '16 130w

"Cesare is most impressive when he is most abstract. Plates in which death dominates have the power of Daumier or Goya. But this grimness is also subject to monotony, and becomes a defect in the merely personal caricature."

+ Nation 103:589 D 21 '16 170w

"The claim is made for Cesare that his work is reprinted in European periodicals more often than that of any other American cartoonist. He has grasped the foreign situation and has sketched cleverly its principles and episodes."

+ Springfield Republican p7 N 25 '16 250w

"The collected cartoons of this volume printed, even in these times, on durable paper, will preserve this point of view far beyond the life of the flimsier pages of the New York Sun and Harper's Weekly, for which they were drawn." A. P. Kellogg

+ Survey 37:209 N 25 '16 330w

CHALKLEY, ALFRED PHILIP. Diesel engines for land and marine work; with an introductory chapter by the late Rudolf Diesel. 4th ed il *$3.50 Van Nostrand 621.12

"A greatly enlarged and much rewritten edition of a work which first appeared in the spring of 1912. . . . The defects of the first edition (which bore traces of hurried preparation) have disappeared, and we now have a copiously illustrated and enthusiastic survey of the progress of the Diesel engine, with many examples of modern types for land and marine installations, and an optimistic claim for its future development as the prime mover for mechanical transport. In this volume are upwards of forty-five folded plates, which give the main dimensions and cross-sections of the chief types of engines constructed."—Nature

+ Nature 97:159 Ap 20 '16 430w

"A practical book, attractively illustrated with half-tones and line drawings, and devoid of troublesome mathematics. The appendix contains Lloyd's rules for internal combustion marine engines; also a copy of the original patent specification dated August 27, 1892. Reviewed in Electrician, March 24, 1916, p. 879; in Ship-building & Shipping Record, March 2, 1916, p. 194."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p11 My '16 80w

CHALMERS, STEPHEN. Beloved physician: Edward Livingston Trudeau. il *$1 (14c) Houghton 16-2231

All of the facts presented in this little book are to be found in Dr. Trudeau's autobiography, published at the same time, but it has a value of its own as a tribute to the man. An introduction quotes from an address on The value of optimism in medicine, the last public speech made by Dr. Trudeau, and very characteristic of the philosophy that guided his life.

A L A Bkl 12:337 Ap '16

"We have the man and his philosophy; and if the life-story of such a man, with its interspersed commentary on the significant occurrences in that life, is not well worth reading, where shall we find a book that is?" P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 60:110 F 3 '16 1750w

"It draws a picture of a man whose strength lay in never knowing when he was beaten, of a man so absorbed in his vision that he was unconscious of the magnitude of his task, and moreover equally unconscious of his own power. The wisdom, the generosity, the devotion of his friends is the theme of every page, and he appeared to himself as simply 'doing the next thing.'"

+ Ind 85:354 Mr 6 '16 180w

+ Lit D 52:731 Mr 18 '16 150w

N Y Br Lib News 3:24 F '16

"The one thing lacking in Dr. Trudeau's 'Autobiography' (as indeed it must be lacking in a work written by so modest a hero) is supplied by Mr. Stephen Chalmers's glowing little sketch. He sets down anecdotes illustrative of Dr. Trudeau's courage, patience, generosity and humor, and he makes clear the number and importance of the obstacles it was necessary for Dr. Trudeau to surmount before he could build his great fortress against the great white plague."

+ N Y Times 21:19 Ja 16 '16 900w

Pratt p51 Ap '16

R of Rs 53:373 Mr '16 80w

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 27 '16 210w

+ Survey 36:103 Ap 22 '16 50w

Wis Lib Bull 12:146 Mr '16 90w

CHALMERS, STEPHEN. Penny piper of Saranac. il *75c (13c) Houghton 16-14276

A sketch of Stevenson reprinted from the Outlook of October 12, 1912. A reproduction of the Gutzon Borglum memorial recently unveiled at Saranac serves as a frontispiece and the address written for the occasion by Lloyd Osbourne is reprinted in an appendix. There is also an introduction by Lord Guthrie, who was one of Stevenson's Edinburgh friends, in which he says of this essay, "I call it a sketch of Stevenson, and not merely of his life at Saranac, for it shows much insight into his character, which was so complex that many people of broad minds but narrow sympathies thought it contradictory."

CHALMERS, STEPHEN—Continued

Boston Transcript p9 S 9 '16 680w

"Some of its passages will be found in substance, and occasionally in exact detail in the same writer's book, 'The beloved physician.' It was in collaboration with this physician, Dr. Edward Livingston Trudeau, that the 'Penny piper' was written."

+ Dial 61:317 O 19 '16 160w

+ Nation 103:590 D 21 '16 220w

"Graphic without being gossipy, fervent without being sentimental."

+ N Y Times 21:406 O 8 '16 280w

+ Outlook 114:252 O 4 '16 1000w

+ R of Rs 54:570 N '16 150w

"It sparkles with human interest all the way through."

+ Springfield Republican p8 S 15 '16 200w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. John Bogardus (Eng' title, Long divorce). il *$1.35 (1½c) Century 16-5183

His father, a professor in an American university, had destined his son for the same calling, and at the age of twelve had sent John abroad for a thoro grounding in the romance languages. Here the boy remained until he was twenty and when he returned to his native land he had the sound knowledge of languages his father had desired and also an understanding of European customs and morals, but a woeful ignorance of the ways of his own country. The happy play of boys and girls of his own age puzzles him, and when he comes to accept a position in his father's college he cannot understand the irresponsible youths who flock to his classes as soon as they learn that he is "easy." His year of teaching is a failure and he leaves it to go out and see the world and find himself. This book is largely a record of his wanderings and of his relations with four women of different type, each of whom holds his interest for a time.

A L A Bkl 12:339 Ap '16

"There is some admirable fine fooling in caricature of the modern American college." Wilson Follett

+ Atlan 118:499 O '16 70w

"About a year ago there appeared a novel of odd character and singular flavour—'Through stained glass,' by George Agnew Chamberlain. There was a good deal of spade-calling in it, a frank handling of matters of sex. But there was something fresh and natural and boyishly idealistic about it—a man's book. Of 'John Bogardus' I find myself wishing to say the same thing, and hesitating to say it. This book is somehow less fresh and spontaneous than the other. Its plot, when it remembers to have a plot, is a rather absurd contrivance." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:202 Ap '16 550w

"One cannot simply define the elements of this novel by the limits of its plot. It is full of delightful passages, of wholesome bits of wisdom and philosophy, of the gleanings which the author puts into the mouth of John Bogardus as he travels from an immature boy to a man, who is an 'apostle.' They all have their part in characterizing the man who is the very soul of the novel." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 26 '16 1050w

"Mr. Chamberlain's main idea (so far as I grasp it) seems to me excellent. It is only from within that one can have real life. . . . In fact, one may offer the book its own test. The book should give us the illusion, at least, of life." E. E. Hale

+ Dial 60:383 Ap 13 '16 630w

Nation 102:387 Ap 6 '16 430w

"Like its predecessors, 'Home' and 'Through stained glass,' it lacks cohesion. A three-day trip between two forgotten islands or down a swampy river would give Joseph Conrad more sheer life, more desperate romance to tell us of, than ten years about the Seven Seas yield to the writer of this story."

+ N Y Times 21:78 Mr 5 '16 1050w

"If the women whom John Bogardus met after he was thirty-three are as delightful as those he met before that year, and if John continues as charming a lover—then, Mr. Chamberlain, write us a sequel." M. A. Hopkins

+ Pub W 89:646 F 19 '16 550w

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 280w

"Mr. Chamberlain has made a great effort to write a 'psychological' novel; but he has not realized that verbiage by itself cannot produce one. There is little depth of insight in the evolution of John; and there are futile scenes, such as the episode of Dora and the ring. Other scenes arising out of John's numerous affairs of the heart are not without merit; but John himself and his spiritual career leave one quite unconcerned."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p322 J1 6 '16 160w

CHAMBERLAIN, JOSEPH SCUDDER. Organic agricultural chemistry. diags *$1.60 Macmillan 630.24 16-11238

A textbook for use in colleges. As the author points out in his preface, the study of agricultural chemistry may follow two lines. It may concern itself with soils and fertilizers, or with animals and plants. The first constitutes inorganic, the second organic chemistry. The present work follows the second line of study. A companion volume now in preparation by Ernest Anderson will treat of the correlative subject. These two books are designed for use in a course to follow a course in general chemistry such as is given in the freshman year.

+ Ath p428 S '16 110w

Cleveland p113 Ag '16 10w

Ind 87:421 S 18 '16 20w

+ Nation 103:244 S 7 '16 360w

"The book is, we believe, the only one of its kind. The well-known volume by Haas and Hill was written from the general biochemical point of view." E. J. R.

+ Nature 98:366 Ja 11 '17 650w

N Y Br Lib News 3:93 Je '16

Pittsburgh 22:41 Ja '17 30w

+ R of Rs 54:685 D '16 60w

"One criticism to be made is of the statement occurring now and then that certain processes can not be explained here, or that it is unnecessary to give the proof for some reaction. . . . Another fault to be found is that there are no illustrations. . . . The book is well printed and neatly bound. It is a volume to be recommended to those who desire a condensed treatment of biochemistry, being thoroughly scientific and yet practical and interesting." C. W. Stoddart

+ Science n s 44:923 D 29 '16 600w

+ Springfield Republican p15 J1 30 '16 170w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p394 Ag 17 '16 100w

CHAMBERLIN, THOMAS CHROWDER. Origin of the earth. (Science ser.) il *$1.50 (2c) Univ. of Chicago press 523 16-14064

Professor Chamberlin, the originator of the planetesimal hypothesis, describes in this book the steps which led him to reject the theory of Laplace and to substitute for it one that seemed more in accordance with modern scientific knowledge. He was first led to doubt the Laplacian hypothesis while engaged in studies in the field of glacial geology. He found it inadequate for the explanation of certain phenomena that came to his notice. Further investigations seemed to show it basically false and it was finally discarded and a new theory was built up in its place. The final chapters are devoted to the story of the earth's origin as the planetesimal hypothesis accounts for it.

+ A L A Bkl 13:65 N '16
Cleveland p112 Ag '16 10w

"Reads like a story. It is, however, a presentation of the most complete statement yet made of the formation of the polar systems."

+ Ind 87:238 Ag 14 '16 40w
+ Nature 98:387 Ja 18 '17 220w
N Y Br Lib News 3:125 Ag '16
N Y Times 21:303 Jl 30 '16 100w
St Louis 14:392 N '16 20w

"It must impress every reader as a notable constructive addition to thought upon this fundamental subject. . . . To gain a proper appreciation of the value of the investigations which are condensed in this volume we must compare the present state of thought upon the general subject with that of twenty years ago, before Chamberlin had begun to publish upon the hypotheses of earth genesis. Measured by that perspective this volume is seen to represent an advance in thought on this subject so great that the names of Chamberlin and Moulton must rank high among those scientists who have dealt constructively with that vast, vague and remote problem—the origin of the earth." Joseph Barrell

+ Science n s 44:239 Ag 18 '16 4150w

"The book presupposes a knowledge of geology, astronomy and their physical and mathematical elements. Therefore the layman unfamiliar with terms and laws, and lacking technical knowledge, will find the book too deep for him."

+ Springfield Republican p8 O 27 '16 390w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Better man. il $1.30 Appleton 16-6720

"There are fifteen tales collected in the book, and none of them deviates very far from the conventional formula. . . . The first five tales in the book are all stories of Sagamore county in the North woods, with young foresters and trained woodsmen, skillful, first class men directed by John Burling, the new conservation commissioner, for their heroes, dishonest game wardens and forest blackguards for villains, and very young, marvelously lovely, and usually ragged maidens to fill the heroines' parts. . . . Florida and the south, the former, it would seem, a favorite dwelling place for poverty-stricken but aristocratic old gentlemen possessed of extraordinarily lovely daughters, provide the setting for a number of tales."—N Y Times

"Mr. Chambers is perfectly consistent in his writing; his lack of realism is total and unremitting."

— Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '16 200w

"These stories are all as gay, as full of saccharine sentimentality, as neatly turned out, and as entirely machine-made as any other of Mr. Chambers's recent productions. No doubt they will receive the warm welcome usually accorded the spun sugar concoctions of this very popular confectioner."

— N Y Times 21:118 Ap 2 '16 850w

"Mr. Chambers frequently speaks his indignation at the reckless destruction of the forests, and makes a plea for conservation and reforestation. . . . The stories are uniformly diverting in a very light way. Mr. Chambers's sparkling dialog and pointed witticisms are much in evidence."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 16 '16 230w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Girl Philippa. il $1.40 Appleton 16-14870

"The girl Philippa' is one of the best things Mr. Chambers has written in recent years, and for a number of reasons. In the first place, it does not take as the sole centre of interest the love of a man for a maid, or of several men for several maids, after the manner which Mr. Chambers has made peculiarly his own. Not that this interest is wholly lacking, but the story is, besides, a tale of international intrigue such as Mr. Oppenheim delights to write, a story of war, a narrative of adventure. . . . From the instant when an unknown Englishman appeals for aid to the American artist Warner in the crowded marketplace of a provincial town in northern France in the last days of July, 1914, to the close of the story about two weeks later, incident follows incident through five hundred closely printed pages with bewildering rapidity."

—Boston Transcript

"It will be popular. Published in the Cosmopolitan."

A L A Bkl 13:34 O '16

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '16 900w
+ Ind 87:390 S 11 '16 50w

"It is the photoplay kind of novel that Mr. Chambers has written in 'The girl Philippa,' a novel in which so many exciting, even thrilling things happen in two or three weeks that Mr. Chambers has needed more than 500 pages in which to tell them."

+ N Y Times 21:298 Jl 30 '16 730w

"A craftsmanlike piece of fiction, felicitously written, interesting and pleasing." Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 90:601 Ag 19 '16 500w

CHAMBRY, RENÉ. Truth about Louvain; with a preface by M. le pasteur Giran. pa *25c (2½c) Doran 940.91 15-26809

The author, a resident of Louvain, writes of the sacking of the city with singular calmness and lack of bitterness. But, for all the restraint, the story is terrible enough. The charge made is against the men in authority who ordered the reign of terror; the soldiers who carried out the command are credited with instincts of humanity.

R of Rs 53:381 Mr '16 20W

CHANDLER, JOSEPH EVERETT. Colonial house. (Country house library) il $2.50 (4c) McBride 728 16-5695

"This book has been compiled in the hope that it may be of use to those who admire the old examples and who wish to avoid in their possible building operations, certain short-comings recognizable in much of the supposedly-in-the-old-vein modern work." (Preface) There are chapters on: The plan and the roof; The first period; The construction details of the first period; Second period; The third period; The downfall; Restorations; What not to do; Modern work; Colonial gardens. There are many excellent photographic illustrations, showing good examples of both the old and the modern styles, also floor plans and sketches showing detail work.

+ A L A Bkl 12:415 Je '16

"Appeals primarily to the architect, and is of equal delight to all lovers of the beautiful in architecture. The illustrations of the book are a delight, picturing many of the historic colonial houses and gardens of the United States."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 11 '16 450w
+ Ind 86:116 Ap 17 '16 80w
+ Lit D 53:415 Ag 19 '16 240w

"Written with such full knowledge and sympathy as can only be gained by a fully equipped architect who has practiced his profession in an environment of reverence for the traditions the old buildings embody. Mr. Chandler writes interestingly, and with critical discrimination; and the illustrations he gives are peculiarly well chosen and beautifully reproduced."

+ Nation 103:68 Jl 20 '16 100w
Pittsburgh 21:487 N '16 20w

"It would be difficult to find elsewhere so helpful a grouping of suggestions, based upon a thorough study of original models."

+ R of Rs 55:105 Ja '17 70w

"Mr. Chandler dwells understandingly on details of construction, but not to the exclusion of general criticism. The work is not thoroughgoing, and is not as clearly written as could be

CHANDLER, JOSEPH EVERETT—Continued. desired, but being the work of an architect, it will be found suggestive and helpful by many who are beginning to feel an interest in the true colonial architecture. The illustrations are numerous. The book has no index."

+ — Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 380w

"Less extensive than Eberlein's 'Architecture of colonial America,' being limited largely to New England, New York, and Pennsylvania types. Fully illustrated."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:319 J1 '16 70w

CHAPIN, HAROLD. Soldier and dramatist. il $1.25 (2c) Lane 940.91 16-22604

Harold Chapin was born in America of American parents but his life from childhood had been lived in England. He was an actor and playwright of promise, his plays, in particular his charming one-act comedies, having been presented with success in London. He enlisted at the beginning of the war and was killed at Loos on September 26, 1915. This book contains a brief sketch of his life by Sidney Dark, a letter from one of his comrades telling of his death, an appreciation of his work by William Archer, and his own letters written to his mother, wife, and little son.

+ A L A Bkl 13:214 F '17

"Amid many books of the war, this is a memorable book. It is the record of a worthy young life, and it bears testimony to a phase of the horrors of war that cannot be too frequently emphasized." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 8 '16 1300w

"A book worth reading and worth having for many different reasons—for its human fineness, for what it has to say about the war, for the beauty of its love letters, and the exquisiteness of its approach to the mind of a child; for the importance of its author's achievement and promise and the greatness of his sacrifice. And we cannot afford to miss its gallant pathos, though our hearts ache with its pain."

+ N Y Times 21:478 N 12 '16 750w

R of Rs 55:215 F '17 90w

"Though he could see things with the detachment of the artist, Chapin never lost touch with the human side. Some of the most poignant letters in the book are those written to his little boy."

+ Spec 117:sup606 N 18 '16 1450w

"The student of warfare and psychology will have an immense mass of intelligent and perceptive first-hand accounts of soldiering to draw upon; and in that mass Chapin's letters will take an important place. Perhaps his chief gifts as dramatist (Mr. William Archer contributes to this book an interesting appreciation of his plays) were sympathy and perception; and the very simplicity of these descriptions of his doings and his feelings is the warrant of their truth."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p460 S 23 '16 480w

CHAPMAN, CHARLES EDWARD. Founding of Spanish California. il $3.50 Macmillan 979.4 16-14582

"Nearly all that we have known about the Spanish settlement of the Pacific coast has come down to us through the records of the Franciscan missions. Recently a new school of California historians, looking upon the establishment of the missions as merely an episode in the Spanish settlement of California, has sought to show what were Spain's controlling motives from the political standpoint in pushing the exploration and colonization of the region that they knew as Alta California. . . . The first fruits of this enlightened policy is a volume on 'The founding of Spanish California,' by Dr. Charles Edward Chapman, of the State university. Nearly all the materials employed by this author were found by him during two years' residence in Seville, Spain. . . . His book covers the northwestward expansion of New Spain during the century preceding the founding of the United States on the eastern seaboard of the continent."—R of Rs

"It may well be characterized as a history of Spanish California on the political and diplomatic side; and as such it is a work of thoroughness and elaboration. . . . It is yet in its research, or, rather, over-research, aspect that we are constrained to be critical of Mr. Chapman's study. To begin with, the book is much too long; and in the next place it is largely wanting in perspective." I. B. Richman

+ — Am Hist R 22:339 Ja '17 850w

A L A Bkl 13:163 Ja '17

+ Cath World 104:390 D '16 640w

"A valuable scholarly book."

+ Cleveland p119 Ag '16 10w

N Y Br Lib News 3:117 Ag '16

+ N Y Times 21:359 S 10 '16 1350w

+ R of Rs 54:457 O '16 350w

"The greatest fault, or perhaps the greatest virtue, in this book is the somewhat matter-of-fact style followed by the author. For pure history and for readers who are solely actuated by a desire for facts, this is far from being a fault; but for the average reader much interest is lost. It is fair to recognize, however, that the author is avowedly treating his material 'from the standpoint of governmental interest.'"

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 1 '16 950w

"Although much work has been done in the history of California, particularly in Bancroft's vast 'History of the Pacific states' and Hittell's 'History of California' (with histories in quite recent years by Mr. T. B. Richman and Mr. Z. S. Eldridge), yet the present work is of real importance by reason of Dr. Chapman's utilization to a far greater extent than any previous historian had achieved of the immense store of material in the 'Archivo general de Indias' at Seville."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 O 12 '16 220w

CHAPMAN, FRANK MICHLER. Travels of birds; our birds and their journeys to strange lands. il $40c (1½c) Appleton 598 16-14062

A series of chapters on bird migration reprinted from St. Nicholas. The author writes of: Birds as travelers; Preparing for the journey; First flights; The birds' air line; The birds' time-table; The day flyers; The night flyers; The travels of the bobolink; Some famous bird travelers; The dangers by the way; The birds' compass; Why birds travel. There are illustrations from drawings and an index.

"Appeared in St. Nicholas."

+ A L A Bkl 13:38 O '16

"Mr. Chapman, 'the birds' historian,' writes with a simple directness and a sympathy which make every page of his little book pulse with suggestion and inspiration."

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 6 '16 240w

+ Ind 87:238 Ag 14 '16 40w

St Louis 14:432 D '16

CHARWOOD, GODFREY RATHBONE BENSON, 1st baron. Abraham Lincoln. (Makers of the nineteenth century) il $1.75 (1c) Holt (Eng ed 16-20529)

It is gratifying to Americans to find the second volume of this English series devoted to our own Lincoln. "One of the few supreme statesmen of the last three centuries," he is called in the editor's preface. Mr. Basil Williams, the general editor, continues: "It is fit that the first considered attempt by an Englishman to give a picture of Lincoln, the great hero of America's struggle for the noblest cause, should come at a time when we in England are passing through as fiery a trial for a cause we feel to be as noble. It is a time when we may learn much from Lincoln's failures and success, from his patience, his modesty, his serene optimism and his eloquence, so simple and magnificent." The author devotes much attention to circumstances and conditions with which Americans are fairly familiar in order that his English readers may have the proper background for an understanding of Lincoln's life. A bibliographical note, a chronological table and an index are provided at the end.

"Lord Charnwood has given us the most complete interpretation of Lincoln as yet produced, and he has presented it in such artistic form that it may well become classic. Lord Charnwood is a man of many affairs and much learning. He belongs to that Benson family of which the best known to Americans is the producer of Shakespeare's plays. . . . The contribution is not one of new fact but of deep thought. . . . It is intended for the intelligent, whether they are informed or not, but not for the informed unless they are intelligent." C. R. Fish

+ Am Hist R 22:413 Ja '17 1000w
+ A L A Bkl 13:120 D '16
+ Boston Transcript p9 O 4 '16 900w

"It is the most successful portrait of Lincoln, in a single volume, drawn upon a clearly conceived background of political evolution, that has so far appeared. The author's admirable condensation of our political history, from the adoption of the constitution to the close of the civil war, is heightened in interest by his sparkling cameo descriptions of certain of the most notable men who have influenced our national development." L. E. Robinson

+ Dial 61:311 O 19 '16 460w

"The most original part of the book and the part in which the author seems to take the greatest personal interest is the discussion of military administration and particularly of the working of conscription both in the federal union and in the confederacy."

+ Ind 88:505 D 18 '16 270w
+ Lit D 53:1179 N 4 '16 690w

"In many respects may be pronounced the best of the biographies yet produced."

+ Nation 104:20 Ja 4 '17 1600w

"There are mistakes such as any American student of history could have readily prevented had he read the proof, errors in names, and sometimes in matters of fact, as when certain aspects of the Dred Scott case are misstated, but for the most part having no effect on essentials. . . . His picture of Lincoln as an extraordinary, powerful, complex and charming personality is more convincing than that of any American historical writer whom the present reviewer, a desultory reader in that field, to be sure, has ever encountered." F. M. Colby

+ New Repub 9:101 N 25 '16 1750w
+ N Y Times 21:442 O 22 '16 1450w
+ Pittsburgh 21:580 D '16 40w
+ R of Rs 54:569 N '16 140w
+ Spec 117:416 O 7 '16 2050w

"Not the least of Lord Charnwood's advantages as a biographer of Lincoln [is that] he writes as an experienced politician, familiar with the questions of organization, conciliation and popular appeal which the politician is perpetually called upon to solve."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 1300w
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p334 Jl 13 '16 60w

"In his bibliographical note, he does not mention a book which goes over much of the ground, and which presents the story very much as he presents it—F. F. Browne's 'Everyday life of Lincoln,' originally published in 1886, and revised and re-issued in 1914."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p388 Ag 17 '16 1000w

"No reader who wishes to have a full understanding of this period of American history can afford to omit this biography," is the statement of an able university authority on civil war history, who adds that while its style will restrict its use to the mature reader, it should reach high-school students through their teachers."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:409 N '16 140w

CHASE, JOSEPH CUMMINGS. Decorative design. (Wiley technical ser. for vocational and industrial schools) il $1.50 Wiley 745 15-18923

"This text-book, embodying the results of some years' experience in teaching and designing, is what it professes to be—practical. Students who contemplate embarking on what is called the 'commercial' kind of art will find here many valuable hints as to the treatment of designs of various kinds, such as posters and advertisements generally, book covers and jackets, and so forth, as well as lettering, and there is some good advice as to materials and a list of books worth consulting."—Int Studio

+ Int Studio 58:283 Je '16 100w
Pittsburgh 21:406 O '16

CHASE, MRS. LEWIS. Vagabond voyage through Brittany. il $2 Lippincott 914.41 A16-67

"'An inland voyage' may have suggested to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Chase their recent adventure in 'A vagabond voyage through Brittany,' an aquatic saunter from St. Malo to Rennes and thence to Brest, chiefly by canal, with two short stretches of river to complete the tour. Mrs. Chase is the chronicler of the voyage and she adorns her tale with sixty-four views from photographs, all interesting and some unusually pleasing."—Dial

+ Ath 1915,2:345 N 13 570w

"It is a book to make one wish to duplicate the author's experiences—when peace shall have settled once more over the fair face of France. A good map accompanying the narrative points the way for any such emulous reader."

+ Dial 59:501 N 25 '15 180w

"Spontaneity, humor, and human interest constitute the charm of the book. The style is free and easy, vivid enough and clever, though not always correct. The illustrations are excellent. It is not the mystical and melancholy Brittany of Renan or even of Anatole Le Braz, but it is a country freshly seen through the practical eyes of a woman. When the travellers once asked if they were in the way, their hostess replied: 'On the contrary, I find you very diverting.' So says the present reader."

+ Nation 102:112 Ja 27 '16 450w

CHASE, MRS. MARGARET HATFIELD, and CHASE, STUART. Honeymoon experiment. $1 (4c) Houghton 331.8 16-11607

A report of a social experiment. Two young people of well-to-do circumstances who were interested in social problems took the first free opportunity of their lives, their honeymoon, to investigate social conditions for themselves. They went to a strange city and began the search for work, forcing themselves during the time of their experiment to live within the amount that is the average income of the American family, ten dollars a week. They learned nothing that is not already known by every one at all acquainted with the industrial situation, but, as in all such cases, the personal touch gives the facts new emphasis.

N Y Br Lib News 3:106 Jl '16

"The people they met—the conditions under which they lived—are vividly portrayed. Unfortunately as is the book in the title, it will be, in its matter and in its presentation, of interest, not only to the specialist, but to any reader, for the question of this phase of economics is vital to every one."

+ N Y Times 21:246 Je 18 '16 530w
Pittsburgh 21:362 Jl '16 40w
R of Rs 54:118 Jl '16 240w

"The book is well calculated to make other people think. It is more fascinating than fiction, and more worth while."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Je 13 '16 440w

CHASE, MARY ELLEN. Girl from the Big Horn country. il $1.25 (2c) Page 16-2369

Virginia Hunter leaves her father's cattle ranch in Wyoming, says goodbye to her boy chum, Donald, and goes east to the school where her New England mother was educated. Her last promise to Donald is that she won't be a "young lady" when she comes back. She keeps it, for the school is a wholesome one for normal, well-bred girls, and the months spent there are filled with the usual school-girl adventures with classmates and teachers, extended and tempered to suit the breezy frankness of Virginia's western character.

CHASE, MARY ELLEN—Continued

"Nothing much happens, but the breeziness and freedom of the west and the unaffectedness of Virginia make the book possible."

+ A L A Bkl 12:343 Ap '16

"The book is thoroughly well written, the author, besides having the power of lucid description, possesses a keen sense of humor."

+ Boston Transcript p25 F 23 '16 320w

+ Lit D 53:80 J1 8 '16 220w

"Virginia Hunter has a good measure of spice as well as of sugar in her make-up, and is a human and interesting western girl. . . On the whole, 'The girl of the Big Horn country' is better than most books of its type."

+ Nation 102:708 Je 29 '16 150w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:229 My '16 30w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Daring deeds of famous pirates. (Daring deeds ser.) il $1.25 Lippincott

"No boy could resist the contents of this fascinating volume, based on a larger book, 'The romance of piracy,' by the same author. . . There are some delicate distinctions made in the early chapters between different types of pirates who used to cruise the high seas, and no nation is allowed to escape the honor of having produced a hero of the pirate type. We get 'sympathetic' portraits of Sir Henry Morgan, 'Bluebeard' Teach, and Captain Kidd, besides notable 'gallants' of the times of the Tudor kings and of Queen Elizabeth."—Lit D

"The illustrations alone will whet the appetite of any full-blooded boy."

+ Lit D 53:1560 D 9 '16 180w

+ Nation 103:519 N 30 '16 30w

CHEIRO, pseud. (LOUIS HAMON). Palmistry for all; containing new information on the study of the hand never before published; with a preface to American readers. il $1 (2½c) Putnam 133.6 16-11981

The well-known authority on palmistry has brought together in this volume the results of his twenty-five years of study and experiment. Cheiro believes that the study of the hand should be made a useful and practical means of obtaining an exact judgment of character, qualities, and hidden tendencies that might otherwise be ignored. With this end in view he sets down his experiments, presenting in detail the meaning of the net work of lines in the palm and their bearing on health, happiness and achievement.

A L A Bkl 13:6 O '16

+ Springfield Republican p13 J1 2 '16 100w

"No doubt this is the book to buy if the small library has need of any, and if purchased it would probably be immediately popular. . . According to the Library of congress entry, the author's identity has changed from Leigh Warner to Louis Hamon."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 60w

CHELEY, FRANK HOBART. Adventure of a prodigal father. *50c (3c) Assn. press 173

A little story for fathers. Mr. Lawson Wentwerp is the typical father who leaves the bringing up of the children to their mother and takes it for granted that they will come out all right. When his son James is sixteen, a friend who has had a bitter experience in his own family, advises Mr. Wentwerp to look into the ways of his boy. The father starts on an investigation and is dismayed at what he learns of his son's habits and companions. Fortunately it is not too late and a long camping trip in the Rocky mountains establishes a right relationship between father and son.

"The weak point in the little story lies in the introduction, by way of contrast, of the two country cousins. . . An author with the country-life problem at heart might have just reversed the conditions of this story. . . It is to be hoped that many parents will read this little book and take it to heart, and that they will do so before their boys are sixteen." M. K. Reely

+ — Pub W 91:208 Ja 20 '17 620w

CHENEY, ANNE CLEVELAND. Nameless one; a play in three acts. *$1 Stokes 812 16-2099

A drama in blank verse with scenes laid in 16th century England. Lord Faulkner, happily wedded, and looking forward to the birth of an heir, has begun to think with remorse of his first-born, the illegitimate child he has abandoned. Hoping to make reparation, he commissions Father Michael, his chaplain, to find the boy. Father Michael succeeds, but the discovery comes too late, for Snick-up, the whimsical little stable boy, with his twisted back and his happy, dreaming soul, has gone beyond earthly reward before his father finds and tries to claim him. The play was originally called "The firstborn."

"A romantic drama of the sixteenth century set in admirable blank verse."

+ Ind 86:117 Ap 17 '16 80w

N Y Br Lib News 3:43 Mr '16

Pratt p36 J1 '16 7w

CHER, MARIE. Immortal gymnasts. *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 15-25505

The gymnasts are the immortal three, Pantaloon, Harlequin and Columbine. In this story they have descended to a mundane sphere, Pantaloon has become Mr. Panta, a venerable greybeard given to poring over musty volumes. Columbine is Bina, his daughter and keeper of a charming little butter and cheese shop. Harlequin, a lover of adventure, has adopted the career of sandwich man, following it under the name Mr. Quin. With the affairs of these three are woven those of a group of mortals, Anie and Estelle, two sisters, and the two young men who are in love with them. One of these has been attracted first by gentle Anie, but he has tired of her and turned to her more brilliant sister. It is the unhappy plight of Anie that wins the interest of the three immortals and in aiding her they find that they have added joy to their own earthly lot.

+ A L A Bkl 12:428 Je '16

"Pleasant reading, padded with somewhat 'precious' talk on art."

+ Ath 1915:2:310 O 30 170w

"This writer's style has a Gallic clarity as well as a Gallic elegance. The author has set herself a very delicate task, and has carried it through with extraordinary grace and spontaneity." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:414 Je '16 580w

+ Lit D 52:721 Mr 18 '16 140w

"The author commands a style of singular grace and vigor; by its means and by virtue of a rich underlying idea, she has produced something much better than a cleverly contrived 'novel.'"

+ Nation 103:179 Ag 24 '16 500w

"The author works out the plot to a happy ending with much gentle gayety and genial humor. Its outstanding features are the charm with which it is told, the delicate fantasy which informs it and the inherently poetic vision with which it is conceived and worked out."

+ N Y Times 21:90 Mr 12 '16 570w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:227 My '16 50w

CHERINGTON, PAUL TERRY. Advertising book, 1916. il *$2 (1c) Doubleday 659 16-2106

The chief purpose of this work is "to put into form for convenient reference some of the available records of recent progress in advertising methods." It follows "Advertising as a business force," by the same author, published in 1913, and like that book has been prepared under the auspices of the Associated advertising clubs of the world. The contents, reprinted largely from Printers' Ink are arranged in two parts: Advertising and the distribution system, and Advertising methods.

A L A Bkl 12:321 Ap '16
Cleveland p58 My '16 40w
N Y Br Lib News 3:47 Mr '16

"Almost every phase of the science is represented, and it is well indexed."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:225 My '16 50w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Crimes of England. *$1 (4c) Lane 942 16-2387

The crimes of England have consisted of her failures to check the advance of Germany and to resist all invasions of German ideas. In his satirical letter of introduction to a certain Professor Whirlwind, Mr. Chesterton offers a list of these offenses. "On many occasions we have been very wrong indeed," he confesses. "We were very wrong indeed when we took part in preventing Europe from putting a term to the impious piracies of Frederick the Great. We were very wrong indeed when we allowed the triumph over Napoleon to be soiled with the mire and blood of Blucher's sullen savages. . . . We were very wrong indeed when we praised the soulless Prussian education and copied the soulless Prussian laws." Each of the "crimes" named is treated in a chapter.

"The thesis is worked out with ingenuity and grim humor, grim because grounded in the writer's intense conviction of the rightness of his views. Readers equipped with the requisite intelligence and political knowledge will allow for his bias and find the book enlightening."

+ A L A Bkl 12:358 My '16

"From Chesterton this is exactly the title we might expect. His mood is still the mood of the comedian, his manner the manner of the clown, his garb the garb of the jester. He must wear cap and bells even though the moment is the most fateful in the history of his country. . . . Here as always Chesterton is at his best when he is most straightforward. Here of course we understand his purpose, we know that his words are coming directly from his heart, and not from the fantastic convolutions of an over-imaginative brain. It is his misfortune to have started professional life with a harlequin's reputation. Possibly he may be able to shake it off, but if he does not, we shall be forced to continue to look upon everything he writes with the eye of suspicion." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p24 F 16 '16 1400w

"So far as Chesterton shows bias it is pro-French or pro-Irish rather than pro-British. . . . He writes not only seriously, but soberly, as befits the great hour, and concludes his book with a vivid and moving description of the battle of the Marne which has in it a world of eloquence and no 'cleverness' at all."

+ Ind 85:390 Mr 13 '16 350w

"Readable enough, and at times instructive, but the general tone is a bit shrill and hectic."

+ Nation 102:440 Ap 20 '16 190w

"Nothing is so disarming as sincerity. In this book by Gilbert Chesterton there is so deep a sincerity that it almost puts criticism out of court. If he made one angry, it would be easy to combat him. But he is too greatly moved himself not to move his reader. His grip on his convictions is so strong as almost to seem a grip on reality. It is only by remembering how ardent conviction does so often pervert reality that one is able to hold his argument at arm's length. . . . No Englishman to my knowledge has ever done such justice to the Irish people as Mr. Chesterton does in this volume." F. H.

+ New Repub 6:78 F 19 '16 1550w

"It is, in effect, one of England's most discerning critics' justification of himself for becoming, while still keenly aware of all his country's past sins and present weaknesses, devotedly, even violently her partisan in the war. . . . The Chestertonian formula is as conspicuous on these pages as it is in the wildest parts of 'Manalive,' or in the most fantastic of the essays but it is a sound formula, as effective a device for expressing strong emotion and accurate thinking as for expressing more delightful imaginations. Mr. Chesterton is as completely a master of the prose form he has made his own as is any poet of the sonnet form. And his thoughts naturally take this form; it has become his accustomed and spontaneous method of expression. He is no longer conscious of its artificiality, nor are his readers after they have passed the first few pages."

+ N Y Times 21:65 F 27 '16 1400w

Spec 116:87 Ja 15 '16 260w

CHILD, CHARLES MANNING. Senescence and rejuvenescence. *$4 (3c) Univ. of Chicago press 577 15-20417

For descriptive note see Annual for 1915.

"The book is thus essentially constructive, and not a destructive criticism only of such views. To the pharmacologist the discovery of the cause of the sensitivity of the nervous system to drugs of all kinds and its relation to metabolism is a matter of very great interest and importance. To the ordinary man of a philosophical temperament this book must appeal for its solid thoughtfulness, clear exposition, and cautious conclusions. The large number of well executed illustrations greatly adds to the ease of following the text. Zoologists and botanists have here a theory which offers an explanation of the most interesting and obscure of their phenomena. It presents a possible and apparently a practicable means of escape from neo-nativism." A. P. Mathews

+ Bot Gaz 61:164 F '16 3150w

"Much of the book is a record of observations and experiments which have not been previously published; the rest is a thoughtful working-out of a new conception of the organism, which must be taken account of by all biologists. We confess to a feeling that the superstructure of interpretation is too broad for the planarian basis on which it mainly rests. But it is a great satisfaction to meet with such a fine instance of resolute biological thinking."

+ Nature 98:85 O 5 '16 1650w

CHILD, HAROLD HANNYNGTON. Thomas Hardy. (Writers of the day ser.) il *50c (2c) Holt (Eng ed 16-14905)

This study of Hardy is made up of three chapters: His artistic purpose; The novels; Hardy the poet. "The dynasts" is pronounced "the crowning expression of that passion for the truth which characterises all Hardy's work." In it he reveals himself as a great tragic poet, as his novels show him as a great tragic novelist. But like all high tragedy, both poem and novels are filled with "a great pity and a great patience." His tragedy is kathartic, "purging those who learn to love it of meanness and impatience and self-pity."

A L A Bkl 13:80 N '16

"For Mr. Child every character and every incident in Mr. Hardy's work is evidence of a deep central philosophy, the leading idea of which is that all men and women are struggling diversely and vainly against the power that rules the world. . . . This view is an overstatement."

+ Ath p75 F '16 320w

Boston Transcript p9 S 13 '16 750w

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 6 '16 650w

"A critical study of the novelist and poet as thorough as could be in some 20,000 words. Mr. Child shows deep sympathy and insight, and follows Mr. Hardy's development from 'Desperate remedies' to 'The dynasts' consistently from the æsthetic point of view and with no adventitious flourishes. He rates 'The dynasts' very high. Bibliog. (7pp.) and index."

+ Library Association Record 18:174 Ap 15 '16 57w

"First-rate piece of informal and thoroughly journalistic criticism. Harold Child writes of 'Thomas Hardy' with undue emphasis upon Hardy's poetry, to which he gives one-third his volume, and with a fatuous attempt to show that Hardy's philosophy of the control of life CHILD, HAROLD HANNYNGTON—Continued. by an impersonal, heedless, immanent will is sure to supplant in the generation following the war what he calls the present belief in a dualism of good and evil. But he discusses the novels, . . . with sound sense."

+ — Nation 103:516 N 30 '16 220w

"The impression that is forced into these 20,000 words is amazingly strong and varied. It is practically impossible to receive it without turning to the Titan that inspired it, a creator of such deep foundation, power and heart-rending perception that his place is among the very great."

+ New Repub 8:229 S 30 '16 110w

N Y Br Lib News 3:140 S '16

+ N Y Times 21:385 O 1 '16 250w

St Louis 14:439 D '16 50w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 27 '16 950w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:407 N '16 40w

CHILD, RICHARD WASHBURN. Bodbank. *$1.35 (1½c) Holt 16-19419

Bodbank is a town on the east bank of the Mississippi, founded in the old steamboat days and built up and made prosperous by the rich Illinois corn fields that lie back of it. The Phoenix hotel had belonged to the old days of the steamboats, and it is in the back room of the Phoenix that a group of old-timers gather to tell the stories of which this book is made up. There are eleven stories, relating the tragedies and comedies of a small town.

"Reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post and others."

+ A L A Bkl 13:123 D '16

"Mr. Child has learned much from the art of O. Henry and his stories abound in just such sprightly, absurd, telling metaphors and similes as enliven the stories of 'The four million' and 'Whirligigs.' . . . In matter he surpasses him, for he has kept more nearly to everyday American life and has seen more deeply into everyday American character. His stories are woven of the stuff of reality." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 30 '16 1100w

+ Dial 61:400 N 16 '16 210w

+ N Y Times 21:487 N 12 '16 320w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 60w

CHILD, RICHARD WASHBURN. Potential Russia. *$1.50 (3½c) Dutton 940.91 16-15466

"I went to Europe," says the author, "to see what war is doing to the hearts of men and the spirit of nations. Russia, I believed, was the place where the war would work the greatest changes." He found, as he expected, a great awakening in Russia, a quickening of national consciousness which will mean phenomenal progress in the period to follow the war. In the final chapter he points out some of the opportunities which may be opened up to America if she has the wisdom to take them. He writes of the powers latent in the Russian peasantry, of the Russian women, the effects of prohibition, etc.

"Part of the material was used in Collier's, Everybody's magazine, and Century."

+ A L A Bkl 13:77 N '16

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '16 650w

+ Cath World 104:542 Ja '17 220w

Cleveland p135 N '16 90w

"Mr. Child has written a valuable book—eminently dispassionate, friendly, critical, and on the whole free from the glaring errors which a series of journalistic snap-shots might naturally have contained. There are some misprints." N. H. Dole

+ Dial 61:265 O 5 '16 1500w

"One of the most informing and interesting of all the books on Russia brought forth by the war."

+ Ind 88:205 O 30 '16 90w

+ Nation 103:590 D 21 '16 510w

+ N Y Times 21:805 Ag 6 '16 730w

"By reason of his standpoint, his recognition of the human factors in the problem, Mr. Child is able to answer with what seems a superior degree of certainty some of the commoner questions that are asked about Russia and the Russian people. Why did the Czar supplant the Grand Duke? Will Russia make a separate peace? Is the German influence strong? Will there be a revolution? Is Russia permeated by graft? To all these questions the author gives answers that seem reasonable and psychologically sound. . . . The zest and narrative power with which the author writes hold the interest and move the sympathies in a way that is remarkable in a book, not of fiction, but of scrupulously expressed fact and opinion."

+ No Am 204:464 S '16 680w

CHINA year book for 1916; ed. by H. T. M. Bell² and H. G. W. Woodhead. *$3.75 Dutton 915.1

"The 1916 edition of 'The China. year book' has made its appearance. It is a bit tardy, but the editors say earlier publication was made impossible because of the European war, which also prevented altogether the issue of the manual in 1915. The new number rounds up the political, economical, financial, biographical, and other facts about China interesting to westerners, down to the close of 1915."—N Y Times

"The table of contents shows thirty main heads, ranging from geography to trade-marks, each of these heads minutely subdivided for easy reference, and each subdivision treated seemingly with painstaking accuracy and in surprising detail. The book should lie upon the desk of every newspaper man who writes, either as editor or as reporter, about the Far East, and on the shelves of all students of the Orient or of contemporary international affairs."

+ Dial 61:539 D 14 '16 140w

+ N Y Times 22:6 Ju 7 '17 110w

St Louis 14:386 N '16

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ja 23 '17 90w

CHRISTIAN, EUGENE. Eat and be well, eat and get well. *$1 Knopf 613.2 16-13332

The author says, "The advice and the food prescriptions contained in this book are the 'boiled down' results of twenty years' practical experience in prescribing diet for the cure of disease and the maintenance of health. . . . My investigations have convinced me that about ninety per cent of all human disease originates in the stomach and is caused by wrong eating and drinking." Three short chapters are given up to a discussion of foods; the remainder of the book is devoted to menus that are recommended for specific ailments or adapted to the needs of men and women in various occupations and at different times of life. While not banning meat entirely, the author leans toward a vegetarian diet.

+ A L A Bkl 13:153 Ja '17

Boston Transcript p7 Jl 15 '16 240w

"The author formerly advocated the exclusive use of uncooked foods."

Cleveland p114 Ag '16 30w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 120w

CHU, CHIN. Tariff problem in China. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) pa *$1.50 Longmans 337 16-14265

"This is a distinct contribution to studies already made by Chinese students in American universities of economic conditions in their country. Dr. Chu presents in detail a view of the tariff in China, its history, underlying traditions and administration. He does not confine himself, however, to this expository task alone; he also capably maintains the theses that: (1) The low duties are quite inadequate to serve as aids to China's industrial development. (2) Concessions from the unusually low rates are granted very liberally to foreigners, by treaties discriminating against the Chinese. (3) The revenue from duties on imports (and on exports) has no logical relation with the fiscal system of the country, since the low duties do not result in any correspondingly large volume of revenue, and the rigidity of the rates keeps the customs revenue from serving to supplement the income of the state."—Ann Am Acad

"Dr. Chu's historical and critical discussion of this matter is eminently fair, with due acknowledgment of China's share of fault, but it is also keen and enlightening. The book is good enough to deserve a full index and a bibliography would add to its great value." A. P. Winston

+ Am Econ R 6:928 D '16 580w

+ Ann Am Acad 68:321 N '16 210w

CLAPP, EDWIN JONES. Port of Boston. il $2.50 (2½c) Yale univ. press 380 16-9269

"A study and a solution of the traffic and operating problems of Boston, and its place in the competition of the North Atlantic seaports." (Sub-title) The book is based on a private report made to the directors of the port of Boston. Part 1 deals with Traffic; Part 2 with Operation. "Operation is closely allied to traffic," says the author. "Upon the cost and smoothness of terminal operations depend the terminal charges and service which traffic can reasonably expect." The work has not been prepared for Boston alone. The practices of other Atlantic ports are cited and the whole subject of competition for trade with the middle west is dealt with.

"Covers the field in the same detailed thorough way as the author's 'Port of Hamburg' (Booklist, 8:296, Mr '12)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:8 O '16

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 21 '16 1000w

Ind 88:75 O 9 '16 60w

"Of great importance from the standpoint of public policy is the discussion of the operation and control of the port in which the superiority of a public over the present mixed ownership of the waterfront is clearly indicated."

+ Nation 103:243 S 7 '16 220w

N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16 120w

+ N Y Times 21:288 J1 16 '16 80w

"A compendium of information which will be accepted as authoritative."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Je 27 '16 950w

"The author's fancy is steadied by his grasp of fact; he attracts the interest of the reader without forfeiting the respect of the critic." Clive Day

+ Yale R n s 6:427 Ja '17 1050w

CLARK, EARLE. Financing the public schools. diags 25c Cleveland foundation, Survey committee; Russell Sage foundation 370.91

16-2204

"It is clear from the evidence presented in this study that Cleveland is expending relatively more money in business organization and in the conduct of the material side of the school system than other cities of the same size; while it is expending relatively less in the control of its educational affairs. . . . The most important method employed in this volume of evaluating the organization at Cleveland is the comparative method. The material from other cities which is reported by the Commissioner of education was carefully tabulated and Cleveland's position in the general series of cities was worked out."—El School J

Cleveland p8 F '16 60w

"The volume furnishes cities of the general class of Cleveland with a very fair basis for financial comparisons, and in general the study indicates the desirability of placing one community in a position to check up its financial operations with those of other communities of the same class."

+ El School J 16:337 Mr '16 650w

+ Ind 86:28 Ap 3 '16 40w

CLARK, HENRY HOWARD. Midshipman Stanford; a story of midshipman life at Annapolis. il $1.20 (1c) Lothrop 16-14049

Lacking the necessary influence which would gain his admittance to the naval academy at Annapolis, Hollis Stanford took service with a passenger line. In a storm at sea he saves the life of a young girl, and the act proves to be the turning point of his life. For Alice Sedgwick's father is a United States senator and the desired appointment for the boy is easily secured with his help. The story thereafter follows Hollis's adventures as a cadet, closing with his graduation and the announcement of his engagement to Alice. The author served for a number of years as chaplain in the Naval academy.

"Its sentiment is highly sane and inspiring."

+ Boston Transcript p7 J1 22 '16 220w

"If the story has a larger tinge of the sentimental than the average boy reader likes, there are other readers—girls it may be—who will find this no hindrance to their complete enjoyment of the story."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 27 '16 130w

CLARK, MACDONALD. Maurice Maeterlinck, poet and philosopher. il $2.50 (4c) Stokes 842 (Eng ed 15-26873)

A critical appreciation of Maeterlinck as literary artist and philosopher. A biographical introduction gives brief synopses of his works in chronological order. This is followed by chapters on: Growth and development; Essential and underlying unity in Maeterlinck's work; Maeterlinck's philosophy: general ethical principles; Maeterlinck's philosophy: views on religion; Maeterlinck's philosophy: ethical, social, æsthetic; Thought that has influenced Maeterlinck; The art of Maeterlinck; Maeterlinck's place in modern thought and literature.

A L A Bkl 12:467 J1 '16

"Despite all this, Maeterlinck remains a man of letters rather than a philosopher. To see his 'Monna Vanna' on the stage, to read 'The life of a bee' is to have a finer sense of his imagination than could be derived from a dozen such books as Mr. Clark's." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '16 1450w

"To turn from Miss Taylor's book to Mr. Clark's 'Maeterlinck, poet and philosopher,' is to issue from the vague atmosphere of the early plays to the straightforward impressive clarity of 'Monna Vanna.'" B. M. Woodbridge

+ Dial 61:391 N 16 '16 1100w

"The volume contains no bibliography and but little biography. The author's chief interest is in the analysis of Maeterlinck's philosophy and the development of his thought. With this in view he has worked over the plays and essays with great thoroughness and brings out many interesting relationships."

+ Ind 87:388 S 11 '16 190w

"For richness of style, vocabulary, and true interpretative power this book rises far above even the exceptional works of its kind."

+ R of Rs 54:345 S '16 220w

St Louis 14:400 N '16 10w

CLARKE, EDWIN LEAVITT. American men of letters: their nature and nurture. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) pa $1.50 Longmans 16-14131

"Professor Clarke makes a commendable attempt to evaluate some of the factors that have influenced the mental development of the thousand most eminent literati born in the United States and Canada between the years 1639 and 1850. The writer draws his inferences from a large mass of data with a reserve that is not always noticeable in studies of this kind. He is led to believe that while nature, in the form of heredity, plays a far greater rôle than he had at first imagined, it nevertheless counts for little in the absence of favorable environmental conditions." (Dial) "The method followed by the author is largely that of Prof. Alfred Odin who made such a study of French men of letters; but he is careful to take a chapter to describe Odin's method as modified by himself." (Boston Transcript)

Ath p430 S '16 140w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 16 '16 400w

CLARKE, EDWIN LEAVITT—Continued
Cath World 104:554 Ja '17 150w

"Not the least valuable part of the work is an appendix covering fifty-four pages and containing an epitome of biography for American letters."

- + Dial 61:107 Ag 15 '16 230w
- + Int J Ethics 27:123 O '16 200w
- New Repub 7:308 Jl 22 '16 1400w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:125 Ag '16
- + N Y Times 21:260 Je 25 '16 900w

"If there are omissions in his list, it is only fair to say that they have not been such as to affect his conclusions. . . . Every step in the method is clear, and the tables are numerous. With Dr. Clarke's interpretation of his data little fault can be found in the main, but one must take exception to this statement: 'Authors of the first rank disappeared after the civil war because their work seems to have been no longer appreciated.' . . . What he has learned about nationality strains should be recorded."

- + Springfield Republican p15 S 3 '16 1450w

CLARKE, WILLIAM NEWTON. William Newton Clarke. il *$2 (2c) Scribner 16-17732

The subject of this biography is introduced simply as "one who was quietly, yet widely, known as preacher, teacher and author." Among the books of which he was author are "The Christian doctrine of God," "An outline of Christian theology" and "Sixty years with the Bible." The sketch of his life presented here is written by his wife, altho her name does not appear on the title page. Other contributions to the book are made by friends and associates.

"The volume is a welcome and worthy tribute to one who before his death the most influential theologian in American thinking." G. B. S.

- + Am J Theol 21:154 Ja '17 220w

"It is pleasingly and sympathetically written, and is cordially to be commended to lovers of lives outwardly uneventful but inwardly rich."

- + Dial 61:404 N 16 '16 300w
- N Y Times 21:369 S 17 '16 60w
- + Springfield Republican p8 O 27 '16 480w

CLAUDEL, PAUL. Tidings brought to Mary; a mystery; tr. from the French by Louise Morgan Sill. *$1.50 (5c) Yale univ. press 842 16-15748

A translation into English of a French vers libre play. The scenes are laid in fifteenth century France, the characters are a farmer and his family. The oldest daughter is stricken with leprosy on the eve of her marriage and forced to become an outcast. It is thru her suffering and her spiritual victory that miracles are brought to pass.

Library Association Record 18:174 Ap 15 '16 80w

"For Claudel, there is but one grand theme. It is the knowledge of God. That is the subject of his odes and of his dramas. One has to go back to Aeschylus to find another dramatist so preoccupied." Paul Rosenfeld

- + New Repub 9:100 N 25 '16 1300w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:151 O '16

"Of special interest for its pictorial value. . . . Like Yvette Guilbert's songs in costume, this play is more important for the mood it creates than for its story or dramatic significance."

- + Springfield Republican p6 N 21 '16 520w

"To the best of our knowledge, this version of 'L'annonce faite à Marie' is the first English translation from his poetry and drama that has been printed. Doubtless there will be more translations before long, because English readers are becoming more and more interested in M. Claudel since the outbreak of war has made him the representative voice of fighting France—of the religious, energetic, anti-intellectual France, which before the war was still rather a rebellion than a national movement."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p161 Ap 6 '16 800w

CLAUSON, JAMES EARL, comp. Dog's book of verse. *$1 Small 821.08 16-22984

"The literature of the Anglo-Saxon is rich in tributes to the dog, as becomes a race which beyond any other has understood and developed its four-footed companions," says the compiler. From this literature he has made a selection of poems based on the principle of human appeal. These are arranged in four groups: Puppyhood; The human relationship; The dog in action; The dog's hereafter.

"It will be more usable than Kinnicutt (Booklist 12:373, My '16) as it is not designed as a gift book."

- + A L A Bkl 13:203 F '17

"An alphabetic index of authors would have been a useful addition to the book, which has only a table of contents as a way-finder."

- Dial 61:481 N 30 '16 110w
- + Ind 88:465 D 11 '16 50w
- + Springfield Republican p7 N 25 '16 160w

CLAY, HENRY. Economics; an introduction for the general reader. *$1.25 Macmillan 330

"The author of this book anticipates the impatience that many will feel at the appearance of another single-volume treatise on economics. His apology is twofold. In the first place, existing introductions are for university students and it is important that the general reader perceive the bearing of economics on political and social problems. Secondly, existing introductions give too little attention to the most important part of the subject: namely, the political and ethical aspects of the economic organization. . . . In his later chapters, treating of the state and economic organization and of wealth and welfare, there is a keen and vital discussion of fundamental principles and the assumptions of the present economic organization. . . . We have a radical protest from an economic point of view against much which is commonly taken for granted."—Am Econ R

"Does the book set forth clearly for the general reader, in untechnical terms, economic truth with more success than previous works? The answer seems to the reviewer to be clearly in the affirmative, so far as the greater part of the book is concerned. Even by one who has been teaching economics for a quarter century the chapters dealing with production, speculation, competition, combination, money, banking, foreign trade and exchange, unemployment, are found fresh, clear, and seemingly well suited to the general reader." H. E. Mills

- + Am Econ R 6:878 D '16 780w

"From several points of view, of quite unusual interest and value. . . . We welcome the book as a departure from the old academic treatise. Its concluding chapters bring out clearly to the thoughtful reader the two principles which we have endeavoured to express in this article—that wealth is merely a means to welfare, and that the labourer in industry has value as a human personality."

- + Ath p469 O '16 750w
- + Ind 88:76 O 9 '16 50w

"Mr. Clay has written a meritorious, in many ways an excellent, book; but, though his style is good and his reasoning clear, he has neither the elevated clarity of Bagehot nor the racy charm of Mr. Hartley Withers. . . . The book, in fact, though in many ways an excellent elementary treatise on economics, is essentially academic. . . . May we add that the absence of an index is not the criterion of popularity?" A. L.

- + Nature 97:361 Je 29 '16 240w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:106 Jl '16
- + Sat R 122:256 S 9 '16 620w

CLAY, PAUL. Sound investing. $2 Moody magazine & bk. co. 332.6 16-1721

"'Sound investing' is issued for a purpose entirely practical, in that its aim is to 'offer directions to the uninitiated, to enlarge the understanding of the small investor and to assist the experienced buyer of securities.' . . . In 'Sound investing' the experienced author has reduced investing to as exact a science as possible, in that he divides investors into many classes—stock and bond dealers, professional men, salaried people, clerks and laborers, women and dependents, etc. . . . Only a small part of the handy-sized volume is given over to advice, the greater part being broadly descriptive of each important class of security."—Springfield Republican

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

"Several chapters of Mr. Clay's book already need revision. He can hardly be held accountable for the fact that several of his frequent lists of securities with their 'yields' need radical amendment; such is the penalty of writing in terms of current or timely treatment. . . . Perhaps the most valuable section of the book is the fourth and last in which sensible suggestions are made as to the choice of a bond house, how and when to buy and sell, the anatomy of a railroad report, a short cut for obtaining bond 'yields,' and the feasibility of successful speculation. Mr. Clay has crowded a great amount of information into a small book. It is simple and for the most part sensible." A. W. Atwood

+ Am Econ R 6:371 Je '16 610w

"Distinguished by its clearness and its emphasis of the truth that the average person needs expert advice for all investments."

+ A L A Bkl 12:404 Je '16

"A practical manual."

+ R of Rs 53:380 Mr '16 40w

"Written primarily for the pages of a conservative, standard, investors' service, the facts and advice herein contained can be relied on."

+ Springfield Republican p7 My 11 '16 330w

CLEGHORN, SARAH NORCLIFFE. Spinster; a novel wherein a nineteenth century girl finds her place in the twentieth. *$1.35 (1½c) Holt 16-9069

The woman who does not marry but who finds compensations and makes a place for herself in the complex life of this country is as new a figure in fiction as she is in fact. Miss Cleghorn tells the story of Ellen Graham who very early learned that she did not attract "beaus." She is a sensitive, earnest little girl who flees in terror from a "tarantula" in the pasture and then turns about and compels herself to go back to find and kill it. She wins a school debate and then returns the gold medal she has won so proudly when later evidence convinces her that her arguments in favor of vivisection were false. These incidents are characteristic of Ellen's whole life. She spends one year at Radcliffe, has one slight love affair that comes to nothing and later is drawn into the suffrage and the socialist movements.

A L A Bkl 12:428 Je '16

"One reader at least, to whom anti-vivisection is a word and socialism an impossible dream, has found this story absorbing and satisfying for its clear human quality and its unforced sincerity of matter and manner." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:419 Je '16 650w

"Intensely modern in spirit, and filled with the throb of the struggle undergone by the modern woman. . . . Miss Cleghorn herself lives among the Vermont mountains so that she has been able to impart to us very realistic descriptions of the scenery of the Vermont village, as well as of the effect which the beauty of the landscape had upon a sensitive beauty-loving child. She has written straight from the shoulder in her picturing of the hopes and disappointments of college life." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p10 Ap 22 '16 1500w

+ Ind 86:184 My 1 '16 70w

"Many a middle-aged woman of to-day will see her own development mirrored in Ellen's struggle to find herself and her place in the world, a struggle all the more interesting because entirely devoid of those upheavals and abnormalities of the 'femme incomprise de nos jours' with which we have become wearily familiar."

+ Nation 103:38 Jl 13 '16 120w

"Its evident earnestness and honesty and the truthfulness of Ellen's portrait makes 'The spinster' a novel deserving of praise."

+ N Y Times 21:175 Ap 23 '16 500w

"No better picture of rural New England twenty-five years ago can be found than that given in the first half of 'The spinster.'"

+ R of Rs 53:759 Je '16 150w

"The story is much out of the ordinary, and is an interesting addition to the class of fiction dealing with the problems confronting women."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 250w

Wis Lib Bull 12:227 My '16 40w

CLEGHORN, SARAH NORCLIFFE, and FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD) (MRS. JOHN R. FISHER). Fellow captains. *$1.25 Holt 131 16-23239

A book of wise and homely philosophy for the guidance of everyday life worked out by two women who are friends and neighbors. How to conquer little worries, how to put one's self to sleep at night, how to train the subconscious self to wake one up in the morning in a happy frame of mind—these are the matters that form its substance. A collection of verses by Miss Cleghorn which she uses as recipes in overcoming every day trials and cares, and a collection of quotations, compiled by Mrs. Fisher to the same end, are given at the close.

"Intimate, some may think the book sentimental, but the sentiment is wholesome."

+ A L A Bkl 13:197 F '17

Reviewed by A. S. Seltzer

+ N Y Call p14 N 26 '16 360w

+ N Y Times 22:24 Ja 21 '17 300w

Reviewed by Doris Webb

+ Pub W 90:1418 O 21 '16 400w

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 22 '16 680w

CLELAND, HERDMAN FITZGERALD. Geology, physical and historical. il *$3.50 Am. bk. 550 16-6177

"This new textbook enters the field of general geology, a field already fairly well covered by a number of excellent books. . . . The book occupies in its scope a middle ground among the books on the subject, being more ambitious than some and more modest than others. It will be used properly as a textbook in first courses in general geology in colleges and universities, where the students are at least fairly well prepared and somewhat mature. . . . The author of the book seems to be more at home in Part 2, 'Historical geology,' than in Part 1, dealing with physical geology. . . . The best part of the book is that dealing with life."—J Geol

"The first thing that strikes one on opening Cleland's 'Geology' is its attractiveness."

+ Ind 87:238 Ag 14 '16 50w

"Perhaps the greatest fault of the book has to do with order. The author has seen fit to exclude separate chapters on lakes, sedimentary rocks, and diastrophism, and to scatter these important subjects through other chapters. The result is disorganization. . . . On the whole the book shows an excellent attitude toward unsettled and controversial questions. . . . The book would be of much greater value as a work of reference if more care had been taken with sources. As in the case of any such work, Professor Cleland's book has its good points and its points of weakness, in which the good points outnumber and outweigh those of the opposite character." A. C. T.

+ J Geol 24:720 O '16 1500w

"Professor Cleland's style is clear, and he has certainly succeeded in turning out a readable and useful work. If he had adopted a plan like the one outlined, his product, written with the tact and skill here evidenced, would have specially challenged the attention of all teachers of geology, and he would not have come so near to duplicating several other sound textbooks of recent publication. A few debatable points may be noted."

+ Nation 102:sup503 My 4 '16 950w

CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE (MARK TWAIN, pseud.). Mysterious stranger. il $2 (5½c) Harper 16-22053

All of the pessimistic reflections regarding the human race and its destiny that made dark the later years of Mark Twain's life are summed up in this story. The time of the story is 1590, the scene a little village in Austria. The leading characters are three boys, three of Mark Twain's very human boys. To them appears the mysterious stranger, a youth not much older than themselves who announces himself as Satan, not the great prince of evil himself, but his nephew. Thru the eyes of this fascinating person, the boys are taught to see life as it is, a pitiable thing in which free will is a delusion and happiness a dream. But in the end it appears that Satan himself is a dream: "I am perishing already—I am passing away. . . . I have revealed you to yourself and set you free. Dream other dreams, and better!"

"Appeared in Harper's magazine."

A L A Bkl 13:220 F '17

Dial 61:479 N 30 '16 120w

+ Ind 88:464 D 11 '16 80w

+ Lit D 54:83 Ja 13 '17 280w

"His passion of hatred for oppression and unreason was never more cuttingly phrased than in this posthumous volume. The intensity of his vision of evil has subdued and darkened his laughter—has given it a note almost like despair; it is the laughter of an often-outraged believer in liberty, democracy, and loving-kindness."

Nation 103:588 D 21 '16 1200w

"This is the sort of thing that comes straight from the soul of America. It is national in the sense that Tolstoy and Dostoevsky are national; it interprets the simplicity, the humanitarian aspirations, the reverence for the humble, the impatience of formalism, hard-headed distrust of authority, the resolute sensitiveness, that have found a thousand cruder expressions on this continent in the last year. Those who have angrily shouted their doubts of America's intrinsic honor should go back and look in their Mark Twain. It is a very real honor they will find there." G: Soule

+ New Repub 9:sup8 N 18 '16 1400w

"It is difficult to imagine a message carrying a grimmer credo of despair, disillusion and contempt for human existence. . . . As for the book itself, the method of delivery, it is an excellent piece of literature."

+ N Y Times 21:453 O 29 '16 1200w

Reviewed by Doris Webb

+ Pub W 90:1405 O 21 '16 700w

"The book is beautifully illustrated in color by N. C. Wyeth."

R of Rs 54:678 D '16 200w

Springfield Republican p8 D 12 '16 700w

CLEMENTS, PAUL HENRY. Boxer rebellion; a political and diplomatic review. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) *$2.50 Longmans 951 15-24568

"In this monograph Mr. Clements has reviewed the antecedents, the causes, the international complications, and the methods and terms of settlement which attended the Boxer uprising. The work is based almost entirely upon original materials, especially British 'Blue books,' United States foreign relations, and treaty texts. . . . Beginning with a short sketch of the early relations between the western countries and China, and having briefly reviewed the activities which marked the 'scramble for concessions from 1895 to 1898,' the author proceeds to the main task: a detailed account and analysis of the forces and movements, both internal and external, which marked the years 1898-1901 and resulted in the Peace protocol of September 7, 1901."—Am Hist R

"It might be urged by way of criticism that the author has paid too little attention to secondary accounts. The references are very complete. The bibliography is unusually well selected and satisfactory. The book is well indexed—would that the same could be said of every such study. This monograph will be useful to students of modern history and contemporary politics, and it is to be hoped that its practical value and possible lesson to statesmen will not be overlooked." S. K. Hornbeck

+ — Am Hist R 21:601 Ap '16 580w

"In his analysis of English and American diplomatic documents relating to the revolt (he does not appear to have consulted the French and German) Dr. Clements displays the industry of the scholar without much of the amplitude of the historian. He includes the revealing volume, 'China under the Empress Dowager,' by Bland and Backhouse, in his bibliography, but the significance of that remarkable account of China's great mistress does not seem to have impressed him."

+ — Nation 102:143 F 3 '16 830w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 Jl '16

CLEVELAND, CATHARINE CAROLINE. Great revival in the West, 1797-1805. *$1 (2c) Univ. of Chicago press 269 16-11053

A study of a religious revival that swept over Kentucky and Ohio and some of the surrounding territory early in the nineteenth century. Some of its manifestations were curious in the extreme and to explain them in the light of modern psychology is one of the author's purposes. William E. Dodd, of the University of Chicago, says in an introduction, "The author presents the best, and I believe, the only scientific account of this important movement." The work begins with an account of conditions in the West at that time, a knowledge of which is necessary to any understanding of what follows. The other chapters then take up: The revival leaders: their teachings and methods; The spread of the revival and its culmination; Phenomena of the revival; The results of the revival. A number of interesting original documents are reprinted in appendixes, and there is a bibliography of sources.

"What is commonly known as the Kentucky revival is here presented for the first time in clear and consistent form. The book is well arranged. . . . The author misses the significance of the rationalism of that day. The sinister side of revivalism is neglected in the chapter on Results, while that on the Phenomena, psychologically considered, is quite inadequate. Some foreign authorities, like Carpenter and Maudsley, are antiquated. Other, native, writers are omitted." Woodbridge Riley

+ — Am Hist R 22:178 O '16 770w

Ind 86:555 Je 26 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:92 Je '16

N Y Times 21:312 Ag 6 '16 70w

+ R of Rs 54:121 Jl '16 100w

St Louis 15:6 Ja '17 40w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Jl 23 '16 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p527 N 2 '16 70w

CLEWELL, CLARENCE EDWARD. Handbook of machine shop electricity. il *$3 McGraw 621.3 16-20550

"This compact and concise encyclopedia of machine-shop electricity really can serve the engineering profession as a dictionary of industrial electricity. . . . The ground covered by the text includes industrial-machine nomenclature, circuits, fundamental laws, communication systems, power and lighting supply, measuring instruments and miscellaneous appliances."—Engin N

+ A L A Bkl 13:153 Ja '17

"The illustrations are all well chosen, and for the most part are particularly attractive."

+ Engin N 76:942 N 16 '16 90w

"Admirable practical manual."

+ Pittsburgh 21:572 D '16 3w

+ Pratt p19 Ja '17 40w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CLIFFORD, SIR HUGH CHARLES. Further side of silence. *$1.35 (1c) Doubleday 16-21130

A collection of stories of the Malay peninsula, all based on fact. The author says, "The stories, with a single exception—'The ghoul,' which reached me at second hand—are all relations of incidents in which I have had a part, or in which the principal actors have been familiarly known to me. They faithfully reproduce conditions of life as they existed in the Malayan peninsula before the white men took a hand in the government of the native states, or immediately after our coming—things as I knew them between 1883 and 1903."

+ A L A Bkl 13:175 Ja '17

"These stories have been compared with those of Mr. Conrad. . . . But while Mr. Conrad almost always looks on the Malay life from the outside, as a European, Sir Hugh comes very near to presenting it from the inside. . . . An immensely interesting collection of stories and well worth reading for other reasons than the natural love of exciting incident." E: E. Hale

+ Dial 61:353 N 2 '16 470w

+ Ind 88:466 D 11 '16 70w

+ Nation 103:488 N 23 '16 420w

"The drama that the Malayan peninsula wrote into Sir Hugh Clifford's life he has himself written out for the world, previously in 'Malayan monochromes,' 'Further India,' 'Studies in brown humanity,' and now in this volume under review. . . . So well done is it that a distant, obscure people, peering at us out of impenetrable jungle, become like familiars. . . . The art of the book is precisely in its power to give us the conviction of experience. And magnificently violent experience it is." F. H.

+ New Republic 8:302 O 21 '16 1250w

"Every one of the book's nineteen stories is interesting, written in a vivid, dramatic style, fresh and vigorous, but there are, of course, a few which predominate in one's memory over the rest."

+ N Y Times 21:439 O 22 '16 1100w

"The stories are many of them horrible, some almost too horrible to have been included in a popular book, but vividly interesting, perhaps through this very element of horror. The author has an unusual gift for atmosphere. . . . It is this gift that has enabled him to write unbelievable things convincingly, and more unbelievable things have rarely been put into a book."

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 19 '16 300w

CLODD, EDWARD. Memories. il *$3 (3¼c) Putnam 17-1647

This book of "Memories" by the author of "The childhood of the world" and "The story of creation" is devoted almost wholly to recollections of his friends. The first chapter is called A fragment of autobiography. Those following it bear the names of distinguished men and women: Grant Allen, Herbert Spencer, Mary Henrietta Kingslev, Edward Fitzgerald, Sir Alfred Comyn L'vill, George Meredith, George Gissing, W. Holman-Hunt, Andrew Lang, and others. "Two reasons prompt me to add a good many letters," he says, "(1) because they contain matters of varied interest with which the writers deal familiarly, and (2) because they give me warrant to say with York Powell: 'I have met men I am proud to think about.'"

"Exceptionally interesting. The book is illustrated by a number of good portraits."

+ Ath p483 O '16 60w

Boston Transcript p9 N 29 '16 900w

"One of the most engaging, most seductive books of its kind."

+ Dial 61:541 D 14 '16 180w

Reviewed by A. C. Haddon.

+ Nature 98:267 D 7 '16 450w

+ New Repub 9:359 Ja 27 '17 1400w

"Mr. Clodd was not by occupation a writer or scholar, but a successful banker, having entered the London joint stock bank in 1862—at 22; became its secretary in 1872, and retired at the age of 75 in 1915. . . . No portrait sketched in his large and varied gallery is more engaging than his own."

+ N Y Times 21:569 D 24 '16 1150w

"Several men whom outsiders did not understand—George Gissing, for instance, and Grant Allen—live in these pages in an intimate manner, full of charm. . . . But, frankly, the references to the family and private life of George Meredith here indulged in disagree with us."

+ Sat R 122:sup4 O 14 '16 1300w

"We must frankly admit our dislike of Mr. Clodd's attitude towards religion; he is so hostile as to become positively angry at the suggestion that Professor W. K. Clifford and George Gissing were reconciled to the church before they died. But a man with so many friends as he has had cannot be so cynical as he pretends, and it is noteworthy that, like Huxley, he is all for the diligent reading and study of the Bible."

+ Spec 117:sup529 N 4 '16 2750w

"Opposition to religion will seem to most readers the only unnamable feature of a book abounding in charm. . . . The lesson of such a book is—if a book that exists primarily to preserve for us the charm of worthy men and women can be said to possess a lesson—the value of sincerity and principle in the intellectual life."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 31 '16 1250w

"With its stories, its letters, its unpublished verses by eminent hands, its lively vigour and varied field, the whole book is capital entertainment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p462 S 28 '16 780w

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR. Studies in gardening; with preface and notes by Mrs. Francis King. *$2 (2c) Scribner 716 16-23432

A book of practical papers on gardening, written with the light touch and the delicate humor of a true essayist. Mrs. King in her introduction comments on both these aspects of the book, saying of the practical side that certain of the chapters should be read before every garden club in America, naming particularly: "The theory of garden design," "Common sense in gardening," "The right use of annuals," "The problem of the herbaceous border," and "The house and the garden." The book is an English work, made up of chapters reprinted from the Times, but Mrs. King's notes serve to adapt it to American conditions.

"Mrs. King's preface is a fine kindler of horticultural enthusiasm."

+ Dial 61:543 D 14 '16 170w

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR. Ultimate belief. *$1 Dutton 170.7 16-15073

"According to Mr. Brock, the ultimate beliefs are three: Belief in morality; Belief in truth; Belief in beauty. It is the author's conviction that goodness, truth, and beauty are ends in themselves; that they are not to be sought for some ulterior purpose, but for their own sake. . . . And he insists that this ultimate faith in goodness, truth, and beauty ought to dominate our system of education, else the teaching of morality becomes mere teaching of rules of conduct, the teaching of truth the mere teaching of traditional dogma, and the teaching of beauty the mere teaching of methods for producing sensuous pleasure." (Outlook) The author is an Englishman whose essays published in the London Times have attracted much attention during the progress of the war.

A L A Bkl 13:197 F '17

+ Ath p581 D '16 30w

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 11 '16 310w

"The merit of the book does not lie in an original theory of value, but in acute comments on education. . . . The philosophical foundation of the book is adequate to its purpose. Its tone is modest; its thought is not daring, but its commonsense is sound." T. S. Eliot

+ Int J Ethics 27:127 O '16 390w

"Mr. Clutton-Brock has already written two little books on the war which have defined, more clearly than anything else, the moral issue between England and Germany as it appears to a mind of exquisite delicacy of perception. What he has done in this new volume is to set forth with an equally distinguished clarity his attitude to the general problem of the universe. He has done it in a special fashion that he may bring home to English educators the way in which moral and spiritual value may best be taught in English schools. . . . That is why I doubt whether Mr. Clutton-Brock's search for a philosophy of education points in the right direction. The problem, after all, is very like that of politics: we can not write our measures save in terms of men."

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR—Continued

+ — New Repub 8:148 S 9 '16 950w

"Mr. Brock's tenets are admirable, and much is probable in his theories; but he does not explain clearly how to go about a reconstruction of the processes of education."

+ — N Y Times 21:446 O 22 '16 830w

Reviewed by Lyman Abbott

+ Outlook 113:947 Ag 23 '16 1900w

"We think Mr. Clutton-Brock's constant allusions to the enemy form something of a blot upon an otherwise deeply interesting and entirely reasonable book."

+ — Spec 117:sup530 N 4 '16 1000w

"A. Clutton-Brock is a member of the Times [London] staff. . . . While this book will not convince all readers it will gain a wide and earnest hearing by its intellectual penetration, its fine enthusiasm and its perfect limpidity of expression. . . . The insight which he brings to his discussion of the problems of adolescence should be a real help to educators."

+ Springfd Republican p6 J1 25 '16 1250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p313 J1 6 '16 5300w

COATES, MRS. FLORENCE (EARLE). Poems.

2 2v *$2.50 Houghton 811 17-268
The poems of Mrs. Coates have been collected from magazines and from the various small volumes in which they have appeared. They fill two volumes, beautifully printed and attractively bound. "The unconquered air and other poems," published in 1912, and "Lyrics of life," published in 1909, are among the earlier volumes from which poems are taken for this collection.

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Fibble, D. D.

il *$1.20 (2½c) Doran 16-22854
When the father of one of the boys suggested that the new organization being perfected by the Reverend Doctor Fibble be known as the "Young nuts of America," Dr. Fibble assented to the idea gladly, accepting for himself the position of Chief Nut. What more appropriate, thought the young assistant curate, than this suggestion "of the opening of the burs, of the descent of autumn on the vernal forest, of the rich meatiness of the kernel." The first section of the book has to do with the adventures of the "Young nuts" and their leader on a camping expedition. The second relates the experiences of Dr. Fibble in the war zone where he found himself at the outbreak of hostilities in charge of a party of young ladies. The third gives extracts from his diary while teaching in a girls' school.

"Appeared in the Saturday Evening Post."

A L A Bkl 13:220 F '17

"Mr. Cobb begins to show signs of having overworked his humorous vein, but there is no reason to question that he still has a large and devoted following of readers."

Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '16 190w

"The drawing of Fibble exaggerates his type and he is involved, arbitrarily, in situations in which no living Fibble would ever have involved himself. But the book is funny, with the dry humor best calculated to tickle the fancy of the average American."

+ Ind 88:466 D 11 '16 70w

"The book is going to be given away many times this Christmas. Mr. Cobb has had some real fun in writing it, and to read it is to keep chuckling for every page that you turn."

+ N Y Times 21:480 N 12 '16 920w

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 28 '16 310w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Local color.

*$1.35 (1c) Doran

16-2285J

Ten of Irvin Cobb's short stories in serious vein are included in this volume. The first should be read by those interested in prison reform. It is the story of Felix Looms, a novelist, who went to prison to get "local color." Not content to devote one week, or even one year, to his experiment, he bunglingly attempted to pick a pocket and had himself sent up for three years. The story tells of the effect on the man's character of three years spent in absorbing the local color of Sing Sing. The other stories are: Field of honor; The smart Aleck; Blacker than sin; The eyes of the world; The great auk; First Corinthians; Chap xiii, v. 4; Enter the villain; Persona au gratin; Smooth crossing.

"More interesting for character delineation than for the plot. Several have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post."

+ A L A Bkl 13:220 F '17

"The author's pictures of American local color suggest a great deal that is not directly painted in. They are something more than entertaining."

+ Dial 61:538 D 14 '16 250w

+ Nation 104:19 Ja 4 '17 260w

"The truth that Mr. Cobb is a master in the art of telling a story is borne in upon you more forcibly than before in this particular collection. There is not one without excellence."

+ N Y Times 21:480 N 12 '16 250w

"Local color" is not quite convincing. . . . One cannot help feeling in reading the book that Mr. Cobb, one of the elect though he may be, is writing against space."

+ — Springfield Republican p6 D 28 '16 250w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Old Judge Priest.

*$1.25 (1c) Doran 16-9778

The characteristic thing about these stories is the way they have of bringing the reader just to the point of tears and then saving his self-respect by pulling him back again with a touch of the humor that is as ancient and universal as grief. Judge Priest is a Kentuckian, remembered by all readers of "Back home," a homely, shrewd and loveable figure, typical of his state and of the "Old South," and not at all resembling the conventional stock figure of the southerner. The stories, some if not all of which have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, are: The Lord provides; A blending of the parables; Judge Priest comes back, A chapter from the life of an ant; Sergeant Jimmy Bagby's feet; According to the code; Forrest's last charge; Double-barrelled justice; A beautiful evening.

A L A Bkl 12:428 Je '16

+ Ath p479 O '16 50w

"Judge Priest is really a person of whom we feel sure, whom we should recognise if we met him in the flesh, for whom we feel affection, as we have felt affection for Colonel Carter, and Dr. Lavendar,—and the Vicar of Wakefield, for that matter." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:536 J1 '16 330w

"The South and its people, old Judge Priest's fellow townsmen, are very real to us—so real that we catch ourselves checking by this book, all unconsciously, the stories which other writers have written about the South."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '16 160w

"Taken in large doses, however, Mr. Cobb's easy journalistic style does grow wearisome."

+ — Ind 86:405 Je 5 '16 50w

"It is useless to speak of any one story when all are so good, but there is a special charm in 'The Lord provides,' and again in 'A blending of the parables.' One is made better for having known Judge Priest."

+ Lit D 52:1468 My 20 '16 230w

"The stories are rather long short stories, and for the most part neatly 'plotted' in order to provide the emotional jolt towards the end which magazines now require. The cleverest of them in this respect is 'The life of an ant.'"

This writer has a true style, a way of saying things which expresses himself."

+ Nation 102:595 Je 1 '16 500w

"Mr. Cobb has taken a situation which any handling other than the deftest and most tender would render merely silly and mawkish, and made from it by sheer force of understanding and artistry an exquisite piece of fiction, sound and appealing, and intensely human."

+ N Y Times 21:182 Ap 30 '16 570w

"The atmosphere of kindness and homely pleasantries pervades the book." Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 89:1318 Ap 15 '16 410w

+ R of Rs 53:760 Je '16 40w

"The tales are rather longer than is generally found in a volume of individual stories, but are not too lengthy to mar in the least the reader's absorbed pleasure in each."

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 190w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 O 12 '16 50w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:272 Je '16 50w

COE, GEORGE ALBERT. Psychology of religion. (Handbooks of ethics and religion) *$1.50 (1½c) Univ. of Chicago press 201 17-212

"This work is intended primarily as a handbook for beginners in the psychological analysis of religion. The foremost concern, therefore, has been to make clear the nature of the problems, the kinds of data, the methods of research, and the achieved results." (Preface) After four preliminary chapters treating of religion as an object of psychological study and of methods of psychological analysis, the author considers: Racial beginnings in religion; The genesis of the idea of God; Religion and the religions; Religion as group conduct; Religion as individual conduct; Conversion; Mental traits of religious leaders; Religion and the subconscious, etc. The author is a professor in Union theological seminary, New York city.

"The arrangement of the materials is convenient and clear; it has an abundance of notes and references; there are an alphabetical and a topical bibliography, and there is a good index. For the purpose intended, it is one of the best books of its kind published." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ja 17 '17 840w

COESTER, ALFRED LESTER. Literary history of Spanish America. *$2.50 (2c) Macmillan 860 16-18492

While it cannot be claimed that the Spanish-Americans have a literature they do have literary productions which may be regarded "not as models but as facts, classified as the expression of their social life during three periods, the colonial epoch, the struggle for freedom, and the independent existence of the several republics." The writer holds to the thread of social and political evolution with perhaps more emphasis on the political development. The study is offered also as a guide to better acquaintance with the mentality of the Spanish-American.

"The first comprehensive book on the subject."

+ A L A Bkl 13:111 D '16

"Dr. Coester essayed an extensive task, and would have done better had he chosen a few of the better authors and devoted more space to them. As it is, the reader is apt to be bewildered by the endless succession of names. The work will be found a valuable handbook by anyone wishing an introduction to Spanish-American authors."

+ Cath World 104:389 D '16 520w

N Y Br Lib News 3:163 N '16

"The presentation of the subject is admirable. There is a good working bibliography and a satisfactory index."

+ Special Libraries 7:163 N '16 240w

"Brazil as a Portuguese-speaking country is omitted."

+ Spec 118:24 Ja 6 '17 110w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p575 N 30 '16 250w

COHEN, JULIUS HENRY. Law and order in industry; five years' experience. *$1.50 (3c) Macmillan 331.8 16-4424

A discussion of the protocol, or trade agreement, entered into by the employers and employees in the cloak and suit industry of New York at the close of the strike in 1910. It has preserved peace for five years and has been copied in other branches of the clothing trade in New York and Chicago. The author was counsel for the employers and was instrumental, with Louis Brandeis, Meyer London, and others in bringing about the adjustment. His book traces the developments in the clothing trade from 1907 onward. The text of the protocol and other matters relating to it are given in appendices. There is no index.

Reviewed by N. I. Stone

+ — Am Econ R 6:664 S '16 1150w

"Fair-minded and authoritative."

+ Am J Soc 22:118 Jl '16 540w

+ A L A Bkl 13:59 N '16

"The chief interest of the book to students of trade agreements will be found, therefore, in Mr. Cohen's argument in favor of judicial determination as a means of settling trade questions." G. E. Barnett

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:377 My '16 260w

"The protocol—the arrangement for industrial peace in the cloak and suit industry of New York city—was discontinued in the first week in March. This volume discusses this subject and is consequently exceptionally timely." Alexander Fleisher

+ Ann Am Acad 65:314 My '16 270w

"The peace protocol, in our judgment, is the longest step yet taken in the United States toward the goal of industrial peace, and which can be compared in industrial significance only with the Compulsory arbitration law of New Zealand and the Compulsory investigation act of Canada. Mr. Cohen has not only given us a history and philosophy of the protocol, but he offers a constructive plan for the enlargement of it scope that is worth the serious attention of economists and statesmen. His facts are trustworthy, his statements of controversial questions impartial and his inferences in the main sound."

+ Ind 85:390 Mr 13 '16 650w

"It cannot be called authoritative, because, in a clash of interests like this, the lawyer for one side cannot speak for the other. Yet I do not imply that the book is not authentic. It is admirable in its documentary fulness, in its evident candor and appreciation of the other side, in its effort to state the case of the latter as well as the author's, in its rational acknowledgment that the author may possibly not have drawn all his inferences correctly. I know of no other equally valuable contribution on the subject of collective bargaining." J. R. Commons

+ J. Pol Econ 24:611 Je '16 1050w

"The interest in his work lies almost entirely in the view which he presents as to the proper basis for collective agreements. According to this view a large part of the questions which present themselves in the relations of employer and employee cannot be settled by agreement, but must be determined by quasi-judicial proceedings."

+ Nation 102:sup498 My 4 '16 500w

"He writes with learning, and sympathy for both industrial and social progress."

+ N Y Times 21:137 Ap 9 '16 600w

"A book written from the experience of a lawyer who has been active in the development of the collective agreement. His knowledge of his subject and his ability to present it are beyond question. His viewpoint is fruitful of suggestion, but his reader must be wary of his conclusions and of the completeness of his exposition." F. H. Streightoff

+ — Pol Sci Q 26:471 S '16 2000w

+ R of Rs 53:507 Ap '16 80w

+ Springfield Republican p6 Jl 14 '16 300w

"Lawyer for the employers though he is, he definitely ranks himself on the side, not of the man of business who regards the problems only

COHEN, JULIUS HENRY—Continued
as employers' problems, but on that of the man of vision who sees the inevitable approach of the industrial democracy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Ap
27 '16 390w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD. Labor in war time. *$1 Macmillan 331
(Eng ed War15-198)

"The aim of this book is to give a brief account of the manner in which the war has affected English labor and of the industrial problem to which it has given rise. The author maintains as a general principle that it is the duty of labor during a war which threatens the national security to come to the country's aid.
... On the other hand, labor must see to it that the status quo is maintained between labor and capital. Accordingly, it must resist all attempts to weaken the position of the laborer.
In the light of this principle, the author discusses the action of the English government with reference to unemployment, the relief of distress, cost of living, wage movements, the organization of industry, woman and child labor. The book closes with the passage of the munitions act."—Am Econ R

"At almost every point the government is criticised for giving too little consideration to the rightful claims of labor. But despite its strongly partisan tone, the book is far the best which has appeared on the subject." G. E. B.
+ Am Econ R 6:147 Mr '16 210w

"Will remain a valuable historical source and should be a warning to organized labour."
F. W. S. Browne

+ Int J Ethics 26:432 Ap '16 70w

COLE, MRS. MABEL (COOK), comp. Philippine folk tales. il *$1.25 (2½c) McClurg 398
16-22947

In company with her husband, an ethnologist in the service of the Field museum of natural history, Chicago, the author spent four years among the wild tribes of the Philippines. She says, "During this time we frequently heard these stories, either related by the people in their homes and around the camp fires or chanted by the pagan priests in communion with the spirits. ... I have endeavored to select typical tales from tribes widely separated and varying in culture from savagery to a rather high degree of development. The stories are therefore divided into five groups, as follows: Tinguyan, Igorot, the wild tribes of Mindanao, Moro, and Christian."

COLE, REX VICAT. Artistic anatomy of trees, their structure and treatment in painting.
(New art lib.) il *$1.75 Lippincott 758
A15-2469

"The author begins with trees as painted by the masters from Bellini to Alfred East and Arthur Rackham. He then discusses and illustrates to perfection the appearance of trees in nature—as seen against the sky, as balanced, as affected by environment, prevailing wind, accident, old age. Every detail—branch, twig, bud, leaf, flower, fruit—is treated from the point of view of the lover of trees who sees with the informal eye of a trained artist." (School Arts Magazine) The book is intended for the use of art students. The author says, "It has been my aim to give help of the same kind as Pollock has done in dealing with the forms of water in his charming book 'Light and water.'"
It is beautifully illustrated from the paintings of the masters and from drawings by Mr. Cole.
There is a bibliography of several pages and indexes to illustrations and texts.

A L A Bkl 12:327 Ap '16

"As with his drawings, so with his book.
Clarity and organization are not entirely wanting, but the volume leads one to think that when Mr. Cole had given as much detail as was proportionately fitting, he felt that his canvas, as it were, was not quite covered, so he added more detail, and extraneous. In fine, the book lacks that stylistic quality of a work of art which accepts and makes a virtue of its limitations."

+ — Ath 1915,2:248 O 9 650w

Cleveland p11 F '16 40w

"In this new manual, intended to meet the needs of beginners as well as more advanced students, the subject is handled in a systematic and lucid way which the novice with but an elementary knowledge of drawing and no knowledge of the structure of trees can follow with ease; while among those who pride themselves on considerable proficiency in drawing or painting trees there are few who will fail to derive some advantage from its contents."

+ Int Studio 57:146 D '15 290w

Pittsburgh 21:117 Mr '16

+ St Louis 14:398 N '16 10w

"Every page, text or plate, is a delight. A bibliography and several indices perfect the volume as a book of reference. The plates are instructive also in drawing for reproduction.
... In each case the skilful artist-author has selected the medium which would best display the particular beauty he desired to emphasize.
His book is simply in a class by itself, and likely to remain unrivalled for many a long day."

+ School Arts Magazine 15:442 F '16 220w

"Its outlook is too much that of the academy picture. The end of painting is regarded as faithful representations of nature disposed according to traditional rules of composition, rather than an emotional revelation of the soul of things.
It is for this reason, perhaps, that no mention is made of the wonderful tree painting of Puvis de Chavannes. ... The part devoted to the scientific aspect of the subject is minute and precise, and the author's illustrations, not only of the whole trees but of boughs, leaves, and flowers, are exact, and drawn with infinite labour and skill, and the keenest sense of the character and botanical aspect of the different trees he illustrates."

+ — Spec 115:627 N 6 '15 400w

COLEMAN, FREDERIC. From Mons to Ypres with General French. il *$1.50 (1½c) Dodd 940.91 16-10730

The author is an American who spent ten months with the British expeditionary force in France. He was attached to General French's headquarters during the retreat from Mons and was later with various cavalry brigades. He has written a personal account of those first months of the war, paying a tribute to the bravery of his fellow soldiers, English and French.
The book is very fully illustrated and provided with a folding map.

A L A Bkl 13:24 O '16

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 21 '16 80w

Ind 87:421 S 18 '16 170w

"Amid the welter of war books this demands and should obtain a place in all libraries."

+ Library Association Record 18:179 Ap
15 '16 50w

+ Lit D 53:754 S 23 '16 180w

"Singulantly vivid and interesting narrative."

+ Nation 103:402 O 26 '16 180w

+ N Y Times 21:285 J1 16 '16 330w

R of Rs 54:460 O '16 50w

+ St Louis 14:425 D '16 20w

Reviewed by the Earl of Cromer

+ Spec 116:630 My 20 '16 2250w

Springfield Republican p6 J1 27 '16 220w

"Here many readers will find for the first time that individual mention of regiments and men which was withheld while their exploits were still recent history."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p140 Mr
23 '16 450w

COLERIDGE, STEPHEN. Vivisection; a heartless science. *$1.25 (4c) Lane 179 16-19245

Four generations of Coleridges have protested against vivisection. The author of this book is carrying on the tradition of the man who believed that "he prayeth best who loveth best" all living things. Mr. Coleridge says, "Perhaps

I shall be told that I have no mandate to speak for the anti-vivisection cause, and in anticipation of that criticism I have not made any claim in this book to speak as anybody's representative. I speak in my own name and in my own behalf." He reviews the whole course of the vivisection and anti-vivisection controversy in England and answers the arguments in favor of the practice.

N Y Br Lib News 3:141 S '16

+ St Louis 15:6 Ja '17 20w

"Mr. Coleridge is a leading champion of the anti-vivisection cause and he here presents a reasoned indictment of the practice. He is a very able advocate, who generally gets the better of his opponent in a dialectical bout, and this book is written with great skill and force. But his personalities and accusations of bad faith against the vivisectors and the Home Office inspection make an unpleasant impression."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p244 My 25 '16 600w

COLLIER, PAUL STANLEY. Minimum wage legislation in Australasia. il Lyon 331.2 15-16324

This report is a reprint of appendix 8 to the fourth volume of the New York factory investigation report, 1915. It is based on government reports and official documents, not on personal observation in the Australasian states. The minimum wage systems of New Zealand, Victoria and New South Wales are studied in detail as representative of the various types of legislation. A fourth chapter is devoted to Wage legislation in other states of Australia and there is a chapter of Summary and conclusions. There is a bibliography of several pages and statistical tables, etc., are given in appendices.

"It furnishes the most complete account of the Australasian efforts to regulate wages and working conditions by means of compulsory arbitration courts and wages boards that has yet appeared in the English language. . . . I have called attention to these erroneous conclusions because they are just the mistakes which any student is likely to make who views such legislation from a distance. They do not detract from the general trustworthiness and high merits of the study which Mr. Collier has made. The monograph has an excellent summary and a good bibliography." M. B. Hammond

+ Am Econ R 6:408 Je '16 980w

J Pol Econ 24:736 Jl '16 110w

COLLIGAN, JAMES HAY. Eighteenth century nonconformity. *80c Longmans 274.2 A16-790

"'Eighteenth century nonconformity' deals succinctly in the short space of 140 pages with some of the chief topics which arise in connexion with the subject." (Eng Hist R) "The chapters on the nonconformist meetinghouses, the ministers of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches, the nonconformist academies, hymnology, the effect of the Wesleyan and Countess of Huntingdon movements, the older nonconformist bodies and the Church of England, form a notable contribution to the social history of England in the eighteenth century and also aid to an understanding of many of the political and social developments of the nineteenth century." (Pol Sci Q)

"As a brief summary of an interesting piece of ecclesiastical history the book has a distinct value. There is a good index, but a rather discouraging lack of references: even when direct citations are made that whet the appetite for more, no indication for the most part is given of the source quoted. By this and by other features the reader is often tempted to wish that the book had been planned on a larger scale and worked out with fuller detail, and sometimes with greater accuracy of statement."

W. H. F.

+ — Eng Hist R 31:186 Ja '16 300w

"Of peculiar value. It is based upon careful research in long-forgotten books and pamphlets and on much discriminating use of manuscript sources. It is divided into short chapters that tend to ease of reading; it is admirably written and is so serviceable that it can not fail to make an appeal to students of modern English history, even if they are not concerned with Antinomian and Arian controversies and care but little for questions of ecclesiastical polity."

+ Pol Sci Q 30:537 S '15 280w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Book of electricity. il *$1 Appleton 537.8 16-19676

A book on electricity for boys. The author's aim has been to encourage them to work things out for themselves and the title page says that the book was written to conform to the tests of the Boy scouts. Contents: State electricity; Current electricity; Magnetism; The Morse telegraph; The Bell telephone; How to make a spark coil; Things you should know about an electric current; Electric generators and motors; Electric lighting and heating; How to do electric wiring; It's easy to measure electricity; Useful information. Definitions of words and terms used are given at the end and there is an index.

+ A L A Bkl 13:226 F '17

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Short cuts in figures; to which is added many useful tables and formulas written so that he who runs may read. *$1 Clode, E: J. 511 16-23026

Quick and accurate methods of figuring are set forth in this book. The author says, "Any one who can do ordinary arithmetic can easily master the simple methods I have given to figure the right way as well as to use short cuts, and these when taken together are great savers of time and effort and, consequently, of money." Contents: What arithmetic is; Rapid addition; Rapid subtraction; Short cuts in multiplication; Short cuts in division; Short cuts in fractions; Extracting square and cube roots; Useful tables and formulas; Magic with figures.

COLLINS, FRANCIS ARNOLD. Camera man: his adventures in many fields; with practical suggestions for the amateur. il *$1.30 (2½c) Century 770 16-19677

Mr. Collins writes of the strenuous and adventurous life of the man who takes pictures, either for the movies, the newspapers or for scientific records. Some of his chapter titles will show the range of the book: "War stuff"; Mexican adventures; Aero-photography; The news photographer; Motion news pictures; The camera man at sea; Commercial photography; Government work; Scientific research. Three chapters at the end give some practical suggestions for the amateur.

+ A L A Bkl 13:207 F '17

"A very wonderful and very actual book." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:411 D '16 80w

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 27 '16 350w

"Popular and interesting. . . . The practical suggestions for the amateur mentioned in the sub-title are too slight to be of much value."

+ Cleveland p155 D '16 40w

+ Ind 88:331 N 20 '16 40w

+ Lit D 54:202 Ja 27 '17 100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:173 N '16

"No one can read 'The camera man'—if one ignores the rather excessive use of adjectives—without becoming intensely interested. The book should have a large sale."

+ N Y Times 21:375 S 24 '16 260w

Pratt p28 Ja '17

+ R of Rs 54:459 O '16 140w

St Louis 14:436 D '16

"A popular, well illustrated book, which will be very popular in libraries, specially with boys and men."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:452 D '16 70w

COLLISON, REV. WILLIAM HENRY. In the wake of the war canoe; with an introd. by the Lord Bishop of Derry. il $*1.75 (1½c) Dutton 277.11 16-10742

A record of Archdeacon Collison's forty years of evangelizing work among the Indian tribes of north-west British Columbia, including the head-hunting Haidas of the Queen Charlotte islands. The vessel in which Vancouver made his expedition to the island which now bears his name was called by the savages the war canoe. The missionaries who have gone there have followed in its wake; hence the title. The narrative sets forth in stirring fashion the perils that have been met in laying the foundation of truth and righteousness so necessary for the development that started up with the inrush of white population.

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 5 '16 580w

"It deserves a place among the famous records of its kind."

+ Dial 61:30 Je 22 '16 230w

+ Ind 88:552 D 25 '16 40w

"The narrative is straightforward. . . . The book is commended for its anthropological as well as its religious value."

+ Lit D 53:468 Ag 26 '16 300w

N Y Br Lib News 3:74 My '16

COLLMAN, SOPHIE MARIE. Tales from the Old world and the New. il $*1.50 (2½c) Stewart & Kidd 16-15664

Twenty stories for young people, drawn from the history and tradition of the old world and the new, with old world stories predominating. Among the titles are: The old road; a story of Washington's youth; Rosa Bonheur; John Flaxman's story of Troy; Sir Edwin and Sir Walter; The building of St. Owen; The story of Bertel; Marquette and the great river; Millet and his poor folk; Abe; a Lincoln story; St. Mark's shrine; Fairytale and the brothers Grimm. The illustrations are reproductions of great works of art.

+ Ind 88:404 D 4 '16 40w

+ Public Libraries 22:36 Ja '17 130w

"Nearly every chapter has an illustration of real value."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 140w

COLMER, FRANCIS. Shakespeare in time of war. $*1.35 Dutton 822.3

"Mr. Francis Colmer has compiled a book of quotations from Shakespeare's plays applicable to the present war. . . . It is not surprising to us, who regard Shakespeare as the universal advocate and the arch-interpreter of human passions, whether of his own time or any other, that his plays should be found to contain something appropriate to every phase of the present great struggle. What is a little surprising, and also very amusing, is the ingenuity with which Mr. Colmer has discovered phrases applicable to incidents of the war which are peculiar to our own day, and which at first sight it would have seemed impossible to fit with a suitable quotation."—Spec

"Mr. Colmer has compiled an ingenious book upon which he has expended an infinite amount of labor, and it is to be hoped that he will receive for it the reward of universal praise he deserves." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 25 '16 600w

+ N Y Times 21:354 S 10 '16 730w

"He has done his work with thoroughness and evident enjoyment, and also, we are glad to say, with humour."

+ Spec 116:782 Je 24 '16 2200w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 29 '16 230w

"We are inclined to wish that the book had been compiled by a German with the applications all the other way. Then we should have been much more securely amused by it. As it is we have an uneasy fear that it may amuse some German."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p282 Je 15 '16 530w

COLTER, ALICE MARGUERITE. Tumbleweed. il $*1.25 (3c) Bobbs 16-18908

Tumbleweed was a wind person. To know what a wind person is one must read the story and Tumbleweed herself had some difficulty in making it clear just what she meant by the term. But it is enough to say that like her namesake of the prairies she loved the wind and acknowledged a strange kinship with it. The story carries her thru her childhood and schooldays, and, after a short intermediate period, brings her to her wedding day.

"It is a pity that the structure of the tale should be so weak, for Tumbleweed herself is gracefully sketched, an airy little creature of dreams and fancies, yet withal an entirely natural young girl."

+ — N Y Times 21:527 N 26 '16 250w

COLUM, PADRAIC. King of Ireland's son. il $*2 (2½c) Holt 398 16-23241

At the turn of the road, the King of Ireland's son, who rode gaily about the world, with "his hound at his heel, his hawk on his wrist," came upon the gray old man who sat on a heap of stones playing cards with himself. And accepting the gray old man's challenge, he sat down with him for a game. In the first game luck was with the King of Ireland's son; so in the second; but with the third he lost and so fell into the power of the Enchanter of the Black Back-Lands. But the Enchanter of the Black Back-Lands had a daughter, Fedelma—. So begins the first of seven stories of Irish fairy lore, retold charmingly by the author and illustrated with delightful pictures and decorations by Willy Pogány.

"A book of uncommon beauty in form and content. . . . The remarkable thing about this writer, in contrast with many of his associates in the Irish revival, is his genuine simplicity." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:505 Ja '17 350w

"Mr. Colum is sufficiently versed in authentic Irish legend to prevent him in his own inventions from sinning against the underlying spirit of Irish romance. The book, which is charmingly illustrated by Willy Pogány, may be turned over with profit to children, yet parents will be tempted, after the 'children's hour,' to dip into it too."

+ Nation 103:519 N 30 '16 80w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Three plays. $*1.25 Little 822 16-22334

The three plays are, The fiddler's house, The land, and Thomas Muskerry. In two of them the theme is the land, and the instinctive Irish love for the soil is shown in conflict with other more, individualistic desires. One of them "The land" was written to celebrate the passage of the land act of 1903. The third play, "Thomas Muskerry," is the tragedy of an old man who longed to get away from his nagging, interfering family to a place of peace and quiet.

"The best of the three plays is 'The land'; but none of them shows marked power of characterization or technical skill." H. E. Woodbridge

Dial 61:462 N 30 '16 230w

+ R of Rs 54:566 N '16 170w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Wild earth, and other poems. $*1.25 Holt 821 16-22983

A collection of poems of peasant life was published under this title in Dublin in 1909. A note says that "while some of those poems are included in the present volume, poems of a different character have been added and the series of peasant poems has been made more complete."

+ N Y Times 21:509 N 26 '16 90w

"Synge's plays are mannered in comparison with these poems that, scorning artifice, dig dreams from the hearts of the humble."

+ R of Rs 54:675 D '16 80w

COLUM, PADRAIC, and O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH, eds. Poems of the Irish revolutionary brotherhood. *50c Small 821

16-19237

A collection of poems by Thomas MacDonagh, P. H. Pearse (Padraic MacPiarais), Joseph Mary Plunkett and Sir Roger Casement, the leaders of the recent revolt in Ireland. The introduction by Padraic Colum gives something of the lives of the first three of these men, and of their devotion to the ideal they had raised. A reading of the introduction and of the poems will help to a better understanding of the tragedy.

A L A Bkl 13:73 N '16

+ Cath World 103:825 S '16 310w

+ Ind 88:74 O 9 '16 150w

+ Lit D 53:86 J1 8 '16 320w

"There are two dominant qualities in these poems which give the key to the whole spiritual nature of the poets. There is the quality of combat, and there is also the quality of unswerving stedfastness to an ideal."

+ N Y Times 21:357 S 10 '16 570w

R of Rs 54:232 Ag '16 50w

COLWELL, HECTOR A., and RUSS, SIDNEY. Radium, X rays and the living cell, with physical introduction. il *$4 Macmillan 612.014 (Eng ed A16-383)

"Mr. Colwell and Dr. Russ have here collected, so far as can be judged, all the experiments that have been made by physiologists and others since Dr. Röntgen's discovery as to the effect of radio-activity on the living organism, and they have added an introduction or first-part, explaining in simple and untechnical language what radio-activity is."—Ath

"The present book, though commendably short, is full of matter and is well illustrated. The concise bibliography added at the foot of each chapter should make reference to the experiments summarized in it easy to the inquirer, and the whole work reflects much credit on its authors."

+ Ath 1915.2:422 D 4 1200w

"Of special interest to the medical profession, and also to the public, is the discussion of the effect of irradiation of cancerous cells. This subject receives full attention. . . . The authors have given us a book which cannot fail to appeal to the clinical radiologist and to the laboratory worker. Each chapter has received careful study in the writing, and provides food for thought and suggests scope for further investigation on the part of the reader. The book is well printed in clear type on good paper, and contains many excellent illustrations. There is an index of authors, as well as a full general index."

+ Nature 97:137 Ap 13 '16 1150w

COMFORT, WILL LEVINGTON. Child and country; a book of the younger generation. *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 818 16-10680

This book started out to be the story of the return of a city man to the country. Mr. Comfort bought land on the north shore of Lake Erie and established a home there. He intended in this book "to relate the adventure of home-making in the country, with its incidents of masonry, child and rose culture, and shore conservation," but as the work progressed it was child culture that assumed first place in its pages. An informal little school begun for the education of his own children attracted others, boys and girls and young men and women. Self expression and the unhampered growth of individual powers are the ideals of education as developed here. In the present school system the author finds true education in the kindergarten only. Another ideal upheld by the book is the ideal of good workmanship, and other phases of life and the art of living it are touched on with sincerity and reverence.

+ A L A Bkl 12:452 J1 '16

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:546 J1 '16 210w

+ Boston Transcript p22 J1 5 '16 1900w

"It is as a forward-looking, faith-fraught facing of life in this stock-taking year of 1916, not as the account of an educational experiment, that the book takes on its American meaning of human value."

+ Cleveland p109 Ag '16 80w (Reprinted from Life)

"Some of the essays written by the 'Little girl' have a charm as engaging as that of Pet Marjorie."

+ Ind 86:342 My 29 '16 80w

N Y Br Lib News 3:87 Je '16

"There is scarcely a page of this extraordinarily rich book which does not tempt to quotation. Its appeal will be rather for the few than for the many, but those who read it with understanding will welcome it warmly and hold it very dear."

+ N Y Times 21:177 Ap 23 '16 950w

"A book of great inspiration and one that gives solace and strength. Everyone who loves children and is interested in their growth and education should read this book."

+ R of Rs 53:757 Je '16 220w

"Continues, with modification, the theme outlined in 'Midstream.' His views, as expressed here, are novel, though based on commonsense. One cannot quote his observations because every page of the book cries aloud for quotation."

+ Springfield Republican p13 My 21 '16 400w

COMFORT, WILL LEVINGTON. Last ditch. *$1.35 (1½c) Doran 16-22902

The scene of Mr. Comfort's new story is China. The central character is Romney, an American who is drawn into the "Young China" movement. He is sent on a mission into the Gobi desert where he meets Anna Erivan, a Russian woman who profoundly influences him. The ideal that the story tries to express is summed up in the words: "We are almost at the end of the night of the world. The builders are coming in to take the places of those who have torn down with war and every other madness of self. These builders must be born of men and women—the new race—but of men and women who have learned what great love means."

"It is quite possible for one person to write two reviews of 'The last ditch.' . . . One of the somewhat absurd book without humor, the other of the unusual and vivid picture of an opulent Orient of scene and a glamorous Orient of thought and of emotion." W. A. M.

Boston Transcript p5 D 6 '16 1000w

"The very sights and sounds and smells of the East are in this book. It is all told in that glowing, colorful style, reminding one of some splendid fabric, rainbow-hued, threaded with gold, of which Mr. Comfort is now the master."

+ N Y Times 21:477 N 12 '16 1100w

"An interesting, many sided, but somewhat hectic story."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 10 '16 520w

COMMONS, JOHN ROGERS, and ANDREWS, JOHN BERTRAM. Principles of labor legislation; prepared in co-operation with the American bureau of industrial research. (Harper's citizens ser.) *$2 (1c) Harper 338.9 16-5319

The aim of the series to which this book belongs is to provide volumes "which will serve both as text-books for college and university class-room use, and as interesting and instructive treatises for the general reader." The aim of this book is to formulate the principles which underlie recent labor legislation. "It endeavors not so much to expound technical questions of legality as to sketch the historical background of the various labor problems, indicate the nature and extent of each, and describe the legislative remedies which have been applied." (Preface) Contents: The basis of labor law; Individual bargaining; Collective bargaining; The minimum wage; Hours of labor; Unemployment; Safety and health; Social insurance; Administration. There is a select critical bibliography of 24 pages, a table of cases cited, and an index.

COMMONS, J. R., and ANDREWS, J. B.—Cont

"It is properly comparable with such works as Pic's 'Lois ouvrières' and Frankenstein's 'Arbeitserschutz.' It differs, however, from these treatises in that it makes much less use of the comparative method. In the main, it gives attention to foreign legislation only when the particular kind of legislation has not been introduced in the United States or is in an experimental stage. . . . It is regrettable that the authors have not set forth more fully the conditions which the legislation is designed to remedy. . . . The most serious defect in the book, however, is the almost complete absence of clear and systematic statement of the principles on which labor legislation should rest. . . . The book will probably long remain the leading work on labor legislation, and it is certain to exercise a weighty influence on new legislation." G. E. Barnett

+ — Am Econ R 6:654 S '16 1500w

+ A L A Bkl 12:358 My '16

"Viewed as a summary of labor law the book is comprehensive and adequate, without going into wearisome detail, and as such will receive a hearty welcome." D. A. McCabe

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:411 My '16 630w

"The attitude of the authors is frankly progressive. They believe that there are many conditions in industry, detrimental to the workers, that can be remedied by legislation. But the book is practical throughout. . . . It should become a text-book for college classes. No other book so adequately covers the field with which this deals. Its sphere of usefulness, however, should be wider than this. It should appeal to the citizen who by it will be furnished with a guide to the mass of bills presented to each succeeding legislature. He will as a result of his reading be better able to judge what is valuable and what is practicable among the measures suggested." Alexander Fleisher

+ Ann Am Acad 65:314 My '16 500w

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 1 '16 450w

+ Dial 61:110 Ag '16 300w

+ Ind 86:342 My 29 '16 130w

"The title of the work may lead some to an expectation that they do not feel to be realized, since, if one looks in the volume for declarations of principles with black-letter clearness, he is doomed to disappointment. But what is given is the most important contribution to the subject of the fundamental basis and desirable development of labor legislation in its broader aspects that is available in the English language, and will probably continue to be such for a long time to come." L. D. Clark

+ — J Pol Econ 24:903 N '16 1450w

"Critical and constructive in character, the book is untechnical and easy to understand. It is written from the standpoint of the citizen and student rather than from that of the lawyer."

+ Lit D 52:1461 My 20 '16 400w

+ N Y Times 21:203 My 14 '16 980w

"Professor Commons has for many years given special attention to the administration of labor laws in the state of Wisconsin. His familiarity with the details of administration makes all the more valuable the conclusions that he has reached regarding the principles of labor laws in general."

+ R of Rs 53:507 Ap '16 160w

Springfield Republican p6 Jl 14 '16 300w

"One of the best features of this book is the emphasis placed upon administration of the labor laws."

+ Survey 36:460 Jl 29 '16 650w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:183 Ap '16 70w

COMSTOCK, MRS. HARRIET THERESA. Vin-dication. il $1.35 (1½c) Doubleday 16-5582

To the lonely Canadian valley beyond the Climbing Hills come a man and a woman, bringing with them a child. Mystery attaches to them from the first, and Sue Mandel scents it. With sure instinct she sees that the woman is not the child's mother. The man goes away, and sums of money are regularly sent for the child's care, but the woman dies, leaving him in Sue's hands. The money promises to come indefinitely and Sue, grasping an opportunity for her own child, a little girl, exchanges the two. Later the sums of money from their mysterious source cease to come and the two children are taken under the care of Dr. Hill, a big-hearted man with theories about heredity and environment. It is not until they have grown up to the borders of manhood and womanhood that the truth about them becomes known.

Reviewed by P. G. Hubert, jr.
Bookm 43:540 Jl '16 90w

"That it is not the 'real thing' is sufficiently evident to only a half-informed reader—but that is not to say that it is wholly poor. On the contrary, the author holds the interest throughout, developed her plot with considerable ingenuity, and—most essential—contrives to have it come out right in the end."

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Ap 12 '16 350w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ — Nation 102:520 My 11 '16 280w

"A number of melodramatic scenes carry on the improbable and poorly developed plot."

+ — N Y Times 21:137 Ap 9 '16 220w

+ — Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 230w

COMSTOCK, WILLIAM PHILLIPS, comp. Bungalows, camps and mountain houses. 2d ed, rev il $2 (22½c) Comstock 728 16-1483

"In this new edition a considerable number of illustrations have been added and only a small portion of those which appeared in the first edition are retained. The total number of designs is much increased. . . . The presentation of the subject matter has been improved and the designs group into three classes." (Preface) These three classes are Bungalows, Bungalows of cottage type, and Camps, lodges, log cabins. The introduction by William T. Comstock, contributed to the first edition is retained, and there is an added introductory article by C. S. Schermerhorn on Planning the bungalow. There are 80 designs and 200 illustrations.

+ — A L A Bkl 12:300 Mr '16

"In looking through the wealth of illustrations accompanying this little work, one is impressed with two sensations, that of pleasure to imagine that one can be a householder for a mere thousand dollars, and then a feeling of wonder that so much beauty and ugliness can be planned by different members of the same profession."

+ — Int Studio 57:sup28 N '15 290w

CONDÉ, BERTHA. Business of being a friend; with an introd. by R. C. Cabot. *$1.25 (4c) Houghton 177 16-15117

Out of her experience with girls the author, a Y. W. C. A. secretary, has written this book for girls. She writes of friendship seriously. "The business of being a friend," she says, "is one of the greatest of human responsibilities, for unselfish friendship is the surest way of interpreting God to others and unlocking the resources in human lives that were meant to be released for service."

"Reasonable, practical, trite at times to those who have scaled the heights, but it will meet the minds of the teen-age girls and other beginners in friendship."

+ — A L A Bkl 13:55 N '16

"Her words are not particularly unusual, but there is a time when aphorisms are more appealing than the most brilliant originality. In such an age her book will be deservedly influential."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 26 '16 180w

+ Dial 61:481 N 30 '16 150w

+ R of Rs 54:349 S '16 60w

St Louis 14:384 N '16 10w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CONE, HELEN GRAY. Chant of love for England, and other poems. *$1 Dutton 811
A16-761

"Most of Helen Gray Cone's new volume 'The chant of love for England,' has been published before in book form, but among the new poems are three born of the war: the title poem; the noble lines in memory of the sons of Mr. Dent, the publisher; and a splendid lyric, Soldiers of the light. The collection closes with the ode to Lincoln, which is worthy to stand with that small group of real poems to his memory."—Ind

+ Ath p72 F '16 100w

"It contains a selection of the poet's work covering practically her entire career. The volume is small, one hundred and three pages, and in them she has gathered the best of her work, showing what a rigorous and stern critic she has been with herself. The book presents her then with a kind of finality." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 26 '16 1650w

Reviewed by R. M. Alden

+ Dial 61:63 J1 15 '16 350w

+ Ind 85:430 Mr 20 '16 80w

N Y Br Lib News 3:24 F '16

"Perhaps it is not great poetry, but, then, very little current poetry is great. At any rate, it is firmly and finely fashioned and is unaffectedly sincere. 'The common street' has already found its permanent place in the anthologies."

+ N Y Times 21:150 Ap 16 '16 310w

"The poems 'Ivo of Chartres,' 'A resurrection,' and 'Abraham Lincoln,' establish their author in the front rank among those poets who have true spiritual vision."

+ R of Rs 53:375 Mr '16 90w

CONGDON, LEON ABEL. Fight for food. *$1.25
2 (5c) Lippincott 6143 16-20548

The story of the fight for pure food. The aim of the author, assistant chief food and drug inspector for the Kansas state board of health, has been to present the subject in simple and popular form. "So much has been published in our popular magazines tending toward the sensational," he says, "that it has become necessary to put the problem in its true light for the student, doctor, and consumer. All matter of sensational character has been eliminated as much as possible." Contents: The enforcement of the food and drugs act; The present status of the adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs; The æsthetic in adulterating foods; Food and drugs—their relation to the public health; Milk and its importance to the public health; The sanitary handling of foods in the home; Rural sanitation; Important phases of the food problem; The high cost of living and food economy; Law remedies applied to the high cost of living; Vital forces in our food; Flavor and the grading of food products; Added poisons and drugs in our foods.

"The information is sketchy but trustworthy and covers a wide ground."

+ A L A Bkl 13:154 Ja '17

+ N Y Times 21:539 D 3 '16 90w

R of Rs 55:221 F '17 40w

"The 'fight for food' is something on which Mr. Congdon certainly has a right to speak." Gertrude Seymour

+ Survey 37:53 O 14 '16 120w

CONGREVE, A. E. One maid cookery book. new ed *50c Dutton 6415

"Inexperienced housekeepers may learn considerable that is worth knowing from 'The one maid cookery book,' an English work. The author says it is a book of cookery, not a book of recipes, written specially to respond to the needs of gentle folk who have small establishments and only moderate incomes." (N Y Times) "The work contains hints concerning shopping and the general management of a kitchen, which beginners will find extremely useful." (Springfield Republican)

+ Ind 88:127 O 16 '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:359 S 10 '16 50w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 110w

CONNOLLY, JAMES BRENDAN. Head winds. il *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 16-17654

Eight short stories reprinted from magazines. One of them, "The trawler," won well-deserved distinction as a prize story in Collier's. Another great story of the sea and of the heritage an Irish family brought to America is "Mother Machree." The other stories are "The adoption," a tale of the fishing fleets, "Chavero" and "Colors!" two stories with a bearing on American intervention in Mexico, "Down river," a story of the Mississippi, and "The camera man," a tale of adventure in Mexico.

+ A L A Bkl 13:123 D '16

"They are told with great technical skill, and yet dare have a character of their own, instead of following slavishly that O. Henry formula which now threatens to stultify American short-story writing." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:649 F '17 300w

+ Cleveland p126 N '16 50w

"Tales of adventure by land and sea, stirring, swift-moving, written in a clear and vigorous style."

+ N Y Times 21:374 S 24 '16 650w

"The trawler' and 'Mother Machree' rank with the most dramatic of modern sea stories."

+ Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 580w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 20w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Within the tides. *$1.35 (2c) Doubleday 16-1892

"Four short stories of varying length go to the making of Mr. Conrad's latest volume, and they are here brought together for the first time under title of 'Within the tides.' The opening story, 'The planter of Malata,' a tale of an Australian city and a Pacific island, occupies practically half its pages. Following it come 'The partner,' a story of crime and shipwreck on the English coast; 'The inn of the two witches,' containing a grewsome incident in the lives of two seamen in the Spain of a century ago, and 'Because of the dollars,' a typical Conrad tale of the South Seas. All these are stories of adventure, but there is nothing in them of the conventional tale of their kind."—Boston Transcript

"Each tale reveals a different horror. Reprinted partly from Harper's Monthly and the Metropolitan magazine."

+ A L A Bkl 12:288 Mr '16

"A perfect blend of anecdote, characterization, and atmosphere."

+ Ath 1915,1:211 Mr 6 290w

"In both 'The planter of Malata' and 'Because of the dollars' is told a tale of the stress of fateful events that try and weary a man's soul. The ordinary story teller would have made nothing of the plot of each of these beyond a mere recital of happenings. Mr. Conrad tears every shred of flesh from the man who is struggling in the toils of life and reveals him a living skeleton of emotions. And he always leaves us with the feeling that he has left much unsaid and that if he would he could tell us much more. But he never fails to tell us all that is necessary to a revelation of the man or the woman, the men or the women, about whom his pages revolve. His stories are stories of the innermost feelings of mankind." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 22 '16 1550w

+ Cleveland p33 Ap '16 70w

"These stories give us some of those cross-purposes and misfits which seem to make up the detail of Mr. Conrad's view of life, but they give them to us so that we recognize that what they give us is life." E. E. Hale

+ Dial 60:216 Mr 2 '16 200w

"Here are stories that must claim the approval of the 'average reader' as well as of the literary connoisseur."

+ Ind 86:73 Ap 10 '16 300w

CONRAD, JOSEPH—Continued

"The planter of Malata" represents the author at his least satisfying. There is something strained and laborious about it. The three shorter tales that follow, on the other hand, show Mr. Conrad at his best as a story-teller, pure and simple. In all these tales one feels that thrill of a familiar strangeness and atmospheric charm with which this writer's fancy invests the sea and its exotic peoples and shores."

+ — Nation 102:164 F 10 '16 650w

"It is the essential and pervasive irony of his books that makes him such a perfect touchstone for the sentimentalist. You may lead your Locke-loving friend to 'Lord Jim' or 'Nostromo' or 'Youth,' but you cannot make him drink, and if you insist, he will show symptoms of hydrophobia. 'The planter of Malata' is filled, indeed, with an obvious and almost savage force. In it the author throws away his light weapons of fence and deals bare-handed with sentimentalism, the one human quality, it seems, for which he has no mercy."

+ N Y Times 21:17 Ja 16 '16 1700w

+ Pittsburgh 21:133 Mr '16

Reviewed by Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 89:642 F 19 '16 620w

+ R of Rs 53:377 Mr '16 400w

"Mr. Conrad has come into English literature because the language exactly suits his purpose; in all things which relate to the sea it is matchless. . . . Mr. Conrad is a great writer because he accomplishes perfectly what he sets out to do, but at the same time it is clear that there are huge tracts of life, whole classes of human beings, right outside his knowledge or his sympathy."

+ Sat R 119:311 Mr 20 '15 800w

"The tragedies which they narrate differ in two respects from the would-be tragedy of most modern novelists. To begin with, they have an organic and inevitable development; and, secondly, they do not impair but rather enhance one's belief in the invincible and indomitable quality of goodness. No one but Mr. Conrad could have written them, and none but he could have invested with pathos and impressiveness themes which in ordinary hands would have degenerated into mere horror and squalor."

+ Spec 114:338 Mr 6 '15 700w

"For Conrad to develop is to enrich, and this is what stands in the way of his full success in the short story. Invention he does not show in a remarkable degree, but the longer he dwells on a scene or a situation, or a character, or an incident, the more he sees in it, and (not quite the same thing) the more he gets out of it. Thus while his brief tales are often admirable, they are apt to be cramped."

+ — Springfield Republican p15 F 20 '16 1200w

CONWAY, SIR MARTIN. Crowd in peace and war. *$1.75 Longmans 301 15-28167

"Crowd-organization as the mainspring of social progress is the underlying theme of Sir Martin Conway's book. Under the generic term 'crowd' it includes every considerable group of men, from a mob to a nation or even a race, if held together by a common interest. A crowd, we are told, is moved not by reason but by emotion, the wisdom or unwisdom of its acts depending on the influence brought to bear upon it. . . . Of crowd-leaders there are three types: the crowd-compeller, the crowd-exponent, and the crowd-representative."—Nation

A L A Bkl 12:316 Ap '16

+ + Cath World 104:255 N '16 660w

+ Cleveland p20 Mr '16 80w

+ — Dial 60:465 My 11 '16 1100w

"If the first chapters leave one feeling the helplessness of the individual before the crowd, one lays down the book with a clearer understanding of the causes of group feeling and action, and of the direction in which one must move to produce effect on mass opinion."

+ Ind 86:31 Ap 3 '16 80w

+ Int J Ethics 27:260 Ja '17 650w

"In all this there is much of truth, but in it all is a minimum of error which is very significant in its results; for we here see emphasized the commonplace misconception that individual men are 'directed in the main by reason,' to which no psychologist to-day will agree." H: R. Marshall

+ — J Philos 13:639 N 9 '16 1550w

"The book is one of the most valuable issued in many months. The detail, always vital and never tedious, into which the author carries his analyses, the naturalness and vividness of his illustrations, and the epigrammatic style in which he writes, combine to hold the reader's interest tense through all the 332 pages, giving to a condensed and serious psychological study much of the fascination of a romance."

+ Nation 102:198 F 17 '16 1300w

"A curiously futile product, running true to the type of maddening vagueness in fashion two years ago; but it is an excellent example of a kind of book of which we may soon expect many more examples." Harold Stearns

+ — New Repub 6:356 Ap 29 '16 1300w

N Y Br Lib News 3:27 F '16

+ N Y Times 21:85 Mr 12 '16 50w

"The book is not the last word upon the crowd, but it is certainly the first which has been addressed intelligently and entertainingly to the general reader."

+ Pittsburgh 21:102 Mr '16 100w (Condensed from Outlook [London])

+ Spec 116:724 Je 10 '16 800w

"It is to be regretted that these aberrations have entered into Sir Martin's book, which is in the main full of keen criticism moderately expressed, though one suspects that the moderation conceals a certain dogmatic pugnacity. This, indeed, breaks out when Sir Martin touches on the subject of eugenics. In spite of some opinionated radicalism in morals, his book as a whole is soundly conservative and he utters many truths which our democracy, which provides him with so many examples, will do well to ponder."

+ — Springfield Republican p27 D 26 '15 1350w

"We have emphasized the point that this book betrays a distinct bias against the crowd, because, once this bias is understood and allowance is made for it, the book is of the greatest interest and value."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p38 Ja 27 '16 1450w

COOK, SIR EDWARD TYAS. Delane of The Times. (Makers of the nineteenth century) il $1.75 (1½c) Holt (Eng ed 16-26416)

John Thadeus Delane was editor of the London Times from 1841 to 1877. In his preface the author says, "This book is neither a history of The Times newspaper, nor a chronicle of European affairs during the years of Delane's editorship, nor yet, in the ordinary sense, a biography of him. It partakes, in some measure, of all those characters. . . . My purpose has been to make a study of Delane as editor of The Times. . . . I have sought to show his methods and his conception of journalism, and to explain and measure his influence. Events of his time are recorded, journalistic developments are discussed and biographical details are given, only as they serve to illustrate the character, the methods, and the power of the editor." There is a bibliography at the close of the book, followed by a chronological table and an index.

"Dasent's 'Life' of Delane and Atkins's biography of William Howard Russell have been, heretofore, the principal works exhibiting the personality and influence of the man who for thirty-six years (1841-1877) was the 'great editor' of the Times. Undoubtedly a more vivid impression of the man is received from the earlier works, than from the present one, but not so clear a statement and analysis of his position, policies, and influence." E. D. Adams

+ Am Hist R 22:377 Je '17 600w

+ A L A Bkl 12:425 Je '16

+ Ath p16 Ja '16 1100w

"It must be by a sort of poetic justice that to the British censor-in-chief falls the task of writing the life of one who notoriously defied all censorship."

+ Dial 60:478 My 11 '16 230w

"The graphic descriptions of Delane at work, and of the internal and external organization of the Times give this book its distinctive value."

+ Ind 86:252 My 15 '16 400w

"In its human interest and its graphic power of character-delineation the book may be compared to Thayer's 'Life of John Hay,' altho the style is quite different."

+ Lit D 52:1460 My 20 '16 1150w

"Sir Edward Cook has written an admirable first volume for this series on the nineteenth century. Here are names and personalities that are bound to reappear in the following volumes, and he has skillfully made each contribute to the subject of his study while revealing the participant's share in the furnace-hissing of events."

+ Nation 102:621 Je 8 '16 1500w

+ Pol Sci Q 31:669 D '16 400w

R of Rs 53:499 Ap '16 120w

"May be considered a model of condensation, and in not a single page is the interest for one moment allowed to flag. Himself an eminent journalist, Sir Edward Cook is particularly qualified to understand the pitfalls which lie in the path of a fellow-craftsman." [Earl of] Cromer

+ Spec 116:81 Ja 15 '16 1900w

"Sir Edward Cook writes in a clear and easy style, which is without ornamentation or rhetorical effect, but is always readable and expressive. He has a happy faculty of mingling cautious generalization with concrete fact. When one has finished reading the work, he has a clear and correct picture of the public personality of Delane and an intelligent conception both of the profession of journalism and of Delane's place in it. Moreover, he has enjoyed an excursion into political history. Such books are of great value. Sir Edward has produced a fascinating study of a great journalist. His comments, few though they be, on what may be called the philosophy of journalism, should do much to foster in the public—the American public, at all events—the much-needed spirit of criticism with regard to the newspapers it reads. Many people desire good newspapers, but have never thought enough about newspapers to define their desires."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 1900w

COOLIDGE, EMELYN LINCOLN. Home care of sick children. il *$1 (1½c) Appleton 618.9 16-14862

"It is with the intention of helping and guiding mothers when they must nurse their children through the most common illnesses that occur in nursery days that this little book has been written." (Intro.) Contents: General care and feeding of sick children; Peculiarities of disease in children and special methods of treatment; Care of premature and delicate infants; Most common diseases of the organs of digestion (two chapters); Diseases of faulty nutrition and general diseases; Most common diseases of the respiratory system; Diseases of the nervous system; Infectious diseases of childhood.

"The value of the detailed instructions regarding specific diseases is especially valuable for the care they will induce before the coming of the doctor and their emphasis on the gravity of certain conditions often overlooked."

+ Ind 87:426 S 18 '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:395 O 1 '16 80w

"The work answers practically all the perplexing questions which confront mothers during the illness of children."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 29 '16 250w

COOMARASWAMY, ANANDA KENTISH. Buddha, and the gospel of Buddhism. il *$3.75 (3¼c) Putnam 294 A16-1519

"The aim of this book is to set forth as simply as possible the gospel of Buddhism according to the Buddhist scriptures, and to consider the Buddhist systems in relation, on the one hand, to the Brahmanical systems in which they originate, and, on the other hand, to those systems of Christian mysticism which afford the nearest analogies. At the same time the endeavour has been made to illustrate the part which Buddhist thought has played in the whole development of Asiatic culture, and to suggest a part of the significance it may still possess for modern thinkers." (Preface)

"A work at once concise and exhaustive. . . . The book is finely illustrated."

+ Ath p582 D '16 220w

"That the book is the product of thorough scholarship is evident. It is also remarkably clear as compared with works in general upon this subject. . . . A glossary of Pali and Sanskrit terms enhance the usefulness of the book, as does also the rather full index." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 6 '16 630w

+ R of Rs 55:104 Ja '17 210w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p591 D 7 '16 50w

COOMBS, LOVELL. U. S. Grant. (True stories of great Americans) il *50c (1c) Macmillan 16-6215

This biography forms one of a series of volumes for young people. The early chapters are devoted to: A promising boyhood; School days; A West Point cadet; Early days in the army; In the Mexican war; Exploits in Mexico. Then comes a somewhat detailed account of General Grant's civil war activities, the greater part of the book being devoted to this part of his career. The years of his presidency are passed over lightly; two chapters are devoted to his trip around the world, and one to the closing days of his life.

"Has not the time come to give to youthful readers of great men's lives clear ideas of their weaknesses as well as of their strong qualities and good deeds? The weaknesses in Grant's character are carefully avoided. For that reason, mainly, Mr. Coombs has failed to do a notable thing in this kindly-intentioned but mistaken effort." H. S. K.

— Boston Transcript p25 Mr 15 '16 420w

"Brings out the high lights and appeals to hero worship."

Ind 88:72 O 9 '16 40w

"The author, whose style will appeal to young readers, has succeeded in including in his narrative a considerable wealth of incident, without neglecting episodes that are important rather than vivid. The chapters on Grant's part in the civil war are especially clear."

+ Nation 102:653 Je 15 '16 60w

"Among the low-priced biographies of Grant nothing better can be found."

+ R of Rs 53:754 Je '16 60w

"Mr. Lovell Coombs's work is rich in anecdote and popular in its appeal but it is uncritical in tone and undistinguished in style. It is characteristic of his method that he devotes more than twice as much space to Grant's tour round the world than to his eight years at the White house."

— Spec 117:18 Jl 1 '16 40w

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 16 '16 130w

'COOMBS, ROBERT DUNCAN. Pole and tower lines for electric power transmission. il *$2.50 McGraw 621.319 16-2195

"The book opens up with introductory notes, drawn from experience, on economic grade of construction, life of materials, necessary clearances, factors of safety, fields for various types of supports, etc. The details of design begin with a discussion of loading. . . . There are very interesting and suggestive chapters on the design of wood-pole, steel-pole, steel-tower and reinforced-concrete-pole lines. There is not presented in these sections, as already intimated, a complete procedure for design, but rather a chain of discourses on departures from ordinary structural designing—covering such topics as maximum stress and weakest sections in wood poles, flat and angle lacing for poles and

COOMBS, ROBERT DUNCAN—Continued
towers, connections, wide-base structures, flexible frames, etc. A notable addition is the tabulated data on about fifty wood- and ninety steel-supported lines."—Engin N

Cleveland p90 JI '16 10w

"The subject-matter of the volume, covering some fourteen chapters, is creditably arranged under proper headings, the discussions are interesting, the illustrations are well selected, and the data are compiled in a clear, concise and readable manner."

+ Elec World 67:1176 My 20 '16 350w

"Mr. Coombs is known as an earnest advocate of departmentizing the work of a power company's engineering staff to the extent that the electrical engineers should not design the transmission lines as structures, and he cannot be charged with trying to educate electrical men into that field of applied mechanics. But nevertheless his book will be particularly useful to the many electrical engineers who cannot have civil-engineering associates to work out these problems for them. . . . But it will be necessary for such to have other books on structural design, for the author does not give an exposition of the general theory and practice of that subject."

+ Engin N 76:122 JI 20 '16 600w

"Not until the publishing of this book has the purely structural side received due attention. . . . Of special value are the chapter dealing with erection and costs, and the specifications contained in the last chapter and elsewhere in the text." A. G. Hillberg

+ Engin Rec 73:650 My 13 '16 200w

"Practical, with carefully prepared line drawings and tabular data. . . . Reviewed in Electrical Review & Western Electrician, May 6, 1916, p. 820; . . . in Canadian Engineer, April 27, 1916, p. 490."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p9 My '16 50w

+ Pratt p22 JI '16 30w

COONEY, PERCIVAL JOHN. Kinsmen. $*1.50
(1c) Doran 16-22903

This story opens with the year 1837, a time of rebellion in Canada. It centers about the home and affairs of the Laird of McNab, a highland chieftain who tries to maintain a copy of feudal civilization in Upper Canada. For many years his clansmen had paid him tribute, accepting his word as law, but at the time Barclay Craig comes to Kennell Lodge to serve as the Laird's surveyor revolt is seething. Its leaders are the McIntyres, father and son, and the feeling between the Laird and his rebellious clansmen is strengthened by Flora McIntyre's refusal to marry McNab's son. Craig is at once drawn into the conflict by his interest in Flora. The later events of the story are merged with other larger happenings of the period, in particular McKenzie's rebellion.

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 28 '17 350w

COOPER, ELIZABETH (BEAVER) (MRS. CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER). Drusilla with a million. il $*1.25 (1½c) Stokes 16-3306

The heroine of Mrs. Cooper's story is Drusilla Doane, seventy years old and an inmate of an old ladies' home. She had spent a lifetime working for others and even in the home occupies a menial position among the other old ladies, for she works for her board and keep. Then comes the astounding news that a distant relative has left her one out of his many millions, together with a perfectly appointed home near New York. Of the uses to which she puts her million and of the other old folks, the babies, and the young lovers whom she helps make happy the story tells.

+ A L A Bkl 12:383 My '16

"Quaintly charming drama which strengthens one's faith in human nature."

+ Boston Transcript p25 F 23 '16 300w

"A tale of much humor and pathos and still more sentiment. Toward the end Mrs. Cooper has allowed the story interest to drag and Drusilla to talk far too much. Her talk is entertaining, to be sure, with its humor, its quaint phraseology and its shrewd common sense, but it has too much the look of a lay figure who is preaching the author's sentiments."

+ — N Y Times 21:66 F 27 '16 450w

"Drusilla is of New England in character, speech and philosophy, and the reader is continuously entertained by her shrewd, humorous comments on present-day feminine 'isms' and social frivolities. Particularly amusing is her description of her first attendance at a dinner party."

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 27 '16 200w

"A diverting grown-up fairy tale which will be liked by many women novel-readers."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:146 Mr '16 40w

COOPER, ELIZABETH (BEAVER) (MRS. CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER). Harim and the purdah. il $*3 (4c) Century 396 (Eng ed 16-26321)

Mrs. Cooper's studies of Oriental women include chapters on the women of Egypt, India, Burmah, China, and Japan. Their home life and their customs, particularly those relating to marriage and divorce, are given special attention. The author writes sympathetically of the woman of the East, who has for her an alluring charm, but she admits the difficulty of understanding the Eastern point of view. Of particular interest are the chapters on China and Japan, bringing out as they do contrasts between the Far and the Near East.

"Contains little that is not already known, but is sympathetically told. If an index had been included, it would have been of greater value for reference."

+ A L A Bkl 12:358 My '16

"That the women of the Orient, secluded—they feel it 'protected'—within the harem, zenana and purdah, do not live the useless lives too often accredited to them, they who have lived in the Orient and come familiarly in contact with them know well. This is the basic thought of Mrs. Cooper's delightful studies; that as we of the West have already done much for their 'emancipation,' they also have a message for us, it were well to heed."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 18 '16 530w

"Much romance regarding the oriental harems is exploded in Elizabeth Cooper's present book, 'The harem and the purdah.' Into its pages she has crowded much of first hand information. The manners and social ideas that have led to the harem as an institution are considered and much new light is incidentally but entertainingly shed upon the social East."

+ Ind 85:465 Mr 27 '16 60w

+ Lit D 52:916 Ap 1 '16 280w

"In India alone she touches the core of her subject. But Mrs. Cooper is overwhelmed by the data she gathered in that vast racial laboratory, as, indeed, are all who are not conversant with India's heterogeneity. It is a pity that she did not study the Turkish haremlik, for no more classical material exists for a writer on this subject. . . . We regret to note the slovenly binding of the book, and an index, for even so cursory a study, would have been acceptable."

+ — Nation 102:675 Je 22 '16 1100w

"The illustrations are exceptionally good."

+ R of Rs 53:504 Ap '16 100w

+ Spec 116:sup135 Ja 29 '16 170w

"The delight of the book, however, lies not so much in the subject matter, deeply interesting as this may be, nor in the excellent illustrations, as in the entertaining style of the author, and the understanding spirit in which she has approached customs far different from her own."

+ Springfield Republican p7 My 4 '16 470w

COOPER, LANE. Methods and aims in the study of literature. $1.20 Ginn 807 15-24912

"Professor Lane Cooper has collected in 'Methods and aims in the study of literature' an admirable series of extracts designed primarily for advanced college classes. The first section of the book, 'On method in general,' draws light from Leonardo da Vinci, Milton, Kenyon Cox, Agassiz, and others as diverse, in an endeavor to discover the bond between science and art. . . . The subsequent divisions deal with the practice of great writers in composing (with emphasis on revision), the reading of great poets, and, as a concluding illustration of the principles previously stressed, 'Method in the poetry of love.' Although Professor Cooper's book is concerned with method rather than with matter . . . it makes perfectly clear the rigorous discipline without which the writer is foredoomed to oblivion."—Dial

+ Dial 60:387 Ap 13 '16 250w

"A book that will really help the student to understand and to appreciate literature."

+ Educ R 51:536 My '16 40w

Ind 87:233 Ag 14 '16 40w

"A courageous attempt to teach the young how to confront literature in general, and English poetry in particular, as a problem demanding strenuous thought. In our judgment, section 5, pp. 96-136, 'On the studies of poets,' will be the most profitable for a beginning. . . . The statement of art and method (pp. 2-4) seems to us unwise, even though it may rest on the authority of Aristotle. Section 6, 'Method in the poetry of love,' is very abstruse; so abstruse, indeed, that the ordinary student can hardly be expected to master it."

+ Nation 102:623 Je 8 '16 1000w

COPPLESTONE, BENNET. Jitney and the boys. $1.50 Dutton

"Notwithstanding the fact that an American slang word has been borrowed for use in the title, this book is essentially English. . . . The story itself depends for its interest, in the first part, on a little automobile. . . . The second part of the book makes amends for the lack of action preceding it. Camps, mobilizing incidents, and the effects on English family life of the call to the colors are all rather faithfully portrayed."—N Y Times

"The story pulses with life and humor, although across it falls the shadow of the Great war. Few descriptions of the attitude of the English, so misunderstood by the outside world during the first months of the war, give as accurate an impression as these so highly yet surely sketched."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 8 '16 400w

+ N Y Times 21:403 O 8 '16 340w

"The narrative has the air of being a transcript from life. It seems as though a log or diary of motor tours had been expanded by a brain with a memory for picturesque detail and a vast capacity for enthusiasm; but unfortunately the author's power of selection from the diary we are imagining is not subject to any scrupulous rules of art. Here and there an itinerary is given which is really little more than an itinerary."

+ Spec 116:387 Mr 18 '16 1200w

+ Springfield Republican p13 D 24 '16 170w

CORBETT, ELIZABETH F. Cecily and the wide world. $1.40 (1c) Holt 16-18564

In this story of the husband and wife who separate in order that each may live an individual life, it is the husband who takes the first step. Dr. Avery Fairchild is developing a promising private practice when he first begins to interest himself in the public health movement. Finding social and family ties hampering, he gives up his practice and goes to New York for a year of study and experiment in working out his new ideas. In the year that he is away, Cecily, his butterfly wife, begins to think, and the result is that she too strikes out for herself, determined to live her own life. Their two love stories are carried along together. Both develop new interests and come perilously near to remarriage, but in the end they are drawn to one another and their lives are reunited.

Boston Transcript p6 N 4 '16 670w

+ Ind 88:165 O 23 '16 40w

"Miss Corbett's method of managing a plot is absurd, her climaxes too numerous, her logic faulty. But her women live. The flippant fashionable woman, the idealistic social-worker, the languishing lady, are her people. Her men, on the contrary, are heroic puppets. In this, and in the forcing of her situations, the novel is not a success."

+ New Repub 9:105 N 25 '16 130w

"A book to make you think."

+ N Y Times 21:461 O 29 '16 450w

"An earnest, capably written book. The material is presented impartially and is free from preachments and dogmatism."

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 5 '16 470w

CORNARO, LUIGI. Art of living long. il $50c (2½c) Putnam 613.2 16-16373

A new translation, made from the Venice edition of 1612, of three classic treatises on the art of long life. Cornaro, who lived in sound and vigorous health up to the age of one hundred, wrote them after he had passed eighty, describing in them his system of right living. Sobriety is its keynote. "The book is now presented to the American public, not only as a literary and scientific curiosity, but as a manual of practical instruction." (Publishers' note)

Dial 61:71 J1 15 '16 300w

+ Nation 102:714 Je 29 '16 180w

CORROTHERS, JAMES DAVID. In spite of the handicap. il $1.25 (3c) Doran 16-21755

The author of this autobiography is an American negro who was born in Michigan in 1869 in a little settlement established by fugitive negroes some years before the war. He grew up in the north, was educated at Northwestern university, and has followed many callings, ranging from the most lowly to dignified positions as author and pastor. His poems and stories now appear in the American magazine and the Century. Ray Stannard Baker, who writes an introduction for the present book, says, "Mr. Corrothers gives us, not only a real contribution to our knowledge of all those complex conditions which confront the colored man in America, but a downright interesting and well-written human document. . . . The problems of the southern negro are well known; but this book by a northern negro gives us a striking picture of what race-prejudice means in the north, and the difficulties which the northern negro is forced to meet."

+ A L A Bkl 13:199 F '17

+ Dial 61:472 N 30 '16 180w

+ Ind 88:240 N 6 '16 90w

+ Springfield Republican p8 N 16 '16 490w

CORWIN, EDWARD SAMUEL. French policy and the American alliance of 1778. $2 (2c) Princeton univ. press 327 16-14772

The author has written a history of "the one entangling alliance to which the United States has been party." He says: "I have been particularly interested in these pages in emphasizing the idea that France's intervention in the American revolution was motivated primarily by her desire to recover her lost preeminence on the continent of Europe. . . . A second phase of the general subject to which I have given prominence is the embarrassment which resulted to France from the conflict of interest between her new ally, America, and her hereditary ally, Spain." (Preface) His chief source has been Henri Doniol's five volume documentary history of the part played by France in the establishment of the United States.

"Among the subjects particularly well discussed by Professor Corwin is the divergence of interests between France and Spain, and the consequent difficulty which Vergennes experienced in trying to reconcile them." D: J. Hill

+ Am Hist. R 22:393 Ja '17 1150w

+ A L A Bkl 13:115 D '16

Ath p485 O '16 230w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 2 '16 600w

+ Cath World 104:555 Ja '17 150w

CORWIN, EDWARD SAMUEL—Continued

"The scope of his volume is somewhat wider than the title would suggest."

+ Nation 103:380 O '16 740w

"The qualities which made his 'Doctrine of judicial review' one of the most valuable of recent works in that field combine to make this present volume without comparison as an analysis of its problem. Professor Corwin's book is a realistic study. It is supported by the most solid of contemporary documents. Its conclusions must be woven into the texture of any ideal history of America." H. J. L.

+ New Repub 7:338 JI 29 '16 770w

N Y Br Lib News 3:137 S '16

"One soon becomes satisfied that Professor Corwin has dug down to the root of his subject and that his treatise is no less sound as an ultimate view than it is thorough and intelligible as a formulation of the facts. . . . His work as a whole is shapely and possesses great continuity of interest."

+ No Am 204:629 O '16 1200w

R of Rs 54:458 O '16 90w

"The author is professor of politics in Princeton university."

St Louis 14:442 D '16 40w

"A scholarly book, well written throughout and provided with copious footnotes and a bibliography."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 29 '16 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p455 S 21 '16 80w

COSGROVE, JAMES FRANCIS. Coal; its economic and smokeless combustion. Il $3 Technical-book pub. co., 357 W. Duval st., Germantown, Pa. 662 16-8590

"Mr. Cosgrove has prepared a descriptive discussion of the geology and chemistry of coal, and of the physics and engineering of fuel combustion, in a plain and readable fashion that ought to make the fundamental information readily available for businessmen, factory managers, civil engineers, contractors, and all others not specially trained in power generation processes. . . . Noteworthy among the discussions of the book are those on the purchase of coal taking into account heat value and impurities, and on prevention of smoke; a useful appendix gives the analyses of 319 American coals from scattered localities."—Engin N

"More popular in style than Somermeier (Booklist, 9:253, F '13)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:154 Ja '17

Cleveland p151 D '16 20w

+ Engin N 76:121 JI 20 '16 250w

N Y Br Lib News 3:141 S '16

"Reviewed in Metallurgical and Chemical Engineering, May 15, 1916, p. 614; in Power, July 4, 1916, p. 40; and in National Engineer, June, 1916, p. 300."

N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 Ag '16 110w

"Practical, non-technical work."

+ Pittsburgh 21:578 D '16 10w

COTTER, ARUNDEL. Authentic history of the United States steel corporation. Il $2 Moody magazine & bk. co. 338.8 16-2921

"An excellent popular account of the formation and progress of the world's greatest industrial enterprise. Every part of the story is interesting, from the merging of the Carnegie interests and the purchase of Tennessee coal and iron in the panic of 1907, to the corporation's relations with its employees, and its compensation and relief plans. The author states that a large part of the facts narrated in this book were obtained from the sworn testimony in the government's suit for the dissolution of the corporation."—R of Rs

"The work is not a scientific account of the factors determining the growth and policies of the steel corporation. Too much is made of purely personal influences and too little of industrial conditions." Abraham Berglund

+ — Am Econ R 6:653 S '16 330w

A L A Bkl 12:453 JI '16

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 25 '16 90w

Pittsburgh 21:234 My '16 70w

+ R of Rs 53:378 Mr '16 80w

St Louis 14:183 My '16 30w

"If Mr. Cotter is entitled to praise for nothing else, it is for the way in which he has condensed from a mass of evidence given in the government suit against the steel company, and from other sources, an easily readable book which few business men of to-day would throw aside without finishing. . . . The emphasis given to welfare work is deserved."

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 730w

COULTON, G. G. Main illusions of pacifism; a criticism of Mr. Norman Angell and of the Union of democratic control. *$2 Macmillan 172.4 (Eng ed War16-54)

"Mr. Coulton, who has long been engaged in a crusade against pacifist heresies, has collected and published in a single handy volume, amplified and amended, those vigorous articles and pamphlets in which he has from time to time exposed their main illusions. 'The object of this present book [he says] is to awaken the public mind, and especially the Liberal and Labour mind, to the need of a clear policy in national defence as in diplomacy, without provocation, but without weakness. Its aim is to expose that faint-hearted idea which underlies so much of our peace talk, that a democracy can only refrain from aggression by keeping itself powerless.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Library Association Record 18:172 Ap 15 '16 10w

N Y Br Lib News 3:120 Ag '16

"Mr. Coulton has rendered a real service to the British public. He has pulverized the arguments of Mr. Norman Angell and the Union of democratic control." [Earl of] Cromer

+ Spec 116:413 Mr 25 '16 2000w

"Mr. Coulton is careful to give chapter and verse for every criticism he makes. . . . We are inclined to regret that Mr. Coulton has thought it necessary to arm himself for his fight with a bludgeon rather than a rapier. But the bludgeon is undoubtedly the more popular, and therefore convincing, weapon. . . . This war has proved that only by knowledge and strength can democracy survive. The war itself will have taught the people much; the rest must be left to a sounder education in the future. It is because Mr. Coulton's book is so notable a contribution to this education that we urge our readers to study it."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p182 Ap 20 '16 2300w

COURTNEY, LEONARD HENRY COURTNEY, 1st baron, ed. Nationalism and war in the Near East, by a diplomatist. *$4.15 (3c) Oxford 949.6 16-26128

This work is brought out in America under the direction of the Division of economics and history of the Carnegie endowment for international peace. This division is organized to "promote a thorough and scientific investigation of the causes and results of war." Of the causes of the present war the author has this to say: "A balance of military power abroad and a preponderance of militarist policy at home were treacherous foundations for European peace. But they might have lasted long enough to dissociate European nationalism finally from war, but for two factors. The first and most important of the two was the failure of European democracy to assert its control over diplomacy. . . . The second was the failure of European diplomacy, largely owing to its undemocratic inspiration, so to further the growth of nationalism in the Near East that it might expand and express itself otherwise than by war." (Preface) There are discussions of: The Eastern question; The Macedonian question; The Ottoman revolution; The war of the coalition; The crisis; The war of partition; Present conditions. The texts of various treaties are given in an appendix. There is no index.

+ Am Hist R 21:877 J1 '16 70w

+ A L A Bkl 12:279 Mr '16

"No other recent book on the Near East approaches this in serious import. The relations to the causes and events of the present war will perhaps be the chief interest of the many readers at the present moment. But the book is rich in general reflections upon war, its causes justifiable or unjustifiable, its effects good or bad, upon tendencies democratic or imperialistic, upon the superiority in ultimate vision of 'democratic diplomacy' over 'Realpolitik,' etc. Whether or not one agrees with the conclusions, they are thoughtful and strikingly stated. The indisputable value of the book lies in the penetrating analysis of the specific conditions of 'nationalism and war in the Near East.'" C. D. Buck

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:174 F '16 600w

Boston Transcript p2 D 11 '15 530w

"A useful feature of the volume is a liberal collection of diplomatic documents covering Balkan affairs in the years 1912-13." F: A. Ogg

+ Dial 61:350 N 2 '16 650w

"The value of the book is increased by the fact that, with the exception of the preface, it was written before the war began. The author has first-hand knowledge of the Near East." R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 14:439 Ja '16 280w

"This treatise is distinguished by its freedom from prejudice and its comparative freedom from any marked bias. . . . The introduction, and indeed the whole of the earlier and more general part of the book, need to be read with caution, and a pretty frequent use of a pencil note of interrogation in the margin. These parts are interesting, for they provoke thought, suggest points of view worth considering, and are often enlivened by phrases of epigrammatic terseness. But many of their statements must be taken with great reserve. One inexplicable defect of this able and carefully written book must not go unnoticed, because it can be repaired if another edition is called for. There is no index, and no full analytical table of contents."

+ — Nation 102:334 Mr 23 '16 2000w

"The work is essentially one of analysis, with only so much of matter of fact as is necessary for elucidation of the main theses. Generalization follows generalization bewilderingly, and the means are not at hand for checking their validity. But the final impression left with the reader is an unshakable conviction of the author's competence and reliability. His method of presentation which at first seems journalistic, proves in the end to be philosophic."

+ New Repub 5:285 Ja 15 '16 1050w

N Y Br Lib News 3:28 F '16

+ Pratt p47 Ap '16 20w

St Louis 14:170 Ap '16 80w

"One of the first points to be borne in mind in dealing with the views of the advanced class of politicians to which 'Diplomatist' evidently belongs is that they have an inveterate habit of indulging in sweeping generalizations which very often embody a half of the truth, but very rarely the whole truth. . . . Notwithstanding these blemishes, however, if blemishes they be, which seem to dictate the exercise of some caution in accepting all the author's conclusions, Lord Courtney is quite justified in saying that he has written an 'original, thoughtful, and thought-provoking book, which invites to inquiry and reflection.' He is thoroughly conversant with his subject. He affords us an admirable clue to guide us through the bewildering labyrinth of Balkan politics. His sympathies move in directions which command, or at all events should command, universal respect, and, in many cases, he asserts principles which constitute, not merely the best, but indeed the only sound, basis for the treatment of Balkan politics in the future." C.

+ — Spec 115:337 S 11 '15 2300w

COURTNEY, WILLIAM LEONARD. Literary man's New Testament. *$3.50 Dutton 225 15-16797

"W. L. Courtney, the English man of letters, who gave the world 'The literary man's Bible,' now invites attention to what he calls 'The literary man's New Testament' which, like the earlier work, is meant for the enjoyment and edification of men and women mainly interested in the literary and historical aspects of the Scriptures and not much concerned with their purely theological aspects. The distinguishing characteristic of Mr. Courtney's New Testament is its arrangement of the books in ['problematical'] chronological order, with introductory essays and annotations."—N Y Times

"He has made his work harder, if not impossible, by his methodical arrangement of the New Testament in three parts—(1) the Epistles; (2) the synoptic Gospels and Acts; and (3) the Johannine writings. This classification permits him to prefix to each part some historical notes and illuminative remarks which are worthy of careful regard; but it means that to some extent he has given up his ideal of exact chronological order, for one must not presuppose that the New Testament writings came out in such series—they did not. Indeed, Dr. Courtney's arrangement can only be accepted generally and with reservations."

+ — Ath 1915,2:89 Ag 7 750w

Boston Transcript p9 My 6 '16 400w

N Y Times 21:319 Ag 13 '16 90w

+ Sat R 120:256 S 11 '15 1150w

"The merits of these short essays lie, in our judgment, in their clear and frank presentation of the theories which are at present occupying the minds of New Testament scholars, in the willingness to acknowledge new light from whatever quarter it comes."

+ Spec 115:339 S 11 '15 1000w

COUSSENS, PENRHYN WINGFIELD. Ruby story book. (Jewel ser.) il *$1.50 (2c) Duffield 16-18024

A companion volume to "The diamond story book," compiled by Mr. Cousens in 1914. In the present volume he has brought together tales of courage and heroism. Among the stories are: The courage of Grace Darling; The ploughman who won knighthood; The Cid and King Alphonso; The daring of Black Agnes; Saint Francis of Assisi; Magna carta; Walter Raleigh and his cloak; St. George and the dragon; Robin Hood and King Richard. There is a frontispiece in color by Maxfield Parrish.

"Editor gives a list of sources to identify the stories."

+ A L A Bkl 13:226 F '17

"An excellent source-book for the librarian or the teacher anxious for material to use in the story-hour."

+ Lit D 53:1561 D 9 '16 140w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 80w

Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 30w

COWEE, GEORGE ALVIN. Practical safety methods and devices, manufacturing and engineering. il *$3 Van Nostrand 614.8 16-14754

"What the author has aimed to do in this book is to cover the most important features and principles of safety-engineering work as carried on in different industries. Beginning with such general matters as safety instruction to employees through the organization of safety committees, use of danger signs, guarding moving machinery, education and discipline for safety, the author proceeds with a chapter on 'Buildings and fire hazard.' . . . In addition to the chapters on safety work proper there are other chapters on sanitation; heating, lighting and ventilating; welfare work; occupational diseases; first aid to the injured; etc."—Engin N

Cleveland p150 D '16 40w

Engin N 76:749 O 19 '16 680w

N Y Br Lib News 3:139 S '16

"A very practical and well illustrated work of over 400 pages by the manager of the safety

COWEE, GEORGE ALVIN —Continued
bureau of a large mutual compensation insurance corporation. Reviewed in Gas Age, Aug. 15, 1916, p. 169."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 Ag '16 100w

"Valuable summary, containing much descriptive matter and characterized by inclusion of definite rules for safety in each of the more hazardous branches of industry. Less fully illustrated than Beyer's 'Industrial accident prevention.'"

+ Pittsburgh 21:573 D '16 30w

St Louis 14:393 N '16

COX, ELEANOR ROGERS. Singing fires of Erin. il *$1 Lane 811 -16-8920

Irish romance and legend are the inspiration of these poems. Deirdre to her women, Finvar dead, Gods and heroes of the Gael, A Greek lover of Queen Maeve, A song of Cormac Conloingias, A ballad of Queen Etain, Cuchulain's wooing, are some of the titles. There is a "Legendary and mythological index" at the close which will serve as a key to the poems.

+ Boston Transcript p10 Ap 22 '16 360w

+ Cath World 103:538 J1 '16 180w

+ Ind 87:390 S 11 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:86 Je '16

+ N Y Times 21:333 Ag 27 '16 200w

"Contained perhaps more sheer beauty than any other book of the year."

+ N Y Times 21:508 N 26 '16 60w

"The old tales are retold with fresh melody and moving passion."

+ R of Rs 53:632 My '16 80w

COX, MRS. MARIAN (METCALF). Ventures in worlds. il *$1.25 (3c) Kennerley 814 -16-4422

A half dozen essays, three devoted to new worlds, three to old worlds. Our musical culture, the first essay of the first group, advances the theory that musical culture and materialism have always gone hand in hand and have paved the way to decline. Rome is cited, and Germany, with a warning to America. The second essay, Our incestuous marriage, traces the deterioration of the simple, chaste monogamous marriage of the savage down to the socialized and materialized union of today. The third, Our nervous humanity, is a study of two modern types, the neurotic and hysteric. The three ventures in old worlds are, The man-made woman of Japan; A cup of tea in Japan; and Mr. Grundy and Eve's dress.

"One would sometimes agree with her did she leave out the reasons for her beliefs, but her scientific proofs lead to an extraordinary universe, and it is hard, for instance, to lay the entire problem of domestic service to our unintelligent interest in music."

— Ind 86:186 My 1 '16 70w

"So long as one can ignore one's sense of logic the essays are very entertaining but little that they say is quite true."

— Nation 103:182 Ag 24 '16 370w

"It is the kind of book that makes the conservative reactionary and the reactionary self-complacent. It awakens instinctive distrust. If Mrs. Cox really wants to convince anybody, she should curb her pretentious manner. And as for the matter, the kernel contentions introduced with such a bewildering flourish, what are they? Frankly, half of them are platitudes and the other half nonsense." Harold Stearns

— New Repub 7:232 J1 '16 1150w

"The whole volume is one of clear, fearless, original and suggestive thinking. Mrs. Cox writes forcefully and with much brilliance and her pages sparkle with epigrams."

+ N Y Times 21:165 Ap 16 '16 500w

"An unusual volume that will interest women in particular, as the subjects are in the main considered from a woman's point of view."

+ R of Rs 53:372 Mr '16 210w

COXON, MURIEL (HINE) (MRS. SIDNEY COXON). Individual. *$1.25 (1c) Lane. 16-10451

This story of England and Italy is devoted to the testing of Orde Taverner's theory that the individual must be sacrificed to the good of the race. He is a famous London surgeon and a leader in the eugenics movement. While on a vacation in Italy he meets Elizma Lee, a young musician of great beauty and wilful charm. Their marriage promises every happiness, but very shortly afterwards the husband comes upon evidence that shows that his wife's blood is tainted. Unknown to her, her mother had died in an asylum for the insane. The husband's conscience and the wife's pride meet in sharp conflict, but by the time a satisfactory solution is found, each has been brought to yield something to the other's point of view.

+ — A L A Bkl 12:479 J1 '16

"The author's plot is far too ingeniously complicated, and the expression of her views on modern topics, sensible as they are, does not flow naturally from the mouths of her characters, while her special bits of topographical and other information are almost dragged in. The worst of her stage-effects is the turning of sunlight on to her heroine as though it was limelight controlled from 'the wings.' In spite of these drawbacks we recommend the book to readers; it is not great, but it is by no means negligible."

+ — Ath 1915,2:461 D 18 210w

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 8 '16 450w

"It is much too long; unimportant matters are dwelt upon in a way which throws the story out of proportion and reiterations make it drag badly. The handling of the theme lacks firmness, and the whole question is begged at last by the somewhat melodramatic discovery which permits it to have a happy ending."

— + N Y Times 21:153 Ap '16 320w

"The subject is one which cannot fail to be rich in emotional and dramatic possibilities; and we were more thrilled by this rather conventional story than we should care to admit in our critical moments."

+ Spec 116:263 F 19 '16 170w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ap 2 '16 300w

CRAFTS, REV. WILBUR FISK, ed. Bible stories and poems, from creation to the captivity. il $1 International reform bureau 220 15-15287

"The students' presentation edition of Dr. Crafts' 'Bible stories and poems' is meant to serve as a textbook to Bible-study in colleges and for 'credit' classes on the North Dakota plan in high schools. It is also adapted to be the basis of Bible-study for church day schools on the Gary plan. The volume is illustrated by 76 Tissot pictures in full color and 140 other pictures or maps. The selection of readings is mostly made from the Old Testament; the New Testament passages are of an ethical character to which Jews—at least Reformed Jews—will scarcely object."—Bib World

Bib World 46:318 N '15 90w

Cath World 103:120 Ap '16 100w

CRAIG, KATHERINE TAYLOR (MRS. WILLIAM B. CRAIG). Stars of destiny. il *$2 (3c) Dutton 133.5 16-6681

This work on the ancient science of astrology and its adaptation to modern needs "makes no claim to being either technical or erudite," says the author. It is intended "for beginners and laymen ready to approach the subject with open minds and willingness to become converted or not, as the case may be." Part 1 gives The history and a description of the science; part 2 gives Practical directions for casting a simple horoscope.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '16 230w

"The author's treatment of the subject is satisfying in every detail. There is a lot of sound information, and from it we may learn to cast our own horoscopes."

+ N Y Times 21:165 Ap 16 '16 600w

"The volume is well illustrated with diagrams and photographs. The book is well above the average book of this type."

+ Springfield Republican p13 J1 2 '16 150w

CRAM, RALPH ADAMS. Gothic quest. rev ed
*$1.50 (3c) Doubleday 720.4 16-26317

A reprint of a series of essays on architecture first published in 1907 with an added essay, "A vigil at arms," born of the present war.

+ A L A Bkl 12:391 My '16

"While one regrets Dr. Cram's rashness of statement and a certain narrowness in his point of view, it can hardly be denied that he has a real and vital message for the art of today. He above all others in America seems willing to make a gospel of his appreciation of the aims and ideals of Gothic ecclesiastical art."

+ — Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 300w

CRAMPTON, CHARLES WARD, comp. Second folk dance book. il *$1.60 Barnes 793 16-22268

"The folk dance book," published seven years ago, has been adopted generally throughout the United States. It has fulfilled its purpose in presenting a clear, concise description of the most useful and attractive folk dances appropriate for schools and playgrounds. In response to a wide-spread demand for more dances, this 'Second folk dance book' is published. During the last seven years many new forms of folk plays and dances have been collected and tested. The best have been selected and are included in this collection." (Introd.) Words and music, with accompanying directions, for over thirty folk dances are presented in the book.

N Y Br Lib News 3:155 O '16

Pittsburgh 21:491 N '16

+ Springfield Republican p6 N 28 '16 80w

Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 20w

CRANDALL, SAMUEL BENJAMIN. Treaties, their making and enforcement. *$6 Byrne 341.2 16-6404

"This book is a greatly enlarged and revised second edition of a doctoral dissertation originally published in 1904 in the 'Columbia university studies in history, economics and public law.' The character of the work is essentially legal, not political or philosophical. . . . Part 1 treats of the history and practice of treaty-making and treaty-enforcement in the United States. Part 2 deals briefly with the treaty law of the principal foreign states seriatim. Part 3 deals with the operation of treaties as between independent sovereignties and the problems of the making, interpretation and termination of treaties in the extraterritorial relations of states. A valuable appendix tabulates in alphabetical order, according to countries, the most important decisions of the United States courts relating to treaties entered into between the United States and various countries."—Am Pol Sci R

"The book is synthetic rather than analytic and the practitioner in law or in departmental work readily finds himself at home amidst a thoroughly logical and scholarly manner of exposition without being drawn off into lengthy argument or critical discussion." A. K. Kuhn

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:609 Ag '16 1000w

"It would be difficult to find anyone more competent to treat the subject than Dr. Crandall, who is a member of the bar of New York and the District of Columbia and a thorough student of international law. He has had the additional advantage of practical experience relative to our treaty relations while working in the Department of state. . . . His conservative discussion throws light on the whole field of international treaty relations and makes of his book an authoritative treatise which every student of international relations and every diplomat must have under his hand." E. C. Stowell

+ Ann Am Acad 68:331 N '16 400w

+ R of Rs 53:627 My '16 100w

CRANE, FRANK. Adventures in common sense. *$1 (2c) Lane 170.4 16-8919

This book of short essays opens with a bit of biography. In 1909 Dr. Crane resigned his position as pastor of a New England church because he found it too secure. He wanted adventure. He wanted too to talk to a larger audience than the church afforded. Because such an audience could be reached thru the newspapers he decided to become a newspaper writer, and because preaching was the one thing he knew how to do, he resolved to preach. The success of his experiment is well known and in this introduction he gives some analysis of the reason for it. The book itself is then made up of a collection of his characteristic contributions, examples of the form he has made peculiarly his own, the short essay.

"Eighty little essays, embodying Doctor Crane's well known philosophy of optimism and helpfulness."

+ A L A Bkl 12:401 Je '16

+ Boston Transcript p7 Je 10 '16 220w

"A cheerful philosophy of life, a belief in ideals, and a command of terse and forceful language, agreeably tinged with humor and enlivened with wit—these are conspicuous among the book's qualities."

+ Dial 60:430 Ap 27 '16 200w

+ Ind 86:185 My 1 '16 70w

"Several volumes have grown out of his brief, terse, unusual essays, of which this is the latest; and if it be not also the best, then the others are surprisingly good."

+ Lit D 52:1853 Je 24 '16 200w

+ N Y Times 21:306 Ag 6 '16 630w

Pittsburgh 21:366 J1 '16 15w

CRAPSEY, ADELAIDE. Verse. $1 Manas press 811 15-27748

"The poems of Adelaide Crapsey, the highly talented daughter of Dr. Algernon Crapsey, are now given to the public, one year after her tragic death. They are beautiful, noble lyrics, written during the last year of her life, at Saranac lake. In them she challenges death to still the ardor of her immortal spirit. Miss Crapsey was instructor in poetics at Smith college."—R of Rs

"These verses are a remarkable testament of a spirit 'flashing unquenched defiance to the stars.' In form they are marvellously chiseled gems." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 8 '16 1100w

"To her genuine poetic ability Miss Crapsey added a considerable technical knowledge of metrics. In the verse form which she invented and called the cinquain she has done some of her best work—clear cut ideas sharply focused, single impressions etched in a few significant lines."

+ Ind 86:144 Ap 24 '16 250w

"Here are the two sources of power, an impulsive and passionate spirit, a chastened and solicitous art; but the fruitfulness is not large, and the union seems rather co-existence than wedlock." O. W. Firkins

+ — Nation 103:59 J1 20 '16 180w

"Her emotion was true and poignant, her craft exacting, her spirit the artist's. She should be reckoned and warmly cherished as a poet." F. H.

+ New Repub 5:313 Ja 22 '16 1050w

Reviewed by R. Le Gallienne

Pub W 89:1324 Ap 15 '16 30w

+ R of Rs 53:248 F '16 60w

CRAWFORD, RUTH. Immigrant in St. Louis. 2 *$0c School of social economy, St. Louis, Mo. 325.7

"Miss Crawford takes up in successive chapters the history of immigration to St. Louis, the housing of the immigrant in St. Louis, his occupation, education, naturalization, and relation to the city's institutions and its life generally. The final chapters are devoted to the work of

CRAWFORD, RUTH—Continued
religious and philanthropic agencies dealing with the immigrant in St. Louis."—Am Econ R

"An excellent example of a local monograph, and of the kind of 'survey work' which should be undertaken in all of our larger American cities. Appended to it, and increasing its value, is a list of practical suggestions regarding the problems of which the monograph treats, forming a social program for St. Louis in her future dealing with the immigrant." C. A. E.

+ Am Econ R 6:682 S '16 120w

"Of especial interest is a discussion of the problem of immigrant education." K. H. Clag-horn

+ Survey 37:313 D 16 '16 180w

CREEL, GEORGE. Wilson and the issues. il
*60c (2c) Century 329 16-19247

"With the possible exception of 1860," writes the author, "the presidential campaign of 1916 presents issues of larger importance and more tremendous meaning than any other in the history of America. . . . It is not simply a president of the United States, that the people are called upon to elect, it is fundamental policies for the United States that the people are called upon to declare." In this work, which is strongly
"pro-Wilson," he reviews the record of the administration to show how the fundamental principles of democracy have been upheld and how democratic government has been advanced. Contents: Democracy's test; Mexico, Belgium and the Lusitania; "National honor"; Manufacturing hysteria; The national defense; The case of Joseph Daniels; "America first"; "Anything to beat Wilson"; The ancient faith.

"Mr. Creel's volume has the single merit of vigor; but it makes of caution and soberness most complete and boisterous abstractions. His book is a very jolly book, and it doubtless springs from an intimate conviction; but it fails to impress one as based upon any careful consideration of the facts at issue. . . . The scepticism Mr. Wilson raises is something of which
Mr. Creel is entirely unaware. It is, of course, a scepticism not of a man but of a system. It is the scepticism which refuses to believe that any man has the right to neglect the power of organized political thought." H. J. Laski

— Dial 61:304 O 19 '16 1250w

— Ind 88:33 O 2 '16 40w

"With the right or wrong of the movement which Mr. Creel so profoundly believes in we are not, of course, called upon to deal. The production of a quite unprecedented form of political appeal, marked by real eloquence and instinct with vigorous conviction, is an incident in our political literature well worth noting."

+ N Y Times 21:443 O 22 '16 480w

"Mr. Creel does not practice literary restraint and some exaggeration will be found in his statements, but in general in dealing with a subject he hits upon some aspect of it that is in need of being brought before the country in this vivid fashion."

+ — Springfield Republican p8 S 28 '16 360w

CREIGHTON, REV. OSWIN. With the twenty-ninth division in Gallipoli. il *$1.25 Longmans 940.91 A16-1080

"With the twenty-ninth division in Gallipoli, by the Church of England chaplain to the 86th brigade, is a record of some three months of that enterprise [campaign in Gallipoli]. The author joined the division early in last year, and by the end of March was in Alexandria with the Royal and the Lancashire fusiliers.
He is content to provide us with a plain narrative of the campaign so far as it came under his own observation, depending almost entirely on his diary and letters. In addition, he has secured accounts of various actions from officers engaged in them."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

N Y Br Lib News 3:137 S '16

"Interesting as a simple record of the human aspects of the contest as they presented themselves from day to day."

+ R of Rs 54:572 N '16 80w

"The author provides no descriptive account of his own personal impressions, nor does he indulge in psychological studies of the officers and men; he just tells us what he saw and heard from first-hand evidence. . . . Sketch maps and numerous photographs add greatly to a modest volume of real interest."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p327 J1
13 '16 1050w

CRESSWELL, CLARICE M. Making and breaking of Almansur. *$1.35 (1c) Dodd
16-26322

A story of Spain in the tenth century. Cordova, then under the rule of the Caliphate, is the scene. The central character, known as Almansur, the 'Assisted of Allah,' has risen from comparative obscurity to a position of importance. There is a chance that he may rise still higher. The reigning caliph is dying, and by espousing the cause of the heir, a young boy, Almansur may become virtual ruler. But he is determined to marry a slave girl whom he devotedly loves and retire from public life. Fate however robs him of the girl and he dedicates his life to revenge on those responsible for her death. The story records his steady rise in power and his sudden downfall, and the end foreshadows the decline of Cordova.

"A vivid, dramatic tale full of life and color but too long and too true in its portrayal of the oriental cruelty and craft of the time to appeal to many readers."

+ A L A Bk 12:383 My '16

"The glory that was Cordova is reconstructed by an appreciative hand. . . . The author confesses to certain divergencies from history for the sake of dramatic construction, and from an artistic standpoint she is justified in these; but granting that events are often veiled in obscurity and historians hardly ever in agreement over minor details, we do not always find here the generally accepted story."

+ — Ath 1915,1:265 Mr 20 330w

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 6 '16 230w

"The historical outline, at any rate, is there.
How truly the spirit of that far-off age is interpreted is another question. The anxious effort to endow the hero with qualities which twentieth century Americans will find sympathetic seems a mistake. The best that can be said for it is that it has resulted in a flowery addition to 'harem literature'—that lately neglected (and little to be regretted) branch of fiction."

+ — Nation 102:461 Ap 27 '16 470w

The plot of the story is admirable; firmly knit, absorbingly interesting, with no weak links in the chain of consequences. It is a long story, but not a bit too long; swift moving, dramatic,
vivid, colorful, with all the romance and glamour and much of the sinister quality of the East.
And hand in hand with the interest of the novel's complicated and very ingenious plot go the interest and the fascination of its setting."

+ N Y Times 21:49 F 13 '16 1050w

"It is a pity that this novel is not free from the physical horrors associated with such fiction, for it is a long and original piece of work."

+ — Spec 114:657 My 8 '15 30w

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 6 '16 320w

CRESSY, EDWARD. Outline of industrial history, with special reference to problems of the present day. *$1.10 (1c) Macmillan
330.9 16-10947

A study of English industrial history. The first three chapters give a brief outline of economic and social history before 1700. From that date on industrial development is treated under the headings: Scientific and technical progress since 1700; Facilities for commercial development; The evolution of industrial management; Industry and politics. Thruout the book the importance of scientific discovery as an instrument of change is emphasized. A list of books for further reading is appended and there is an index.

"An excellent summary of English economic history, distinguished from others by the subordination of earlier periods, and by a more comprehensive and more detailed treatment of the past two centuries. Students will find it both interesting and instructive."

+ Am Econ R 6:359 Je '16 38w

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 26 '16 200w.

"For American students, one could wish that more references had been made to American experience."

+ — J Pol Econ 24:829 O '16 240w

"A valuable contribution to the education of every young man who desires to study the foundations of all modern problems."

+ Sat R 121:92 Ja 22 '16 210w

CRIDLAND, ROBERT B. Practical landscape gardening. il *$1.50 De La Mare 710

16-13665

A book based on articles that have appeared in the Florists' Exchange. "The book is designed to appeal, in particular, to that large body of suburban home owners who have moderate sized properties susceptible of artistic arrangement and beautification." (Foreword) The chapters take up: Importance of careful planning; Locating the house—exposure; Arrangement of walks, drives and entrances; Construction of walks and drives; Lawns: grading, construction and upkeep; Ornamental planting of trees and shrubs; The flower garden; Architectural features of the garden; Hardy borders and rose gardens; Wild gardens. A final chapter is then devoted to planting plans, accompanied by keys, and followed by a glossary and an index. The volume is exceptionally well illustrated.

Cleveland p116 Ag '16 40w

Ind 87:32 Jl 3 '16 30w

N Y Br Lib News 3:126 Ag '16 50w

Pittsburgh 21:406 O '16 50w

St Louis 15:16 Ja '17 10w

+ Springfield Republican p7 N 25 '16 80w

CRILE, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Man—an adaptive mechanism; ed. by Annette Austin. il *$2.50 (3c) Macmillan 612 16-8717

Some suggestion as to Dr. Crile's theory of man as a psycho-chemical mechanism was given in his "Mechanistic view of war and peace," published last year. This larger work is the result of over twenty years of study and laboratory experiment. In it Dr. Crile has assembled the data that bear on the thesis: "that man is essentially an energy-transforming mechanism, obeying the laws of physics, as do other mechanisms." Life in man, as in all other living forms, is a continual reaction to environment, and the reactions of any given animal depend on the nervous mechanism that has been developed in the course of its evolution. "Action patterns" is the term used by Dr. Crile to denote the tendency in the organism to respond to a given stimulus in a certain way. "The action patterns of each species definitely represent the processes employed by that species for self-perpetuation." The bearing of his theory on health and disease is given consideration in one section of the book.

+ A L A Bkl 13:15 O '16

Reviewed by M. P. Allison
Bookm 43:209 Ap '16 270w

"The style is unusually clear and the book will interest many lay readers."

+ Ind 88:124 O 16 '16 240w

"Prof. Crile seems to us to have passed insidiously from a scientific materialism which is admittedly a progressive working hypothesis in physiological research to a philosophical materialism which holds that a true and full description of the world can be given in terms of matter and motion. . . . We have found nothing in this vigorous volume to incline us to transfer the author or ourselves from the category of organism to any other."

+ Nature 98:288 D 14 '16 750w

+ N Y Times 21:262 Je 25 '16 180w

Reviewed by M. A. Hopkins

Pub W 89:1032 Mr 18 '16 550w

+ Springfield Republican p8 Je 8 '16 600w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p311 Je 29 '16 100w

CROMER, EVELYN BARING, 1st earl of. Political and literary essays. 3d series *$3.25 Macmillan 320.4 16-22779

"Nearly all these essays (from The Spectator, Quarterly Review, Nineteenth Century and National Review) are political, and many often touch more or less directly on the war. The topics include various aspects of German affairs, the Young Turk, democracy and diplomacy, American neutrality, John Hay, the Memoirs of Thiers, Delane, &c."—Ath

Ath p279 Je '16 50w

"We feel bound to remark that here and there he seems to fall short of his subject altogether. . . . These 'Political and literary essays' are nevertheless a pleasure to read, as the outcome of a mind of natural sagacity ripened by long and severe experience."

+ — Ath p322 Jl '16 700w

"A practical politician, he is open to ideals; he can disagree without rancour; he does not expect the millennium to-morrow; and, decisive as we have called his intellect, he is always chary of prediction."

+ Sat R 121:541 Je 3 '16 850w

"He has a real fund of wisdom in its truest sense. We mean long and varied experience coupled with the brain-power that gets the fullest value out of all experience. Lord Cromer has these, together with an alertness of mind that keeps abreast of the times and he has the faculty of imparting to others the well-digested knowledge of his own receptive mind. His life's work has made him intimately acquainted with the movements and tendencies of modern European or world politics, and there can be little topical writing to-day that does not touch upon them."

+ Spec 116:783 Je 21 '16 1350w

"Most of the essays are reprinted reviews from our weekly contemporary the Spectator. They are therefore short, often too short, indeed, for the magnitude of the subjects dealt with. . . . Only one or two, taken from certain monthly reviews, run to a dozen pages, and only one, that on Modern Austria, covers twenty-five pages. In this last article Lord Cromer . . . gives us the judgment of a clear-headed and experienced statesman upon one of the most important aspects of the present war, taking for his text the well-known books of Mr. Wickham Steed and Mr. Seton-Watson, together with the very able survey of the Italian writer Virginio Gayda, now happily accessible in an English translation."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p257 Je 1 '16 1250w

CROMIE, WILLIAM JAMES. Keeping physically fit. il *$1 (4½c) Macmillan 613 16-2178,

The author outlines "common-sense exercises for the whole family." "Every one," he says, "from the strongest athlete down to the bed-ridden invalid, needs a certain amount of muscular exercise," but the ones in whom he is most interested are the busy man and woman whose occupations keep them indoors and provide a minimum of muscular activity. There are chapters on: Exercise for the busy man; Exercise for the nervous woman; Exercise for the growing child; Deep-breathing exercises; Additional methods for keeping fit; Mind vs. body. Articles contributed to the Outlook form the basis for these chapters.

"Simple exercises seasoned with sensible, optimistic advice. Many illustrations, no index."

+ A L A Bkl 12:321 Ap '16

+ Cleveland p39 Ap '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:46 Mr '16

Springfield Republican p15 Ap 28 '16 70w

CROTCH, W. WALTER. Pageant of Dickens. il *$2.25 Scribner 823 (Eng ed 16-10836)

"A series of character sketches from the pages of Dickens. As the author describes his own method, he has 'taken groups of Dickens characters, and tried to lead them past in orderly array—allowing them ever and anon to reveal their human foibles, to break out into exulting song or exuberant mirth, to pull at our heart strings and our sorrow, and to show us the gift of healing in their tears.'—R of Rs

CROTCH, W. WALTER—Continued

"A mistake common to many students of Dickens and of other writers is made at the outset by Mr. Crotch. He looks upon Dickens primarily as a missionary or preacher, and secondarily as a story-teller. This is, of course, an absolutely false view to take of any novelist. One by one Mr. Crotch marches the Dickensian procession before us; one by one he proclaims their greatness and the greatness of the man who made them live in the pages of fiction; one by one he defends them against even the gentlest word of critical depreciation." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 25 '16 1850w

"Despite its faults, Mr. Crotch's book is one to give many an agreeable half-hour to the casual reader who has devoured all of Dickens and wants more."

+ Dial 61:68 J1 15 '16 450w

+ Lit D 53:468 Ag 26 '16 200w

R of Rs 53:629 My '16 70w

"A book that may well be recommended to those who are trying to fill the leisure of convalescence, for it is not only well worth reading for its own sake, but because it will send its readers back to the master himself. The 'ethical philosophy' of Dickens is given a prominent place throughout the book."

+ Spec 116:194 F 5 '16 330w

CROTHERS, SAMUEL MCCHORD. Pleasures of an absentee landlord, and other essays. *$1.25 (3c) Houghton 814 16-23051

The possession of a farm in New Hampshire leads the author to write on the joys of absentee landlordism, and to the same essay he adds "remarks on the irresponsible reading of history." Other papers in the book are: Protective coloring in education; Concerning the liberty of teaching; The charm of seventeenth-century prose; Thomas Fuller and the "worthies"; A literary clinic; The alphabetical mind; The gregariousness of minor poets; The taming of Leviathan; The strategy of peace. Many of the essays are reprinted from the Atlantic Monthly. "The literary clinic," a very characteristic Crothers' conceit, is the one which attracted most attention on magazine publication.

+ A L A Bkl 13:209 F '17

"There is nothing formidable or portentous in these essays; their only missionary work is the mental stimulus of a wide knowledge and an appealing humor. Their impact upon the reader's mind is as light as thistledown, but it is nevertheless invigorating. . . . Common sense is the essence of all of Dr. Crothers' doctrines." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '16 1350w

+ Ind 88:505 D 18 '16 190w

+ Nation 103:590 D 21 '16 270w

"Dr. Crothers is (with apologies to his Americanism) a British essayist of the old school. . . . One regrets that he could not have walked down the Strand with Elia, and that Hazlitt never told him literary scandals, and that Coleridge never brought him to the tea table of William and Dorothy."

+ N Y Times 21:578 D 31 '16 1000w

+ No Am 205:150 Ja '17 320w

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 21 '16 710w

CROW, CARL. Japan and America: a contrast. *$1.50 (2½c) McBride 915.2 16-5586

The author sees in Japan "a menace, not only to the United States but to all western civilization." The Japan of which he writes is a land "of farms and factories and fishermen, ruled by a little group of ambitious statesmen and dominated by the imperialistic aims which dominated Germany." His aim in this book is "to measure the power of this Japan and the restraints on that power; note the points at issue between Japan and the United States; and state the methods which past history has taught us we may expect Japan to use in accomplishing her aims." Contents: Problems of the Pacific; The real estate point of view; Japan's great illusion; Japan's wonderful progress; The cost of progress; Dangerous thoughts; The two Japans; Points of contact; The American question in Japan; What Japan thinks of us; Japan's aims in China; The raid on Tsingtau; Japan's tortuous diplomacy; Is Japan a menace?

A L A Bkl 12:423 Je '16

"Mr. Crow's publishers tell us in a foreword that 'More nonsense has been written about Japan than about any other modern country.' Many readers of this book, while agreeing heartily with the foreword to this extent will mentally question, why add to the flood tide of nonsense?"

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 8 '16 500w

"Written in rapid journalistic style and strongly biased."

Cleveland p60 My '16 80w

"He is inclined to make assertions that cannot possibly be proved and yet which may possess an element of truth. . . . The most valuable portions of Mr. Crow's volume are those describing conditions in Japan to-day. His picture of poverty, heavy taxation, and retarded social development seems to weaken the force of his thesis that so harassed a country could at the same time impose its will upon China and the United States." P. J. Treat

+ Dial 61:21 Je 22 '16 700w

"Three chapters deal with the recent moves in China and give the Japanese ultimatum as presented to China and as published abroad, two quite different papers. The book will set the western reader on guard before news from Japan, but would be more convincing if it allowed one least virtue to the Japanese."

+ Ind 86:304 My 22 '16 80w

Lit D 52:911 Ap 1 '16 180w

"He evidently has no conception that religion, instead of being a negligible quantity, is a vital element in the final psychological analysis of a people, rulers and ruled. A people is what it reveres. . . . The following passage (p. 32) is therefore a mere tissue of blunders."

+ Nation 103:487 N 23 '16 1450w

"In reading Mr. Crow's book the thought persists that it is sincerely written. There appears no race antagonism nor prejudices because of widely varying viewpoints. Instead we find intelligent comment on the difference of Japanese ideals from those of our own—their economics, morals, and religion; the entire structure of their national life and philosophy is set before the reader in a delightfully clear manner."

+ N Y Times 21:226 My 28 '16 760w

"Whether one agrees with it or not, the book is worthy of very careful reading."

+ R of Rs 53:501 Ap '16 100w

"Frankly sensational and actually, if not so frankly, jingoistic."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 10 '16 220w

"Perhaps the best of the recent books on this subject for the average library and the best work of the author."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:226 My '16 60w

CROW, MRS. MARTHA (FOOTE). Lafayette. il *50c (1c) Macmillan 16-11603

The gallant Frenchman who is one of the favorite heroes of American youth is made the subject of one of the volumes in this series of life stories of "Great Americans." The author emphasizes the ideal of liberty which led Lafayette to throw in his lot with that of the struggling colonies.

"Usable with boys and girls in the grammar or high school."

+ A L A Bkl 13:38 O '16

+ Ind 87:236 Ag 14 '16 50w

"The author writes interestingly and vividly of Lafayette's early life in France."

+ Nation 103:242 S 7 '16 250w

'N Y Br Lib News 3:107 J1 '16

+ R of Rs 55:215 F '17 170w

+ Springfield Republican p8 J1 6 '16 230w

CROY, MAE SAVELL. 1000 shorter ways around the house. *$1.50 (2c) Putnam 640 A16-1520

A book of household hints, classified and arranged for convenient reference. The preface says, "The aim of this volume is brevity. The author has tried all the way through to present the suggestions in such form that they can be taken in at a glance when one is hurriedly looking for a remedy or a way." The general headings under which the suggestions are arranged are: Architectural ideas; Interior decoration; Systematic housework; Modern conveniences; Cooking; The children; Clothing; In the sick-room; Sanitation; Personal appearance; Visiting; Gardening; Miscellaneous household hints. The volume is indexed and at the end there are blank pages for personal notes.

+ A L A Bkl 13:204 F '17

"There are a great many simple prescriptions in the book that will be helpful to housekeepers who wish to be efficient and economical."

+ N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 80w

St Louis 14:395 N '16

"The most comprehensive of the household aid books."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:451 D '16 40w

CRUMP, IRVING E. Boys' book of firemen. il *$1.25 (2½c) Dodd 614.8 16-20302

A book for boys devoted to those heroes of everyday life, the firemen. The author is a newspaper man who has made a specialty of writing up fires and who has made it his business to become thoroly acquainted with the workings of a modern fire department. His stories are all of New York but for heroism they could without doubt be duplicated in any other city of the country. Contents: Cheating the flames; Fighting the fire monster with the fireman; "Rolling" with the "hookie" men; When the fire boats are called; The men who go in unarmed; Mile a minute rescue men and other aids to fire fighters; The nerve center of the fire department; The force that crushes the fire demon; Smoke-eaters in the making; Medal of honor men.

"More interesting and up-to-date than Hill's 'Fighting a fire' (A L A Catalog, 1904)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:181 Ja '17

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:411 D '16 90w

CUBBERLEY, ELLWOOD PATTERSON. Public school administration. (Riverside textbooks in education) il *$1.75 (1½c) Houghton 379.1 16-5599

In this book an attempt has been made "to state the fundamental principles underlying the proper organization and administration of public education in the United States; to state briefly the historical evolution of the principal administrative officers and problems; and to point out what seem to be the most probable lines of future evolution." (Introd.) The three parts of the book are devoted to: Outlines of state educational organization; The city school district and its problems; City administrative experience applied. Questions and suggestions for discussion and lists of selected references follow each chapter. The introduction further states that the book is taken up with city problems because "almost all of the great recent progress in organization, etc., has taken place there."

+ A L A Bkl 13:60 N '16

"Teachers of all grades, as well as those concerned with the broader aspects of education, will find the book worthy of attention."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 5 '16 240w

"Of the chapters on the selection and tenure of teachers, on their training and supervision, pay and promotion, courses of study, promotions, testing results, etc., I need not speak.

These subjects are discust in that large, wise way which characterizes the book as a whole. I know of no work in which this important subject is treated so profoundly and with such constructive helpfulness."

+ Educ R 52:191 S '16 1500w

"This book puts into the hands of the various departments of education which are dealing with school administration a new body of material and a very vigorous statement of the fundamental principles that ought to control city school organization. The school superintendent would do well to purchase even at his own expense a sufficient number of copies to put into the hands of every member of the school board."

+ El School J 16:406 Ap '16 780w

"The author has sensed the needs and the possibilities of our public school system; he not only has large vision, but he has served his apprenticeship and knows the system as no one does who has not come into intimate contact with its problems. . . . He has not hesitated to give the stamp of his approval and the weight of his conviction on all of the large questions of school policy." J. H. Johnston

+ School R 24:559 S '16 950w

Springfield Republican p19 Ap 7 '16 280w

CUBBERLEY, ELLWOOD PATTERSON, and ELLIOTT, EDWARD CHARLES. State and county school administration. v 2 il *$2.50 Macmillan 379 15-20991

"A collection of those documentary sources which are of evident value to the student of the history of education in America. The 700 pages contain public papers relating to the disposal of national and state lands for school purposes, beginning with the ordinance of 1787 and ending with the agricultural extension act of 1914; papers relating to federal agencies for education, as the Smithsonian institution, the children's bureau, and the bureau of education; relating to state educational administration, and to county, town, and district school systems. There is also a selection of reports and studies concerning methods of financing the school system, and the governmental control of school buildings, texts, and supplies; concerning school sanitation, and concerning special relations between the state and delinquent or defective children. Even the relation of the church to the schools is covered, and there are documents upon such non-state agencies as the Carnegie foundation and General education board."—Nation

"A book that is likely to be a standard in its field. Some of the selections from non-official documents and utterances might well have been omitted and others that are not now included substituted for them. On the whole, however, the book is to be unreservedly commended as indispensable to the student of American school administration."

+ Educ R 51:420 Ap '16 160w

"The volume contains the most authoritative data for sources upon the multitude of questions involved in educational administration, carefully arranged and edited."

+ Nation 102:317 Mr 16 '16 200w

Pittsburgh 21:110 Mr '16

"This is a book for the serious student of educational administration, and not for the general, or at least the superficial, reader. It is an excellent book of reference for all who are concerned with the administration of large educational units. It will make an indispensable textbook for universities, colleges, and normal schools offering courses relating to the administration of education. The book ought also to be indispensable to all legislators who propose or vote on educational measures. The authors do not offer a comprehensive view respecting the support and control of education which should be undertaken by the federal government or by states or counties. They present the records relating to these matters, and these records show definitely marked tendencies; but there is little or no argument in the book regarding wise or unwise policies which have been or are about to be adopted by states. We are informed, however, that a companion volume to

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

CUBBERLEY and ELLIOTT—Continued
this source book will soon be published, and that this will deal with principles." M. V.
O'Shea

+ School R 24:170 F '16 750w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Golden woman. II
*$1.35 (1c) Jacobs 13-7526

The scene of the story is a valley in the Montana hills. Here comes Joan Stanmore, hoping for a life of retirement from the active world. Her aunt, a strange woman supposedly possessed of psychic powers, has persuaded the girl that a curse rests on her. Good fortune, which turns immediately to bad, is her gift to all with whom she comes in contact. The discovery of gold in the little valley immediately after her arrival seems to bear out the first half of the prophecy and in the series of disasters that follow she sees the fulfillment of the remainder. But because a strong, simple man is brave enough to laugh at forebodings, the pall is lifted from the girl's spirit and with him she joyfully faces the future.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 1 '16 400w

"A series of coincidences whose number proves something of a strain on the reader's credulity develops the ingenious plot. The tale has plenty of incident, and its real hero, the black horse Caesar, wins one's liking and admiration."

— + N Y Times 21:199 My 7 '16 260w

"Some irritating qualities noticeable in many of his other stories, are also present in this one. His tales are not fundamentally gloomy, but he seems unable, or unwilling, to lighten them with even a dash of humor. Mr. Cullum shows no great mastery of his human material, but he uses a large canvas, composes a sweeping background and fills in with effective scenic descriptions."

— + Springfield Republican p17 Ap 23 '16 280w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Men who wrought. II
*$1.35 (1c) Jacobs 16-13972

All his earlier books have been stories of the Canadian Northwest, but in this novel the author turns his attention to international affairs. The war is over when the story opens, but it has been concluded by a "patched-up peace." Great Britain and Germany are still open enemies and Germany is planning new aggressions. But her chief inventor, the man who had perfected the submarine, has lived to regret his part in the late conflict, and to prevent another outbreak he is willing to give his latest invention, a submersible merchantman, immune to submarine attacks, to Great Britain. With the aid of his beautiful daughter, he convinces Ruxton Farlow, son of a great English shipbuilder, of his sincerity. Germany, however, learns of his plans, tries to regain the secret, but is outwitted. At the end the author shows his true allegiance by suggesting that the British empire should be ruled from the heart of Canada.

"It is an earnest, vivid and thrilling story, and is markedly superior to any of Mr. Cullum's northwestern romances."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 10 '16 320w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p202 Ap 27 '16 370w

CUNLIFFE, JOHN WILLIAM, comp. Poems of the great war. *$1.50 Macmillan 821.08
16-23421

Professor Cunliffe of Columbia university has compiled this book in the interests of the Belgian scholarship committee. The classified table of contents shows that the poetry of Australia, Canada, India, the United Kingdom and the United States is represented. Of his principles of choice the compiler says: "While poetic merit has been, of course, the paramount consideration, I have endeavored to exercise a catholic judgment, and to give fair representation to various schools of thought and expression as well as to the various phases of the war."

"A notable collection both from the point of literary merit and spirit. It includes but one poem of any author so that, not only is the better known work represented but many fugitive poems find place."

+ A L A Bkl 13:161 Ja '17

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 44:510 Ja '17 650w

+ Outlook 115:160 Ja 24 '17 90w

R of Rs 54:568 N '16 50w

"It represents the fruit of assured and specific inspiration."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Ja 19 '17 800w

CUNNINGHAM, EBENEZER. Relativity and the electron theory. (Monographs on physics) diags *$1.10 Longmans 530 A16-252

"The author has a large work on this subject printed by the Cambridge university press and now presents a short monograph, from which the more difficult mathematical work is omitted. . . . The titles of the chapters are: 1, Introductory; 2, The origin of the principle; 3, The relativity of space and time; 4, The relativity of the electro-magnetic vectors; 5, Mechanics and the principle of relativity; 6, Minkowski's four-dimension vectors; 7, The new mechanics; 8, Relativity and an objective aether. Throughout the work emphasis is laid upon the physical foundations of relativity and upon its physical consequences. Something is also said of the philosophical meaning of relativity."—Science

"The principle of relativity has gradually acquired a fundamental position in theoretical physics, and the appearance of an introductory monograph on the subject will be welcomed by all who wish to have a knowledge of its essentials. The work is one of considerable merit, and provides a really good and sound introduction to the subject with which it deals." W. W.

+ Nature 97:30 Mr 9 '16 500w

"A book which may be read without serious effort, even by persons not specialists in the theory of relativity or in mathematical physics. The natural book with which to compare Cunningham's is Carmichael's monograph, 'The theory of relativity,' published by John Wiley and sons. So different is the point of view that even though the results overlap to a large extent, any reader of one of the monographs would find much additional interest in reading the other. The mathematician should begin with Carmichael and the physicist with Cunningham." E. B. Wilson

+ Science n s 43:688 My 12 '16 280w

CUNNINGHAM, GUSTAVUS WATTS. Study in the philosophy of Bergson. *$1.25 Longmans 194 16-14108

"The author of this instructive little volume discusses some of the principal points in Bergson's philosophy from the standpoint of a modified Hegelian, and relates Bergson, so far as the problem of knowledge is concerned, to Kant and Hegel. The remainder of the volume is devoted to a critical discussion of some of the fundamental ideas of the 'philosophie nouvelle,' stress being laid on duration and teleology. . . . Against Bergson's doctrine of duration the writer urges that a fundamental characteristic of conscious experience is omitted, namely, anticipation. This introduces the notion of teleology which as usually understood is thoroughly abhorrent to Bergson. . . . As against the doctrine of Bergson with its undetermined future the author suggests a theory of reality which he calls creative finalism. This is a teleology the ends of which are created as the world process moves on."—Int J Ethics

"The book is very simply written and despite its controversial character is consistently readable." J. R. K.

+ Int J Ethics 27:121 O '16 350w

N Y Br Lib News 3:107 J1 '16

Pratt p6 O '16

The Times [London] Lit Sup p323 J1 6 '16 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p356 J1 27 '16 1050w

CUNNINGHAM, WILLIAM. English influence on the United States. (Cambridge historical ser.) *$1.25 (4c) Putnam 320.4 16-23640

The author, fellow of Trinity college, Cambridge, and archdeacon of Ely, was formerly lecturer on economic history at Harvard. This volume is based on lectures delivered while in the United States. "They were primarily intended to show the close connection between English and American life; but they also emphasise the fact that from the first there have been divergences between English institutions, as they were maintained and developed in the old country, and the similar social elements as transplanted and moulded by the environment of a new world and the experience it afforded." (Preface) The subjects of the essays are: The township; Town planning; Public buildings; The college course; Modern social problems; The responsibilities of national power and influence.

A L A Bkl 13:199 F '17

Boston Transcript p7 N 4 '16 230w

Cleveland p158 D '16 60w

"The same merits which have made Mr. Cunningham's 'Growth of English industry' a classical work, its breadth, its solidity, the ability to weave the most diverse authority into something like an integrated and artistic whole, are here present in a full degree," H. J. Laski
+ Dial 61:530 D 14 '16 950w

Ind 88:242 N 6 '16 80w

Int J Ethics 27:268 Ja '17 60w

"Notable, though not novel, is his discussion of the strong influence of the Scotch universities upon American colleges in general and Princeton in particular."

+ Nation 103:614 D 28 '16 160w

R of Rs 55:216 F '17 60w

"The author discusses very frankly the historic reasons for the lack of public spirit, in our sense, in America, and the curious detachment of the average American from world-politics, like that of Englishmen before the Armada came."

+ Spec 117:242 Ag 26 '16 220w

"The book, being a series of lectures, is hardly more than an introduction to the subject. As such it is interesting and instructive, for Dr. Cunningham is able to draw significant generalities from the data which he studies, and he writes with praiseworthy simplicity and limpidity, and in a judicious and impartial spirit. . . . That he has ended his admirable and moderate-tempered study on the imperialistic and militaristic note is greatly to be deplored."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 1200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p322 J1 6 '16 40w

CUREAU, ADOLPHE LOUIS. Savage man in Central Africa; a study of primitive races in the French Congo; tr. by E. Andrews. il *12s 6d T. Fisher Unwin, London 572 16-4442

"As a governmental official of the French Congo M. Cureau had opportunities that do not lie in the path of the explorer, the trader, or the sportsman. In a few telling sentences, that recall certain pages in Mr. Conrad's 'Heart of darkness,' he pictures the miasmatic swamps of the Lower Congo." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The larger part of the book deals with the family and the village. An intensely interesting discussion of the bisexual couple is followed by the related subjects of children, slaves, and the history from birth to death of the individual's life in the family. Considering the village as a physical entity, the author describes its actual building, arrangement, and site; as a living entity such phases as time, hygiene, diet, clothing, occupation, and commerce are taken up and discussed in a masterly fashion. Finally come two chapters on the village as an organized and as a moral entity; the first being concerned with legislation, authority, debates, and war, and the second with belief and religion." (Nation)

"M. Cureau seems to have had several years' experience of a particular area in West Africa, which is in many ways far from typical of the whole continent. It is therefore a pity that he generalizes so freely and dogmatically about 'the negro,' for we fancy that some, at any rate, of his conclusions will not pass unchallenged by anthropologists. . . . M. Cureau, we gather, has a sufficient knowledge of several native languages, and, further, of medicine, to ensure the collection of fairly trustworthy first-hand information; so that his facts, at any rate, are entitled to a respectful hearing, however we may quarrel with his deductions."

+ Ath 1915,2:391 N 27 1300w

"One of the best books ever written on that country. Whether considered as an intensive ethnological, or indeed even anthropological, study of the primitive black races, or as a logical contribution to sociology, or as a compendium of exciting anecdotes, the critic can find little fault with it. In addition, it possesses the rarest of all traits in books of this character: it is real literature. The translation from the French has been made by E. Andrews, and, while one feels the undercurrent of French art and artlessness, yet the English technique and vocabulary are most satisfying."

+ Nation 102:172 F 10 '16 530w

N Y Br Lib News 3:37 Mr '16

"M. Cureau chooses to put the observation and experience of twenty years at the service of his readers without a touch of pedantry. Perhaps this has something to do with the peculiar freshness and charm of his book. He shares with most men of science of his race the instinct of orderly arrangement and the gift of terseness and precision, but he has besides an original literary style, which is very well reproduced in the translation."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p27 Ja 20 '16 900w

CUREL, FRANÇOIS, vicomte de. False saint (L'envers d'une sainte); a play in three acts; tr. by Barrett H. Clark, with an introd. by Archibald Henderson. (Drama league ser. of plays) *75c Doubleday 842 16-10676

This play presents the French view of the double standard of morals. Influenced by an older woman who had once been the rival of her mother and who is acting now solely for revenge, Julie, the heroine, breaks her engagement on the ground that her lover's past record is not clean. "The lover's view of the case is evidently the author's: 'You ask me whether it's true that I have had mistresses? Yes, madam, several.—What of it? . . . Do you imagine for an instant that there is a single man—unless he's not well—who when he marries is all you blame me for not being?' If we accept the French point of view in these matters, it is impossible to feel the least sympathy for Julie, who is merely a spiteful vixen." (Dial)

Reviewed by H. E. Woodbridge

— Dial 62:69 Ja 25 '17 280w

N Y Br Lib News 3:92 Je '16

Pittsburgh 21:400 O '16

Pratt p34 Ja '17

CURRY, SAMUEL SILAS. How to add ten years to your life and to double its satisfactions. $1 (3c) Boston school of expression, Pierce bldg., Copley square, Boston 613.7 15-17826

A simple program which aims to give one a common sense method of keeping well, living long, and making the very most of life. There is an inspirational note struck in the first chapter, "Significance of morning," as the writer gleans from "Pippa passes" a lesson to show that human development is not only a material thing but is poetic and exalted. Further, he presents some of the theories regarding long life; defines exercise; offers a program of exercises; gives suggestions on how to practice the exercises; discusses work and play; and closes with a chapter on the significance of sleep.

"Most books on like subjects are apt to be vague. Mr. Curry's book gives exact instructions."

+ R of Rs 54:123 J1 '16 70w

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

CURTIS, EVERETT NICHOLS. Manual of the Sherman law. *$3.50 Baker, Voorhis 338.9 15-15020

"A handy volume which may be slipped in the pocket and which provides ready reference for judicial authority or expressions of opinion upon points of law in the federal anti-trust acts. . . . It is decidedly comprehensive in character, being divided into 20 chapters containing 667 sections. In addition it contains an appendix giving the text of the acts together with an index of close upon 50 pages."—Am Econ R

"It is probably the best handbook that we have at present. In many respects it resembles closely Mr. W. W. Thornton's extensive treatise on the Sherman act which appeared in 1913. Inasmuch as the great proportion of legal decisions on trusts have been under the Sherman act rather than under other acts, the ground which is covered by the two treatises is not greatly dissimilar. The chief value of Mr. Curtis' treatment lies in its brevity." W. H. S. Stevens

+ Am Econ R 6:146 Mr '16 150w

"It would seem that an act passed by Congress twenty-five years ago should be clear before the law and the world, but complications and confusion in the Sherman Act of July 2, 1892, seem destined to go on forever. Mr. Curtis, who is a member of the Boston bar, has produced a volume which will tend to clarify many previously puzzling points and also to show what has been done by courts in many cases under perhaps the most famous law in the history of the United States."

+ Boston Transcript p8 J1 24 '15 170w

CURTIS, JOHN GREEN. Harvey's views on the use of the circulation of the blood. il *$1.50 (3c) Columbia univ. press 612.1 16-684

A book based on a lecture delivered before the Johns Hopkins hospital historical club in 1907. Professor Curtis, the author, died in 1913 and his manuscript has been prepared for publication by his colleague, Frederic S. Lee. The purpose of the work is to set forth "Harvey's true position in the world of physiological thought." The quotations from Harvey's writings, which were all in Latin, are in part the translations of Dr. Robert Willis and in part from new renderings by Dr. Curtis.

"An admirable little book. It is concise but full of matter, is scholarly and accurate, and, for those who concern themselves with the history of ideas, very interesting. . . . The notes of reference to quotations are constant and accurate; would they had been, or most of them, footnotes. Incessantly to be turning to and fro between the text and an appendix is a nuisance." Clifford Allbutt

+ Nature 97:217 My 11 '16 850w

"On reaching the end of this little volume one is seized with regret not only that the book itself has come to an end, but that the work of the author is finished too. There are many who can carry forward investigations and complete new discoveries, but there are very few who are made competent by their thorough scholarship to understand, and through their delightful style to explain, the evolution of scientific thought from one age to another." P. M. Dawson

+ Science n s 44:175 Ag 4 '16 2150w

CURTIS, LIONEL, ed. Commonwealth of nations. pt 1 *$2.50 (1c) Macmillan 342.4 (17-1660)

This is the first of the three parts in which the report of the various Round table groups formed in different parts of the United Kingdom is to be presented. The purpose of these groups, organized in 1910 in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, was to study "the nature of citizenship in the British empire, and the mutual relations of the several communities thereof." In part 1, which was printed for private circulation in 1914 with the title "The project of a commonwealth, part 1," and which is here reprinted for general circulation, it was "proposed to deal with the question how and why the British commonwealth came to exist, to trace the causes which led to its disruption in 1783, and to the establishment of a separate commonwealth in America." (Preface) Many writers have contributed to the report, but the editor assumes responsibility for any general conclusions expressed.

A L A Bkl 13:147 Ja '17

"The historical chapters are excellently written, and present certain aspects of history in a more satisfactory manner than any other work that we know."

+ Ath p579 D '16 490w

+ Int J Ethics 27:263 Ja '17 570w

N Y Br Lib News 3:153 O '16 30w

St Louis 14:406 N '16

"Mr. Curtis, as editor, must have had a Herculean task in summarising and co-ordinating the results of so many collaborators, but he has produced a clear and lucid narrative, free from the balancing hesitations which please the wavering mind and irritate the practical person."

+ Sat R 122:182 Ag 19 '16 1500w

"It is too much to expect that the conclusions of this book about the development of British institutions in the British Isles and in America will be accepted without dissent. The men who have set this inquiry on foot would not expect that they should be. . . . What is important is that people should understand the elementary conditions of the problem of empire. . . . Its roots go back into the depths of English history and beyond. . . . The great and lasting merit of 'The commonwealth of nations' is that it recognizes this truth and takes it as the foundation of the whole inquiry, without thought of popular impatience or fear of the result of dissent from its reading of historical facts."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p351 J1 27 '16 2100w

CURTIS, LIONEL. Problem of the commonwealth. *$1.50 Macmillan 325.3 16-16384

This work is an outgrowth of the movement the official report of which is given in "The commonwealth of nations, part 1." "In view of the situation created by the war," as the preface to that work states, "it was decided to anticipate the completion of the main report by a brief study of that aspect of the subject which most nearly concerns the self-governing dominions." "Never again, it is declared, will the great self-governing dominions consent to be involved in a war as the result of an imperial foreign policy which they have had no opportunity of influencing. In the future either each dominion must determine its own relation to questions of foreign policy, or such questions must be decided by some imperial organization in which each has proportionate opportunity of making its opinion felt." (Springfield Republican)

"Not in a long time has a more stimulating and critically-constructive work on the British empire appeared than the subject of this review. At the same time, while thought-provoking, it is marked by sanity and logical dispassionateness. . . . Mr. Curtis has rendered a notable service to political scientists the world over." T. H. Boggs

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:791 N '16 1900w

"Praise must be given for the ability displayed in the argument and for the political sanity with which large issues are faced. . . . But we cannot allow it to pass without some adverse criticism. The practical difficulties in the suggestions made are innumerable. . . . The suggestions as to an executive for the whole commonwealth are clearer and more persuasive than the suggestions as to the central legislative authority. . . . The fact remains that the plan suggested is vague and less persuasive than the main argument. . . . And there are dangerous implications in what is taken for granted when the remodelling of the empire is discussed. The author of the 'Problem' is a political empiricist who, like all empiricists, adopts as true the abstract principles of an obsolete school. . . . Self government and liberty are words of which the sense becomes more obscure as we peruse the author's argument; and often he seems to be merely an apologist for things as they are, so long as they may be called by new names." C. D. Burns

+ — Hibbert J 15:166 O '16 1600w

"To an American Mr. Curtis's minimum requirements are open to the objection of taking too much for granted." H. C.

+ — New Repub 7:309 J1 22 '16 3200w

"The various elements of the problem presented by Mr. Curtis, and of the solution proposed by him are discussed with marked clearness, succinctly but carefully, and with profound earnestness. It is a matter in which all thoughtful citizens of the United States must take a deep interest, for it involves the organization for the long future of peoples whose main ideal and motive are the same as our own."

+ N Y Times 21:390 O 1 '16 850w

St Louis 14:386 N '16

"The whole discussion is intensely practical." G. B. Adams

+ Springfield Republican p15 J1 23 '16 1500w

"No reader can do otherwise than feel the contagion of this faith; no reader can do otherwise than believe in the fundamental truth of these principles. All one can doubt is the possibility of their application in the precise form which he suggests. . . . But the people that has no vision will perish. And here, if we will lift up our eyes, a vision is set before us."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p241 My 25 '16 3450w

CURTISS, PHILIP EVERETT. Between two worlds. il *$1.35 (1½c) Harper 16-17493

The two worlds are the world of the stage and cabaret and that of well-bred society. Sidney Gresham belongs to the second, so does Ruth Abbot, but Dora Middleman is of the first. The cold, serene perfection of Ruth has long held Gresham in thrall, but Dora, who first piques his curiosity, then catches and holds his imagination, finally wins him away from his first allegiance. Dora is simple and primitive where Ruth had been complex and sophisticated, and it is the human qualities in the little singer that establish her enduring hold.

"Slight in literary merit, but will be popular with people who are always demanding simply a 'good story.'"

+ A L A Bkl 13:123 D '16

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 11 '16 370w

"The thing that impresses us most in Mr. Curtiss's admirable novel is his tolerance. The characters are drawn in such a big way that the book helps us to a better understanding."

+ N Y Times 21:409 O 8 '16 520w

"This love story is certainly one to be selected by the British reader out of the mass of American fiction which is finding its way across the Atlantic."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p478 O 5 '16 150w

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Grizzly king; a romance of the wild. il *$1.25 (2½c) Doubleday 16-26862

A companion story to "Kazan." In "Kazan" the author told the story of a dog. In this book he tells the story of Thor, a bear. Thor, the biggest grizzly in the Rockies, lives in a valley never invaded by man. His first experience with this strange creature, recognized at once as an enemy, leaves him with a stinging pain in his flank and a feeling of sickness thru his whole great body. It is while recovering from this gun shot wound that Thor accepts the friendship of little Muskwa, the motherless cub. In the meantime the hunter Langdon, who with his guide is hard on their trail, is learning to take an intelligent interest in bears. He thinks that perhaps he may give up shooting them after he bags this one grizzly. The story tells why it was that he never shot Thor.

+ A L A Bkl 13:122 N '16

Ath p480 O '16 120w

+ Ind 88:405 D 4 '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:371 S 17 '16 260w

+ Sat R 122:sup10 D 9 '16 260w

"The story is no less delightful for having an excellent moral."

+ Springfield Republican p15 S 17 '16 280w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p496 O 19 '16 650w

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Hunted woman (Eng title, Valley of gold). il *$1.25 (1c) Doubleday 16-5583

Among the horde that follows the new line of the Canadian-Pacific across British Columbia is one who obviously does not belong with the nondescript crowd—a woman of beauty and breeding. She is bound for Tête Jaune Cache, and women, unaccompanied by husbands or brothers, go to that point for one purpose only. But John Aldous, altho he is the cynical author of anti-feminist books, makes no mistake about Joanne Gray. He appoints himself her champion from the beginning, even before he knows the errand that is taking her into the north. The events that follow, all crowded into a few days of time, are unusually melodramatic, even for a book of this kind, including an attempted abduction, an escape from death by dynamite, the finding of a lost canyon, rich in gold, and a life and death struggle for a woman's safety and honor.

Reviewed by P. J. Hubert, jr.
Bookm 43:540 J1 '16 110w

"Such a good story that one forgives, and better still forgets all the rest. It is the sort of book to read before the fire on a winter's night, when the most outrageous adventure seems possible, and the most heroic hero, real."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Je 24 '16 370w

Nation 102:387 Ap 6 '16 180w

"Though the novel is frankly a melodrama, well spiced with hair-breadth escapes, gold and gore, and entirely conventional as to plot, it is rather better done than are the majority of such tales. The love scenes are gracefully written, and there is a pathos in the figure of loyal old Donald MacDonald which makes one feel that Mr. Curwood could if he chose do work of a higher type than this."

+ — N Y Times 21:80 Mr 5 '16 350w

"This kind of novel is rather out of date now, but 'The valley of gold' is undoubtedly a good example of its class."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p323 J1 6 '16 80w

CUSHING, HARRY ALONZO. Voting trusts. *$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 338.8 15-15934
For descriptive note see Annual for 1915.

"The value of the study is its painstaking review of the great body of historical and current facts bearing on the subject and the judicial poise of the author's judgments. . . . Because of its general excellence it is a pity that the style is not better. Throughout, the author fails to differentiate between the significant and the exceptional. . . . The sober, judicial, and balanced point of view and manner of expression is in sharp contrast to the flamboyant generalizations so frequently met with. All serious students of the subject have been placed under deep obligation to Mr. Cushing for his painstaking study." A. S. Dewing

+ — Am Econ R 6:144 Mr '16 750w

+ Ind 86:30 Ap 3 '16 70w

J Pol Econ 24:206 F '16 350w

+ Pol Sci Q 31:357 Je '16 70w

CUTHBERT, FATHER. Romanticism of St. Francis; and other studies in the genius of the Franciscans. *$2 Longmans 271 16-1104

"Father Cuthbert's study is divided into four parts, dealing consecutively with St. Francis himself, St. Clare, the Story of the friars, and a Modern friar. But the purpose throughout never varies, to show the beauty of the ideal of Christian romanticism as it was beheld and lived by the great founder of the Franciscans, and has been preserved, so our Franciscan

CUTHBERT, FATHER—Cont.
author believes, through all the changes of civilization to the present day."—Nation

"Informed with a fine idealism and interesting to read with his 'Life of St. Francis.'" + A L A Bkl 12:356 My '16

+ Cath World 102:833 Mr '16 900w

"There is much that is interesting, much that will seem true to the non-Catholic reader in Father Cuthbert's development of this theory of romance. The scholar will miss any keen analysis of what 'Romanticism' came to mean, and the impatient will think that the pages say the same things over too many times; but the book is scarcely designed for either the scholar or the impatient."

+ Nation 102:439 Ap 20 '16 370w

CUTTRISS, FRANK. Romany life. il $2.50
Pott 397 (Eng ed 16-17188)

"A description of gypsy life and customs as seen during many years' association with them in England. The author attributes no greater virtues to them than to other people, but resents the usual treatment of them as vagrants."—N Y Br Lib News

N Y Br Lib News 3:40 Mr '16 30w

+ St Louis 14:185 My '16 20w

"The subject-matter of Mr. Cuttriss's book is full of interest. We wish that its manner were equally delightful. He is forever acting showman, insisting upon the charm of his acquaintances and expounding them to us, giving us, in short, what an exasperated reader once called 'glimpses of the obvious.' After this fault-finding, it is only fair to say that Mr. Cuttriss's photographs are altogether admirable, and that he himself knows more than he can easily set down."

+ — Spec 116:163 Ja 29 '16 350w

CZAPLICKA, M. A. My Siberian year. il $3
Pott 17-26074

"The author, a famous ethnographer and sociologist, lived thirteen months in Siberia, among the people, studying, as in no other way could have been done, their curious customs and traditions. The first summer was spent in Arctic Siberia, 'the big low tundra' as the natives call it, with the Samoyed and Tungusic tribes. Through the fall and winter, she lived among the Tungas, on the Yenesei, just south of the Arctic circle. . . . Miss Czapliska's study of 'the riddle of the southern Yenesei,' whose burial mounds, megalithic monuments, ruins of elaborate mining arrangements, and other archaeological remains, witness a vanished and wholly unknown civilization, is of rare value. . . .

While recognizing the many defects of the Russian rule, the author is optimistic, believing that Siberia will yet become 'what she is, potentially already—the Canada of the east.'—Boston Transcript

+ A L A Bkl 13:216 F '17

"The author studies this great territory from peculiarly interesting viewpoints, and records her experiences and impressions in a vivid, straightforward way which clarifies whatever data might else be confusing. The illustrations add another agreeable quality to the book, giving unique glimpses of lands and peoples, hitherto little if at all known. . . . One of the most illuminating chapters traces the progress of the Russian conquest of Siberia." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '16 730w

+ Dial 61:475 N 30 '16 290w

+ N Y Times 21:533 D 3 '16 800w

+ Spec 117:321 S 16 '16 140w

"Miss Czapliska's contribution to our knowledge is very valuable, for she not only describes certain out-of-the-way parts of Siberia and their inhabitants, but has a clear perception also of the political and economic questions of the near future. . . . Throughout her book the author keeps her own trials, discomforts, adventures, and personality in the background."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p375 Ag 10 '16 900w

DAHLINGER, CHARLES WILLIAM. Pittsburgh; a sketch of its early social life. il $1.25 (4c) Putnam 974.88 16-10813

Pittsburgh, because of its location at the gateway to the West, played an important part in the settlement of the Mississippi valley, and an account of its history should be, as the author of this book says, "of more than local interest." The period covered is from the close of the French and Indian war thru the first decade of the nineteenth century. References to authorities are given at the end of each chapter.

"Written in an entertaining style." E. L. B.
+ Am Econ R 6:889 D '16 150w

"To students of local history the book will prove of interest, but to others it must seem nerveless and dull. He is a devotee of facts and his book suffers by reason of this circumstance."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '16 120w

"A creditable array of fact and description, not sufficiently synthesized and interpreted to be of interest to any except Pittsburghers."

+ Cleveland p136 N '16 40w

"The book is, of course, not so detailed upon political or administrative matters as histories of Pittsburgh already existing, and it is strangely deficient in its account of the social effects of the first industries; but for the student of religion, education, amusements, manners, trades, dress, and so on in this part of the early west, it will be very valuable."

+ Nation 103:41 J1 13 '16 350w

N Y Br Lib News 3:90 Je '16

+ N Y Times 21:273 J1 9 '16 50w

Pittsburgh 21:359 J1 '16 45w

Pratt p37 Ja '17 30w

"Of more than local interest."

+ R of Rs 54:121 J1 '16 60w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p359 J1 27 '16 100w

"We doubt whether Mr. Dahlinger's book will appeal very urgently to the American public at large; for though it will recall to them events in the national history, the painstaking local research which has gone to its making has resulted in a mass of detail which can engross few but the Pittsburgher."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p368 Ag 3 '16 600w

DAICHES, SAMUEL. Lord Kitchener and his work in Palestine. *2s 6d Luzac & co., London

"This book is based on a lecture delivered by Dr. Daiches before the Jews' college union society in February, 1915, and repeated by invitation before the Society of Biblical archaeology in March. The Palestine exploration fund was founded in 1865 for the purpose of adding to our knowledge of the topography of the Holy Land. The services of the Royal engineers were fortunately available for the purpose of carrying out the detailed survey of Palestine to which the funds of the association were chiefly devoted. . . . In 1874 Lieutenant Kitchener was sent out as second in command of the survey party, and he remained in Palestine for four years, doing extremely sound and useful work, of which Dr. Daiches gives a full account."—Spec

"The book provides an interesting and instructive account of his contributions to our knowledge of the geography, geology, and natural history of Palestine."

+ Nature 96:170 O 14 '15 70w

+ Spec 115:923 D 25 '15 330w

DALBY, WILLIAM ERNEST. Steam power. il $6 Longmans 621.1 A15-2373

"The 760 pages cover a general discussion of the steam plant, with special chapters on boilers and heating circuits; motive power circuits; performance and losses; condensing plants;

energy diagrams for simple and compound locomotives; dynamics of the steam engine; train motion and energy requirements; engine balancing; valves and valve-gears; steam flow; and steam turbines."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

+ A L A Bkl 12:363 My '16

"The book is well arranged from a pedagogical standpoint." C. C. Thomas

+ Engin N 75:320 F 17 '16 1450w

"In this volume we have the most complete, the most scientifically correct, and the most up-to-date treatment of the problem of the generation of steam and its utilisation for power purposes which has ever been put at the disposal of the engineer and the designer of power plants." T. H. B.

+ Nature 96:421 D 16 '15 1350w

"This weighty volume of 760 pages must surely be acknowledged as the encyclopedia of modern information regarding steam and its use for the production of power."

+ N Y Br Lib News 2:188 D '15 110w (Reprinted from The Engineer O 8 '15)

"Practical, carefully written, and encyclopaedic treatise. Well supplied with diagrams, tables, and many practical problems."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p13 S '15 190w

"A monumental work. Exhaustive and highly technical treatment of the scientific principles (both dynamic and thermodynamic) involved in the industrial applications of steam power."

+ Pittsburgh 21:115 Mr '16 30w

DALTON, SIR CORNELIUS NEALE. Life of Thomas Pitt. il $4.50 Putnam

(Eng ed 16-15966)

Thomas Pitt (1653-1726) was a British East India merchant, governor of Fort St. George (Madras), purchaser of the famous Pitt or Regent diamond now owned by the French government, and grandfather of William Pitt, first earl of Chatham.

"A biography of considerable interest. The study, based in part on the 'Fortescue papers' published by the Historical manuscripts commission, presents an excellent picture of Pitt as a figure in the history of the period, and also as a man."

+ Am Hist R 21:393 Ja '16 50w

"The Governor has lacked his sympathetic biographer, Dr. von Ruville's appreciation of him being nothing more nor less than an elongated libel, and Lord Rosebery having merely touched on him in relation to his grandson. Sir Cornelius Dalton has most ably come to his rehabilitation, and a certain prolixity and a tendency to wander off into general history are venial faults in comparison with the knowledge and power of analysis he has brought to bear upon a not ignoble career."

+ Ath 1915,2:205 S 25 1500w

"Besides the information concerning the life of 'Governor' Pitt which Sir Cornelius Dalton has gathered from the best printed authorities, this volume contains an account of the fortunes of the East India Company during a critical period." W. Hunt

+ Eng Hist R 31:164 Ja '16 1750w

"For several reasons Governor Pitt deserved to have his biography written. He was of the stuff of those men who, from the days of Raleigh to those of Rhodes, have made England what she is. Moreover, he was the progenitor of a line of statesmen. He has been happy in his biographer. Sir Cornelius Neale Dalton has not only recounted the deeds and portrayed the character of the man, but he has given us a vivid picture of the state of English society at his time." [Earl of] Cromer

+ Spec 115:580 O 30 '15 1800w

DALY, MRS. DE BURGH. Irishwoman in China. il $3.50 (4c) Stokes 915.1 16-26938

The author, who spent twenty years in China, presents this book as "a simple record of the life of ordinary European residents in China, who were interested in the people amongst whom they lived, and very friendly with them." She went out to Ningpo in the Chekiang province, Mid-China, in 1888 to take charge of a small hospital for Chinese women. Later she married and went with her husband to Newchwang, Manchuria. Her residence in the Far East covered the period of the Chinese-Japanese war, the Boxer uprising, the Russo-Japanese war, and the downfall of the Manchu dynasty. She writes entertainingly and the narrative is enlivened with many anecdotes. The illustrations are from photographs and from drawings by Chinese artists.

+ A L A Bkl 13:118 D '16

Ath p39 Ja '16 30w

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 28 '16 210w

+ Dial 61:476 N 30 '16 190w

+ R of Rs 54:571 N '16 40w

"There is something in Mrs. De Burgh Daly's book to appeal to almost any type of reader."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 2 '16 420w

DALY, THOMAS AUGUSTINE. Songs of wedlock. $1 McKay 811 16-23136

"To a thrush," the beautiful poem included in 1913 in "The lyric year" (forerunner of the "Anthology of magazine verse"), is one of the selections in this new volume of Mr. Daly's verse. The volume represents his more serious work, and will show the other side of the poet who pens most delightful dialect verse.

"Married life has not, since the days of Coventry Patmore, been more beautifully celebrated than in these poems, radiant, as they are, with the light of noble passion."

+ Lit D 53:1725 D 30 '16 1050w

+ N Y Times 22:2 Ja 7 '17 350w

DANA, JOHN COTTON. Libraries: addresses and essays. $1.80 (2c) Wilson, H. W. 020.4 16-15771

"In 1890 libraries quite definitely pursued repose; to-day they seek results. . . . I believe I have shown in this book that in the art of librarianship,—the art of promoting the use of print to civil ends,—the rising flood of print and that increase of its use which is at once the immediate cause of the flood and a result thereof, will soon compel changes in practice more fundamental than any that have gone before. . . . I have not attempted to say definitely how the librarian of the future will adapt his practice to the new conditions. I have tried only to make it quite clear that the wise librarian will keep his mental manners plastic and his professional manners flexible." (Preface) The addresses and essays which embody this belief of the head of the Free public library of Newark, New Jersey, cover twenty years (1896-1915) of his experience as a librarian in three cities (Denver, Springfield, Mass., and Newark). Among the titles are: Hear the other side; Mere words; Fiction-readers and libraries; What the people read; What the modern library is doing; The country church and the library; Women in library work; Making the library a business aid; Librariology (reprinted in greater part by the Syndicate trading company of New York for distribution by booksellers); The evolution of the special library, and What next?

+ A L A Bkl 13:4 O '16

+ Bull of Bibliography 9:88 O '16 90w

Cleveland p129 N '16 50w

+ Ind 89:119 Ja 15 '17 50w

"The treatment is very frank and to the point, and the style is never dull."

+ Nation 103:425 N 2 '16 480w

St Louis 14:426 D '16 40w

"While Mr. Dana's papers are somewhat desultory, a reading of them will mean for the library worker the acquisition of some valuable ideas and for the general reader an acquaintance with the possibilities of the library in our national life."

+ Spring'd Republican p13 Ag 20 '16 2100w

DANA, JOHN COTTON, ed. Modern American library economy as illustrated by the Newark, N. J., free public library. v 2, pt 17 *75c (025.1); pt 18 *50c (022.9) Elm tree press; for sale by Wilson, H. W. (8-36693)

Part 17, on "Maps, atlases and geographical publications," compiled by Sarah E. Ball, is a reprint, revised and enlarged, of the "Business branch" pamphlet issued in 1910. Part 18, "The vertical file" by Margaret A. McVety and Mabel E. Colgrave, describes the system in use in the Newark library.

+ A L A Bkl 12:97 N '15 (Review of pt 17)

+ A L A Bkl 12:311 Ap '16 (Review of pt 18)

"No other treatise, so far as we know, handles the matter so fully and with such care and expert knowledge."

+ Dial 59:334 O 14 '15 120w (Review of pt 17)

"This little treatise which describes the whole process employed in the Newark (N. J.) library in detail, being based on actual experience, is an extremely helpful production, and librarians contemplating the introduction of some such system will be well repaid by a careful study of its pages."

+ Library Association Record 5:221 My 15 '16 120w (Review of pt 18)

DANCASTER, ERNEST AUGUSTUS. Limes and cements; their nature, manufacture and use. il $1.75 Appleton 666 16-9409

"This is especially suited for students who require an elementary text-book on the subject, containing, as the author justly observes in his preface, very little that will have to be unlearned at a later period. It is sufficiently comprehensive to have some value for many who are not beginners. . . . All the important varieties of lime, artificial and natural cement, mortar, concrete, etc., are noticed, however briefly, including the mode of preparation or occurrence, and the approved manner of using."—Nature

+ A L A Bkl 12:408 Je '16
Cleveland p115 Ag '16 30w

"The ample bibliography of modern publications dealing wholly or partly with the materials under consideration will enable fuller details to be found by such as may need them. The work is admittedly based on Burnell's 'Limes, cements, mortars, etc.,' but the alterations and additions involved in bringing that treatise up to date render the present volume practically a new production." J. A. A.

+ Nature 97:3 Mr 2 '16 240w

"The author describes it as an elementary treatise, and such it is in that it does not deal exhaustively with the subject, especially the processes and machinery of manufacture; but the basic information upon which a thorough appreciation of the nature and properties of limes and cements depends is so well presented that the book will prove quite valuable to engineers and architects."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p5 F '16 220w
(Reprinted from Iron & Coal Trades Review p606 N 12 '15)

DANTE ALIGHIERI. La comedia di Dante Alighieri; the Divine comedy. $2.50 Yale univ. press 851 15-9347

"This translation by Prof. Henry Johnson of Bowdoin college is the result of more than a score of years of work. Prof. Johnson set himself the double task of rendering an exact translation line for line in English verse; and to make the version entirely his own he carefully abstained from consulting other poetical versions."—Springfield Republican

"The best that may be said of this new version is that it contains not infrequent passages combining great dignity and great simplicity. Unfortunately, the challenges of the undertaking seem to be rather recklessly met, and the promises of the preface are not kept. Clarity and simplicity are often far from our path in this version. Vocabulary and idiom are not always modern. Obscurity and awkwardness mar many passages. Worst of all, the versification is painfully imperfect,—a constant stumbling-block to distract attention from form and thought. In addition to the stiffness of style, there is a considerable archaic vocabulary, puzzling to the modern reader. It is a disappointment to find the product of so much labor unsatisfactory, and it is painful to give an unfavorable judgment on the serious work of an earnest man. One function Professor Johnson's translation may fairly serve, that of pacing-mate to the Italian text, for one who needs assistance." W. H. Carruth

— + Dial 59:372 O 28 '15 1650w

"Mr. Johnson's translation is, like Longfellow's, in line for line blank verse. The comparison thus inevitably suggested honors both men. Both seek, first of all, absolute fidelity to the poet's thought; and both, through patient scholarship, achieve. For the will to be formally exact, Mr. Johnson substitutes the will to be clear; and his success in this respect affords the main distinction of his work. The phrasing, even in very difficult passages, satisfies the eye of the analytical mind—and the listening ear as well. For reading aloud, this version is better adapted, in the reviewer's opinion, than any previous verse translation of the Divine comedy. In the classroom it carries the meaning directly and cogently; and it will yield memorable service among groups of friends."

+ Nation 102:110 Ja 27 '16 800w

"In comparing Prof. Johnson's version with that which ranks as the standard, Henry F. Carey's published a century ago, one is impressed by the smooth and adequate language of this modern version."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 9 '15 220w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p306 Je 29 '16 1150w

"An event of real significance for scholarship and literature is the publication of Professor Johnson's translation of the 'Divina comedia.' It justifies its existence by its scholarship and accuracy no less than by its vigor and beauty as a piece of English." Kenneth McKenzie

+ Yale R n s 5:637 Ap '16 750w

DANTE ALIGHIERI. Paradise of Dante Alighieri; an experiment in literal verse translation, by Charles Lancelot Shadwell, with an introd. by J. W. Mackail. $3.25 Macmillan 851 16-2051

"Some years ago Dr. C. L. Shadwell, then fellow of Oriel, undertook the translation of Dante's 'Purgatory' and 'Paradise.' The first twenty-seven cantos of the 'Purgatory' appeared in 1892 and the rest in 1899. The task is now complete. . . . 'Terza rima' is foreign and difficult; prose and blank verse fail even to suggest the beauty of the Italian form. Dr. Shadwell chose, therefore, to translate in the purely English rhymed stanza of Andrew Marvell's 'Ode to Cromwell.'" (Nation) Italian and English are on opposite pages.

"He handles his metre—the quatrain of Marvell's Horatian ode—with consummate skill; but it seems less suited—at least in our view—to the ethereal vision of the 'Paradiso,' varied, as they often are, by subtle and scholastic discourse, than it is to those parts of the poem which are fuller of incident and movement. Dr. Mackail's stimulating Introduction will repay more than one perusal."

+ — Ath 1915,2:156 S 4 1250w

"Even though the form prove elsewhere uncongenial, the work still has great and abiding worth as a patient, devoted interpretation of Dante's thought. Dr. Shadwell has been fortunate in his prefacers. For the translation of the 'Purgatory,' Walter Pater wrote a calm and clear analysis of Dante's power. Now Dr. Mackail—this, too, is very much an 'Oxford Dante'—affirms and reasons the supreme beauty of the 'Paradise.'"

+ — Nation 102:363 Mr 30 '16 420w

"Without a confidence in something transcending human life and human sorrow, it would be hardly possible for the mind to stand apart, as many of us must do at this moment, and watch the framework of all our hopes and our ideals falling in ruin and involving in their fall beloved lives and cherished memories. In such times as these it is good to be reminded of that other world into which Dante, of all men, has given us the clearest insight."

+ Spec 115:sup683 N 20 '15 1650w

DARGAN, OLIVE TILFORD (MRS. PEGRAM DARGAN). Cycle's rim. *$1 Scribner 811 16-23053

A cycle of fifty-three poems written as a memorial "to one drowned at sea." Emotion held in restraint and beauty and felicity of expression are their characteristics.

"In everything these sonnets are of the twentieth century; they are the products of a modern temperament, and yet possessing every old distinction of poetic truths. If the memorial is one of amazing distinction, the art in which it is clothed is of that beauty which comes nigh to perfection." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 18 '16 1300w

"It is in a class with Elizabeth Barrett Browning's 'Sonnets from the Portuguese' and Alice Freeman Palmer's 'A marriage cycle,' in being the expression of a remarkable woman's most intimate heart."

+ Woman's Journal and Suffrage News 47:390 D 2 '16 130w

DARLING, ESTHER BIRDSALL. Baldy of Nome. il *$1.75 (4c) Penn 16-15029

An Alaskan dog story. Ben Edwards, forced to part with his loved companion, Baldy, is heart-broken at the separation, but Ben is only a boy, dependent on others, and a poor boy cannot afford the up-keep of a dog. As things turn out all is for the best however. Baldy becomes a member of the Allan and Darling racing kennels and Ben, who is allowed to be with him as much as he wishes, finally has the joy of seeing his favorite lead a dog team to victory in a race. The story is not written for children, but the older ones, particularly the boys, will enjoy the introduction it gives them to a new sport, dog racing.

"Made as a gift book."

+ A L A Bkl 13:181 Ja '17

DAUGHERTY, ROBERT LONG. Hydraulics. il *$2.50 McGraw 627 16-10791

"This book has been prepared for students required to study, in a general way, the subject of hydraulics and to serve as a foundation for those who intend to specialize in this branch of engineering. . . . The book is divided into sixteen chapters, well illustrated by diagrams, line cuts and halftones."—Engin Rec

"Many short demonstrations involving simple methods in integral calculus are given, but aside from these the text could all be readily understood by a student of high-school grade. . . . The author's plan is good, and it is to be hoped these few defects of execution will in another edition be carefully removed to perfect the work." R. E. Horton

+ Engin N 76:116 J1 20 '16 1300w

"The book is clearly written, and will serve admirably the purpose for which it has been published. Its value as a text and reference book for engineers, however, is doubtful, but, according to the author, the book has not been written for that class of readers." A. G. Hillberg

+ Engin Rec 74:116 J1 22 '16 320w

"Prepared by an instructor in Cornell university primarily to meet the needs of his classes. A clearly written, concise text for students who are required to cover a wide field of hydraulics in a limited amount of time."

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:107 J1 '16 60w

Pittsburgh 21:411 O '16 20w

Pratt p17 O '16

DAVENPORT, BRIGGS. History of the Great war, 1914-. v 1 *$2 (1½c) Putnam 940.91 (16-6749)

This volume on The genesis of the war is devoted to "The development of its causes, the failure of temporizing policies, and the spirit of the belligerent peoples; with a record of political and diplomatic events." (Subtitle) The author begins with a survey of Europe in the last four decades, for, he says, "Unlike many other of the great political convulsions in the world's history, the vast struggle of 1914 and 1915 . . . was not due to any accidental crisis or provocation." He does not pretend to be neutral in sympathy, holding that it is impossible for a self-respecting historian absolutely to conceal his sympathies. His, in this case, are with the Allies. But in the matter of facts he has maintained, he thinks, an entirely impartial mental attitude.

"The book is a brief and rather disjointed resumé of events, not always based upon very solid authority. The moment is too early for a history of the war and his attempt only proves the statement."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 8 '16 430w

"Four chapters contain the author's principal contribution. One of them is devoted to the entrance of Japan into the conflict, with more favorable comment than writers in English are apt to make. There are very long and detailed descriptions of Italy in the Triple Alliance and of the constantly increasing tension with Austria, a judgment of Italian conduct and aspirations, and a full treatment of the diplomatic negotiations which preceded the rupture and new alignment. All this is so well and so ably done that we know of no other version to be compared with it, save that recently published by Allen. Of defects there are not a few."

+ Nation 102:651 Je 15 '16 800w

"His piecing together of the diplomatic exchanges of the last week of July, 1914, is useful and clear, and he has also provided a good deal of not easily accessible information concerning the motive which made Italy break with her allies and threw Turkey into the arms of Germany."

+ N Y Times 21:187 Ap 30 '16 230w

"Considering the nearness of the matters of which the author writes, the two things which will most impress the reader are the calm, well-reasoned philosophy of the discussion and the comprehensiveness, with two exceptions, of the material."

+ N Y Times 21:228 My 28 '16 700w

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 26 '16 230w

"By a capable writer and journalist. It is a well-intentioned but unequal book. From the point of view of serious historical work the author seems to want experience, and has underestimated the amount of care and revision necessary in the execution of so ambitious an undertaking. As an illustration may be given the paragraphs on the Balkan war."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p263 Je 1 '16 180w

DAVIDSON, WILLIAM LESLIE. Political thought in England: the utilitarians from Bentham to J. S. Mill. (Home univ. lib.) *50c (1c) Holt 192 16-12745

In volume 98 of this series Ernest Barker discussed "Political thought in England from Spencer to the present day." This volume, which follows it as number 99, gives a similar treatment of an earlier period. Utilitarianism was more than an ethical theory; inherent in itself was the demand for practical expression. Hence it entered into politics and influenced legislation. Its relation to social reforms generally, to prison reform, education, women's rights, etc., is discussed in this book.

+ A L A Bkl 13:9 O '16

Boston Transcript p7 N 4 '16 170w

"The chief fault of the book is a tendency to defend utilitarianism and to extol its prophets to such a degree that just criticism is excluded."

+ Nation 103:89 J1 27 '16 80w

"His book, indeed, is perhaps of more narrative value than of critical importance. He is concerned rather with the delineation of a portrait than the discussion of its meaning. But he writes always with a bright clarity that is pleasing and informative. I know of no small book on his subject that so admirably fulfils its purpose." H. J. L.

DAVIDSON, WILLIAM LESLIE—Continued

+ New Repub 7:281 J1 15 '16 850w
Pittsburgh 21:517 N '16

+ Pratt p9 Ja '17 20w

"His studies of the three great exponents of utilitarianism are better than his estimate and criticism of utilitarianism as a whole. Dr. Davidson, while at all times worthily lucid and informative, is somewhat lacking in synthetic vision. He, perhaps, felt cramped by the necessity of confining his treatise to the political aspects of utilitarianism. At all events, his work hardly removes the need of a compact historical and critical study of utilitarianism in this series. It should be noted that Dr. Davidson counts not only Sidgwick but T. H. Green among the utilitarians. The latter is usually regarded as one of the utilitarians' chief antagonists."

+ — Springfield Republican p6 Je 5 '16 600w

DAVIES, RANDALL. Six centuries of painting.
il *$5 Dodge (*10s 6d Jack, London) 759

A15-100

"Condenses effectively, without dryness, a long epoch of painting, from the times of Cimabue to the English school of the nineteenth century, information which can be obtained in different ways but here brought together in one book. The fifty color plates, tipped in on tinted mounts, are an important and helpful feature of the book."—A L A Bkl

+ A L A Bkl 12:222 F '16

"The book would have gained in utility if some such practical moral had been more obviously traceable as arising from the perusal of the many scores, if not hundreds, of brief biographies of which it is made up. If the biographical form does not bring home to us the value of the individual artist, and the importance of supporting him, it has, indeed, few merits to put against its disadvantages. To embark upon and drop picturesque personalities at the rate sometimes of two in a page, implies a loss of continuity just as tiresome as technical explanations, and perhaps, less useful. The quotation of published opinions of a known picture at various dates is, however, sometimes of interest when used to make the changes taste undergoes. The fifty coloured illustrations are of the usual type, making tolerable prints in inverse ratio to their degree of resemblance to the picture."

+ — Ath 1914,1:832 Je 13 800w

"Doubtless there are errors of fact embedded in it. Obviously, too, only the more popular names in art would be found in such a work with a sprinkling of entertaining anecdote in place of more serious criticism. In such a scheme Reynolds and Gainsborough get thirty pages, Vermeer and Cotman a paragraph apiece. But Mr. Davies manages to include much thoughtful discernment. For the colour reproductions, however, we can say no good thing. It is the duty of a reviewer to expose false reproductions equally with misleading criticism and assertions. Among the fifty plates in this book it is difficult to find four that are tolerably just."

+ — Sat R 118:468 O 31 '14 160w

DAVIESS, MARIA THOMPSON. Daredevil. il
*$1.35 (2c) Reilly & B. 16-6436

Roberta Carruthers, Marquise de Grez et Bye, loses her father at the battle of the Marne and by his wish leaves for America to find her uncle, a confederate colonel, and to ask a home for herself, her little lame brother, and their old nurse. The uncle, who hates women and had become estranged from his brother on his French marriage, confuses the sexes of the children, thinks Roberta is the boy, and writes her to leave the girl in New York. The young woman therefore changes to man's dress and, in spite of natural embarrassments, plays the part of a youth in her father's Kentucky home. As secretary to the governor she foils a contractor's conspiracy to foist poor army mules upon

France, and so wins the governor's affection that when her disguise is exposed by the coming of a French friend, he is rejoiced to lose her as a secretary and comrade and win her as a wife. Throughout the story the heroine uses the French idiom translated into English.

"In this dashing tale of love and adventure the magnetic personality of the masquerading heroine makes improbability wholly unimportant."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 24 '16 330w

"It is all rather improbable. The characters we have met before in different circumstances, but the book has a piquant style that will insure its popularity."

+ — N Y Times 21:223 My 28 '16 270w

"In spite of many absurdities, the heroine manages to interest the reader. There is much that is spirited and dashing in her character."

H. Dick

+ — Pub W 89:1317 Ap 15 '16 580w

Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 150w

DAVIGNON, HENRI, comp. Belgium and Germany. il pa 25c Nelson 940.91 15-23015

"In 'Belgium and Germany' we find a collection of papers, facsimiles, and photographs which throw new light on the deplorable effect of the German invasion of Belgium. M. Henri Davignon, who has written a 'Foreword' for the book, does not attempt to answer in detail the misrepresentations of Germany, but bases his case on printed and written documents which speak for themselves. . . . They all go to prove that the massacres and devastation were committed by the orders of German military commanders, and were not the crimes of soldiers who acted without instructions."—Ath

"Most of the photographs of German proclamations, as well as the reproductions of chalk writings on Belgian houses, are new to us, and are published, we think, for the first time in England. In the many translations from the German we have noted only one mistake. This is in a German advertisement (p. 120) concerning the removal of looted furniture from (not to) Belgium."

+ Ath 1915,2:259 O 16 230w

Ind 85:428 Mr 20 '16 120w

Pittsburgh 21:235 My '16 20w

DAVIS, CARL HENRY. Painless childbirth. $1
(6c) Forbes 618.2 16-2587

The author examines the various methods that have been tried for lessening pain in childbirth. His preference is for nitrous oxid-oxygen analgesia, which has been successfully tried out in Chicago. In part 3 of the book the technic of this method is carefully described. Its advantages are its comparative simplicity, its lack of harmful after-effects, the fact that hospital conditions are not absolutely essential to its use (as in twilight sleep), and that the cooperation of the mother may be retained. The author is affiliated with Rush medical college and the Presbyterian hospital, Chicago.

"So much that is vague, popular, and faddish has been written on 'painless childbirth' that those who are interested—laymen or physicians—will appreciate this well-written booklet."

P. N. Leech

+ Am J Soc 22:417 N '16 250w

+ A L A Bkl 12:409 Je '16

+ Cleveland p150 D '16 20w

Ind 87:33 J1 3 '16 40w

"Dr. Davis has written the clearest, most concise account in English of the use of anesthetics in obstetrics, while at the same time he has given a scientifically sound presentation of the subject of painless childbirth and its relation to safe obstetrics, in a sufficiently popular form to be appreciated by the non-medical reader." D. R. Mendenhall, M. D.

+ Survey 36:527 Ag 19 '16 730w

DAVIS, CHARLES BELMONT. Nothing a year.
il *$1.30 (2c) Harper 16-4747

The story of an unscrupulous southern girl whose ambitions are fixed on a position in New York society. Barbara Clyde is determined to leave at the first opportunity the Virginia village where her mother keeps a boarding house for visitors from the north. And opportunity to her means marriage. Johnny Lister, who offers her the way of escape, is a popular youth who owes his position to his personal traits rather than to income. But Barbara is willing to accept him for the position's sake and to trust to the future for the income. Her husband loves her devotedly, but her methods lead to a break between them. After the divorce she attempts various doubtful means of holding her footing, but just as she is on the verge of disaster Johnny returns, to condone all and, most probably, to be duped again.

"Mr. Davis's picture of New York life must not be taken too seriously. These people who spend their days in gambling on the stock exchange, their nights in drinking cocktails, the men mostly beasts, the women brainless butterflies, with never a word of wit or wisdom from either, represent only curiosities." P. J. Hubert, Jr.

— Bookm 43:538 J1 '16 230w

"It is a plot which has possibilities, but in order that they be made much of it is essential that the woman in the case be a real person, subtly and skillfully portrayed."

— N Y Times 21:114 Mr 26 '16 190w

"Mr. Davis's satire is always brilliant, but sometimes, through earnestness, he overshoots his target. Despite that, it is a stimulating tale."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 300w

DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING. With the French in France and Salonika. il *$1 Scribner 940.91 16-10487

"These war stories, sent by Richard Harding Davis from the front, bring the war almost up to date. The last chapter is dated February. He begins with Paris, ends with London, and midway takes in Serbia. The note that runs through all is—France has proved herself. 'She has faith in her armies, in her generals. She can afford to wait. She drove the enemy from Paris; she is teaching French in Alsace; in time, when Joffre is ready, she will drive the enemy across her borders.' Meantime Paris goes about her business as usual. Mr. Davis is scornful of neutrality, but in his loyalty to the Allies there is no malignity toward the Central Powers. He sees them as inferiors rather than as demons."—Pub W

A L A Bkl 12:471 J1 '16

"His prophesies are nearly all coming true."

+ Ath p438 S '16 210w

"From the chapter on 'Why King Constantine is neutral' one receives a different idea of the conditions in Greece than the one given in the regular news despatches, and Constantine seems more of a man and Venizelos less of a demigod. And when one reads on of 'The Allies in Salonika' one realizes that the position of Greece and the Greeks is not without its grim humor. . . . If any admirer of Davis wishes to pay some substantial tribute to his memory, what better way is there than to read the chapter on 'Hints to those who want to help' and then to act as the heart bids?"

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '16 360w

+ Cath World 103:695 Ag '16 180w

+ Ind 86:399 Je 5 '16 190w

+ Lit D 53:752 S 23 '16 300w

+ Nation 103:113 Ag 3 '16 230w

"In all of Mr. Davis's correspondence through many years from regions of war and other disturbances he has done nothing more effective than this, nothing that can more quickly arrest and more surely hold the reader's attention."

+ N Y Times 21:169 Ap 23 '16 850w

Pittsburgh 21:357 J1 '16 50w

"In the early part of the war no correspondents got to the trenches. It's no easy matter now. But this correspondent kept at it till he had visited the trenches of Artois, of Verdun, of the Vosges, and other points. His descriptions and his stories of these places are the vivid work which we have come to take as a matter of course from his pen." M. A. Hopkins

+ Pub W 89:1326 Ap 15 '16 530w

R of Rs 53:755 Je '16 120w

"When he comes to military questions he is not on such safe ground, and we are not prepared to follow him unreservedly."

+ — Sat R 122:278 S 16 '16 650w

"No war correspondent has written, or was qualified to write, more interestingly or more understandingly. If Mr. Davis is more opinionated than most of the others, it is at no cost or sacrifice of sincerity."

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 290w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p410 Ag 31 '16 530w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:270 Je '16 110w

DAVISON, GRACE LEE. Games and parties for children. *$1 (3c) Little 793 16-17742

For the first chapter of this book the author has selected a number of the old games that were played by our mothers and grandmothers. In the second chapter she describes some of the newer games for children. In chapter three she presents a group of jolly games that the whole family may play at. In the fourth she tells how to celebrate the holidays, and in the fifth gives plans for parties for any date. The last chapter is devoted to The etiquette of parties.

"This has four minus votes, being called poor, gushing, and sentimental, and six librarians have voted for it. One says it contains 'useful information and a good index.' There is a chapter on etiquette for children at parties."

A L A Bkl 13:226 F '17

+ Ind 88:405 D 4 '16 40w

Pratt p29 Ja '17 20w

+ Springfield Republican p6 N 28 '16 100w

DAVOL, RALPH. Handbook of American pageantry. 2d ed il $2.50 (9c) Davol pub. co., Taunton, Mass. 394.5 (15-4233)

A new edition of a work published in 1914 with some additional matter, including a bibliography, and additional illustrations. There is a new Prologue in which the author says, "The verdict is not yet in as to whether pageantry is an ephemeral fad or a permanent acquisition to the arts. But at least it has grown with the rapidity of Jonah's gourd."

DAWSON, CONINGSBY (WILLIAM). Slaves of freedom. *$1.40 (1c) Holt 16-22979

The story begins with Teddy Gurney's childhood and his first love affair. For he is only ten when he falls in love with the beautiful Vashti Jodreil. Later, with equal intensity and fervor, he pays his devotion to her no less beautiful daughter, Desire. But Desire is one of those women whom the author indicts in his title. They fear marriage and cling to their individual liberty, becoming in his words "slaves of freedom." Desire leads Teddy on and accepts his homage, but refuses to yield anything in return. The story moves from England to New York and back again, closing with the sailing of the ship that is taking Desire out of her lover's life.

"Readers who liked Mr. Dawson's 'The garden without walls' will probably like 'Slaves of freedom.' They have the same atmosphere of emotional, almost hysterical strain, of passion both insistent and sterile. . . . One need not doubt the respectable intentions of the author, in order to deplore his preoccupation with the physical aspects of sex." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 44:391 D '16 570w

"In 'Slaves of freedom' he returns much nearer to the standard he set by his first and memorable novel, 'The garden without walls.'" F. I.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 25 '16 1000w

"The moral poverty of the heroine's self-control is, after all, his theme, and this he has made abundantly clear."

+ — Nation 103:588 D 21 '16 270w

"That effect of glamour, of a dream-world which makes so exquisite the child-idyl ex-

DAWSON, CONINGSBY—Continued
tends over this grown-up love affair, making it always appear a thing of fancy, imagined, not of actual occurrence. . . . Nevertheless, 'Slaves of freedom' is a conscientious, thoughtful, very carefully wrought piece of work, occasionally touched with a somewhat exceptional beauty."

+ N Y Times 21:438 O 22 '16 900w

"A very much overlaboured chronicle."
— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p626 D 21 '16 140w

DAWSON, MARY. Mary Dawson game book. *$1.25 (1½c) McKay 793 16-20295

"A manual of original games and guessing contests for entertainments of every description and for all ages." (Sub-title) With the exception of a few good old games which seem to be forgotten in our day, the games and pastimes described are said to be the original inventions of the author. She has arranged them into the following groups: Games for boys and girls; Games for adults; Games and details for girls' parties; Games and plans for special occasions; New games and plans for the seasonable party; Games and parties for scholastic occasions; Games for women's and young mothers' parties; Question contests and other good games for the quick witted; Games and parties for different holidays.

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 110w

DAY, HOLMAN FRANCIS. Blow the man down. il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 16-14600

A story of the sea with title taken from an old chanty. The hero is Captain Boyd Mayo. He is a young man, but he belongs to the older order of Yankee seafarers and in this story his strength is pitted against the wealth and cunning of Wall street. A new England steamship line is the immediate object of contention, and Marston, the financier, spares no trickery in his efforts to get possession of it, risking other men's lives and honor in his own interest. At the beginning a love affair is in progress between Mayo and Alma Marston, but fortunately for him it does not run smoothly and he is given time to learn that his little friend Polly Candage is the woman meant to be his mate.

+ A L A Bkl 13:83 N '16

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
— + Bookm 44:67 S '16 430w

"Big business, the fascination of the sea and ships, a well-constructed story, and certain humorous and rather lovable characters, all combine to give the reader just about what he wants. . . . There is nothing actually debasing in Mr. Day's work; no more is there anything exalting about it. It stands in the great middle-class majority of American fiction." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 12 '16 550w

"A readable yarn withal by reason of the curious nautical adventures of the young captain, the snatches of chancies interspersed—a rare collection—and the picturesque down-eastern types of old ships and old tars."

+ Nation 103:305 S 28 '16 180w

"Mr. Day has told his story graphically. It is a good presentation of coast life. But he could learn much from lesser artists; his conversations are not up to the standard, for example, of a Robert Chambers. Nevertheless, 'Blow the man down' holds your interest; it is an excellent volume for the 'T. B. M.' of that variety so dreaded by the devotees of the Drama league."

+ N Y Times 21:290 J1 23 '16 380w

+ Spec 117:320 S 16 '16 1450w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ag 6 '16 370w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p359 J1 27 '16 190w

DEARBORN, GEORGE VAN NESS. How to learn easily; practical hints on economical study. *$1 Little 371 16-19812

Professor Dearborn is author of a book on "The influence of joy," and the idea of that book, that happiness makes for efficiency, is carried out in the present work in which interest is made the first element in the economy of learning. The five chapters take up: Economy in study; Observation and the taking of notes; Educative imagination; Books and their educative use; Is your "thinker" in order? Examination-preparedness. Part of the first chapter has appeared in the Medical Record, parts of the remaining chapters in the Scientific American Supplement. The author is instructor in psychology and education in the Sargent normal school, Cambridge.

"The writer gives sensible, easily understood suggestions to students and teachers and something of the psychology underlying the suggestions."

+ A L A Bkl 13:102 D '16

"Taking this topic, cultivation of imagination, as typical of Professor Dearborn's whole book, it must be said that one finds more about imagination in a broad, general, abstract way than one finds of practical formulas for the cultivation of imagination. . . . One may venture to quarrel, too, with Professor Dearborn's title. . . . Learning is work and always will be. The business of the school is to systematize and organize the work, not to evade it."

— El School J 17:142 N '16 520w

+ Ind 88:553 D 25 '16 30w

N Y Br Lib News 3:171 N '16

"Professor Dearborn's book contains plenty of sound common sense, and despite the fact that its aim shifts too frequently to give it high rank as a treatise, students and teachers both should find much in it that is interesting and helpful."

+ Springfield Republican p6 N 20 '16 550w

DEARBORN, GEORGE VAN NESS. Influence of joy. (Mind and health ser.) *$1 (3c) Little 131 16-11399

A study of the influence of the joyous emotions on the bodily functions, nutrition, circulation, the nervous system, etc. Its purpose, as stated by the author, is "to set forth some of the hygienic and therapeutic sanctions of organic happiness." Part 1 treats of The power of joy; part 2 of The necessity of joy.

+ A L A Bkl 13:55 N '16

Ath p476 O '16 80w

"It forms a sincere and valuable contribution to the science of the relationship of mind and body."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 10 '16 340w

"A delightful popular-scientific study, rich in literary quotations and allusion and only occasionally marred by a lack of clarity in style."

+ Cleveland p85 J1 '16 120w

"Despite some rather obtrusive mannerisms, Dr. Dearborn's presentation moves easily; and though not deep, it is sound and helpful."

+ Dial 61:31 Je 22 '16 200w

+ Ind 87:280 Ag 21 '16 210w

N Y Br Lib News 3:91 Je '16

N Y Times 21:296 J1 23 '16 60w

"We have had many books that from different points of view approximate the teachings of this volume, but few that approach the subject in a scientific spirit sufficient to convince the practical person that an alliance with joy is the best rejuvenating influence to be found in the world. The author is instructor in psychology and education in the Sargent normal school at Cambridge, Massachusetts."

+ R of Rs 54:122 J1 '16 150w

+ St Louis 14:426 D '16 10w

+ Springfield Republican p10 Je 22 '16 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p455 S 21 '16 150w

DEARING, JOHN LINCOLN, ed. Christian movement in the Japanese empire. $1.25 (½c) Missionary educ. movement 275.2

This is the thirteenth annual issue of a year book devoted to the progress of Christian activities and organizations in Japan, Korea and Formosa. The scope of the work has been somewhat enlarged and while the editor lays most stress on the work of the various union movements he gives due attention to the denominational missions. A general survey of the year's work and a summary of results is presented as an introduction.

+ Ind 84:443 D 13 '15 70w

"Includes besides the accounts of the year's work in almost every Christian organization save the Roman and the Greek churches, enlightening studies in child life, the villages, and industrial, educational and social conditions."

+ Ind 88:166 O 23 '16 40w

DEARMER, MABEL (WHITE) (MRS. PERCY DEARMER). Letters from a field hospital. *$1 (4c) Macmillan 940.91 War15-206

"Mrs. Dearmer, an Englishwoman of much and varied talent, went last spring to serve as an orderly in a field hospital in Serbia, where she died of typhoid in July, after less than two months of service. Stephen Gwynn, author and member of Parliament, a friend of many years, in his memoir outlines her life, which had been filled with a great variety of activities, and pictures her as possessing a magnetic personality, a strong and forceful character and a very lovable nature. . . . Mrs. Dearmer made it evident in her letters, as does Mr. Gwynn also in his memoir, that she was wholly opposed to war under any circumstances and had not the least enthusiasm concerning this, thinking it stupid and unnecessary. She went to the front and willingly laid down her life, not for her country, but for humanity."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 13:75 N '16

"It is the hospital point of view, the instinct for saving, for cleanliness, for order out of chaos, which these published portions of her letters give to the reader. It is distinctly the woman's point of view—one which is precious and well to preserve with the war literature of the time."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 2 '16 170w

+ Ind 87:102 JI 17 '16 130w

"Her letters, which fill a little more than half the book's pages, tell in piquant, chatty style of the journey to Serbia and of the conditions and duties of her life in the tent hospital at Kragujevatz. In a cheerful, calmly courageous way and with unflinching humor she describes the crude, uncomfortable conditions, the insufficient equipment, the awful handicaps under which they worked twenty hours a day."

+ N Y Times 21:84 Mr 12 '16 310w

"Her last message on the mud-stained scrap of paper is illuminating: 'To the Greeks foolishness, to the Jews a stumbling block.' Christianity can never teach common sense. It teaches the kingdom of Heaven. . . . It is the folly only possible to the supremely wise."

+ R of Rs 53:374 Mr '16 270w

"Her last letters are accompanied by a perfect memoir, true in feeling, simple in narration, alive with the chatty, charming spirit of a noble and versatile woman. The letters are few in number, but surprisingly rich as well as brief. Here is a writer who sees always as a painter, whose words are colours, and whose sentences are pictures."

+ Sat R 121:67 Ja 15 '16 700w

"The French doctors at Boulogne wondered whether the party of cigarette-smoking Englishwomen who were bound for Serbia knew what they were in for, and would stand the test when they found out. They must have had their doubts removed by this time. If not, these plucky and humorous letters, skillfully edited by Mr. Stephen Gwynn, stand to tell the heroic tale."

+ Spec 116:115 Ja 22 '16 250w

DE BOGOR, MOKRIEVICH, VLADIMIR KARPOVICH. When I was a boy in Russia. (Children of other lands) il *75c (3c) Lothrop 914.7 16-11165

The author is a political exile who has spent some time in America. In this book he tells of his childhood on the estate of his father, a Russian noble, of the freeing of the serfs in 1861, when he was a boy of thirteen, of his entrance into the revolutionary movement while a student at the University of Kiev, of his exile to Siberia and escape.

+ A L A Bkl 12:487 JI '16

"The volume is a model of condensation."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 13 '16 390w

"The little book should help to make alive to many an interested boy or girl,—and, for that matter, a 'grown-up,' too—the youthful life of old Russia."

+ Lit D 52:1713 Je 10 '16 140w

"There is a simply told but very interesting account of the life of the university students, of the spirit that animated them and the ideals they strove to make real. All this part of the little book will be illuminating to those for whom Tolstoy's attitude toward manual labor has been more or less of a puzzle."

+ N Y Times 21:262 Je 25 '16 400w

St Louis 14:443 D '16 20w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 27 '16 230w

"Will be interesting to adults as well as older boys and girls."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:273 Je '16 40w

DEEPIING, WARWICK. Bridge of desire; a story of unrest. *$1.25 (1½c) McBride 16-23362

Martin Frenshaw is, we are told, a brilliant successful playwright, and also a type of masculine uprightness and virility. He tires of a life made up of writing, golf, motoring, gardening, and comradeship with an exceptionally sympathetic wife and desires something vitally different. His wife divines but fails to meet the unspoken need and Martin crosses the bridge by allowing himself to be dominated by a brilliant unscrupulous American widow. He leaves his wife and Sussex home and travels with her on the continent. His wife and men friends maintain the fiction that he is travelling for his health, and when he awakes to his better self and is utterly ashamed of his conduct he is taken back at once by his wife. Apparently no social retribution follows, although Mrs. Rudiger and Martin Frenshaw, traveling under their own names, have stayed together at hotels in Paris, Monte Carlo, Nice and Rome.

"The situation is old enough; the 'idea' in the story is that this experience is, on the whole, normal and medicinal for all persons concerned. . . . Unluckily we are not quite sure, as we leave the hero, that we have been assisting at the predestined and fruitful folly of a strong man, and not at the feeble indulgence of a brilliant fellow with a 'yellow streak.'"

+ Bookm 43:416 Je '16 500w

"The novel is unusual in no way, but it will suit those whom originality bewilders."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '16 90w

+ Nation 103:203 Ag 31 '16 430w

+ N Y Times 21:283 JI 16 '16 250w

"Mr. Deeping's scenes are often crudely done, and his dialog seldom rises above the commonplace. Several contemporary novels from his pen prove that the historical romance, by which he achieved his first success, is his forte."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 190w

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. Listeners, and other poems. *$1.20 Holt 821

(Eng ed 16-21124)

Walter de la Mare is an English poet whose work has appeared in the two volumes of "Georgian poetry," published in America as representative of the younger English school. This volume of his verse is a reprint of a book brought out in England a few years ago.

+ A L A Bkl 13:19 O '16

"Mr. de la Mare has a knack of evoking magic in almost any mood, when the mood surges through him completely. He can take the very softest elements and weave them into images that are pure spells."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '16 1200w

"De la Mare takes a casual scene or a trivial incident and turns it into verse that is as clear and unforgettable as a nursery rhyme or a song of Heine's. This quality of catching the commonplace off its guard is the first of his two great gifts. His second gift is his flair for the purely imaginative and psychical, for the world that is a bit beyond our busy consciousness."

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN—Continued
L: Untermeyer

+ Cleveland p83 J1 '16 110w (Reprinted from Poetry Review)

"Mr. de la Mare seems to be indifferent to contemporary humanity; his concern is chiefly with the abnormal and the supernatural. Those who like the short stories of Algernon Blackwood can not fail to enjoy the poems of Walter de la Mare."

+ Lit D 52:740 Mr 18 '16 470w

"His secret lies in the use of images that are admirably definite in the production of effects that are deliciously vague." O. W. Firkins
+ Nation 103:348 O 12 '16 310w

"You can read his poems only as he means them to be read, and be assured that that is in a very thrilling sort of way. The idea gains excitement from the pauses and accelerations of the meter, and the necessities of the phrase develop new and unexpected cadences in the rhythm. It is this, partly, that gives to his poetry the magical quality. But it is not only this; nor is it only his choice of subject. The mystery we feel in Mr. de la Mare's verse is an inherent quality of his inspiration." A. D. Miller
+ New Repub 6:298 Ap 15 '16 700w

"Mr. de la Mare is welcome for his brooding simplicity, his real singing quality. His 'Listeners' will take its place among the few single poems we suddenly find that we have unconsciously by heart." R: Le Gallienne
+ Pub W 89:1322 Ap 15 '16 1200w

"It has been said of Mr. de la Mare that he is a poet without a message; he has no philosophy to expound, no social or metaphysical wares to cry. Rather he is a craftsman, and a master craftsman, fashioning much that is beautiful."
+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 30 '16 500w

DELAND, MRS. MARGARET WADE (CAMPBELL). Rising tide. il $*1.35 (2c) Harper 16-16520

Out of the vast woman's movement Mrs. Deland has selected one passionate young devotee for special analysis. Her novel is not a study of the movement as a whole; it is a study of its manifestations in Frederica Payton. Freddy, or even Fred to her friends, is decidedly of the present generation, bitterly at war with the generation preceding hers, and the one preceding that, too, altho between herself and her grandmother there are occasional flashes of sympathy. Frederica organizes suffrage clubs, makes speeches to striking garment workers, and opens a real estate office. She prides herself on her frankness, and when she falls in love with a man she tells him so. And there comes the first blow to Frederica's pride, the deathblow to her youthful cocksureness. At the end of the book she is about to be married to another man, one who loves her devotedly and with whom she finds "contentment." The story appeared as a serial in the Woman's Home Companion, December 1915-1916.

+ A L A Bkl 13:34 O '16

"This difficult theme, which is wont to arouse voices so shrill or so gruff on one side or the other, Mrs. Deland has treated, after her wont, with infinite good sense and sound humor." H. W. Boynton
+ Bookm 44:185 O '16 410w

"If any objection is to be filed, it is not from the 'advanced' ranks that it should proceed, but from those who may well feel that the older women introduced do not fairly represent their generation."

Cath World 104:560 Ja '17 240w

+ Lit D 53:1039 O 21 '16 380w

"If her story shows the folly of current militant and aggressive methods, it does not deny the existence of a goal."

+ Nation 103:377 O 19 '16 460w

"It is perhaps not by accident that Mrs. Deland builds a 'Freddy' earnest and not unlovable but totally without humor." H. W. Boynton
+ Nation 103:508 N 30 '16 70w

+ N Y Times 21:321 Ag 20 '16 1800w

+ Outlook 114:521 N 1 '16 480w

"Here is a book which from beginning to end is an unmitigated joy. . . . 'The rising tide' is substantially the book which Jane Austen might have written had she lived in twentieth century America, instead of nineteenth century England. Indeed, when the resemblance has been pointed out, it is impossible to lose sight of the fact that this is simply a new version of Miss Austen's Emma, transplanted to the era of the suffragette. . . . There is much in the volume which simply refuses to be forgotten." F: T. Cooper

+ Pub W 90:603 Ag 19 '16 780w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 420w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p608 D 14 '16 600w

Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 50w

DELANO, EDITH BARNARD. June. il $*1.25 (3c) Houghton 16-18332

With only her black mammy to care for her June had lived her thirteen years on the large Virginia estate of which she was sole owner. When Hilary Warburton, a young engineer who was examining the land in June's valley, met with an accident, she found him and thereafter considered him her property. Hilary, who had known her dead mother, found her a home with her relatives in the North. She became a member of a large family of slender means but after several troublous years won her way to a secretaryship in the office of a great railroad. Then again came Hilary, now famous as an engineer, to advise June's employer to buy her hitherto worthless land. All the care and worry over, June went back home to Virginia and Hilary followed to prove himself a real fairy prince to "the little girl who owned him."

+ A L A Bkl 13:83 N '16

"A good wholesome story that cannot fail to please." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:408 D '16 40w

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 30 '16 260w

"It lacks the quality that is, above all, necessary in a book for young readers—sincerity. . . . Every book that is to make a lasting impression upon young people ought at least to contain characters truthful and well-balanced. But there are none here."

— N Y Times 21:580 D 31 '16 500w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 20w

DELANO, EDITH BARNARD. When Carey came to town. il $*1 (2½c) Dodd 16-6719

A story that ran as a serial in the Ladies' Home Journal. Its heroine is a girl who has been reared in utter ignorance of modern life and conventional society. When the aunt who has been her one surviving relative dies, she leaves her Virginia home and goes out to see the world. Arriving in the strange city to which she has bought a ticket, she directs a cabman to drive her to the largest house, on the principle that there will always be room for one more guest in a big house. To the consternation of Hiram A. Ward, the bachelor owner of the place, she announces that she has come to pay him a visit. His solution of the dilemma, her introduction to modern social life and the progress of a love affair that develops between the two, make the story.

"The scenes which ensue are dramatic, comical, delightful. After the first, our imagination is no longer overtaxed. But our sense of humor and of pathos, too, are repeatedly played upon by the author's hand, a clever hand, but well concealed."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 26 '16 400w

"A farrago of absurdities."

— N Y Times 21:153 Ap 16 '16 210w

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Bars of iron. il $*1.50 (1c) Putnam 16-4391

The story opens with a brief prologue. In a Queensland bar a young English boy is drawn against his will into a fight with an older man.

He is reluctant at first, but once in he fights. Making use of a wrestler's trick that means almost certain death, he kills his adversary. By the kindly aid of one of the onlookers he escapes. The story proper then opens in England with Piers Evesham, heir to Rodding Abbey, at home from his travels around the world. He is a hot-tempered and imperious youth, but he is sensitive, too, and suffers unceasingly for that hidden incident in his past. But his conscience is not strong enough to persuade him to make confession to the woman he loves. He marries her and after this marriage the truth comes out with disastrous consequences. Avery, the wife, is a fine, strong woman, and other well drawn characters are the members of the family of a tyrannical vicar. The European war is made a factor in the story's end.

"Although her novels are selling by the hundreds of thousands, that fact should give no reason for sneering at them or for coupling Miss Dell's name with Marie Corelli's. For while Miss Corelli's fiction is highly sentimental and supernatural, Miss Dell's is conspicuously sturdy and very much of this earth. That she is an artist in the construction of a romantic novel there is no question." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '16 1250w

"Miss Dell's outstanding talent as a novel writer has been her ability to create and keep at a high level the factor of emotional suspense. This new book shows a tendency to emphasize that factor unduly, to insist upon it with superabundant adjectives, and to lay on too heavily for artistic effect the colors with which she paints her characters."

— N Y Times 21:191 My 7 '16 630w

"Through all the passion of the story the author has a vision and never for one moment does she let the reader forget that. It stirs the emotions and touches the heart." F. M. Holly

+ Pub. W 89:1316 Ap 15 '16 320w

"Those who looked to Miss Dell for the virile work promised in her first novel, 'The way of the eagle,' will be disappointed. She has gone over to the sentimentalists. Her characters are not strong; they are only violent. They are not human beings; they are puppets of fiction."

— Springfield Republican p17 Ap 23 '16 430w

DELMORME, EDMOND. War surgery. *$1.50 Hoeber 617

"An encyclopædic manual in small compass dealing with projectiles and military wounds. In the early chapters are descriptions of different kinds of projectiles and the characteristic wounds caused by each, the larger portion of the book being devoted to reginal surgery. It is surprising to find but the briefest mention of infections, the problem with which military surgeons are chiefly concerned in the present war." —Nation

"Dr. Delorme speaks with authority. He is well known as a writer on war surgery. He holds the rank of inspector-general in the French army, and he is a past president of the Surgical Society. . . . Here and there the translator renders technical terms so literally that it will be rather difficult for one who is ignorant of French to grasp the exact meaning, although it is usually possible to guess it by the context. The book is thoroughly to be trusted, and should be read by every one who is taking a temporary commission in the Royal army medical corps. Its only fault, perhaps, is that it is not long enough: more detailed information would be welcome upon many of the subjects of which it treats."

+ Ath 1915,1:451 My 15 350w

"A handbook which would be studied to advantage by members of the Medical reserve corps and by American surgeons applying for positions in field or base hospitals."

+ Nation 102:320 Mr 16 '16 100w

DEMING, SEYMOUR. From doomsday to kingdom come. il *50c (3c) Small 172.4

16-14302

The theme of this small book is practically identical with that of the author's two earlier works, "A message to the middle class," and "The pillar of fire": the real conflict of our life to-day lies in the class struggle. War is an instrument in the hands of the ruling classes of all countries by means of which their own interests may be protected and the possibility of internal revolution checked. "Threatened at home, start a foreign war" is laid down as an axiom of statecraft. Imperialistic capitalism is declared the common enemy of all nations—our own included.

"Less convincing than 'Message to the middle class' in that it adopts the incoherence of the prophet."

— Ind 88:167 O 23 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:106 Jl '16

"A readable book, a piquant bit of the urge toward true democracy."

+ R of Rs 54:344 S '16 110w

DE MORGAN, AUGUSTUS. Budget of paradoxes; reprinted, with the author's additions, from the Athenaeum. 2d ed ed. by D. E. Smith. 2v il ea *$3.50 Open ct. 828 16-19218

"A new edition of a work first published in 1872. Author was 'a mathematician of the first order' (Chambers's biographical dictionary) and wrote many works on mathematics. This one is devoted to the curious by-paths of the science, to the cranks, impostors, and quacks, and their theories and fallacies. Such subjects as 'The number of the beast' in the Book of Revelation, and other themes for endless controversy, are discussed, together with matters more strictly mathematical. Its topics are chiefly in the field of mathematics, but the two volumes contain items of interest for almost everybody. Hitherto it has usually been kept in libraries merely as a reference book. The author's son—William De Morgan—is the famous novelist, the author of 'Joseph Vance' and other books." —N Y Br Lib News

"It was apparently never reprinted after the first edition [edited by Mrs. De Morgan] and consequently soon became out of print. Second-hand copies have become increasingly rare as time has gone on, until in recent years it has become quite impossible to obtain the book unless one was prepared to pay a distinctly long price. By the fact alone of publishing a second edition, the editor and publishers have put the world of scholarship, in the very broadest sense of that term, greatly in their debt. . . . The main feature of the new edition consists of some odd millions (more or less) of footnotes, designed, in the words of the editor, 'to elucidate the text by supplying such information as the casual reader might wish as he passes over the pages.' To anyone who has not examined the book it will be nearly unbelievable that petty didacticism could be carried to such lengths as it here is, even in a text-book. De Morgan did not write the 'Budget of paradoxes' for unscholarly people. He spoke the language of sound, thorough, and mellow scholarship. He assumed, as a matter of course, that his readers understood that language." Raymond Pearl

+ — Dial 60:157 F 17 '16 2450w

+ Nation 102:417 Ap 13 '16 190w

"In giving translations of quotations, etc., in the text Prof. Smith is sometimes painfully inaccurate, and in other cases he is unsympathetic. It is a disgrace for any mathematician not to know of the existence, and general object, of the 'Budget,' and in writing this review we have acted on that assumption throughout." G. B. M.

+ — Nature 97:77 Mr 23 '16 1950w

N Y Br Lib News 2:172 N '15 120w

"The object of the editor—as stated—has been to make the reading more pleasant, rather than to improve upon one of the most delicious bits of satire of the nineteenth century. The value of De Morgan's work has been decidedly enhanced by Mr. Smith's skilful editing."

+ R of Rs 52:631 N '15 130w

"The similarity between the work of David Eugene Smith and Augustus De Morgan in the field of popularizing mathematics has long been familiar to students of the history of science. Hence it is eminently fitting that as editor of this new edition of 'A budget of paradoxes' we should have Professor Smith, who not long ago continued so ably in the 'Kara arithmetica,' De Morgan's bibliographical work, represented by 'Arithmetical books from the invention of printing to the present time' (London, 1847). . . . These are volumes to be read at odd moments, and always one will find profitable enjoyment. In spite of the interest and amusement with which we thumb the pages a feeling of sadness for the human frailty comes over the reader." L. C. Karpinski

DE MORGAN, AUGUSTUS—Continued

+ Science n s 42:729 N 19 '15 1400w

Spec 116:609 My 13 '16 20w

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 7 '15 280w

DENYS, FREDERICK WARD. Our summer in the vale of Kashmir. il *$2 (5½c), James William Bryan press, Washington, D. C. 915.4 15-27601

This book has been called a "guide-book de luxe," for its clear type, its broad margins and its many beautiful and interesting pictures in sepia and in color justify its dedication to "lovers of the beautiful." After a few introductory pages telling of the legends and history of Kashmir, the author gives practical information as to the way to reach the country, how to live and travel in it, what places and things to see in it, its social and religious life, etc.

"Mr. Denys entered with zest into the life of the English residents, and the chapters about this are especially charming. Illuminating as well are those relating to the native rulers of Kashmir."

+ Boston Transcript p24 F 23 '16 420w

"A notable specimen of the fine art of book-manufacture, and, best of all, thoroughly readable." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 61:25 Je 22 '16 160w

+ Nation 102:286 Mr 9 '16 170w

"A volume that will excite interest for several reasons. It is an artistic book, . . . and it is said to be the first American book on the subject. Dr. Denys finds enough local color in Kashmir to make his book a welcome addition to tourist literature, rather than a repetition of old material foisted upon an unsuspecting public by means of artistic book-making. The author takes his work seriously, but with a light touch; it is a well-balanced travel narrative."

+ Springfield Republican p17 F 29 '16 400w

DE WEESE, TRUMAN ARMSTRONG. Keeping a dollar at work. $1 (2½c) N. Y. evening post 659 15-26797

Fifty talks on newspaper advertising reprinted from the New York Evening Post. "While their primary purpose is to show the importance of the modern newspaper as a factor in successful merchandising, they cover in a keenly analytical and comprehensive way the whole subject of advertising." (Introd.) Among the subjects treated are: The newspaper an educator; Putting news into advertising; Do women do the buying? How advertising creates "value"; Should a bank advertise? Should the church advertise? Selling the new books; Killing the "catalogue habit."

DEWEY, JOHN. Democracy and education. (Text-book ser. in education) *$1.40 (1c) Macmillan 370.1 16-7522

"The author's aim here is to detect and state the ideas implied in a democratic society and to apply those ideas to the problems of education. Constructive aims and methods of public education as seen from this point of view are indicated. The author connects the growth of democracy with the development of the experimental method in the sciences, with evolutionary ideas in the biological sciences and with the industrial reorganization. 'Since democracy stands in principle for free interchange, for social continuity, it must develop a theory of knowledge which sees in knowledge the method by which one experience is made available in giving direction and meaning to another.'"—Boston Transcript

+ A L A Bkl 12:404 Je '16

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 15 '16 110w

+ Cleveland p110 Ag '16 50w

"This is a period of reconstruction and Dewey is its prophet. He has already been termed one of the 'major prophets of today'; it seems hardly too much to conceive that the twenty-first century will study three great stages in educational theory, Plato, Rousseau, and Dewey." T. P. Beyer

+ Dial 61:101 Ag 15 '16 1850w

"The book is a very stimulating source of ideas for anyone who wishes to systematize his general thinking on educational theory. The book has in it very few discussions of concrete educational situations. It is in no sense of the word a book of methods or a book of concrete prescriptions about school activities. It is a philosophy of education rather than a handbook on school organization."

EI School J 17:13 S '16 1650w

"Professor John Dewey in 'Democracy and education' presents for the first time in a unified form the philosophic foundation of his educational theory. His book is itself a most brilliant example of the function of philosophy, for he gives us a transvaluation of educational ideals and methods in the light of a theory of knowledge of which he has been the chief originator."

+ Ind 86:401 Je 5 '16 270w

"In the reviewer's opinion, it is the most important of Professor Dewey's productions thus far. In defiance of possible imputations of chauvinism, the reviewer will also say that it would be difficult to overstate its import and value for all students of education, philosophy, and society." A. W. Moore

+ Int J Ethics 26:547 Jl '16 1350w

"A notable contribution to the philosophy of education. . . . In the Deweyan social system there is no room for any individual who wishes to lead his own life in the privacy of reflective self-consciousness. . . . In sum, one is driven to the belief, that in spite of Mr. Dewey's fine defence of individualism, his moral ideal is really that of the 'good mixer.' In thus failing to provide for both ends of the social problem, Professor Dewey fails at the same time to solve the educational problem."

+ Nation 102:480 My 4 '16 2750w

"Each clause is a tightly packed and organized statement. Mr. Dewey supplies nothing that he thinks the reader might supply himself. . . . The result is not information or propaganda but a book which is the mature wisdom of the finest and most powerful intellect devoted to the future of American civilization." W. L.

+ New Repub 7:231 Jl 1 '16 600w

St Louis 14:184 My '16

"It is an interesting book, but it needs to be critically read. . . . It illustrates various elements of doctrine, not all of which can be regarded as equally 'sound.'"

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 23 '16 830w

+ Survey 36:541 Ag 26 '16 1250w

DEWEY, JOHN. Essays in experimental logic. *$1.75 (1½c) Univ. of Chicago press 160 16-14107

Four of the essays in this book are reprinted, "with editorial revisions, mostly omissions," from a volume entitled "Studies in logical theory" that was issued as one of the Decennial publications of the University of Chicago in 1903. The remaining essays, nine in number, are in part reprinted and in part rewritten from contributions to philosophical journals. An introductory chapter, written especially for this book, sets forth the author's theory of the relation of experience to knowledge and of the function of thinking as an intermediary process in the development of an experience.

+ A L A Bkl 13:102 D '16

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 26 '16 320w

"Though written for a technical audience without any extraneous attraction to relieve the close-knit of the argument, the book before us is not without interest to the thoughtful layman. There are many indications that its pragmatism may soon become the popular philosophy of our progressive democracy." M. R. Cohen

+ New Repub 8:118 S 2 '16 2400w
St Louis 14:383 N '16

"Whatever one may be inclined to conclude regarding the conception of thinking for which Professor Dewey is spokesman, none but those who are satisfied to offer a perfunctory course in logic can afford to neglect this series of essays. Nor is the book significant only for teachers of logic. It is, on the contrary, of first importance to all who are themselves investigators or are desirous of gaining an insight into the nature and meaning of investigation." M. C. Otto

+ School R 24:775 D '16 800w

"It is a difficult book to read, for its author, despite his anxiety to make himself understood and his scrupulous fairness in meeting the objections of his critics, has not been endowed with the gift of lucidity. . . . Enough has perhaps been said to show the originality of Professor Dewey's book. It should certainly not be left unread by philosophers. It may not make many converts, but its author is one of those thinkers with whom it is both a pleasure and a profit to have been forced to disagree."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p20 Ja 11 '17 1400w

DICK, CHARLES HILL. Highways and byways in Galloway and Carrick. (Highways and byways ser.) il *$2 Macmillan 914.1

16-21214

"Romance of all sorts is to be found in those sections of Scotland visited by the Rev. C. H. Dick for the preparation of this volume. These names are not now officially a part of Scottish geographical nomenclature, but they were formerly applied to the greater portion of Ayrshire, Wigtonshire and Kirkcudbright in southwestern Scotland. Although a picturesque country, extending as it does towards the northeastern coast of Ireland between the Firth of Clyde and Solway Firth, it has played but a small part in the more widely known phases of Scottish history and its literary associations are few. Nevertheless Dr. Dick has no difficulty in assembling for his book plenty of valuable and much out-of-the-way material."—Boston Transcript

"Reference to the counties was made by Borrow, Scott, Burns, and Crockett, and Mr. Dick has found many anecdotes and legends of the people, places and castles. Contains an index and a map."

+ A L A Bkl 13:118 D '16

"One of the most interesting volumes in the Highways and byways series. . . . No little additional charm and an added ability to visualize his scenes is given to Dr. Dick's volume by the drawings Hugh Thomson has made for it." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 1 '16 800w

+ Dial 61:477 N 30 '16 130w

"An ideal volume."

+ Nature 98:205 N 16 '16 1150w

N Y Br Lib News 3:156 O '16

St Louis 14:403 N '16 20w

+ Spec 117:379 S 30 '16 230w

+ Springfield Republican p8 D 15 '16 250w

"Mr. Dick has a happy gift of describing scenery clearly and vividly and without any lavish expenditure of adjectives. He does not profess to be an historian, but his historical knowledge is sound enough; and he has a light touch in telling of such curious incidents."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p487 O 12 '16 900w

DICKINSON, GOLDSWORTHY LOWES. European anarchy. *$1 (4c) Macmillan 327.4
16-10319

The author, an Englishman, places the responsibility for the war where he believes it to belong, not on Germany or any other one state; but on the European "tradition and system." For the actual precipitation of war he holds the Central Powers responsible, but he goes far back of August, 1914, to show the forces that had been making for war in all of the countries now involved. "What I have wanted to do," he says, "is to set the tragic events of those few days of diplomacy in their proper place in the whole complex of international politics." He shows the futility of the belief, held both in England and in Germany, that peace may be secured and maintained by the "crushing" of any one power. "Whatever be the issue of this war, one thing is certain: it will bring no lasting peace to Europe unless it brings a radical change both in the spirit and in the organization of international politics."

A L A Bkl 12:472 J1 '16

+ Ath p226 My '16 1000w

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:626 Ag '16 450w

+ Cleveland p159 D '16 90w

+ Ind 87:168 J1 31 '16 100w

"For the elucidation of his thesis the author surveys briefly the history of Europe since 1870, and makes also a cursory examination of the events immediately before the present conflict. Most of the small volume is taken up with this account, which will be found interesting and useful by many who would not use lengthier writings published recently, though we think that the author relies rather often and even excessively upon the opinions expressed by Baron Beyens in his 'L'Allemagne avant la guerre.' We know of no writing on this subject which exhibits throughout such entire and fearless impartiality."

+ Nation 102:676 Je 22 '16 950w

"In the midst of this crisis it is well to take counsel with sane men whose own governments have already undertaken the business of punishment and regulation. One of the sanest of these men is G. Lowes Dickinson, and one of the sanest of his utterances is 'The European anarchy.' . . . Mr. Dickinson differs from many Americans in his final outlook. He seems to have no faith whatever in the proximate value of a new and better balance of power." F. H.

+ New Repub 7:45 My 13 '16 1150w

"Mr. Dickinson's calm clear analysis and his constant effort to do full justice to the motives, the point of view and the impelling historical force of each combatant are very welcome. Such kindly willingness and ability to understand and make plain just how the present conflict, its causes and its purposes, look to his country's bitterest foe betoken a mind of unusual judicial character."

+ N Y Times 21:172 Ap 23 '16 1350w

"That view of European affairs which seems destined to prevail when passions have subsided and truth separates itself from doctrine, is expressed by Mr. Dickinson with a philosophic clearness, an intensity, and a restraint that should make his book a real force."

+ No Am 204:149 J1 '16 600w

Pittsburgh 21:357 J1 '16 50w

R of Rs 53:756 Je '16 90w

"The views expressed by Mr. Lowes Dickinson may be wrong, but it cannot be doubted that they are the outcome of honest and sincere conviction." [Earl of Cromer]

+ Spec 117:15 J1 '16 810w

"He is hardly as able an analyst of diplomatic history as he is a critic of civilizations—his passage on German egotism is one of the most eloquent in the book—and he is not free from the bias of the socialist-pacifist doctrinaire. On the historical side his work needs amplification, but he has the great merit of being one who tries to make men think rationally about the removable causes of international strife."

+ Springfield Republican p13 My 21 '16 310w

"In Mr. Lowes Dickinson's references to 'anarchy' and in such phrases as 'the defeat of the ideal of a world order and the definite acceptance of international anarchy,' there lurks a fallacy. There is no reason to believe that the condition of Europe before the outbreak of the war was more anarchical than in preceding ages. The state of feeling in England or France DICKINSON, GOLDSWORTHY LOWES—Cont. was not less favourable to peace than it had been."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p219 My 11 '16 1200w

DICKSON, HARRIS. House of luck. il *$1.35
2 (1c) Small 16-22939

An adventure story with an historical background. It is a story of the lower Mississippi in the 1830's. The operations of a band of 'land pirates' known as the "Speculators" and their ultimate defeat at the hands of the law and order contingent of Vicksburg supplies the action. The hero is Adrien de Valence, a young Frenchman whose father, one of Napoleon's marshals, lives in hope of returning to France with the restoration of the empire. In disguise, Adrien joins the "Speculators," learns their secrets and aids in their downfall. Like his father he is a loyal Frenchman, but with Cecile Kinlock as his wife, he appears quite content, at the end, to become an American.

+ Dial 61:469 N 30 '16 150w

+ N Y Times 21:577 D 31 '16 230w

DILLON, EMILE JOSEPH. England and Germany (Eng title, Ourselves and Germany). *$3 Brentano's 16-23469

The author's "argument is briefly that Germany had mobilized her finances long before she had mobilized her troops. He is unqualified in his admiration of German industry, resourcefulness, and cohesiveness. At the same time he is just as unqualified in condemning some of Germany's business methods. . . . In the chapter on 'Germany and Russia,' the author shows how the persistent Teutonic commercial influence was slowly but surely striking at the vitals of Russian trade, and that the only hope of freeing Russia from the meshes of the German net was a war between the two peoples. Under 'Teuton politics,' the question of double naturalization is dealt with. The Teuton doctrine and practise, he says, 'are that Germans may insinuate themselves into a country, and in the guise of loyal citizens become conversant with its secrets, and then use them to its hurt.' . . . An introduction to the volume has been written by the Hon. W. M. Hughes, prime minister of Australia. A book of such value ought to have an index."—Lit D

"The wonderful scope of the author's knowledge of world politics amazes the reader. Every true statesman in all lands should read it. It is no book for self-seeking politicians and demagogues; but those who believe in community morality no less than in personal morality, and that the state should seek to realize the standards of honor no less than the individual, will prize it as a friend which has awakened them from a slumber that meant the death of political and individual liberty." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 20 '16 680w

"After making all possible allowances for the author's preferences and sympathies, it must be confessed that Dr. Dillon's volume contains data of absorbing interest and value, especially to the student of international politics. It is by no means a one-sided production, as one might imagine from the title."

+ Lit D 53:311 Ag 5 '16 600w

N Y Br Lib News 3:154 O '16 30w

"This imperial conception of the state is apparently so deeply grounded in Dr. Dillon's mind that unconsciously he sets it up as the only national ideal to be considered. . . . Doubtless he speaks with better knowledge of what German diplomacy has accomplished in the Balkans and in Africa than he does when he comes to the United States, where he seems to have accepted any unauthorized supposition as fact if it fitted in with his theory."

+ N Y Times 21:350 S 10 '16 1150w

"Mr. Hughes, in a short introduction to Dr. Dillon's new book, describes it as a timely antidote to the fatal delusion that the present war is but a passing episode. In his chapters on 'Problems of leadership,' 'Germany's resourcefulness,' 'The perils of party politics,' 'Problems of the future,' and 'The final issue,' Dr. Dillon states the gist of the matter both brilliantly and well. In a word, he justifies Mr. Hughes's sponsorship. For the rest this book is a narrative of much of the political and diplomatic history of the war, in the manner familiar to readers of Dr. Dillon's foreign correspondence from various capitals. . . . His whole treatment of questions affecting Russia seems to lack precisely the definite and constructive qualities which are essential to the new standard of national virility which he urges upon us."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p278 Je 15 '16 820w

DILLON, EMILE JOSEPH. From the triple to the quadruple alliance. il *$1.50 Doran 940.91 16-4093

"An analysis of Italy's relations with the Central powers and her motives for eventually entering the war on the side of the Allies." (Ath) "The two principal points which emerge from a reading of Dr. Dillon's book are that we must not expect a complete identity of view between Italy and the other members of the entente after the war, and that Germany's preparation for war included a commercial domination of Italy which is only now being understood even in Italy, but which was of extraordinary cunning, boldness, and complexity." (Spec)

"Dr. Dillon brings his exceptional knowledge of Near Eastern questions to bear upon his subject, but his book was written in Sept., 1915, before Italy's adhesion to the Declaration of London, and her action in Albania, which must considerably alter her relations with Germany and Turkey."

+ Ath p40 Ja '16 80w

"Begins with a summary of events and intrigues which forced Italy into the triple alliance. Gives an excellent account of Bismarck's part in it. Perhaps the most valuable chapters are those which explain the hold that Germany secured upon the imagination, and consequently upon the economic and political life of the Italian people. Contains full explanation of the negotiations between Italy and Austria."

+ Pittsburgh 21:232 My '16 70w (Condensed from Outlook [London] 1916)

"The solid pages of information about the Banca commerciale will astonish English readers, though Italians were made acquainted with the facts many months ago in Signor Preziosi's book. With its headquarters at Milan, the bank began with small capital, and has always carefully maintained the appearance of being a purely Italian concern. It is now a very rich and powerful body, it has wormed itself into the economic organism of the country, has Teutonized the direction and activities of native industries, and has brought under its own control production and distribution, metallurgical works, steamship companies, municipalities, politicians, and newspapers."

+ Spec 116:161 Ja 29 '16 1800w

DITCHFIELD, REV. PETER HAMPSON. Cathedrals of Great Britain. il *$1.75 Dutton 726 (Eng ed 16-26859)

"A third edition of 'The cathedrals of Great Britain,' is made necessary by the increase in the number of sees formed in England since the appearance of the second edition in 1903. . . . Included in the 51 cathedrals mentioned are not alone the famous ones known to everyone, but also the newer and less famous cathedrals, recently made the central churches of new sees, but in most instances buildings which have stood for centuries. In addition to the descriptions of the buildings, Mr. Ditchfield has given a ground plan, a list of the famous people buried in each, and an account of some points of interest in their vicinity."—Springfield Republican

A L A Bkl 13:92 N '16

"In many respects an improvement upon its predecessors. It gives due credit to Pearson's notably fine conception of Truro cathedral, but on the contrary has nothing to add to the earlier brief note in regard to Wakefield cathedral. Newcastle, however, has justice done to it at Mr. Ditchfield's hands, and the same may be said in regard to the notes relating to Birmingham, Sheffield, St. Edmundsbury and Chelmsford; noble parish churches recently raised to cathedral rank. Illustrations by Railton and others appear at frequent intervals."

+ Boston Transcript p7 J1 15 '16 250w

Cath World 103:831 S '16 140w

"This is the guide to take on a trip that is to include the lesser sees. The host of illustrations are delightful drawings by Symonds and other English artists."

+ Ind 86:398 Je 5 '16 80w

+ Sat R 121:402 Ap 22 '16 430w

Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 320w

DITTENHOEFER, ABRAM JESSE. How we² elected Lincoln. il *50c (2½c) Harper

16-18339

"This book offers my personal recollections of the immortal Emancipator, and of the memorable campaigns of 1860 and 1864, in which, as a young man, I was actively engaged." (Author's preface) Mr. Dittenhoefer was a campaigner for Lincoln in 1860 and a Lincoln elector in 1864. His personal acquaintance with Lincoln began on the day of the Cooper Union speech. Contents: The man—Lincoln; Lincoln's introduction to the east; How Lincoln was first nominated; How Lincoln was first elected; The journey to the capitol; Stories and incidents; Four years of stress and strain; The renomination; The campaign of 1864.

N Y Br Lib News 3:169 N '16

+ N Y Times 21:570 D 24 '16 400w

R of Rs 54:569 N '16 60w

St Louis 15:24 Ja '17

DIVER, MRS. KATHERINE HELEN MAUD (MARSHALL). Desmond's daughter. il *$1.50 (1c) Putnam 16-13973

"Captain Desmond, V. C." was one of the author's earlier Anglo-Indian novels. In this story Sir Theo Desmond is in charge of a division in northern India and his young daughter, Thea, is the heroine of the tale. The character about whom the story centers however is Vincent Leigh, a sensitive boy of introspective tendencies who seems out of his element in an army post. He has entered the army because it was his father's profession and because his mother, from whom his curse of shyness is inherited, believes that army life may take him out of himself. His testing comes in the Tirah campaign of 1897-8.

"Rather long and naturally of limited appeal, but contains good accounts of Afghan frontier life."

+ A L A Bkl 13:175 Ja '17

"Those parts of the book dealing especially with India are the poorest done, and a touch of anti-climax mars an otherwise superior novel."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 13 '17 150w

+ N Y Times 21:577 D 31 '16 560w

"It is always a pleasure to read a story by Mrs. Diver, because she always has a story to tell. Her style and characterisation are firm and vigorous. She handles her material adroitly."

+ Sat R 122:139 Ag 5 '16 200w

Spec 116:726 Je 10 '16 10w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 28 '17 250w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p250 My 25 '16 600w

DIX, BEULAH MARIE (MRS. GEORG H. FLEBBE). Battle months of George Daurella. *$1.25 (1½c) Duffield 16-6723

In the epilogue the author says: "I should call the story perhaps a humoresque, a fantasy of the war. Designedly it is of no country and no clime. I defy you to square its geography with the points of the compass. I double-defy you to say this man is meant to be French, this other to be Austrian." The result of this is that we are given horror after horror of war without any dominating motive for the fighting. George Daurella, after a life spent almost wholly at the War school, finds himself at twenty-one a junior lieutenant of light cavalry, bound for the front. Chance throws him on his last afternoon into the company of a beautiful, wholesome American girl, chance and his own innate chivalry enable him to protect her in a burning village where she is acting as war-nurse and to conduct her over the frontier. She rescues him when, an escaped prisoner, he is about to be killed as a spy. At last, bruised and scarred for life, love comes to him in a neutral country and goodness and kindness make him realize that humanity has a claim upon him greater than fidelity to his regiment or love of his country.

A L A Bkl 12:480 J1 '16

"The novel could hardly be called serious. In comparison with the two war plays of the same author, it is decidedly trivial. It demands a certain amount of credulity on the part of the reader, and a good deal of innocence concerning actual warfare. But it is sufficiently amusing to hold the attention, and sufficiently up-to-date to stimulate curiosity."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '16 280w

+ Ind 86:305 My 22 '16 70w

"The plot is rather melodramatic and the coincidences are sometimes incredibly startling, but the author has a power which is not easy to describe."

+ Lit D 52:1466 My 20 '16 240w

"The novel is written from the pacifist point of view. The character of Daurella is cleverly drawn, and the difference between his natural self and the one superimposed by long training . . . is clearly indicated."

+ N Y Times 21:213 My 21 '16 530w

R of Rs 53:636 My '16 80w

"The story contains some analysis of war, and the narrative is at times stirring."

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 150w

Wis Lib Bull 12:227 My '16 70w

DIX, BEULAH MARIE (MRS. GEORG H. FLEBBE). Blithe McBride. il *$1.25 (2½c) Macmillan 16-22297

A story of colonial days for boys and girls. Blithe McBride, at twelve years, comes to Massachusetts as a bond-maiden. The kind granny who has sheltered the little maid and protected her from harm has died and it is not an evil fortune that takes the girl away from the companions into whose hands she has fallen to send her into service in far away America. Blithe finds kind friends and her devotion to the little child who is placed in her charge and her courage when the two of them are captured by Indians win for her a secure and happy home.

+ A L A Bkl 13:181 Ja '17

"Much of a piece with her previous tales from 'Soldier Rigdale' on. . . . A story for children in their teens or for grownups who have not lost their appreciation of the simple and the sentimental in story-telling."

+ Dial 61:588 D 28 '16 160w

"Holds the reader by thrilling situations, mystery, and a happy ending."

+ Lit D 54:80 Ja 13 '17 180w

"Altogether a very pleasant little story, and a book which should appeal to children who are studying the early history of the United States."

+ N Y Times 21:530 D 3 '16 320w

DIXON, E., ed. Fairy tales from the Arabian nights. il *$1.25 (½c) Putnam

In this edition for younger children the more familiar tales, Ali Baba, Sinbad the sailor, Aladdin, etc., have been selected for reading. A colored frontispiece and over forty illustrations in black and white are contributed to the volume by John D. Batten.

"Well worth reading with pictures in solid blacks and white, very good."

+ N Y Times 20:468 N 28 '15 40w

"The text is that of Galland, 1821, which so beautifully preserves the oriental atmosphere. The edition is designed virginibus puerisque, every element that might prove objectionable for young children being eliminated. In editing the tales to accomplish his purpose Mr. Dixon has thrown out entirely the introduction and conclusion. It would have required considerable skill to get rid of the points objectionable for little people as contained in that introduction and conclusion, to be sure, but the setting was worth preserving even at some effort, as making up part of the flavor of the old book."

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

DIXON, E., ed.—Continued

+ — Springfield Republican p19 N 27 '15 240w

DIXON, ROLAND BURRAGE. Oceanic [mythology]. il $6 (5c) Jones, Marshall 291 16-22069

This volume follows those of Alexander and Fox in the "Mythology of all races" series and is devoted to the myths of Oceania, that term being given a broad interpretation to include "all island areas, great or small, from Easter Island to Sumatra and from Hawaii to New Zealand." The divisions of territory for the purposes of this book are: Polynesia; Melanesia; Indonesia, Micronesia, Australia. The ethnic complexity of the region covered makes it a fruitful field for anthropological study, but the author points out that in the present state of knowledge all conclusions must be accepted as tentative. He has confined himself largely to sketching the myths and calling attention to resemblances and similarities between those of one area and another. The author is professor of anthropology at Harvard. The book has a bibliography of seventeen pages.

"The bibliography is comprehensive, tho we miss mention of the very valuable 'History of Melanesian society,' by Rivers (which makes use of the myths and legends of the region), and of such works as Newton's 'In far New Guinea' and Williamson's 'Ways of South Sea savages.'"

+ Lit D 54:202 Ja 27 '17 200w

DIXON, ROYAL. Americanization. (Our national problems) *50c (1c) Macmillan 323 16-15802

A discussion of the problems presented by the alien residents in our midst, with definite proposals and suggestions for their "Americanization." Contents: Americanization; America the oldest nation; What every American should know; Placing the blame; The new charity; Citizenship; America and the women's clubs; National preparedness; Organized for peace; The new America.

"Unfortunately, it is not possible to give Mr. Dixon so much credence when he deserts his specialty. Many of his pages are so heated, even frenzied in their statements that they are quite untrustworthy. They paint a picture of the American nation and people that in its half-truths is shamelessly untrue to the whole reality." F. F. Kelly

+ — Bookm 44:70 S '16 330w

Cleveland p109 Ag '16 20w

"The modernist will like Mr. Dixon's arithmetic even less than his theology. . . . Mr. Dixon's argument is not destroyed by this fact, but his talent for misinformation is rather engagingly displayed." R. B.

— New Repub 8:249 O 7 '16 910w

"As vice president of the League of foreign-born citizens and editor of the Immigrants in America Review he has been brought into close touch with much Americanization work and, therefore, speaks with intimate knowledge and authority as regards that portion of his book."

+ — N Y Times 21:368 S 17 '16 360w

Springfield Republican p8 N 23 '16 420w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p551 N 16 '16 480w

DIXON, THOMAS. Fall of a nation; a sequel to The birth of a nation. il *$1.35 Appleton 16-13045

"The fall of a nation," sketches briefly what might happen to the United States if nothing should be done in the matter of national defense. The action takes place in the future—years after the collapse of the Great war in 1917. America has become glutted with prosperity and around the coffers of her wealth there are no safeguards of defense. She is attacked by traitors within and by the armies of the Federated empires of northern and central Europe. Defense, owing to unpreparedness, becomes a pitiful farce. In a few weeks, the republic of the United States ceases to exist and the States become 'Imperial colonies.' The remainder of the book tells the story of the ingenious plotting by the conquered Americans which finally results in the victory over the enemy and the re-establishment of the republic."—R of Rs

"It would be difficult to discover anything more futile and foolish than 'The fall of a nation,' even in the midst of an epoch that produces many futile and foolish books. . . . But it need hoodwink none of us into believing it to be a propagandist tract against pacifism. It is nothing but a story, and a very poor story at that. It is exactly the sort of story to be expected of the author of 'The clansman' and 'The foolish virgin.'" E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '16 420w

"If the author's style glows and flames in uncurbed opulence, still more does the matter of the tale open the reader's eyes with wonder as the author pours out with reckless prodigality the treasures of his imagination."

— N Y Times 21:253 Je 18 '16 500w

"Fantastic and improbable as are the events and puppets of the book, it serves a distinct and worthy purpose. It protests against the corruption of materialism, against the political corruption of legislature and municipalities, courts and Congress; it shows us that the Great war must sweep away the old régime not only in Europe, but in this country, if we are to survive as a nation, free and independent."

+ — R of Rs 54:125 Jl '16 200w

DOBSON, AUSTIN. Rosalba's journal, and other papers. il *6s Chatto & Windus, London 824 16-13742

"Mr. Austin Dobson has a memory like Macaulay's; of the eighteenth century he has read everything and he remembers everything. Mention to him the obscurest figure in its history or literature, and a crowd of details come pouring into his mind. . . . Of the present series of papers, six deal with persons well known in English literary history—Johnson, Falconer, Prior's Peggy, John Nichols, Aaron Hill, and Fielding; two with foreign subjects—Rosalba Carriera and Madam Royale; and one with an historical theme—the Gordon riots. 'A new dialogue of the dead' is held between Fielding and Murphy, and the purpose is to expose the carelessness and inaccuracy of Fielding's first biographer."—Ath

"Mr. Dobson is a most sensitive artist, building out of all this material little towers of ivory and mother-of-pearl which are the despair of every writer on eighteenth-century literature. Many have knowledge, but who else has this dexterity, this exquisite taste, in assembling fragments of life into beautiful designs? . . . So much matter rises on all hands that we stand irresolute which to take first, and so take none, heartily advising the reader to get this delightful book for himself."

+ — Ath 1915:2:343 N 13 1900w

Pittsburgh 21:120 Mr '16 40w

"His art from the first has had an easy complacency, a loitering content, a happy estrangement from the world's hot drama. Even when Mr. Dobson chooses for his theme the Gordon riots, he writes not as an actor in the scenes, nor yet from inside the mind and character of Gordon, but as a distant spectator with good field-glasses and a very comfortable easy-chair."

+ — Sat R 120:472 N 13 '15 1750w

+ Spec 115:584 O 30 '15 350w

DODGE, HENRY IRVING. Skinner's dress suit. il *$1 (3c) Houghton 16-19955

An amusing little story on the theme that clothes make the man. Skinner invested in a dress suit, or, rather, his wife, taking advantage of his supposed raise in salary, forced him to invest in a dress suit. The results of the expenditure were many and far-reaching, beginning with an increase in Skinner's self respect and culminating in his admittance to the firm he had worked for as a partner. The story was first copyrighted by the Curtis publishing company.

"Lively and amusing tract for business men."
+ Ind 88:127 O 16 '16 20w

"Will pleasingly beguile a tedious half-hour."
+ N Y Times 21:487 N 12 '16 120w

DODGE, LOUIS. Bonnie May. il $1.35 (1½c)
Scribner 16-17070

Bonnie May is a little actress, a true child of the theatre to whom the playing of parts is the only life that is real. When Victor Baron, a somewhat conservative young man with an interest in the drama, finds her on his hands, he can think of only one solution and that is a doubtful one, for he understands the prejudices of his highly conservative mother. Nevertheless he takes her to his home and the story tells amusingly how the haughty, but not inhuman, Mrs. Baron is gradually won over by the child's unusual charm. But Bonnie May belongs to the stage rather than to peaceful family life, and in the end she goes back to it, not to play "little Eva" however, but to a beautiful part in a fairy play. The story ran as a serial in Scribner's.

"Would be read by girls too old for juvenile stories and too young for grown-up novels."
+ — A L A Bkl 13:83 N '16

"Makes amusing reading, particularly to those to whom the shop-talk of the stage is always interesting."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 S 13 '16 300w

"For the first few pages of this story, the reader unfamiliar with the stage child wonders if 'Bonnie May' can possibly be a truthful presentation of a singular phenomenon. Later inaccuracies in observing and rendering daily life arouse distrust of the author's ability to portray the subtle fascination of a child's nature; and finally the complete unreality of plot and characters can no longer be ignored. . . . Reginald Birch's charming drawings brighten the pages."

— New Repub 9:162 D 9 '16 320w

"As almost always happens when an unusual child holds the centre of attention, Bonnie May seems just a little beyond the possible. . . . The author makes the reader realize the temperament and magnetism with which he endows her. And he gives her also that unflinching charm of uncertainty, originality, which makes it impossible to guess what she will do next. . . . This is Mr. Dodge's first novel, although he has for the last fifteen years been engaged in newspaper work in St. Louis and has written short stories and verse for the magazines."

+ — N Y Times 21:342 S 3 '16 300w

+ R of Rs 54:679 D '16 130w

+ — Springfield Republican p13 O 8 '16 260w

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 30w

DODGE, RAYMOND, and BENEDICT, FRANCIS GANO. Psychological effects of alcohol; with a chapter on free association in collaboration with F. Lyman Wells. il pa $2.50
Carnegie inst. 613.81 16-2271

"It is a matter for congratulation that the investigation of the physiological and psychological effects of alcohol should have been undertaken by so wholly independent a body as the Carnegie institution. . . . The book under notice, which is the first-fruits of this research, must be regarded as 'survey' rather than 'intensive' work, to borrow terms from another science. It covers an extensive field in which the action of ethyl alcohol is tested on a number of processes. . . . The main result of the work is to show that wherever alcohol has an appreciable action, it is on the average depressing, and that this effect is greater on the simple motor, sensory and reflex processes than on those in which the higher parts of the nervous system are more directly involved."—Science

"The brochure deals only with quite a limited branch of the subject, but the results obtained are of considerable importance." W. D. H.

+ Nature 97:465 Ag 3 '16 650w

"I have ventured to call attention to certain points of methodology and workmanship which seem to require consideration because in such an investigation principles and methods can not be too closely scrutinized at the outset. The criticisms now offered must not be allowed to obscure the recognition of the great value and promise of the work." W. H. K. Rivers
+ — Science n s 44:102 Jl 21 '16 980w

DONNELL, ANNIE (HAMILTON) (MRS. WEBB DONNELL). Miss Theodosia's heart-strings. il $1 (3c) Little 16-19416

When Miss Theodosia allows Stefana and Evangeline to "do up" her best white clothes, she takes a step out of her usual well-ordered way. And when she stays up until after midnight to do over the work of the bungling little hands, she proves that she has admitted the little intruders from the house next door into her heart. Miss Theodosia is thirty-six, well-off in a worldly way and sufficient unto herself, but these simple acts of kindness prove the first steps of what is to be the happy romance of her life.

A L A Bkl 13:123 D '16

"To all those who love children either in or out of fiction this book offers delightful reading matter."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 11 '16 200w

— Dial 61:400 N 16 '16 210w

"The little story is of the conventional, sugary type, but Evangeline is occasionally amusing and Stefana pathetic."

N Y Times 21:395 O 1 '16 180w

— Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 70w

"Very sentimental."

Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 30w

DOOLEY, WILLIAM HENRY. Education of the ne'er-do-well. (Riverside educational monographs) *60c Houghton 371.42 16-14782

The drifters and intermittent workers who come in time to swell the army of the permanently unemployed are recruited from those who drop out of school early. "The 'ne'er-do-well' has always been a social problem," says the editor in his introduction, "and now, because the school has accepted a social point of view, he becomes an educational problem. What shall the school do with him?" To answer this question with a constructive program is the purpose of this book. "The subject is presented first by a complete analysis of the problem from the social and economic side, then from the personal or psychological side; followed by a study of experience on the subject, ending with very concrete suggestions as to how the problem is to be handled with every educational phase in mind." (Preface) The author is principal of the Technical high school in Fall River, Mass.

A L A Bkl 13:60 N '16

El School J 17:86 O '16 430w

Ind 87:349 S 4 '16 40w

"The programmes suggested are concrete and definite to a very high degree."

+ Nation 103:237 S 7 '16 100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:126 Ag '16

+ Pittsburgh 21:512 N '16 60w

St Louis 14:390 N '16

DOOLITTLE, FREDERICK WILLIAM. Studies² in the cost of urban transportation service. il $3.50 Am. electric railway assn. 388 16-6268

"A large amount of information is contained in this book. It treats many different phases of its subject from still more points of view. No one, unless possibly some street railway accountant, is likely to read it all. But as a source to turn to for materials it will be very useful to many. . . . It is the result of the work of a 'Bureau of fare research' organized under the direction of a committee of the American electric railway association. Five well-known street railway managers sign the preface. . . . While there is no extended argumentation for any particular doctrine as to

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

DOOLITTLE, FREDERICK WILLIAM—Cont. the relation of public utilities to the public, yet certain attitudes of mind are woven into the book, which may or may not express the general attitude of street railway managers. . . . On the other hand, there is in other connections, especially in connection with the service to be furnished, a full recognition of the public duties of the public utilities and of the necessity of studying and endeavoring to meet public opinion. The chapter on the Psychological aspect of street railway service is remarkable in this respect."—Am Econ R

"The book is especially rich in materials for a study of the methods of cost accounting. Statistical methods are very cleverly and effectively used. In this respect the chapters on Traffic characteristics, Traffic survey, Traffic observation, Application of traffic data, and the Paying haul are among the best, but there are others that are good. It is certain that every economist with any interest in this field at all must have this book where he can consult it." C. C. Plehn

+ Am Econ R 6:895 D '16 1000w
Cleveland p152 D '16 30w

"So long as this book is an official manual of the organized industry and a natural part of its normal propaganda, by many it will be regarded with suspicion. But although necessarily more or less partisan, nevertheless it should be of great use, inside the industry and out, for it is well conceived, is broad in scope and employs data from regulating commissions, government bureaus, independent engineers and economists, as well as from the officials of supporting railways."

+ Engin N 75:939 My 18 '16 730w

"A careful reading of this book will be likely to astonish one at the amount of study, investigation, and calculation the street railways have been put to, in understanding and meeting their problems." Russell Robb

+ J Pol Econ 24:911 N '16 1150w

DOORLY, JAMES GERALD STOKELY. Voyages of the "Morning." il *$2 Dutton 919.9 (Eng ed 16-26855)

"The story of the 'Morning' has never before been told. She was fitted out in 1902 as relief ship to the 'Discovery,' Captain Scott's ship, and made two expeditions in successive years to the Antarctic. Her story is one of adventure and hardship and final achievement. The men who sailed her, one and all, felt the spell of the icy wilderness which causes men to return time and again to face its dangers and its hardships. Captain Colbeck commanded the relief expedition, and one of the officers was Evans, who later accompanied Captain Scott on his last expedition."—Boston Transcript

"Should appeal to boys."

+ A L A Bkl 13:78 N '16

"Captain Doorly writes with great animation, and his story provides a valuable supplement to 'The voyages of Captain Scott.' Some will wish that he had described the actual voyage, the equipment, etc., in greater detail. But the book is perhaps more readable as it stands. He conveys the spell of the great, unbroken, white expanse, the thrill of achievement in the face of danger, and the sense of comradeship of those who fight together against the forces of nature. Admirable photographs, a map of the route, and very clear descriptions of the scenery add interest to the narrative." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 16 '16 700w

+ Ind 88:285 N 13 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:125 Ag '16

"The true sea-flavour, a literary phenomenon persisting from of old, is present in this very modern sea-story. . . . There are plenty of good stories in the book. The 'Evanly twins,' as the two friends came to be known, are a merry pair. . . . The excitement of the hunt for records ashore, and the encounter with the main expedition on the first voyage, and of the release of the 'Discovery' from the ice on the second, is ably communicated by the author to the reader in language (like that of the whole book) at once simple, forceful, and scholarly."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p231 My 18 '16 750w

DORION, EUSTACHE CHARLES EDOUARD. Redemption of the South End, a study in city evangelization. il *$1 Abingdon press 331.85 15-18782

"This is a number in the 'Constructive church' series. Its purpose is to give a report of the part played by Morgan memorial in the South End of Boston among the redemptive forces at work in this needy neighborhood. . . . The value of the book is twofold: to inform a reader as to what can be done by an evangelical church in a community where 'about 3 per cent of the people are of Anglo-Saxon origin, and not more than 5 per cent are Protestant'; and to inspire those who shall attempt similar undertakings in our American cities."—Bib World

"The author has the newspaper instinct; he reports with enthusiasm, his story is vivid and interesting."

+ Bib World 47:53 Ja '16 200w

"The story is a remarkable one. And Dr. Dorion has told it with the enthusiasm of a prophet and the ability of the trained journalist that he is. The results are so skilfully presented that the reader closes the book with the conviction that Dr. Helms at Morgan memorial institutional church has solved the problem of the city slums."

+ Boston Transcript p25 N 10 '15 630w

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 13 '16 250w

DOROSHEVICH, VLASII MIKHAILOVICH. Way of the cross; with an introd. note by Stephen Graham. il *$1.25 (7½c) Putnam 940.91 16-6399

This description of the Russian retreat by a distinguished Russian journalist appeared in the Russkoe Slovo in October, 1915. The author went out from Moscow in August to meet the refugees coming eastward. He went thru to the rear and he gives an impressionistic picture of the whole—using a peculiar prose style that, in the translation at least, gives the effect of free verse. Stephen Graham says, "Doroshevitch is a liberal and a progressive, but he is a real Russian and a Christian. This breathless, almost desperate story yet breathes a tender love toward the individual, and there is that Christian mysticism that can see in the white crosses over the fugitives' graves 'Georgian crosses on the breast of the suffering earth.' The Georgian is the Russian equivalent of our Victoria cross, given for valour and self-sacrifice."

+ A L A Bkl 12:420 Je '16

"The result of this utter disregard for the machinery of writing under other circumstances would be chaos. But in this instance the effect is that of the spoken word, broken, breathless with the magnitude and terror of the story told."

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 2 '16 280w

"This book is no journalist's report. It seems rather to have written itself. The images of the fugitives stamped themselves on Doroshevitch's vision, and when he put pen to paper they engraved themselves in words. I doubt whether Doroshevitch even tried to give his impression." K. S. Angell

+ New Repub 7:286 Jl 15 '16 900w

R of Rs 53:628 My '16 70w

"Whether in country or in town he gives you scenes of extraordinary beauty and terror, scenes that continue to haunt your senses, as if you had been present in the flesh, seeing the autumn woods, smelling the reek of the fires, hearing that terrible silence. Amid all the literature of the war, this book must hold a secure place. There has been as yet nothing else like it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p55 F 3 '16 730w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

DOS PASSOS, JOHN RANDOLPH. Commercial mortmain; a study of the trust problem. *$1.25 Bench & bar co. 338.8 16-6738

Mr. Dos Passos, the legal expert who is given credit for the organization of the sugar trust, examines here the Sherman anti-trust law, pronouncing it a failure. "His remedies are many. He would strengthen the hands of labor and enable its combinations to check and correct the excesses of capitalist combinations. He would license trusts and tax them, and repeal the tariff upon the articles which they make. He suggests that perhaps the present taxation of corporations operates as a license, and in particular that the amendment of the constitution under which our income tax was passed gives the federal government the powers necessary for such an enactment, especially when reinforced by the clause conferring upon the federal government jurisdiction over interstate commerce. He even extends this proposal to include the suggestion of exclusive federal power over corporations." (N Y Times)

N Y Br Lib News 3:75 My '16

N Y Times 21:136 Ap 9 '16 1400w

DOSTOEVSKII, FEDOR MIKHAILOVICH. Raw youth; a novel in three parts; from the Russian by Constance Garnett. *$1.50 (1/2c) Macmillan A16-765

The central figure in this long novel is a boy of nineteen. He is the illegitimate son of a prince and is given to masking his shame and soreness of heart at his position by a boastful attitude, proclaiming the story of his birth on every occasion that offers. His peculiar relations with his father and his fixed determination to carry out his great idea of becoming a "Rothschild" are the threads on which an unusually incoherent novel is hung together.

"The work belongs 'not so much to Russian literature as to Russian history. The various characters are typical of their class. The raw youth,' with all its incoherent rapidity of action, is a novel of growth and development which can have few to resemble it."

+ Ath p187 Ap '16 550w

+ Ind 88:331 N 20 '16 60w

"Not one of Dostoevsky's greatest novels, but one well typifying his peculiar realism, which draws characters, inside and out, with infallible truth and clairvoyance, without however professing to determine motives or interpret the complex of life. The emphasis is on the inner life, the soul, the inexplicable depths of individuality. . . . Possibly Dostoevsky projected in this character an image of his own youth."

+ Library Association Record 18:176 Ap 15 '16 100w

"Russian realism at its most tedious."

— Nation 103:203 Ag 31 '16 560w

+ — N Y Times 21:298 Jl 30 '16 670w

"If an example were needed of the depths to which genius may sink whilst still remaining genius, it will be found in this amazing work. . . . Such a passage shows Dostoevsky a giant among the giants of Russian literature. Much of the rest of the book shows nothing but disorder of mind and prostitution of art."

— Sat R 121:259 Mr 11 '16 770w

"It contains one most beautiful character, a pilgrim peasant, Makar Ivanovich Dolgoruky, whose occasional appearance more than compensates the reader for the book's tendency towards invertebrateness."

Spec 117:241 Ag 26 '16 80w

Springfield Republican p10 Je 30 '16 120w

"No one has ever gone so deep into character as Dostoevsky, except Shakespeare in 'Hamlet.' The book is not so successful as 'The brothers Karamazoff' or 'The idiot'; but one can see that it is all conceived and written by one of the greatest writers of the world. And Mrs. Garnett has increased our debt to her by translating it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p114 Mr 9 '16 1800w

"Certainly not one of its author's best, but has pages that repay the labor of reading the whole." W: L. Phelps

+ — Yale R ns 6:211 O '16 40w

DOSTOIEFFSKAYA, L. F. Emigrant; tr. by Vera Margolies; with an introd. by Stephen Graham. *$1.35 Brentano's

"A story (by a daughter of Dostoevsky) of a Russian woman who, despairing of her country after its defeat by the Japanese, seeks western ideals, yearns for a Christianity untrammelled by creeds and forms, coquets with Roman Catholicism, and, temperamentally unstable, undergoes a reaction, largely owing to the influence of a Russian lover."—Ath

"A somewhat gloomy book, but of considerable power and interest."

+ — Ath p433 S '16 60w

"Her heroine is among the most vividly realized women of contemporary literature." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 18 '16 1100w

+ — Sat R 122:276 S 16 '16 480w

"For all her self-importance, her readiness to find fault with anyone but herself, Irene is attractive and appealing; and in narrating her thoughts and experiences the author has found a chance of talking well about all sorts of subjects and describing many sides of modern Roman life."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p436 S 14 '16 470w

DOTY, MADELEINE ZABRISKIE. Society's misfits. il *$1.25 (3c) Century 364 16-19081

In her introduction Miss Doty tells how her attention was directed to prison reform. After completing a law course she started out to practice in the traditional way, but she found shortly that her interest lay in individuals not in cases and came finally to the conclusion that "there were thousands of men to practise law according" to maxim. Women lawyers must bring love, intelligence of the heart, into the business." She accordingly devoted herself to the reform of the Manhattan Children's court, and to gain a better understanding of the prisoner's position, followed Thomas Mott Osborne's example and served a week's sentence in prison. The story of her prison experience is told in part one of her book. Part two is devoted to the problems of the reformatory and the boys it attempts unsuccessfully to reform. Much of the material of the book is reprinted from the Century, Good Housekeeping, and other magazines.

+ A L A Bkl 13:103 D '16

"Miss Doty's book should be read by every man and woman who votes or pays taxes in the United States. The tears of these men, women and children in prison are the personal responsibility of those who put them there."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 4 '16 1750w

+ Ind 89:119 Ja 15 '17 50w

"A book of good intentions rather than of altogether well-judged performance. . . . Miss Doty seems to have made no effort to put herself in the place of an average normal prisoner. . . . It is all strained, emotional to the verge of hysteria."

— Nation 104:24 Ja 4 '17 470w

+ New Repub 8:276 O 14 '16 270w

"In its simple and direct revelation and appeal it is vital to every citizen."

+ N Y Times 21:389 O 1 '16 1100w

+ No Am 204:948 D '16 430w

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 5 '16 670w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. History of the great war. *$2 (2c) Doran 940.91 (16-25137)

This volume, treating of "The British campaign in France and Flanders, 1914," is the first of three volumes that are planned to cover the war up to the end of the present year. The author says, "From the first days of the war I have devoted much of my time to the accumulation of evidence from first-hand sources. . . .

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN —Continued

I have built up my narrative from letters, diaries, and interviews from the hand or lips of men who have been soldiers in our armies. . . . The necessary restrictions which forbade the mention of numbered units have now been removed. . . . I am able, therefore, to deal freely with my material." Contents: The breaking of the peace; The opening of the war; The battle of Mons; The battle of Le Cateau; The battle of the Marne; The battle of the Aisne; The La Bassée-Armentières operations; The first battle of Ypres (two chapters); A retrospect and general summary; The winter lull of 1914.

"There are flashes of dramatic quality in the writing of the book. But for the most part it is a 'straightaway' narrative, depending for its force not upon any charm or intensity in its presentation, but upon its quiet, lucid, well-poised record of events."

+ N Y Times 22:18 Ja 21 '17 400w

"It is full of information; and a good deal of the information will be new to a good many of its readers."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p580 D 7 '16 270w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. Visit to three fronts. *50c (3½c) Doran 940.91 16-19464

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's visit to three fronts was made in answer to a request from the Italian authorities. They asked that some independent observer from Great Britain visit their lines and report his impressions. Sir Arthur was asked to carry out the request, but before doing so he made a visit to the British lines in order that he might have a basis for comparison. Later he was given an opportunity to visit the French front as well. His impressions are summed up in three chapters: A glimpse of the British army; A glimpse of the Italian army; A glimpse of the French line.

+ Ath p387 Ag '16 50w

"He differentiates sharply between the various soldier types, points out wherein the French differs from the Italian, wherein each excels. These shrewd distinctions make one of the most interesting features of the book. . . . His book is a vivid presentment of impressions and ideas, enthusiastic, clear-sighted, and for the neutral reader absorbingly interesting."

+ N Y Times 21:468 N 5 '16 620w

+ R of Rs 54:684 D '16 40w

+ Springfield Republican p8 Ja 2 '17 340w

DOYLE, LYNN, pseud. (LESLIE ALEXANDER MONTGOMERY). Mr. Wildridge of the bank. *$1.30 (1c) Stokes 16-16526

The village of Portnamuck in the north of Ireland needed to be awakened, and a woolen mill and a branch of the railroad were the means of awakening. Everybody in Portnamuck agreed to this, but nobody made a move. Then came the rumor of Mr. Normanby's legacy, left him by the scapegrace brother who had emigrated years before. Mr. Normanby was the rector and the most public spirited man in the town and with the assurance that his new fortune will be devoted to the woolen mill, the thing is given such a start that even the announcement that there is no fortune cannot stop it. In the meantime there is Nora, Mr. Normanby's adored and adorable daughter, to keep matters stirred up. Nora is an attractive hoyden who plays havoc with the heart of Mr. Wildridge of the bank, making him forget that he is a middle-aged lover of the classics, and leading him in the end to make a momentous decision between matrimony and liberty, between herself and Horace.

"Interesting as a study of character and local color."

+ Dial 61:354 N 2 '16 80w

"The novel is quite amusing, even funny in places. . . . Of course, the book awakens memories of Canon Hannay's delightfully humorous tales, and suffers by the comparison, but it is a pleasant little story with some cleverly sketched characters, and will prove an agreeable companion for an idle evening."

+ N Y Times 21:380 S 24 '16 450w

+ Spec 117:267 S 2 '16 1000w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 31 '16 250w

DRACHMANN, POVL. Industrial development and commercial policies of the three Scandinavian countries; ed. by Harald Westergaard. *$1.50 Oxford 16-7924

"The book consists of three chapters devoted respectively to Denmark, Sweden, and Norway and giving a cursory review of the industrial development and the tariff policies of each country during the past century. In these troublous war days, one feature stands out in this historical sketch concerning the effects of the various wars during the nineteenth century: the countries described seem to have benefited as neutrals from the wars of other European countries, but suffered from industrial depression for decades following wars in which they participated as belligerents." (Am Econ R) The publication is under the Carnegie endowment for international peace.

Reviewed by N. I. Stone

Am Econ R 6:359 Je '16 80w

+ Cath World 103:410 Je '16 50w

"While the book is a useful survey of the topics that it covers, it makes no very important additions to the material that can be found in the studies by Scharling and Fahlbeck, in the 'Schriften des vereins für sozialpolitik,' and in the books published for the Paris exposition of 1900 by Sundbarg and by Konow and Fischer. . . . The present writer makes no reference whatever to his authorities."

+ Nation 101:754 D 23 '15 330w

"As a history of the commerce of northern Europe, independent of the valuable statistics which it contains, it will have a real and lasting value."

+ Springfield Republican p27 D 26 '15 160w

DRAGOMIS, JULIA D. Man of Athens. *$1.50 (1c) Houghton 17-26077

A story of present day Athens. Theodora Douka, after a number of years spent in foreign capitals where her father has represented his country, returns to her native city. She loves Athens and is full of joy at her home coming. One of the first of the new acquaintances she makes is a brilliant young professor who has risen from a lowly position to one of honor. Drawn together first by mutual interest in the past glory of Greece, they soon recognize their love for one another. Theodora's father, however, a man proud of his distinguished birth, refuses to recognize his son-in-law, and their marriage is clouded by Theodora's brooding over the estrangement. The story ends with the first Balkan war, when the father relents and renews old ties with his daughter, but by this time she has learned to know that her greatest treasure in life is her husband's love.

A L A Bkl 13:220 F '17

"It must be read for its beauty of background and its foreign atmosphere, the character drawing is not very vivid nor is it dramatic."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 20 '16 130w

"Her chief figures are perfectly clear and true, and her chief situations will be deeply and surely felt. . . . It should be added, however, that Madame Dragomis, who has the one real essential for the novel writer, lacks some useful accompaniments. The first half of the book seems to me to drag, to be heavy." E: E. Hale

+ Dial 62:70 Ja 25 '17 710w

"A thoroughly sane and charming love story."

+ Ind 88:505 D 18 '16 60w

+ Lit D 54:80 Ja 13 '17 250w

"A pleasant, conventional little story."

+ N Y Times 21:557 D 17 '16 250w

DRAKE, DURANT. Problems of religion; an introductory survey. *$2 (1½c) Houghton 209 16-18757

This companion volume to "Problems of conduct" is, like that volume, based on lectures given for several years to undergraduates of Wesleyan university. The aim of the lectures is "to give a rapid survey of the field, such that the man who is confused by the chaos of opinions on these matters, and himself but little able to judge between conflicting statements, may here get his bearings and see his way to stable belief and energetic action." (Preface) The work is divided into three parts, Historical, Psychological, and Philosophical. Carefully selected reading lists are appended to each chapter, the author's aim having been to choose books that are readable, as well as worth reading.

A L A Bkl 13:197 F '17

+ Ind 89:30 Ja 1 '17 110w

N Y Br Lib News 3:167 N '16

"To some the book will seem hopelessly negative, but on closer reading and reflection it will be found to contain many positive and illuminating contributions to the defence and exposition of religion to-day. Dr. Drake writes with logical grasp of his subjects and never makes a statement unless it is the result of well-sifted and considered evidence."

+ Springfield Republican p8 N 3 '16 470w

DRAKE, MAURICE. Ocean sleuth. *$1.35 Dutton A16-529

This "is an English story, the very much complicated and puzzling yarn of how the teller of the tale became mixed up in the search for a banker who had run away with some forged notes, and was supposed to have gone to the bottom of the English Channel with his booty in a shipwreck, although some of the notes had quickly found their way into circulation. . . . There are some pages of graphic and thrilling description of the wreck and of the efforts . . . to rescue the passengers. Among these is a girl who is not at all like most heroines, but whose strength and sweetness of character make her lovable. Her character is graphically delineated and her connection with the mystery which forms the central thread of the story is ingeniously worked out."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 13:34 O '16

"It is very evident Mr. Drake is a lover of the wild coasts of Devon and Cornwall and all that pertains to those who go down to the sea in ships. This is good reading, but over fifty pages are given up to life and work of a salvage steamer before the story starts. A detective story, as Mr. Drake ought to know, should begin at the beginning if lovers of detective fiction are to be gripped by the narrative. The plot is ingenious."

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 22 '16 250w

"Better than his mystery are his glimpses of the sea and of the men who sail upon it or knock about its shores." E: E. Hale

+ Dial 60:425 Ap 27 '16 400w

"A good, rushing, well-flavored story of the sea . . . with plenty of exciting situations, much cleverly contrived tangling up of the many threads of the plot, and an ingenious and unexpected end. The spirit in which it is all written is that of a man to whom life is good, who enjoys every breath he draws, for whom overflowing vigor makes occupation, adventure, hazard joyous and inspiring."

+ N Y Times 21:83 Mr 12 '16 450w

+ Spec 115:482 O 9 '15 20w

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 180w

DRAKE, MAURICE, and DRAKE, WILFRED. Saints and their emblems; with a foreword by Aymer Vallance. il *$10 Lippincott 246 (Eng ed 16-25117)

"This dictionary has been compiled by the authors of 'A history of English glass-painting,' mainly for the use of artists and craftsmen who are concerned with ecclesiastical art of various kinds and who often encounter much difficulty in the proper representation of sacred figures—more particularly those of the lesser known saints in the calendar. They have followed Dr. Husenbeth's dual method of indexing, giving first an alphabetical list of saints' names and secondly an index, also alphabetical, of emblems proper to them. . . . The book is printed on superior paper and is neatly bound; and by way of illustration it contains a dozen plates, some of which are in colour, from drawings or photographs of windows, etc., in which the figures of saints appear."—Int Studio

"The appendices contain lists of patriarchs, prophets, and sibyls with their emblems, of patron saints of arts, trades, professions, and other categories, and those invoked for special occasions."

+ Int Studio 59:12 Ag '16 240w

"Indispensable to the churchman and the craftsman, be he glass painter or image maker."

+ Int Studio 60:95 Ja '17 80w

St Louis 15:15 Ja '17 30w

"A work of this exhaustive character was needed; for the lives of the saints in many volumes such as Alban Butler's and Baring Gould's say little about emblems; and the standard work, Husenbeth's 'Emblems of the saints,' which originally appeared in 1850, was very far from covering the field. The present authors have increased this list of 1,500 names to some four or five thousand."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Je 1 '16 190w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p320 Jl 6 '16 1200w

DRAYCOTT, G. M. Mahomet, founder of Islam. *$3 (4c) Dodd 17-248

"Now that the vital history of Islam has been written, some decision as to the position and achievements of its founder may be formulated," says the author. He has sought to find the real man, Mahomet, under the weight of legend that has hidden him and to recreate as far as possible the world in which he lived. "Mahomet," he says, "bears closer resemblance to the ancient Hebrew prophets than to any Christian leader or saint. His mind was akin to theirs in its denunciatory fury, its prostration before the might and majesty of a single God."

"Interesting and well-written."

+ Ath p484 O '16 70w

Boston Transcript p8 N 1 '16 520w

N Y Br Lib News 3:181 D '16

"The racy pages of Ockley and Gibbon give a more vivid idea of Mahomet the man, but Mr. Draycott represents the prophet and the ruler with no small success."

+ Spec 117:707 D 2 '16 150w

"The traditional, quite intelligible, view, modified here and there by the author's personal ideas about religion, but wholly uncritical as to sources and authorities."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p509 O 26 '16 900w

DREISER, THEODORE. Hoosier holiday. il *$3 (2c) Lane 917.7 16-23068

A book of travel and reminiscence with beautiful pictures. It gives a record of a journey by automobile from New York to Indiana on which the author was accompanied by the artist, Franklin Booth, who has made the pictures. The journey was in the nature of a pilgrimage to the homes of the author's youth, in Terre Haute, Evansville, Sullivan and other Indiana towns. Thruout the book there is much comment on American manners and customs, the future of democracy, and so on, and the same outlook on life that is revealed in the author's novels is in evidence here. Those who object to aspects of the novels will not care for this book.

"It is largely as a stickler for detail that Mr. Dreiser has become the most discussed and most vehemently assailed American novelist of the present day. Out of the story of his wanderings to and through his native Indiana, Mr. Dreiser has made a portentous book. It is a stout and heavy volume of five hundred pages, and they are alive with the mingled imaginative feeling and sturdy devotion to facts that have given a vigorous realistic atmosphere to all of Mr. Dreiser's novels." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 15 '16 1100w

DREISER, THEODORE—Continued

"One reads him always with enjoyment, but this same Hoosier-holiday narrative might have been made equally interesting and equally true to the facts without any indulgence in what at times savors of a contemptuous superiority to the innocent and simple joys of human existence. If one has outgrown these joys, it is a misfortune, not a thing to be paraded with complacency."

+ — Dial 61:474 N 30 '16 210w

"There are, along the way, some thoughtful questionings of what we are seeking and whither tending but we might have had these, and verisimilitude of description, and yet omitted the incidental bad eggs in Rahway, or was it Harrisburg? It takes time to be short, but often it is worth while. Mr. Booth's sketches are too few, however."

+ — Ind 88:409 D 4 '16 120w

"As a narrative of travel, the book is often graphic, vivid. . . . But in the realm of morals, especially in regard to sex, the author seems to take delight in painting female portraits with the pen of a voluptuary. . . . It isn't bad enough to bar the book from the mails, but one can readily understand why he did not accept his friend's invitation to stop and call on James Whitcomb Riley. 'I had heard that he didn't approve of me.' One agrees with Riley."

+ — Springfield Republican p15 D 31 '16 670w

DREISER, THEODORE. Plays of the natural and the supernatural. *$1.25 Lane 812

16-4880

The first of the seven plays in this collection is adapted for production on any stage, but it is to be doubted if even the most daring of play producing societies would undertake any of the others. Natural and supernatural are too closely blended and the unities of time and place too generally ignored to allow of visual presentation. They are dramas to be read, not acted, and as such are interesting and impressive. Contents: The girl in the coffin; The blue sphere; Laughing gas; In the dark; The spring recital; The light in the window; "Old Ragpicker."

"Seven one-act plays, several of which, notably 'The girl in the coffin,' 'Old ragpicker,' and 'The blue sphere,' are of undeniable power."

+ Ath p542 N '16 130w

"Opens up a new vista in American play writing."

D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 18 '16 1100w

"The workmanship is excellent. But what is the author trying to get at?"

+ — Ind 86:554 Je 26 '16 50w

"Horridly interesting, original, and we believe, honest work."

+ — Nation 103:355 O 12 '16 740w

"As gripping as the work of Galsworthy and Sygne."

+ R of Rs 53:634 My '16 160w

DRESSLAR, FLETCHER BASCOM. School hygiene. (Brief course ser. in education) *$1.25 Macmillan 371.7

"Simple, untechnical discussion of almost every topic bearing on the health of school children—the care of the vision, hearing, and teeth, the treatment of stuttering, open-air schools, the significance of fatigue, and the care of backward children. Contains chapters on the lighting, ventilation and equipment of school buildings, and the duties of janitors. 'Selected references' at the end of each chapter."—Pittsburgh

"He has made a scholarly exposition of hygienic principles and of the conditions requisite for their application. . . . The seeker after information in this field will find a mass of useful data and references. And yet, in some respects and in some parts this book appears more like a philosophic treatise on the subject, than a practical guide to rational and expedient sanitary practise in the school." T. D. Wood

+ — Educ R 53:186 F '17 470w

Pittsburgh 21:236 My '16 60w

DREW, JOAN H. Embroidery and design. il *$1 (5c) Dutton 746 A16-703

This "handbook of the principles of decorative art as applied to embroidery" is planned primarily for the home needle worker but it will doubtless prove useful in trade school classes, girls' clubs, etc. One of its objects is to encourage originality in design. There are chapters on; English embroidery in the past, Good and bad designs, On choosing materials and colours, etc. It is an English work and is published with a Foreword by Miss M. M. Allan, principal of Homerton training college, Cambridge.

St Louis 15:16 Ja '17

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 30 '16 250w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Lyric. (Art and craft of letters) *40c (4c) Doran 808.1 16-6809

As the starting point of his essay, Mr. Drinkwater takes Coleridge's answer to the question What is poetry: "the best words in the best order." He considers first the nature of poetry and the qualities that differentiate it from prose and then passes on to the lyric, arriving at the conclusion, summed up in his final paragraph, that "the characteristic of the lyric is that it is the product of the pure poetic energy unassociated with other energies, and that lyric and poetry are synonymous terms."

"Although we should consider Mr. Drinkwater's chief argument wasted energy, we can warmly recommend the larger part of what he says."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 N 18 '16 520w

"John Drinkwater appears unable to orient himself in his broad field, and is content to smash a few accepted definitions and theories and stop!"

+ — Nation 103:614 D 28 '16 120w

N Y Br Lib News 3:182 D '16

+ N Y Times 21:458 O 29 '16 240w

+ R of Rs 54:676 D '16 150w

"Mr. Drinkwater has striven to be logical and has succeeded. He presents his argument ably and interestingly, and, while one will hope to see some of his assertions modified when his work reaches a second edition, the little book is the product of a painstaking mind which is not averse to giving itself the discipline of thought. It represents a type of literary criticism that should be encouraged."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 29 '16 1500w

DROEGE, JOHN ALBERT. Passenger terminals and trains. il *$5 McGraw 625 16-22637

"A book on the principles and practice involved in the design and operation of railway passenger terminals has long been needed, and Mr. Droege's work is a valuable addition to railway and engineering literature. . . . It is comprehensive and systematic in scope, covering the design or planning of terminal layouts, the design of station buildings, the facilities requisite for train and station service, and the operation of trains and general station traffic. It shows clearly the need of active coöperation between different departments and officials in order to secure results satisfactory to the railways and the public."—Engin N

"Written by a man of long experience in railway service, this book is of distinct and practical value to the engineer, the architect, the operating official and the student of railway affairs and problems."

+ Engin N 76:1179 D 21 '16 930w

"Recognizing in 'Passenger terminals and trains' a pioneer in the field, and a book that is worth its price just for its illustrations of terminals all over the world, the reviewer hesitates to say that the book is disappointing. Perhaps this disappointment is because the author's earlier work, 'Freight terminals and trains,' was so satisfying. The new book, however, seems almost to have been addressed to the public rather than to the technical man. . . . And now, having found considerable fault with the volume, the reviewer would urge all interested in passenger terminals to read it. It is likely to be some time before the subject is covered better."

+ — Engin Rec 74:778 D 23 '16 650w
St Louis 15:14 Ja '17

DROOP, JOHN PERCIVAL. Archaeological excavation. (Cambridge archaeological and ethnological ser.) il *$1 (6½c) Putnam 913 (Eng ed 16-13970)

The author writes of excavating as an art. He considers digging in general and also some of the specific problems which the excavator must meet. His own experience has been gained in Greece (he has been a student of the British school at Athens) but he says that "the broad principles that should underlie archaeological excavation do not vary with locality." He gives special attention to the problems of stratified sites.

"His book, besides being instructive, is delightful reading. It will interest both the general public, to whom it will give a good idea of the manifold requirements made by work of this kind, and the would-be excavators, who will obtain from it much valuable information. Probably it will also act as a deterrent to those to whom the results of such work appeal, but who do not realize the infinite patience that it demands and the tremendous responsibility involved."

+ Nation 102:264 Mr 2 '16 750w
 + Pratt p31 O '16 20w

DRUMMOND, WILLIAM BLACKLEY. Child, his nature and nurture. il *$1 Dutton (Eng ed E15-2805)

"The revised [7th] edition of 'The child,' contains a new chapter on the Montessori method and one on children of retarded and arrested development. This book is practically a condensation of the 'Introduction to child study,' and is an excellent work for beginners in this field." —Ind

+ Ind 87:33 Jl 3 '16 40w
R of Rs 58:509 Ap '16 40w

"An excellent English book similar to Oppenheim's 'Care of the child in health,' but dwelling more on the psychological development than it does. The chapter on care of the infant is of negligible value in this country."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:184 Ap '16 40w

DRUMMOND, WILLIAM BLACKLEY. Physiology for nurses. il *$1 Longmans 612 (Eng ed SG16-50)

"An excellent brief physiology which is as good for the mother wanting the main facts as for nurses. It covers growth and digestion quite fully, but the reproductive system is dismissed in a scant four pages." —Wis Lib Bull

N Y Br Lib News 3:125 Ag '16
 + Wis Lib Bull 12:407 N '16 50w

DRUMONT, MME. ÉDOUARD ADOLPHE. French mother in war time; tr. by Grace E. Bevir. *$1 Longmans 940.91 16-2309

"In her journal of the first two years of the war Mme. Drumont, who is the wife of the well-known editor of the Libre Parole, has given us quite simply the facts surrounding her and the feelings dominating her—facts of war, feelings of a mother." —N Y Times

"Interesting as giving a typically French point of view, and for its comments on the English allies, and on America's attitude."

+ Cleveland p137 N '16 60w
 + Lit D 53:1543 D 9 '16 140w

N Y Br Lib News 3:137 S '16

"In spite of the poor translation where most of the French feeling is lost in the English word, the journal is an interesting and faithful portrayal."

+ N Y Times 21:405 O 8 '16 400w
 + Spec 116:756 Je 17 '16 220w

DU BOIS, WILLIAM EDWARD BURGHARDT, and DILL, AUGUSTUS GRANVILLE, eds. Morals and manners among negro Americans. diag 75c Atlanta univ. press, Atlanta, Ga. 326 15-9685

"'Morals and manners among negro Americans,' the 18th and latest volume of the Atlanta university series of social studies of the negro, is a monograph of 138 pages embracing the formal report of a study entitled as above, and also the proceedings of Atlanta's 18th annual conference [held in 1913] for the study of the negro problems. This series, it may be said, was undertaken by Atlanta university in 1896, and aims definitely to deal in scientific spirit with every phase of life among American negroes. . . . The present volume, in outlining the moral status of America's negroes, uses as original sources all available figures of the United States census, chiefly birth, crime and church statistics, together with a number of sociological papers by Atlanta's senior class, which are based on special reports of the department of the census; and, finally, the compilation of answers to a questionnaire sent out to 4,000 trustworthy persons throughout the United States." —Springfield Republican

Springf'd Republican p15 Mr 21 '16 1100w

DUCKWORTH, WYNFRID LAURENCE HENRY. Morphology and anthropology. *$3 Putnam 591.4 (Eng ed SG16-51)

"The first section of the first edition of Dr. W. L. H. Duckworth's 'Morphology and anthropology' has been entirely rewritten and includes more than eighty new illustrations and so much new material that the author deemed it advantageous to issue it as a separate volume. As indicated in the title, the morphological aspects of anthropology are alone considered, the method of comparative anatomy being followed throughout." —Nation

Nation 102:sup503 My 4 '16 100w

"So far as we know, there is no other book in the English language which covers the same ground. This volume is more of the nature of a new work than of a new edition, so much has it been rewritten, expanded, and in every way improved."

+ Nature 96:648 F 10 '16 270w

DUFF, SISTER LORETTO BASIL. Course in household arts. il *$1.10 (1c) Whitcomb & B. 641 (16-15935)

pt 1 This book is based on a course in household arts prepared in 1902 for the Boston public schools of cookery. The entire course covers two years' work, one half of which is presented in this book. The preface says, "Designed primarily for beginners, these lessons have, through a teaching experience of several years, proved satisfactory in grammar, secondary, and higher classes." The chapters take up: Sweeping and dusting; Washing dishes and kitchen-ware; Making and care of the fire; Laying the table and serving; Food and the human body; Cooking and measuring; Beverages and fruits; Vegetables, etc.

Pratt p23 Ja '17 10w

DUNCAN, FRANCES (MRS. JOHN LEROY MANNING). Roberta of Roseberry Gardens. il *$1.25 Doubleday 16-9062

"Miss Duncan gives in this novel an attractive little tale built around commercial floriculture. The narrative is slight, placid and simple. A girl becomes the secretary of the owner of Roseberry Gardens, falls in love with and finally marries an exemplary and attractive young man." (Boston Transcript) "There are several interesting characters in the book, two, especially, aside from the heroine. These are two veteran gardeners and philosophers, Rudolph Trommel, Swiss, and Michael O'Connor, from the green isle." (Springfield Republican)

+ A L A Bkl 12:480 Jl '16
 + Ath p382 Ag '16 60w

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

DUNCAN, FRANCES—Continued

"It is the garden itself that is the chief factor in the story."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '16 350w

+ N Y Times 21:290 J1 23 '16 320w

"Miss Duncan has written several garden books, and the public can stand yet more of this quality with approbation."

+ Springfield Republican p13 My 21 '16 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p370 Ag 3 '16 100w

"The love story is as natural and simple as the picture of garden and birds."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:227 My '16 30w

DUNCAN, NORMAN. Billy Topsail, M. D. il $*1.25 Revell 16-21055

"This new volume by Norman Duncan tells of the further adventures of Billy Topsail. In some of these adventures Dr. Luke, the well-beloved, took a prominent part; in others Archie Armstrong had an important share. Although divided into chapters, the book is really a series of short stories, certain sections of it, if not all, having already had magazine publication under that guise."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 13:123 D '16

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:411 D '16 100w

+ Ind 88:165 O 23 '16 30w

"The book is written in its author's familiar graphic style, and is, of course, full of thrilling episodes, all of them, he declares, 'decently founded on fact.'"

+ N Y Times 21:371 S 17 '16 270w

DUNHAM, ELIZABETH MARIE. How to know the mosses. il $*1.25 Houghton 583 16-11726

"A popular guide to the mosses of the northeastern United States; containing keys to eighty genera and short descriptions of over one hundred and fifty species, with special reference to the distinguishing characteristics that are apparent without the aid of a lens." (Sub-title) The book is said to be the first that offers a guide to the study of mosses without the use of a microscope. The author's aim has been to make it as simple and non-technical as possible. There are seven plates and numerous illustrations in the text.

"A less attractive book, but one better suited for students' use is Grout's 'Mosses with a hand-lens.'"

A L A Bkl 13:65 N '16

"On the shelf of popular handbooks of growing things there was one real gap which 'How to know the mosses' fills. This introduces them without the aid of the microscope, and will find warm welcome by those who cannot be scientists but who still love moss."

+ Ind 86:403 Je 5 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:107 J1 '16

Pittsburgh 21:494 N '16 40w

Pratt p18 O '16

+ R of Rs 54:122 J1 '16 50w

"The keys for the determination of specimens. . . are faulty in many respects, and it is probable that a collection of named photographs would be of greater help to a layman. . . . The subject chosen is one that is nearly impossible to handle in a popular style."

+ — Springfield Republican p15 J1 30 '16 180w

DUNN, F. B. Industrial uses of fuel oil. il $3 Technical pub. 662.75 16-2627

"Mr. Dunn has gathered in this little volume the most complete collection of descriptions and data of oil-burning equipment yet seen. There are a minimum of general statement and a maximum of specific details and figures. . . . The author starts out with some comparisons between oil and solid fuels and many data on the physical properties of various oils. Storage and pumping systems are briefly described and then boiler-furnace arrangements found suitable. . . . There are chapters on oil-burning locomotives and steamers. Small apparatus for domestic household service is taken up with the same definiteness."—Engin N

+ Cleveland p115 Ag '16 20w

+ Engin N 75:1136 Je 15 '16 320w

N Y Br Lib News 3:103 J1 '16

"Concise and thoroughly practical, this work should be of service to engineers, architects, efficiency engineers, or others interested in the subject. . . . The chapter on furnace efficiency describing how boiler losses may be checked and efficiency determined is noteworthy. Fully illustrated with many line drawings. Reviewed in the National Engineer, March, 1916, p. 127; in Iron Age, Feb. 17, 1916, p. 436; in Mining & Scientific Press, Feb. 12, 1916, p. 258; in Concrete, March, 1916, p. 140."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 My '16 100w

+ Pittsburgh 21:353 J1 '16 10w

+ Pratt p19 O '16 40w

St Louis 14:434 D '16

DUNN, JOHN DUNCAN. A-B-C of golf. (Harper's A-B-C ser.) il $50c (2c) Harper 796 16-6653

The author begins with a discussion of the long drive and makes it plain from the outset that the "one essential thing" is balance, poise of body. Contents: The one essential thing; Building up the swing (two chapters); The long game; The quarter game; Putting; Hints and tips. At the end of each chapter the advice which the author gives to his pupils is repeated: "Whatever is natural and Harry Vardon." There are nine illustrations.

"We recommend each [A-B-C book] in its field, both for the simple manner in which facts are presented and for the definite way in which it lures the interested reader to make a practical test of its principles."

+ Dial 60:559 Je 8 '16 130w

"The manual is illustrated by line drawings accurately reproduced from photographs of the author in action. The 'A-B-C of golf' presents a reasonable working theory and so is worthy of attention from the 12-handicap golfer."

+ No Am 203:780 My '16 580w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. Last book of wonder: being a continuation of the Adventures at the edge of the world, recounted in The book of wonder (Eng title, Tales of wonder). il $*1.50 Luce, J. W.

A collection of about twenty stories. "One of the best of the sardonic tales is 'The Bureau d'échange de maux.' 'The loot of Loma' is ghastly in its suggestive reticence, and 'Thirteen at table' gives a genuine sense of the eerie, and also of something finer, in the stricken Don Juan who speaks to the ladies that haunt him 'as a condemned man might speak to his judge, and yet somewhat as a judge might speak to one that he once condemned wrongly.' But the best piece, though it almost seems childish to like it, is 'A story of land and sea,' about the pirate who put wheels under his ship, and sailed the Sahara, fighting squadrons of Arab horse with his broadsides. It is a splendid tale for boys, who will enjoy the humour of the pirate's cutter."—Ath

"These miscellaneous stories in the curious genre created by Lord Dunsany hardly equal, as a collection, 'The gods of Pegana' and other earlier tales. For one thing, the author introduces too many touches of 'up-to-date' smartness, which accord ill with the macabre atmosphere that he aims at evoking. . . . Lord Dunsany's picturesque descriptions lose by Mr. Sime's illustrations, which are very thin in comparison with many he has done."

+ — Ath p596 D '16 280w

N Y Br Lib News 4:11 Ja '17 90w

DUNTON, WILLIAM RUSH. Occupation therapy. il $*1.50 (3c) Saunders 790 15-19866

This book is the outgrowth of a series of talks given to the nurses in a Maryland hospital where the author, who is instructor in psychiatry at Johns Hopkins university, is assistant physician. The manner of its arrangement is based on the hospital course of occupation but due thought is given to the needs of the private nurse. After some general explanatory pages, clear directions are given on the uses to which puzzles, card-games, gardening, photography and 20 other occupations may be put in restoring a patient to health. While clear instructions are given, each subject has its own reference books noted and there is a general bibliography.

DUPONT, MARCEL. In the field (1914-1915); tr. by H. W. Hill. (Soldiers' tales of the great war) *$1 Lippincott 940.91 (Eng ed 16-10883)

"Marcel Dupont is an officer of light cavalry and his impressions of life in the field in 1914 and 1915 are recorded with unusual artistry. M. Dupont's story of Christmas eve is the most impressive of his many pictures." (Boston Transcript) "Contents: How I went to the front; The first charge; Reconnoitring Courgi-vault; The Joulgonne affair; Low mass and benediction; A tragic night in the trenches; Sister Gabrielle; Christmas night." (N Y Br Lib News)

+ A L A Bkl 13:115 D '16
Boston Transcript p7 Ag 16 '16 480w
+ Cleveland p121 Ag '16 70w

"Very effective work; stories with a distinct charm, and a distinct, though unconscious, purpose." Travis Hoke

+ Dial 61:191 S 21 '16 230w

"The only appreciable result of such a chronicle is the conviction that, in spite of hellish war-conditions, life goes on with its habitual routine as far as possible. The reader gets an insight into the trivial events which sometimes change great tactical movements. The description of trench-life is tragic, but some of the episodes described are amusing."

Lit D 53:754 S 23 '16 150w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16 30w

+ Pittsburgh 21:431 O '16 60w
R of Rs 54:237 Ag '16 20w

DU PUY, WILLIAM ATHERTON. Uncle Sam, detective. il *$1.25 (2½c) Stokes 16-16259

In the introduction to this collection of true detective stories, the author writes of the popular conceptions of the detective and then contrasts with them the new type that has been brought out by the work of the Bureau of investigation of the federal Department of justice. This bureau was organized a little over a dozen years ago but its work is far reaching. "Department of justice cases are stupendously big in many instances. They may affect the relations that exist between nations, they may mean the wrecking of hundred-million-dollar corporations, the stopping of practices that are blights upon the morality and good name of the nation." As a type of the young man who is going into this work, the author has created his detective, Billy Gard. This character is fictitious but the cases which engage his attention, ranging from moonshining in Tennessee to revolution making in Mexico, are based on the actual experiences of Department of justice men.

"They are not specially well told but will be interesting to older boys."

+ — A L A Bkl 13:130 D '16

"The feature of this book lies in the timeliness of the cited cases."

+ Ind 88:126 O 16 '16 50w

"The one disappointment in Mr. Dupuy's book is that, being obliged to be brief, he perforce omits much, making his stories sound like official reports and his detective, Gard, by always catching his quarry, suggests Old Sleuth or Nick Carter."

+ — N Y Times 21:389 O 1 '16 570w

St Louis 14:429 D '16 20w

DURAND, EDWARD DANA. Trust problem. *$1 Harvard univ. press 338.8 15-18620

"This book brings together under one cover a series of articles which appeared in the Quarterly Journal of Economics during the year 1914, and contains as an appendix all the federal laws relating to trusts. The subject matter is well indicated by the chapter headings. These are: The necessity of prohibition or regulation; The possibility of preventing combination; Difficulties of regulating combinations; The alleged advantages of combination; The trust legislation of 1914. The conclusion of the author, who, as secretary of the industrial commission, has had unusual opportunities in this field is that the trust movement is essentially artificial in its nature. By resort to general reasoning (adequate data are lacking for a scientific study of the facts) he endeavors to show that the alleged economies of the trust form of organization are unimportant. Price regulation, in addition, is found to be very difficult. Naturally, therefore, the author finds himself approving the principle of the trust legislation of 1914, though venturing in an able discussion of this measure to criticize it in several particulars."—Ann Am Acad

"Dr. Durand's book—the outgrowth of a series of lectures originally given before the students of Harvard university—is easily the most far-reaching as well as the most philosophic discussion of the questions connected with government regulation of trusts that has appeared in recent years. For this task the author possessed unusual qualifications. His training as an economist gave him the necessary intellectual equipment to analyze the problem into its constituent parts. His experience in the Bureau of corporations furnished him with a body of facts sufficiently broad and significant to illuminate his analysis with concrete illustrations and to prevent him from falling into the errors so common with the less well informed. There is no index, an omission that is somewhat pardonable on account of the essential unity of the discussion as a whole." M. H. Robinson

+ Am Econ R 6:141 Mr '16 450w

"Few persons are as competent as Dr. E. D. Durand to give an intelligent opinion upon the policy of the law in regard to trusts, and his recent volume is therefore most welcome."

+ Am Pol Sci R 9:582 Ag '15 250w

Ann Am Acad 62:288 N '15 170w

+ J Pol Econ 24:412 Ap '16 330w

+ N Y Times 21:278 J1 9 '16 190w

"In the present welter of public opinion on the general subject, Dr. Durand's clear and suggestive presentation of a difficult problem is to be welcomed."

+ Pol Sci Q 30:548 S '15 120w

DURKHEIM, ÉMILE. Elementary forms of the religious life, a study in religious sociology; tr. from the French by Joseph Ward Swain. *$4 Macmillan 201 15-24224

"This careful translation of Professor Durkheim's now three-years-old work will be welcomed by all interested in sociological, religious, and epistemological theory. . . . The student of social science has long been accustomed to associate Professor Durkheim's work with the pronounced tendency to emphasize the social basis of all socio-psychological phenomena. Never before, however, has this emphasis been so absolute and categorical as is the case in the author's analysis of the religious life. The data for the analysis are furnished by the totemic system of Australia, a field which Professor Durkheim handles with an authoritativeness born of systematic study extending over many years. . . . Not satisfied with having demonstrated the social derivation of religion, the author extends his argument to the domain of thought itself in an attempt to show that society is the fundamental determinant of the categories underlying the processes of thought."—J Philos

Reviewed by A. B. Lewis

+ — Am J Theol 21:143 Ja '17 1750w

"The author presents in this volume one of the most profound social studies of modern times. Because of its breadth and comprehensiveness, its thorough-going research, and its positive conclusions, it is destined to become a classic. Whether its theories are sound or not, it is a book to be reckoned with in all future

DURKHEIM, ÉMILE - Continued
discussions of this subject." J. P. Lichten-berger

+ Ann Am Acad 66:263 J1 '16 400w

"Though it may be objected that Prof. Durkheim attributes too much to religion as a source, the highest praise is due to him for his treatment of totemism. His thought is clear and his style lucid."

+ Ath 1915,2:370 N 20 1400w

"That it is a book of first importance will be plain from what has been said. But that the author's generalization is altogether satisfactory may be doubted. The readers of the volume need the warning of Professor Farnell in his little treatise on 'The evolution of religion,' not to misjudge highly complicated religions by their primitive forbears."

+ Bib World 47:413 Je '16 430w

Reviewed by James Moffatt

Hibbert J 14:436 Ja '16 340w

"One of the most philosophically valuable of recent contributions to sociology. Whether M. Durkheim's conclusions are sound or not, it is his great merit that he has not been content simply to collect facts, but has tried to interpret them and use his results as a key to unlock the heart of religion in general. The translation, unfortunately, has not been well done." G. A. Johnston

+ Int J Ethics 26:303 Ja '16 450w

"The translation is literal, hence much of the grace and brilliancy of Professor Durkheim's style has been lost in the process. On the other hand, Mr. Swain, the translator, is himself a student and faithful disciple of the French sociologist, hence we may be sure that the master's meaning has in all cases been strictly adhered to." A. A. Goldenweiser

+ J Philos 13:109 F 17 '16 340w

"The book is probably the most important contribution to the study of primitive religions that this century has yet produced. For his facts Durkheim is dependent chiefly upon Spencer and Gillen and upon Strehlow—though he has practically exhausted the literature of his subject and draws liberally upon all the more important investigators. But the arrangement and interpretation of the facts are his own, and, whether one agrees with him or not, no one can deny that his methods and conclusions are both original and brilliant."

+ Nation 103:39 J1 13 '16 1150w

+ Outlook 113:808 Ag 2 '16 430w

DURYEA, CHARLES E., and HOMANS, JAMES EDWARD. Automobile book. il $1.50
Sturgis & Walton 629.2 16-2020

The sub-title describes this as "a practical treatise on the construction, operation and care of motor cars propelled by gasoline engines; with full explanations of all the essential parts." There are chapters on: Anticipations of the motor car; Selecting a motor car; Practical points on motor cars; Automobile motors; The gas engine; The cycles of gas engines; Gas engine elements, etc. There are numerous illustrations and diagrams and an index.

Cleveland p151 D '16 100w

"The inquiring owner will here find the advantages and disadvantages of certain types of apparatus fairly discussed, as for example, eight and twelve cylinder motors, air cooling, and water cooling, etc. There is a good chapter on the selection of the car."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p3 Ag '16 60w

Pittsburgh 21:240 My '16 50w

St Louis 14:155 Ap '16

"The amateur driver will find a full explanation of all the essential parts, without any technicalities."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 5 '16 160w

DURYEA, MRS. NINA LARREY (SMITH).
Sentimental dragon. $1.25 (1c) Doran
16-9544

A Utica woman, a widow, the mother of a charming daughter, makes a fortune through her own ingenuity. Her ambition, once her income is assured, seizes upon social success abroad. Accordingly, mother and daughter settle down in Paris where une dame de compagnie in the person of Mme. Petan, the "sentimental dragon," is secured to arrange "introductions to the best French society." Her consuming passion is romance; consequently, she fares forth with a good deal of zest to clear the way for a suitable marriage for Sylvia, tho often her notions of suitability conflict with the set ideas of the mother. The story furnishes pleasant pastime for a summer day.

"The author's familiarity with the life of which she writes seems to be rather of literary than personal extraction, but her story is interesting for all that and her characters are frequently amusing."

+ Boston Transcript p9 J1 29 '16 250w

"This perfectly absurd story manages to keep the reader turning its pages in spite of a naive and woeful waste of words."

+ Nation 103:377 O 19 '16 210w

"The tale is pleasantly told, with lightness of touch and many clever observations. It is, however, complicated by needless episodes which add nothing to the interest of the story and impede its movement. Shorn of these, it is an original and sparkling narrative, with the fascinating Parisian atmosphere pervading its pages."

+ N Y Times 21:253 Je 18 '16 270w

DUTTON, LOUISE ELIZABETH. Wishing moon. il $1.35 (2c) Doubleday 16-22296

A story of a boy and a girl and youthful love and of a man who "owned" a town. Altho they are schoolmates in the high school of their little New England town, Judith and Neil are of different worlds. For she is a Randall, admitted by grace of her position to Colonel Everard's inner circle and he is a Donovan from Paddy lane. And Neil hates Colonel Everard, the man who owns the town and corrupts it even while it fawns at his feet, and he bides his time until the right opportunity comes. In the meanwhile, love that is no respecter of class distinctions, runs its course thru days and nights that are touched with the magic of moonlight and youth.

"The little story has some nice bits in it. . . . The author is at her best in descriptive passages, which she does well."

+ N Y Times 21:560 D 17 '16 150w

"The decadent moral tone of the society of Green River, the scene of 'The wishing moon' is hardly true to the average New England atmosphere."

+ Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 330w

DWIGHT, HARRY GRISWOLD. Stamboul nights. il $1.25 (1½c) Doubleday 16-6762

The title story appeared first in the Atlantic Monthly as did four of its fellows. Others are reprinted from Scribner's magazine, Harper's Weekly, McClure's magazine, etc. All are stories of Constantinople, which the author knows well as his book "Constantinople, old and new," published last year, went to show. Contents: The Leopard of the sea; Mortmain; Mehmish; The glass house; The house of the giraffe; The golden javelin; His beatitude; The place of martyrs; Under the arch; For the faith; Mill valley; The regicide; The river of the moon; In the pasha's garden.

+ A L A Bkl 12:429 Je '16

"The present tales, with all their air of careless improvisation or merely faithful recording, are singularly finished products of the storyteller's art." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:316 My '16 580w

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 14 '16 160w

+ Cath World 103:700 Ag '16 160w

"Photographic in their realism, yet subtly interpretative of the oriental people. H. G. Dwight has done more than record his experiences—he has sensed their dramatic values and put into words all their atmosphere as well as action."

+ Ind 86:486 Je 19 '16 80w

"What the fifteen-cent magazines do not want' might be a suitable honorific sub-title to this collection of stories. . . Mr. Dwight has the field to himself; he may become the Conrad of Constantinople and the Levant."

+ Nation 103:38 J1 13 '16 300w

+ New Repub 8:170 S 16 '16 840w

"All the fourteen stories are unusual, as being 'Stamboul nights' they can hardly avoid being. But they are told with such vivid dramatic feeling, such a picturesque hinterland of acquaintance, and such a nice sense of words that their charm is by no means dependent upon their very interesting subject matter."

+ N Y Times 21:130 Ap 9 '16 450w

"A collection of haunting tales of Constantinople, remarkable for their atmosphere, the musical quality of their diction, and for the ever recurring suggestion of more than can be set down in words."

+ R of Rs 53:636 My '16 150w

+ Spec 117:77 J1 15 '16 1300w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p311 Je 29 '16 40w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:227 My '16 50w

DWIGHT, HENRY OTIS. Centennial history of the American Bible society. 2v il *$2 (1c) Macmillan 206 16-8827

Altho the American Bible society, organized in 1816, was modeled on a similar association in England, its formation was called forth by a peculiarly American condition, the isolation of frontier communities. These two volumes by Mr. Dwight tell how the work has grown and spread in one hundred years. The author's aim has been "to make a book to be read by the people rather than a manual of reference for the student." Volume one treats of five periods of the society's history from 1816 to 1871. Volume two continues the record to 1916. There are portraits and illustrations from photographs showing the work of the society in far parts of the earth.

"This is for historians both a grateful and a disappointing work. . . The author is obviously less interested in history than in the American Bible society. There are very few references to sources, but there is incessant moralizing. The facts given could easily have been compressed into one volume. Were it not for a good index and valuable appendixes, its use would involve much waste of time."

+ Am Hist R 22:205 O '16 410w

Reviewed by A. K. Parker

+ Am J Theol 20:597 O '16 810w

+ Bib World 48:245 O '16 150w

Boston Transcript p7 Ag 23 '16 230w

Ind 86:555 Je 26 '16 50w

+ Lit D 53:416 Ag 19 '16 300w

+ Nation 103:615 D 28 '16 600w

N Y Br Lib News 3:93 Je '16

N Y Times 21:347 S 3 '16 50w

"It is an inspiring record. Such things make the ideal of a universal Christian community seem less remote."

+ No Am 203:778 My '16 1000w

"Dr. Dwight's history gives, not only to religious workers, but to the man who does not care much about religious propaganda, an immense mass of information, collated in no dry-as-dust manner, but in a graphic way to interest every one."

+ Outlook 113:628 J1 12 '16 1300w

+ Springfield Republican p8 S 15 '16 350w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p372 Ag 3 '16 140w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p376 Ag 10 '16 1250w

DYE, CHARITY, ed. Once upon a time in Indiana. il *$1 (3c) Bobbs 977.2 16-16396

The state of Indiana celebrates this year the one hundredth anniversary of its admission to the Union. This book, prepared in honor of the centennial under the auspices of the Society of colonial dames, aims to bring before the young people of the state some of the heroic deeds and dramatic events in its history. Some of the chapters are: French missionaries and explorers; The legend of an old Indian orchard; George Rogers Clark, hero of the Northwest territory; What Francis Vigo did for the Northwest territory; The pioneers of Indiana; New harmony and its two social experiments.

DYER, WALTER ALDEN. Gulliver the Great, and other dog stories. il *$1.35 (2c) Century 16-17650

This book of realistic stories about dogs is not to be confused with the usual fanciful animal tale. Gulliver of the first story is a great Dane, and there follow stories of collies, terriers, wolfhounds and other real dogs whose pictures are reproduced as illustrations. Many of the stories are reprinted from magazines, the Ladies' Home Journal, Woman's Home Companion, Associated Sunday magazines, Our Dumb Animals and others.

+ Cleveland p127 N '16 40w

"If you know anyone who likes dogs give him 'Gulliver the Great.' It is no small matter to write a dog story for people who know what Dr. Brown and Ollivant and Davis and Atkinson have done, but if one be skeptical begin, as the skeptical reviewer did, with 'The two dogs o' Glenfergus.'"

+ Ind 88:551 D 25 '16 50w

+ Lit D 53:1546 D 9 '16 160w

"His language is that of everyday, his people, especially children, just such people as we meet every minute and rarely find interesting. It is the touch of humanity Mr. Dyer adroitly applies that transforms the commonest things into something quaint and delightful. This book should have wide popularity."

+ N Y Times 21:383 S 24 '16 480w

"A good story book for odd times when one wants something short and lively."

+ Springfield Republican p7 N 25 '16 190w

DYER, WALTER ALDEN. Humble annals of a back yard. il *$1 (7c) Pilgrim press 814 16-22880

The author divides all humanity into four classes: "people who have no back yards at all, people who own back yards by proxy, people who possess back yards unwillingly, and people who live in their back yards." This little book will be best appreciated by those who belong to the fourth class. It is made up of brief little chapters on subjects such as these: Subduing an ash heap, The first corn, Roses, Good beans, The rain, Cleaning up, The democracy of snow shoveling. Many of the sketches are reprinted from magazines.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 8 '16 350w

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 9 '16 180w

E

EASTMAN, CHARLES ALEXANDER (OHIYESA, the SIOUX INDIAN). From the deep woods to civilization. il *$2 (6c) Little 16-19654

"Indian boyhood" the story of the author's childhood and youth was published in 1902. In this book he continues the story of his development and maturity, beginning with the time when his wise old father, "Many Lightnings," foreseeing the value of a knowledge of the white man's civilization, sent the boy, "Ohiyesa," to the white man's school. School days at Flandreau in Dakota territory followed by college days at Beloit, Knox, Dartmouth and Boston university are described with an account of Dr. Eastman's later activities among his own people. Fortunately the best side of civilization was presented to him in his early years and the impressions received then were deep enough to withstand the shocks that came later in revelations of the white man's trickery in his dealings with the Indian.

+ A L A Bkl 13:115 D '16

+ Ind 88:464 D 11 '16 300w

EASTMAN, C. A.—Continued

+ Lit D 53:1546 D 9 '16 150w

"A racial—perhaps it would be more accurate to say a tribal—strain of morbidness, which reveals itself at intervals in all his writing, is somewhat tiresomely obvious in this latest effort."

+ — Nation 103:541 D 7 '16 1550w

+ N Y Times 21:570 D 24 '16 650w

"Interesting in part for the light it throws upon the treatment of Indians by the United States government, but far more interesting as the record of one who honestly sought to appropriate the white man's civilization as the highest good."

+ No Am 204:947 D '16 460w

"The volume has a many-sided appeal. . . . Thirdly, there is the interest of seeing ourselves through alien eyes. Dr. Eastman has never quite lost his native Indian point of view; and throughout his book he more or less unconsciously measures the white man by Indian standards, and often finds him wanting. . . . This stimulating book is one of the few that really deserve to be labeled with that sadly over-worked term, a human document." Calvin Winter

+ Pub W 90:851 S 16 '16 550w

R of Rs 54:569 N '16 90w

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 670w

"It is of interest in showing the effect of education and of Christianity on a mind alien to both, but is almost wholly a narrative of personal affairs, which are of small importance, and has little social or educational value."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:409 N '16 50w

EASTMAN, MAX. Understanding Germany; the only way to end war, and other essays. *$1.25 (5c) Kennerley 940.91

"The equipment of a psychologist, and not of a student of politics or history" is what the author brings to the writing of this stimulating book. It is as a psychologist that he attempts to explain some of the phenomena that have been attendant on this war, devoting the first part of the book to a study of the anti-German hate and related subjects, the second to an analysis of the emotions of patriotism. The book has been called stimulating; to many it will doubtless prove irritating, as when the author disclaims all feeling of national loyalty or speaks of the Monroe doctrine as "an astounding piece of sophomoric cheek." Mr. Eastman is editor of The Masses and some of the papers in his volume are reprinted from that magazine, others from Harper's Weekly, and the Forum.

"Because the war is distasteful he regards it as inconsequential. He discusses it without genuine appreciation of its immediate throbbing problem and pain. . . . To distribute the blame equally in the present instance, on the ground that both sides are human, is also too damnably simple. . . . There is this, however, to be said in favor of Max Eastman's 'Understanding Germany': an extreme rationalism about Germany is serviceable in an America that is filled with empty cant about the war. . . . When you consider that the world is full of such people as this, the German and the English world as well the American, you hesitate to criticize anyone who has the clean, amazing temperateness of Max Eastman." F. H.

+ — New Repub 9:303 Ja 13 '17 1750w

"If in the earlier part of his book he shows an inclination toward a 'tu quoque' form of argument, in the latter section he does make a real contribution to the discussion about the future."

+ N Y Times 21:556 D 17 '16 240w

EATON, CHARLOTTE (MRS. WYATT EASTON). Last memory of Robert Louis Stevenson. il *50c (9c) Crowell 16-14850

The author met Stevenson in Manasquan, New Jersey, where he had come to pay a farewell visit to his friend, Will H. Low, before starting on his voyage to the South seas. Her husband, Wyatt Eaton, had been one of the group of artists who were Stevenson's friends in France. She describes his visits to their home and writes of her impressions of his personality.

Boston Transcript p7 Ag 16 '16 620w

+ Dial 61:317 O 19 '16 120w

Ind 88:75 O 9 '16 50w

"Mrs. Eaton's devotion to his character and his achievement casts a glamour over the subject of her sketch which blurs the outlines and obscures that sense of intimacy which renders such recollections illuminating to the public."

+ — Nation 103:590 D 21 '16 120w

N Y Times 21:336 Ag 27 '16 140w

Springfield Republican p13 Ag 13 '16 110w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Bird house man. il *$1.35 (2c) Doubleday 16-17416

Such charmingly suggestive titles as The song sparrow, The wren, The little gray goose, The jackdaw, The wild duck and The meadow larks have been chosen for these short stories of New England. The bird house man writes books and delivers lectures, but the echoes of his fame are faint and far-off in these stories. He builds bird houses, tends his garden and interests himself in the affairs of his neighbors. Gruff and grim tho he appears, he has a warm spot in his heart for lovers and he takes a hand in more than one village romance. The final tale, The homing pigeon, tells his own love story.

"Appeared in the American magazine."

+ A L A Bkl 13:34 O '16

"There are a dozen sketches in the volume, all of them sprinkled with homely wisdom and with, here and there, a touch of neat pathos." P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 44:270 N '16 630w

+ Cath World 104:399 D '16 100w

"Sentimentalism run riot is the pith of the work."

— Dial 61:354 N 2 '16 170w

"It is a pity for Walter Prichard Eaton to waste his time in writing books like the 'Bird house man.'"

— Ind 88:127 O 16 '16 50w

+ Lit D 53:1039 O 21 '16 200w

"It is disheartening to see so earnest a critic as Mr. Eaton turning out the sort of emasculated best seller which should most arouse his critical faculties."

— New Repub 8:231 S 30 '16 220w

"This new volume has some, though not all, of the charm of Mr. Eaton's delightful 'Idyl of Twin Fires.' It is neither so real nor so apparently spontaneous as was the earlier book; it is over-sweetened."

+ — N Y Times 21:393 O 1 '16 460w

"A very entertaining book—cheerful, humorous and sanely sentimental."

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 12 '16 320w

"Not equal to 'The idyl of Twin Fires,' but will probably be as popular."

Wis Lib Bull 12:410 N '16 80w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Peanut—cub² reporter; a boy scout's life and adventures on a newspaper. il *$1 (1½c) Wilde A17-86

This may be the last Peanut story, for that young hero is a grown-up, full-fledged New York newspaper man at its close. The story is a logical successor to the others of the series, for it is in advocating playgrounds for the children and a public drillground for the boy scouts that Peanut establishes himself on the Hampton Herald, and it is a long run on skis—another boy scout accomplishment—to carry a piece of news to his paper that wins him his New York appointment.

A L A Bkl 13:130 D '16

+ Dial 61:547 D 11 '16 70w

+ Lit D 53:1612 D 16 '16 90w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Plays and players; leaves from a critic's scrapbook; preface by Barrett H. Clark. il $2 (2c) Stewart & Kidd 792 16-25167

A collection of reviews and essays contributed to newspapers and magazines during the past five years. The first section of the book is made up of reviews of American plays, among them "The piper," "Kindling," "The return of Peter Grimm," "The unchastened woman" and "Erstwhile Susan." Section 2 presents reviews of foreign plays produced on our stage. Section 3 contains four papers on the Shakespearean revivals and Section 4 is made up of more general essays, among them: Our comedy of bad manners; The real foes of the serious drama; What is a good play? The teaching of Shakespeare in the schools; The lesson of the Washington Square players

"Having outgrown some of the belligerent enthusiasms of his youth, Mr. Eaton has come to take the stage more as he finds it, instead of as he imagines it might be, and his writing gains in poise thereby, though at no expense of critical perspicacity. . . . The chief defect of the book . . . is the style."

+ — Springfield Republican p6 Ja 25 '17 480w

EBERLEIN, HAROLD DONALDSON, and MC-CLURE, ABBOT. Practical book of early American arts and crafts. il $6 Lippincott 740 16-25110

"The aim of the book is to present a practical guide to the arts and crafts of our forefathers for the use of the collector and general reader. Needless to say much interesting American history is bound up in the story of the social and economic conditions back to early colonizing days. Chapters are devoted to glass, metal-work, needlecraft, domestic and ecclesiastical silver, pewter, pottery, painting and decoration, weaving, handbook printing, wood and stone carving, fractur and lace."—Int Studio

+ A L A Bkl 13:207 F '17

"Much of the material has earlier appeared in periodicals, but there are considerable additions, especially the descriptions of characteristic types and processes and the chronological lists of craftsmen, which are such 'practical' features of the book. The individual chapters are based in many instances on specialized works by the leaders in the study of colonial art, such as Mr. R. T. Haines Halsey for silver, and Mr. Edwin Atlee Barber for ceramics. The authors, however, have not failed to add new material, and the attempt at a comprehensive treatment of colonial handicraft is itself novel."

+ Dial 62:73 Ja 25 '17 270w

"Generous illustration and a good index complete a useful compendium of craftsman knowledge."

+ Int Studio 60:96 Ja '17 160w

"The book makes us feel that all early American craft development was truly folk art."

+ Outlook 115:74 Ja 10 '17 120w

+ R of Rs 65:105 Ja '17 70w

ECKENRODE, HAMILTON JAMES. Revolution in Virginia. $2 (2½c) Houghton 975.5 16-6494

An authoritative account of Virginia's part in the American revolution based on the original sources of information to be found in the archives department of the Virginia state library. The writer emphasizes anew that the revolution was the result of the clash between imperial expansion and colonial development—two forms of progressivism. He points out that whereas in New England the struggle was primarily economic, in Virginia it was mainly political. On the side of the beginnings of the Democratic party he opposes the impression given by historians that the party sprang full-grown from the head of Jefferson, but shows that it had come into existence before "the great genius of Jefferson laid hold of it and moulded it to his purposes."

"One of the best studies of local history in a limited period that has been written in the American field." C. H. Van Tyne

+ Am Hist R 22:395 Ja '17 660w

"A volume which will stand the test of time." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 26 '16 1250w

"The most valuable chapters are, perhaps, those on 'the County committees' and 'The Convention and Committee of safety,' and the weakest those dealing with military operations. Dr. Eckenrode is usually very fair and impartial." H. E. E.

+ — Eng Hist R 21:669 O '16 370w

Ind 87:69 Jl 10 '16 60w

"Those were stormy times in that state, from 1765 to 1785; and they are pictured in this volume as in none other. Dr. Eckenrode has produced a work of much interest and real value."

+ Lit D 52:1855 Je 24 '16 210w

N Y Br Lib News 3:70 My '16

"A sincere commentator is welcome, and a writer who has the skill to make his relation as interesting as Professor Eckenrode has done deserves recognition. There is a copious index that adds greatly to the value of the volume as a reference book, and the clear type and excellently simple get-up of the book are commendable. It is not too long to furnish a supplementary reading book to history classes, and might be so used."

+ N Y Times 21:269 Jl 2 '16 850w

Pittsburgh 21:359 Jl '16

Reviewed by Carl Becker

+ Pol Sci Q 31:613 D '16 450w

"The history that it contains of the beginning of the Democratic party is of far more than local or state-wide interest."

+ R of Rs 53:754 Je '16 50w

St Louis 14:244 Je '16 10w

"His book is written in a refreshingly different style from that employed by many historians dealing with the revolutionary period."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Jl 7 '16 420w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p299 Je 22 '16 20w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p352 Jl 27 '16 1500w

ECKMAN, GEORGE PECK. Literary primacy of the Bible. $1 Meth. bk. 220 16-6729

"The six chapters were originally delivered as the second series of Mendenhall lectures at De Pauw university and are introduced with a foreword by President Grose. That the lecturer has not in this instance concerned himself exclusively with doctrinal theology in his message to his De Pauw audience, may be inferred from the headings of his lectures, such as 'The poetry and oratory of the Bible,' 'The fiction and humor of the Bible,' and 'The Bible the most persistent force in literature.'—Dial

"There are so many quotations that an index ought to have been provided."

+ Bib World 47:413 Je '16 250w

"Well fitted to arouse interest in the Bible as a work of literature. Both literary and Biblical learning and illustrative anecdote, with a wealth of apt quotation, are found in this readable volume from one whose own literary style bears evidence of profitable hours spent with the book, which Charles Dudley Warner once went so far as to call 'in itself almost a liberal education.'"

+ Dial 60:389 Ap 13 '16 220w

"Some of these testimonies are interesting, and their number and range are astonishing. Carlyle and Gibbon testify to the immortal greatness of the book of Job, and Green, the historian, and Huxley to the profound effect of the Bible in forming not only the literature but also the character of the English people."

+ Nation 102:417 Ap 13 '16 300w

EDDY, GEORGE SHERWOOD. Students of Asia. il 50c (1c) S. V. M. 266 16-1701

"In 'The students of Asia,' G. Sherwood Eddy gives accounts of the educational movements in India, China, and Japan started by the work of

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

EDDY, GEORGE SHERWOOD—Continued
Christian missionaries and fostered by contact with western civilization." (Ind) "The author is a trained and keen observer of athletics, social betterment and general class-work. . . . For nearly 20 years he lived and worked with Japanese and Chinese students. He believes that Asia is a 'melting pot' as well as America, and that the students of to-day will settle the fate of the Occident and Orient alike." (Springfield Republican)

+ A L A Bkl 12:401 Je '16

Ath p474 O '16 50w

"The reader will gain a very clear idea of the tremendous impression which Christianity is making upon India, China, and Japan. Above all, one feels the splendid religious fervor of Mr. Eddy himself."

+ Bib World 47:343 My '16 110w

"An unpretentious but very inclusive review of the progress of education in Asia."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 25 '16 250w

"Mr. Eddy was Mr. John R. Mott's companion in the recent journey for the Y. M. C. A. to the student bodies all over the world and his analyses of conditions and tendencies are made upon broad and thoro knowledge of conditions in eastern lands."

+ Ind 85:459 Mr 27 '16 90w

"With fascinating pictures and in attractive language the book sketches the uplift of eastern Asia."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 170w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p455 S 21 '16 100w

EDELMAN, PHILIP E. Experimental wireless stations; their theory, design, construction and operation, including wireless telephony and quenched spark systems. il $1.50 (2½c) P. E. Edelman, 2432 Lyndale av., S., Minneapolis, Minn. 654

Editions of this work have appeared in 1912 and 1914. To the two hundred and more pages of the earlier editions a supplement of about fifty pages has been added bringing the work up to date for 1916. A feature of this supplement is a list of United States patents on wireless telegraphy, telephony and control issued between 1881 and 1916.

"Speaking generally, the instruments and arrangements shown will work reasonably well, and the book will be found full of useful suggestions for building experimental apparatus. The author's explanations of modes of adjustment and operation, however, must in many cases be disregarded if accuracy is desired. . . . The entire book needs rearrangement and thorough revision. There is in it, however, much which should interest the amateur."

+ Elec World 68:285 Ag 5 '16 320w

EDELMAN, PHILIP E. Inventions and patents. il $1.50 Van Nostrand 608 15-25572

"This book is a comprehensive discussion of patents and their uses, and is designed to supply information of interest and value to inventors, investors and manufacturers. . . . The sixteen chapters describe the development of the present patent system, discuss the functions of the inventor, the attorney, the examiners, the assignees and the courts, and explain in detail the processes in prosecuting United States patents. The book is not intended to be exhaustive, nor to assist inventors in preparing specifications without the aid of an attorney. . . . An appendix of over seventy pages gives digests of important decisions and shows various forms of assignments, etc. There is a bibliography."—Elec World

"Macomber's 'Engineer's handbook of patents' (Booklist, 10:102, N '13) contains much the same information, and libraries having that may not need this."

+ A L A Bkl 13:65 N '16

"While the subject matter is necessarily technical in the legal sense, the author does not make use of the peculiar vocabulary which so often discourages the layman when he attempts to investigate for himself a point of law. This volume is a sort of elementary textbook for those who are interested in patents, and seems to stand alone. . . . There is a chapter on foreign patents and the various international regulations with regard to them. The book is, on the whole, so full of useful data that it is well worth reading. In spite of occasional statement of opinions questionable as to logic or accuracy, the mass of classified facts should prove helpful to a majority of those interested in patents."

+ Elec World 68:431 Ag 26 '16 320w

"Particularly commendable is his warning against a number of the fraudulent or semi-fraudulent practices that are common in connection with the patent business."

+ Engin N 75:749 Ap 20 '16 170w

EDWARDS, CHARLES ALFRED. Physico-chemical properties of steel. il *$3.50 Lip-pincott 669 (Eng ed 17-2038)

"The object of the present book is to give a comprehensive account of the chemical and structural constitution of steels; to describe the internal changes that occur when steels are heated and cooled under varying conditions and to indicate the effects of those changes upon the properties of the materials. Considerable attention has been given to the thermal and structural transformations of the iron carbon system, because they are fundamental elements of all steels. . . . An effort has been made to gather all the important facts dealing with the metallography of steel and present them in a condensed form." (Preface).—N Y P L New Tech Bks

"It appears mainly a fairly full discussion of the iron-carbon alloys, and in this part particularly is valuable for its wealth of references. Alloy steels do not seem to be as comprehensively treated. In this field and in the mill and shop field the book gives much less than the worker in the respective fields will look for."

+ Engin N 76:944 N 16 '16 100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:141 S '16

"It need hardly be said that anything which comes from the pen of Professor Edwards is likely to be authoritative in statement, and in the present work he has very ably gathered together a large number of facts, dealing with the subject matter of the volume. . . . [It] will be found most useful to the layman." (From a review in the Iron and Coal Trades Review, July 21, 1916) Also reviewed in Mining and Scientific Press, Sept. 23, 1916; Mechanical Engineer, June 30, 1916; Chemical Trade Journal, Oct. 21, 1916."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p17 N '16 220w

"Concise treatment, with thorough citation of references."

+ Pittsburgh 21:578 D '16 20w

EDWARDS, GEORGE WHARTON. Vanished towers and chimies of Flanders. il *$5 Penn 914.9 16-26993

"As traveler, writer, and artist, Mr. Edwards has been a student of Holland and Belgium and an interpreter of their life and art, and he is therefore qualified to do for devastated Flanders what Mr. Walter Hale, notably, has done for northern France. . . . Louvain, Malines, Ypres, Douai, and many other cities famed for their architectural and other treasures live again in Mr. Edwards's pages and in the illustrations, twenty-two in color and nine in sepia monotone, which interleave them."—Lit D

+ A L A Bkl 13:167 Ja '17

+ Cath World 104:692 F '17 70w

"This volume will appeal chiefly to those to whom its subject is already familiar through travel, and to them it will come in the nature of a poignant souvenir."

+ Dial 62:30 Ja 11 '17 120w

Lit D 53:1546 D 9 '16 140w

"The book is very handsomely published."

+ Nation 103:518 N 30 '16 100w

"As one turns page after page he does not willingly leave any unread. This is so partly because we have come to know Flanders better."

+ Outlook 115:34 Ja 3 '17 130w

+ R of Rs 55:218 F '17 50w

EDWARDS, WILLIAM HANFORD. Football days. il *$2.50 Moffat 797 16-23798

"Football days," is the season's most notable addition to the literature of American sport. Mr. Edwards is not unknown to fame. As 'Big Bill' Edwards, Princeton, 1900, he set himself securely in the niche of renown that awaits every real football star. . . . To lend further weight of authority, there is an introduction by Walter Camp. There are also scores of reminiscences in the words of players and coaches alike noted, so that the book is really a symposium of the game. Before all else, however, the book is Mr. Edwards's. It is of the game as he remembers it."—Springfield Republican

+ A L A Bkl 13:158 Ja '17

"He has crowded so much of the game of his heart into it that it will evoke an answering thrill from every other devotee who is fortunate enough to read it."

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 19 '16 300w

EHLERMANN, CARL, jr. Neglected points of auction bridge. *50c (2c) Harper 795 16-5595

This book deals with the subtleties rather than with the fundamentals of bridge. As the preface says: "The subtleties which are most frequently neglected both by bridge players and bridge editors are here set forth and fully analyzed, and the way, not merely a way, of playing certain situations is shown." Contents: Inferences; Counting; Emphasizing strength; Passing; Doubling; Keeping the flag flying; Covering honors; Ace, king, queen, and six others in two hands; Miscellaneous. The laws of auction are given in an appendix.

Cleveland p44 Ap '16

St Louis 14:237 Je '16

EIGHINGER, SAMUEL RAYMOND, and HUTTON, MANCIUS SMEDES. Steam traction engineering; a book for operating engineers. il *$2.50 Appleton 621.14 16-10848

"[A work] for engineers of average intelligence. Aims to present the subject 'in a practical way as applied to everyday work rather than to discuss theories and mathematical problems.' Describes the different parts with instructions as to care, management, and repair. In the appendix are some calculations, as well as examination questions, with answers."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

"For the practical man in charge of traction and portable engines."

+ Cleveland p151 D '16 30w

N Y Br Lib News 3:93 Je '16

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 My '16 50w

EISELEN, FREDERICK CARL. Books of the Pentateuch; their origin, contents, and significance. (Biblical introduction ser.) *$1.50 Meth. bk. 222 16-22072

"This is the first of four volumes intended to furnish a complete introduction to the entire Old Testament. . . . The contents of the book are arranged in nineteen chapters. The first three are of a general character, dealing with the history of Old Testament introduction and Pentateuchal criticism; the four following present and criticize the arguments in support of Mosaic authorship; the next five expound the arguments in support of non-Mosaic and composite origin; three more discuss the chronological order of the documents; two are given to the consideration of ancient material used in the documents; one traces the growth of the Pentateuch; and the last estimates the religious and historical value of the Pentateuch."—Bib World

"No better book could be found by the average Sunday-school teacher and Bible student desirous of more intelligent familiarity with modern thought as to the Old Testament."

+ Bib World 48:376 D '16 270w

"The author seems to feel that Old Testament scholars have not reached out after the largest number of students of the Bible. Hence he has endeavored to write a book that would bring the best scholarship to this great multitude, and he has succeeded admirably." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p7 O 7 '16 650w

N Y Br Lib News 3:188 D '16

"His work is complete and comprehensive, but its notable feature is its popular style and language."

+ N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 60w

EISENMAN, CHARLES. Everybody's business. 2 $1 (3½c) Burrows 304 17-1661

The author describes his book as "a business man's interpretation of social responsibility." He writes of: The modern social problem; Charity and the social problem; Poverty and its solution; Social responsibility. His conclusion is that "industry and society are responsible for the social problem, and that only in their joint action lies the solution. . . . Philanthropy should not be asked to bear the burden that belongs to industry. It is within the power of business to remedy the evils which industry creates and to prevent their recurrence." He quotes freely from social workers and economists.

R of Rs 55:220 F '17 50w

"The really far-sighted social philosophy and program of the book could hardly have muffled itself in more sonorous sermonese."

+ Springfield Republican p6 J1 '17 16 130w

+ Survey 36:590 S 9 '16 190w

ELDER, BENEDICT. Study in socialism. *$1 Herder 335 15-25558

"This attack on socialism is the first of a series of text-books on social problems that the author has in preparation. The main headings of the volume are: The principles of socialism, The history of socialism, The aims of socialism. Under these, the theories and aims of socialism are carefully analyzed."—Ann Am Acad

"The footnotes and bibliography show a wide study of the literature of socialism. In comparison with this, the knowledge of the literature of opposition is comparatively slight. For example, the attacks of the Austrians find no place in his criticism of the labor theory of value. Moreover, there appears to be a failure to grasp the idealism of socialism and the educational value of the organized socialist movement. The increasing amount of coöperation in industry so much emphasized by socialists is ignored; competition alone is considered." A. F.

+ Ann Am Acad 65:317 My '16 140w

"While the student will find little in this volume which he has not read before in the pages of Catholic authors, the man in the street will find it an excellent book to consult for arguments wherewith to meet the socialist propagandist of the day."

+ Cath World 103:115 Ap '16 110w

ELIASON, ELDRIDGE LYON. First aid in emergencies. il *$1.50 Lippincott 614.8 16-630

"Clear, concise, well arranged and fully illustrated manual for first-aid work. Fuller than the Red cross manual, and as good for the small library as the more expensive books by Pilcher and Morrow."—Wis Lib Bull

+ A L A Bkl 12:364 My '16

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:143 Mr '16 30w

ELLIOTT, EDWARD. American government and majority rule. *$1.25 (4c) Princeton univ. press 342.73 16-5649

A study in American political development whose purpose "is to point out the fact that the people of the United States have been hindered in the attainment of democracy, or the rule of the majority, by the form of government through which they have been compelled to act." Contents: Colonial conditions and the framing of the constitution; Early efforts to secure popular control; The new democracy of the West; Civil war and majority rule; Development of parties and party machinery; Some newer forms of popular government; The simplification of government.

ELLIOTT, EDWARD—Continued

"The book presents in a readable style old facts under new tendencies." C. L. K.

+ Ann Am Acad 66:267 J1 '16 270w

"Concise and comprehensive."

+ Ind 87:29 J1 3 '16 470w

N Y Br Lib News 3:58 Ap '16

"This guidebook to the new departure will shock some, and encourage those who think that all movement is progress. The book is stimulating in its thought and excellent in its expression. Those who dissent from its sentiments would profit by reading it and those who like them would delight in it."

+ N Y Times 21:234 J1 16 '16 880w

R of Rs 54:118 J1 '16 90w

St Louis 14:223 Je '16 30w

"Properly understood, the picture which it presents is almost pathetic in its well-balanced yet ruthless exposure of the vanity of human wishes. The essence of democratic rule is that the voice of the majority should prevail. Yet Mr. Elliott's verdict, after a very careful analysis of the past and present working of the American machine of state, is that 'the people do not govern.'" [Earl of] Cromer

+ Spec 116:720 Je 10 '16 2200w

"Most of these reforms have been widely debated. Dr. Elliott, though he writes clearly, has little to say about them that is new, and, where argument is needed, he is sometimes content with mere suggestions."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 750w

Springfield Republican p13 J1 2 '16 180w

ELSON, LOUIS CHARLES. History of American music. rev ed (History of American art) il *$6 Macmillan 780.9 15-27977

"Mr. Elson's 'History of American music' is more than its title indicates; it is also a history of music in America, from the earliest times to the year 1915; it includes chapters on all the important phases of the art, with a final section on the qualities and defects of American music. American women in music have a chapter to themselves; the early organizations, choral and orchestral, are described, with their aims and achievements; folk-music, opera, organ, and church choir get the attention they call for; nor are musical criticism and authorship overlooked."—Nation

+ Dial 60:390 Ap 13 '16 70w

"The first edition of Mr. Elson's valuable book, which is usually trustworthy in its information, appeared in 1904; the new edition not only has a supplementary chapter, but many of the preceding pages have been partly rewritten and reset so as to bring them abreast of the times. There is more biographic detail than one usually finds in musical histories, but the men and women who have become prominent recently have to content themselves with brief mention." H: T. Finck

+ Nation 102:291 Mr 9 '16 1250w

"There is a vast amount of information in the book; many of its chapters are valuable. The study of New England hymnology, though projected into rather too prominent a place, is still one of the most thorough pieces of work it contains. Mr. Elson's history has many popular qualities. That has, no doubt, been proved by the appearance of this revision after eleven years. It is a pity, however, that so elaborate an undertaking could not have combined with its excellent popular features a little more of the spirit of historical accuracy and proportion."

+ N Y Times 21:74 Mr 5 '16 850w

EMERSON, WALTER CRANE. Latchstring to Maine woods and waters. il *$2 (4½c) Houghton 917.41 16-12262

A book devoted to the beauties and delights of Maine. After deploring the boastfulness of other local historians the author proceeds amusingly to boast of the attractions of his own locality. The chapters are headed: Eastward ho! The open door; And this was Maine; Kittery to Sail Rock; The game-fish peerage; Shotgun and rifle; Camp and canoe; Forest, field, and factory; By way of conclusion. There are forty-four illustrations which go to justify the author's enthusiasm.

+ A L A Bkl 12:475 J1 '16

"He devotes much attention to the present condition and the possibilities of the lumber industry, the water power and agriculture and also of the region as both a summer and a winter resort." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:550 J1 '16 140w

+ Boston Transcript p22 J1 5 '16 300w

+ Cleveland p135 N '16 20w

Reviewed by P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 61:55 J1 15 '16 270w

+ Ind 86:403 Je 5 '16 20w

+ Lit D 53:1342 N 18 '16 280w

"It is, indeed, little more than an unusually elaborate resort folder or booklet, extravagant in substance, journalistic in style, wearisome in effect. The outstanding pages of the book are, significantly, the summary of the game and fish laws and the quotations from Lowell, Thoreau, Mr. Howells, and others who have seen Maine with profit."

— Nation 103:135 Ag 10 '16 430w

N Y Br Lib News 3:106 J1 '16

+ N Y Times 21:237 Je 11 '16 160w

Pittsburgh 21:355 J1 '16 30w

+ R of Rs 54:121 J1 '16 50w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 25 '16 420w

"For one who knows the state, or parts of it, it is good reading. For one seeking definite information it is disappointing; the little it contains is hard to find, owing to the arrangement of material and the lack of an index."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:320 J1 '16 60w

EMMANUEL, MAURICE. Antique Greek dance, after sculptured and painted figures; tr. by Harriet Jean Beauley. il *$3 Lane 793 16-14461

A translation of a French work issued in 1896. The edition was soon exhausted and it was only by searching the old book shops of Paris that the translator was able to obtain a copy. The translator says: "Emmanuel's theory is that, while the anatomy of the body remains the same, the method of movements cannot alter, so that, fundamentally, the modern dance must obey the same laws as the antique dance. Long and patient study of thousands of figures of Greek painting and sculpture enabled him to so far reconstruct the ancient dance that he could compare it with the modern ballet and follow the likenesses and differences between them." The study covers the centuries from the 15th to the 1st B. C. There are 5 plates and 600 figures in the text. These are listed in an appendix with the sources from which they were taken.

A L A Bkl 13:70 N '16

+ Ath p590 D '16 60w

+ Cleveland p157 D '16 50w

"Less comprehensive than 'Dancing, ancient and modern,' by Ethel L. Urlin, published in 1912, this work is eminently more exhaustive on its special topic."

+ Ind 87:390 S 11 '16 60w

"For years, in its original French form, the book has been recognized by students of the dance as one of the few substantial contributions to the subject. In its special field, indeed, it stands alone. . . . The diagrams and descriptions by whose means he exemplifies a given step are complete, explicit and correct."

+ Int Studio 59:sup70 S '16 580w

"The distinctive feature of the book is the confrontation of the poses and movements given by the monuments with their analogues reproduced by a modern dancer and caught by instantaneous photography. . . . Quite apart from the text, the six hundred illustrations with the appended list of their sources make the book of interest to the classical scholar and we presume of value to the practical student of the dance. The translator or the proofreaders should have sought expert aid. Greek names are mutilated beyond the measure of even twentieth-century license."

+ — Nation 103:135 Ag 10 '16 250w

N Y Br Lib News 3:125 Ag '16

"This book should be purchased and treasured by dancers and by all those interested in the rhythmic awakening of the mind and body through the dance. A book that cannot be too highly praised."

+ R of Rs 54:236 Ag '16 150w

+ St Louis 14:437 D '16 50w

"A unique contribution to our understanding of the dancer's art. . . . But the translation of the text should be carefully revised whenever a new edition is called for."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p602 D 14 '16 650w

ENGLAND, GEORGE ALLAN. Alibi. il *$1.25 (1½c) Small 16-10305

The first half of this story shows how justice may be perverted and an innocent man convicted on framed-up evidence. The second half gives glimpses of Sing Sing prison and of what two years within its walls may mean to a boy at the outset of his young manhood. Arthur Mansfield, a young bank employee, appeals to Slayton, the cashier, in a money difficulty. Slayton sees in the boy's case an outlet for himself; for he is on the brink of ruin. He robs the bank and lays a fiendishly clever plot which puts the blame for the robbery and a resulting murder on Mansfield. The boy is convicted, but there is one person who knows of Slayton's guilt, and persecution and blackmail, combined with unrelenting conscience, finally drive the man to confession and suicide.

"Readers who seek sensation in their novels will find it in overwhelming abundance in 'The alibi.' Mr. England's style is vividly verbose, and he pictures in glowing phrase the many incidents and emotions that form the stock in trade of the sensation monger. It is a story filled with a multitudinous array of words, and it is an excellent example of the art of fine writing."

— Boston Transcript p8 F 26 '16 230w

"The story is interesting and worked out with ingenuity and a good deal of plausibility. The first part of it is the best, but it does not drag anywhere, and, though the style occasionally leaves something to be desired, the book is clever as well as timely."

+ N Y Times 21:70 F 27 '16 400w

ENGLISH-SERBIAN phrase book. *1s Blackwell, Oxford 491.82

"A short grammar of the south Slav language, with phrases classified according to subjects (horses, post office, armies, &c.), in English, Slav, and the transliterated Slav for the sake of pronunciation."—Spec

Spec 116:118 Ja 22 '16 50w

ENOCK, C. REGINALD. Tropics; their resources, people and future. il *$4.50 Scribner 910 16-26223

"Constructive human geography is the attractive and curiosity-provoking title which the author places upon the purposes which this book stands for and seeks to promote. Entering upon the field of economics and even of ethics, its aim is to show what man should do on the face of the earth, which he has not thus far done. . . . The author notes as a curious comparison, the great strides in geography on a physical basis and the entire absence of a science which should deal constructively with human phenomena and conditions. . . . The tropical lands of Africa, Asia, Central and South America, Australia and the Pacific are brought within the scope of the work; and their natural products, scenery, inhabitants and industries are described and their future development considered. Photographic and other illustrations are copious and excellent. A map of the torrid world zone is included."—Boston Transcript

"Useful for reference in large libraries as the only comprehensive book on the tropics, the work of an authority who has written extensively on the South and Central American countries."

+ A L A Bkl 12:335 Ap '16

"To make the natives of the dark sections of the earth better known, which is the aim of the author, is a worthy and commendable aid to the great work of world improvement. It is true, of course, that the possibility of future exploitation of these lands for the benefit of their own people has been a factor of small, if any, importance. To the author of this notable book, these possibilities are the leading consideration."

+ Boston Transcript p26 Ja 19 '16 500w

N Y Br Lib News 3:37 Mr '16

+ N Y Times 21:109 Mr 26 '16 380w

"He goes to good authorities, such as the Oxford survey of the British empire, when he is obliged to seek information from outside."

+ Spec 116:530 Ap 22 '16 320w

"The book, while it somewhat falls short of its lofty program, contributes abundant food for thought."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ja 24 '16 1050w

"The chapters and sections of the book are of unequal value. On the whole a good though rather summary account is given of French West Africa, illustrated by interesting pictures of Jenne and Timbuktu. But there is nothing novel in this account. His account of Liberia is nothing more than a summary of works already published, and is not up-to-date in its particulars. Nor is there anything particularly novel in the treatment of Portuguese Guinea or British or German West Africa. The best parts of the book are those dealing with Rhodesia, southern Mexico, and northern South America."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p62 F 10 '16 850w

ERVINE, ST. JOHN GREER. Four Irish plays, *$1 Macmillan 822 (Eng ed 14-1563)

"'Mixed marriage,' 'The magnanimous lover,' 'The critics,' and 'The Orangeman' are the four plays, each of one act except the first. ['Mixed marriage' was] published in England in 1911."—A L A Bkl

A L A Bkl 12:417 Je '16

"What distinguishes Mr. Ervine from most of the other Irish dramatists is his mastery of his craft and his firm grasp of character. . . . No one who wishes to keep in touch with the best that is being done in the modern theatre can afford to neglect Mr. Ervine." H. E. Woodbridge

+ Dial 61:463 N 30 '16 500w

"Of the four plays in this volume, three are immature and inconsiderable, but the first, 'Mixed marriage,' is a remarkable work, which, with his 'John Ferguson,' establishes the author in the front rank of the realistic dramatists of the Irish theatre. As a veracious study of life and character among the Irish working classes—there is no question here of romance, wit or imagination, though it is by no means deficient in those qualities—it is superior to any thing written by Synge, Yeats, or Shaw." J. R. Towse

+ — Nation 102:654 Je 15 '16 930w

"'Mixed marriage' is the best in construction and in interest. 'The magnanimous lover' faintly reminds one of 'Hindle wakes.' 'The critics' is in lighter vein, and is even harder on the press than was Mr. Shaw in 'Fanny's first play.' 'The Orangeman' is least in value."

+ — N Y Times 21:270 Jl 2 '16 420w

ERVINE, ST. JOHN GREER. Sir Edward Carson and the Ulster movement. (Irishmen of to-day) *$1 (3½c) Dodd 941.6

Lest the reader chide him for devoting but one chapter of his book to its subject, the author says in explanation: "I wrote this book for the express purpose of telling my readers that men such as Mr. Redmond and Sir Edward Carson are of very little importance in Ireland." Matters which are of importance to Ireland are the effects of the Land purchase laws and the development of the cooperative movement. Men who are of importance are Horace Plunkett and George W. Russell. It is to these and to the Young Irishmen that the author devotes the space not required by his subject, Sir Edward Carson.

ERVINE, ST. JOHN GREER—Continued

Cleveland p119 Ag '16 80w

"The pretense of a biography is only a skilful device enabling him to produce one of the clearest and most cordial statements that have yet been written of the devoted purpose of Young Ireland as a whole." Van Wyck Brooks
+ Dial 61:458 N 30 '16 62w

"The real value of the book lies in his diagnosis of the present condition of Ireland, and his suggested remedies—repression of the liquor trade, reduction of priests (who have lately much increased), and increase of education. The book is written from the Young Ireland standpoint, and its vigour and lack of reserve would be amusing if they did not suggest lapses of taste."

+ Library Association Record 18:126 Mr '16 80w

St Louis 15:24 Ja '17 10w

"When Mr. Ervine completes his brief, perfunctory, and unjust depreciation of Sir Edward Carson he has a great deal to say about Ireland in general and Ulster in particular that is fresh, illuminating, sane, and patriotic. . . . The great interest of this little book is that it is a deliberate attempt to formulate the credo of the Young Irishmen of to-day."

+ Spec 116:sup131 Ja 29 '16 2750w

ERWIN, MARION. Universe and the atom; the ether constitution, creation and structure of atoms, gravitation, and electricity, kinetically explained. il *$2 Van Nostrand 530.1 16-6051

"This is a most unusual book and comes from a most unusual source. The author presents a theory of the constitution of matter and energy and of the entire physical universe, basing his theory on the principles of mechanics. The conclusion which he reaches as the results of his research is that the celestial bodies—suns, stars and worlds, floating through space—are not limited in number and extent, according to the belief hitherto generally held, but are actually infinite in extent. He supports this conception by extended discussion based on the researches of the most eminent scientists. . . . While the author is an eminent attorney, he graduated from college with the degree of civil engineer."—Engin N

Elec World 67:1116 My 13 '16 370w

Engin N 75:940 My 18 '16 430w

"In spite of some inaccuracies, the first part contains quite an interesting account of the nature of wave motion, although the long and frequent quotations from other text-books make the style somewhat disjointed. In some places too much stress is laid on the obvious, which indeed at times is so over-elaborated as to lead to absurdities. . . . The ideas involved in the second part do not seem very helpful in throwing light on these fundamental questions, and in many cases there is a marked lack of adequate discussion of existing theories. . . . Many of the fundamental conceptions in the theory are at fault, and these insecure foundations cannot support the elaborate super-structure built upon them."

+ Nature 98:246 N 30 '16 500w

N Y Br Lib News 3:94 Je '16

St Louis 14:188 My '16

ESCOTT, THOMAS HAY SWEET. Great Victorians; memories and personalities. il *$3.50 Scribner 920 16-22737

"Little personal anecdotes about the illustrious, comic touches, pathetic incidents, tragic occurrences, or otherwise appealing passages in their lives, are always good reading. Mr. Escott's reminiscent volume is notably of this inviting character. Soldiers, churchmen, authors, statesmen, scientists, and other persons of interest crowd his pages in a pleasing promiscuity. If his reminiscences are not all first-hand, they are all readable and leave the impression of one gifted with a remarkable memory for those little illuminative traits and incidents that help to make real for us the personages in whom all the world is interested."—Dial

"It is because of his rambling manner that Mr. Escott has made his book a delightful collection of personal memories." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 11 '16 650w

+ Dial 61:471 N 30 '16 200w

N Y Br Lib News 3:182 D '16 60w

"A book to dip into, not to read continuously."

+ Spec 118:24 Ja 6 '17 130w

"Mr. Escott's volume is not always convincing, its arrangement is wanting in order, and its judgments are often extremely disputable. There are so many odd little slips and errors, that [the reader] is never quite convinced; he keeps wondering whether the writer's memory is quite as trustworthy as it appears."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p568 N 30 '16 400w

ESPEY, CLARA EWING. Leaders of girls. *75c Abingdon press 367 15-26963

"In a simple manner the author presents the characteristics of girls during the adolescent period, mingling the facts of psychology with the wisdom gained from her own wide experience. Definite help is given on how to solve certain problems of individual girls and the more general problems of the club life and activities."—A L A Bkl

"Useful specially to inexperienced leaders of girls' clubs."

+ A L A Bkl 12:453 Jl '16

+ Ind 85:429 Mr 20 '16 40w

"Clara Ewing Espey, out of personal experience and a working knowledge of the scientific literature needful for a background, has written a valuable book. Practical suggestions for club activities and programs are given wholesale."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 30 '16 300w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:450 D '16 50w

ETCHEVERRY, BERNARD ALFRED. Irrigation practice and engineering. 3v v 3 il *$4 McGraw 631 (15-17683)

This is the final volume of a three-volume work. "It treats of irrigation structures and distribution systems. The division between the second and third volumes is arbitrary, but not illogical; and if a division was necessary, the line chosen is probably as good as any. The volume begins with a long chapter on diverting weirs, followed by one on scouring sluices and other appurtenances and by a third on head-gates and regulators. Spillways and escapes, sand and silt traps, cross-drainage works and grade-correction works are the next topics to be given attention." (Engin N)

+ A L A Bkl 12:365 My '16 (Review of v 1-3)

"Most of the matter presented in vol. 2 and vol. 3 is a very careful and catholic selection from the best of modern irrigation practice. The works of other writers are freely cited, sometimes to disagree with them." H. B. Muckleston

+ Engin N 75:508 Mr 16 '16 1500w (Review of v 1-3)

"Probably the most complete and suggestive collection of details of such works which is to be found in any one place. . . . The book is notable for the variety of the illustrations and the concise, yet clear, description of the larger facts worthy of the attention of the engineer." F. H. Newell

+ Engin Rec 73:555 Ap 22 '16 200w (Review of v 3)

+ Pittsburgh 21:349 J1 '16 40w (Review of v 1-3)

EUWER, ANTHONY HENDERSON. Rhymes of our valley. *$1 Pond 811 16-17087

A book of rhymes from the Northwest, from the Hood river valley of Oregon. Most of the poems are rich in local color. The author writes of The blood in the apple, An orchard-man's wife, The ghosts of Multnomah, When mountain streams are white with snow, etc., and there is one poem offering a tribute to that much debated about figure on the Pacific coast, the "Jap."

"The poems which make up this attractive volume are American in theme, and American, too, in their fresh, buoyant spirit and strong colloquialism."

+ Lit D 53:464 Ag 26 '16 600w

N Y Br Lib News 3:158 O '16 50w

EVANS, LAWRENCE BOYD. Samuel W. McCall, governor of Massachusetts. il *$1.25 (2c) Houghton 16-10506

A biography of the present governor of Massachusetts and a study of his public career. The author has drawn generously on Governor McCall's speeches for quotation, especially from those made while a member of Congress. He says, "It is a distinguishing feature of Mr. McCall's speeches in Congress that for the most part they deal with subjects of permanent importance and continuing interest." Contents: Chiefly biographical; Twenty years of legislation; Constitutional questions; The policy of protection; The Spanish war and its problems; The presidency of Dartmouth college; The man of letters; Mr. McCall.

"Obviously prepared with a view to politics of the present day; yet, its subject being an historical scholar of repute and having played a distinguished part in congressional history during twenty years, the book does not fail to be of value and interest to historical scholars."

+ Am Hist R 21:898 J1 '16 50w

+ A L A Bkl 13:80 N '16

+ Ind 88:75 O 9 '16 50w

"If Governor McCall had not been named as a possible nominee for the presidency, would this volume have appeared? . . . Biographies like this, of this type of man, are a credit to our country and our civilization."

+ Lit D 53:415 Ag 19 '16 130w

"Mr. Evans has accomplished a good piece of work in making his hero human—a virtue not too common in biographies of men who have led lives as crowded as McCall's."

+ Nation 102:673 Je 22 '16 1500w

N Y Br Lib News 3:107 J1 '16

+ N Y Times 21:278 J1 9 '16 30w

+ R of Rs 53:753 Je '16 80w

"The author is a member of the Massachusetts bar, and also editor of handbooks on government and interstate commerce. He has enlivened this sketch of a political career by combining the literary achievements of the man, with the congressional. Much is said of the contributions the governor has made as a man of letters. Two important biographies are from his pen."

+ Springfield Republican p13 My 21 '16 330w

EVANS, MAURICE SMETHURST. Black and white in the southern states; a study of the race problem in the United States from a South African point of view. *$2.25 Longmans 326 15-26903

"The writer opens with an argument to the South African on his right to discuss the negro question; and closes with the advice that the white men of Africa do not make the mistake made in the United States—the mistake of giving the negro political rights and of encouraging him to migrate freely throughout the country. The negro, he believes, is best where he is segregated and under the wardship of a white government. The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States were a mistake; but while it is too late for the southern states wholly to undo the policy forced upon them by the north, South Africa should profit by our blunders. She should keep her black states, Basutoland, Bechuanaland, the large reserves in Zululand, in Natal and the Transvaal, should conserve what is good in native life and custom, and should govern largely by personal, sympathetic white rule. Such education should be given as accords with the principle that the natives remain a rural people under a benevolent government."—Survey

"This is a sequel to the author's earlier volume, 'Black and white in southeast Africa.' It is a product of the same searching insight and the same candid observation." R. E. Park

+ Am J Soc 21:696 Mr '16 620w

Reviewed by G: E. Haynes

+ Ann Am Acad 69:282 Ja '17 430w

"Realizing fully the pitfalls that beset the path of the hasty observer, he has labored earnestly to make no deductions that are not warranted by his data. On the whole, he seems to have succeeded fairly well, and he has considered every phase of the problem. Such a volume as Mr. Evans's falls all too easily into a consideration of the negro as a problem rather than as a human being."

+ Dial 60:341 Mr 30 '16 250w

"The author is in agreement with most students that the negro is at his best in the rural regions of the south and he believes that here he should be given every opportunity to purchase land and to become an independent cultivator of the soil. While apparently sympathetic toward the plans for local segregation in the cities, as well as toward that segregation which already exists in the trades and professions, he believes that segregation in the agricultural districts, as urged by Clarence Poe in North Carolina, is impractical and not wise. What gives force to this opinion is that it is written in full sympathy with the best opinion of the south and is the fruit of an extended journey of observation and study through the southern states. Much of the discussion of this book, however, is based on an assumption which does not exactly conform to fact, the assumption, namely, that the negro has no talent for business and hence that there is little possibility that a capitalist class will ever establish itself within the limits of the negro race." R. E. Park

+ J Pol Econ 24:304 Mr '16 1100w

"The arrangement of the book is faulty, and there is a good deal of repetition, but the reader who knows how to pick his way through it will learn a good deal about a subject of great and growing importance in two continents. His book ends with a valuable bibliography of the works which he himself has found most useful."

+ Spec 115:supt66 D 4 '15 1550w

"No one has approached Olmstead in interest and acumen, and this latest book by Mr. Evans adds nothing to our knowledge of southern conditions. Its interest, however, centers about the fact that the author since his youth has been a citizen of South Africa and a student of the negro; and he frequently draws comparisons between conditions in his country and in ours."

"This is the book of an elderly, kindly gentleman who struggles between his belief in the essential oneness of humanity and his Anglo-Saxon confidence in the eternal superiority of the white race." M. W. Ovington

+ Survey 35:644 F 26 '16 450w

EVJEN, JOHN OLUF. Scandinavian immigrants in New York, 1630-1674. il $2.50 Holter 974.7 16-6157

"An account of all that is known of the Norwegian, Danish and Swedish individuals who settled in New York during the years of Dutch rule." (Ind) "Under each of three national divisions, Professor Evjen gives the chief facts with regard to every immigrant, in alphabetical order. He also gives information about those whom he thinks should be assigned to that nationality. . . . The book has seventy valuable illustrations. There are four appendices dealing with Scandinavians in Mexico and South America, 1532-1640; the Scandinavian exploration of Hudson's Bay in 1619-20; some Scandinavian immigrants to New York in the eighteenth century; and German immigrants in New York, 1630-1674." (Boston Transcript)

EVJEN, JOHN OLUF—Continued

"Aside from these limitations, the biographies are full and satisfactory, the only important omissions among the names being those of Jan Thomassen from Wittbek and Casper Jacobsen from Hollenbek." A. J. F. van Laer

+ Am Hist R 22:164 O '16 1100w

"Professor Evjen has gone into a new field of historical research and might well claim a right to pioneer crudeness, but he has done as complete a task as if the material had been richly worked. His book is valuable not only to those interested in the special race and period treated, but also to the eugenicist, the sociologist and the general historian."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 16 '16 450w

+ Ind 87:69 JI 10 '16 50w

"An immense amount of material must have been covered by the research which made possible this work. Dr. Evjen, its author, was a contributor to the 'New Schaff-Herzog encyclopedia of religious knowledge,' which catalogs him as a Lutheran minister, a professor of church history, literature, and theology, and an author of several earlier works."

+ Lit D 53:416 Ag 19 '16 200w

+ Nation 103:402 O 26 '16 130w

+ R of Rs 54:348 S '16 50w

F

FABER, GEOFFREY C. Interflow. (New poetry ser.) *75c Houghton 811 15-26664

"Most of [these poems] were written before the German troops entered upon Belgian soil. Perhaps the most distinguished of them is 'A lament over the city of London.' These stanzas—which surely have in them the essence of poetry—are the expression of a state of mind which was not unusual among the English poets two short years ago; they express a tragic discontent."—Lit D

"Those who believe that the spiritual and intellectual life of Europe is stronger and more wholesome than it was before August, 1914, that the great insanity of the war is restoring the sanity of literature, are likely to be confirmed in their belief by reading Mr. Geoffrey Faber's 'Interflow.' This is a book of beautifully wrought lyrics. . . . But not until they knew the sharp tonic of the war were the poets awakened from this mood of luxurious melancholy. How much Mr. Faber's work gained in clarity and naturalness after the war came is shown by, this direct and noble sonnet, 'To Belgium.'"

+ Lit D 52:181 Ja 22 '16 580w

"I think Mr. Geoffrey Faber happier than many of our hardy pioneers in metre, largely perhaps because he has the pioneer's craft of mixing caution with hardihood. . . . I conjecture that Mr. Faber's models are Frenchmen or Englishmen of Gallic proclivities. At all events, what he seeks is not outcome or passion or experience, but sensations; let me rather say bouquets of sensations, subtly chosen, daintily cropped, and studiously ordered. There is a wanness in these poems, the index of emotional fragility." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 102:254 Mr 2 '16 250w

"He manages to go his own way gaily enough, even if he does not go very far. His graphic skill is considerable, though he does not use it as often as he might. Now and then he gives a remarkably vivid picture, which we find more attractive than his meditations, for he scarcely strikes us as an original or particularly deep thinker."

+ Sat R 120:211 Ag 28 '15 100w

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Life of the caterpillar; tr. by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. *$1.50 (2c) Dodd 595.7 16-21198

This is the sixth volume in the collected edition of Fabre's entomological works in English.

It contains all the essays, fourteen in number, which he wrote on butterflies and moths, or their caterpillars. Three of these had already appeared in an English translation published by the Century company with the title "Social life in the insect world." The one on "The pine processionary: the procession" had appeared in the Fortnightly Review, and "The cabbage-caterpillar," one of the last essays written by the author, was published in the Century.

+ A L A Bkl 13:154 Ja '17

+ Lit D 54:202 Ja 27 '17 370w

+ N Y Times 21:570 D 24 '16 720w

"It is Fabre himself that charms, and his subject comes incidentally for the average reader. . . . This new book may be heartily commended to all who have already learned to enjoy the sympathetic philosophy and the patient investigations of the great naturalist; for others it will be the means of an excellent introduction to him—no other volume could be better."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 260w

FAIRCHILD, HENRY PRATT. Outline of applied sociology. *$1.75 (2c) Macmillan 302 17-50

"Applied sociology," as the author uses the term, "has to do with the task of examining the human relationships of modern civilized societies with the avowed purpose of evaluating them, of distinguishing helpful tendencies and forces from those which are pernicious, and of devising means to perpetuate that which is good, to eliminate that which is bad, and to reshape the social organization the better to serve human welfare." The book consists of five parts. Part 1, the introduction, covers the field of applied sociology, Classification of social phenomena and Types of abnormality and improvement. Part 2 is devoted to The economic life; part 3 to The growth of population; part 4 to The esthetic life and The intellectual and spiritual life. Part 5 gives the Conclusion. References, Supplementary readings and index follow. The author is assistant professor of the science of society at Yale and author of "Immigration."

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON. Real stories from our history, romance and adventure in authentic records of the development of the United States. il *60c (1c) Ginn 973 16-9181

This supplementary reader for grammar and first year high school classes has been prepared in response to a plea made by teachers for books "that would give human interest to facts that to many seem remote and colorless." Original sources have been drawn on for many of the stories and old diaries and letters are quoted with good effect. The history of our entire country is covered.

+ Nation 103:242 S 7 '16 200w

"Great care has been taken in its compilation, and it is full of familiar and fascinating stories, delightfully disguised, yet historically correct."

+ Springfield Republican p15 S 17 '16 60w

FARJENEL, FERNAND. Through the Chinese revolution; tr. from the French by Dr. Margaret Vivian. *$2.50 (2c) Stokes 951 16-8952

Professor Farjanel was traveling in China at the time of the outbreak of the revolution in 1911. He continued his travels during that year and the following, watching the progress of events closely. He says, "To describe in detail everything that occurred would require several volumes. In my endeavour to be as brief as possible, I have therefore been obliged to restrict myself to a record of such facts as will enable the reader clearly to understand the origin and course of the Chinese revolution." Contents: The Chinese of Indo-China; The genesis of the revolution; The revolution in Yunnan; In southern China; The revolution in Shanghai; The foreigners of Shanghai; The first national assembly; The constitution; Central China; The revolutionary generals; The Peking assembly; Attitude of the Chinese; Life in Peking; Chinese customs, the loan; Chinese plans; The national festival; An unconstitutional loan; A master-stroke of policy.

A L A Bkl 12:420 Je '16

"When the author gives us, as such authors never fail to do, remarks on China as a whole, his words must be taken with reserve. Of his proper subject, the Chinese revolution, Prof. Farjanel gives a clear and interesting account, and this English version is one of the most readable books on China that we have seen of recent years."

+ — Ath 1915:2:363 N 20 600w

Boston Transcript p24 Mr 29 '16 520w

+ N Y Times 21:304 J1 30 '16 530w

"This is the only book extant that could make an American or Englishman or Frenchman understand what has taken place in China. M. Farjanel is a man of as high a power of observation and analysis as was De Tocqueville or as is Lord Bryce."

+ R of Rs 53:626 My '16 540w

"His work is, on the whole, somewhat disappointing. It shows that he is a generous and warm-hearted enthusiast, but it affords no reason for holding that sentimental enthusiasm can be made a substitute for real statesmanship. Neither does it afford any ground for reversing the verdict which has generally been delivered by the European world: that, for the time being at all events, the establishment of a real republican government in China is an idealist dream which cannot be realized." [Earl of] Cromer

+ — Spec 115:664 N 13 '15 1850w

"Extremely valuable documentary evidence of a period whose momentousness has been, for the time, all but swallowed up in a war much nearer home."

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 2 '16 350w

FARMER, LISSIE C. A-B-C of home saving. (Harper's A-B-C ser.) *50c (2c) Harper 640 16-14068

This little A-B-C volume, devoted to household economy, is made up of chapters on: Thrift in the kitchen; Conserving heat; Economy in footsteps; Furnishings; Built-in furniture; Curtains and accessories; Economical household buying; Expert shopping; "Bargains" in clothing; Economy in dress; The practical outfit; Making one's clothes; Economy in small things; Throwing things away; Keeping an expense account.

Ind 87:32 J1 3 '16 40w

+ Springfield Republican p15 S 3 '16 110w

FARRAR, GERALDINE (MRS. LOU TELLEGEN). Geraldine Farrar; the story of an American singer. 1l *$2 (8½c) Houghton 16-7673

These chapters from Geraldine Farrar's life were written for the Ladies' Home Journal. They begin with reminiscences of her childhood in Melrose, Massachusetts, and are continued down to her most recent experiences with the "movies" in California. The illustrations, pictures of Miss Farrar herself in her many rôles and of others known in the world of music, are of unusual interest.

+ A L A Bkl 12:415 Je '16

"Americans, however, be the shortcomings of this book what they may, cannot fail to read with pride and pleasure this sprightly account of the world-wide triumphs of their compatriot."

+ Ind 86:402 Je 5 '16 220w

+ Lit D 52:1710 Je 10 '16 200w

"The book is most entertaining and much too short—only 115 pages. Doubtless she will rewrite it some day and tell more about her inner life and her musical and psychological adventures with the parts she has sung." H: T. Finck

+ Nation 102:366 Mr 30 '16 1400w

Reviewed by Lawrence Gilman

+ No Am 203:618 Ap '16 1400w

R of Rs 53:629 My '16 40w

"Miss Farrar's story is much less interesting than many newspaper interviews in which she has expressed herself with greater frankness. It may be that these have owed something to the inventiveness or the malice of the reporters. At all events, the autobiography is a dull and labored chronicle, full of trite material and devoid of vivid impressions. In spite of all that Miss Farrar tells, there is rarely a flash of authentic personality. Possibly that is because she is always more concerned with herself than with other people; possibly it is a question of style. But the ambition and the egotism are genuine enough, if not very vividly expressed. The illustrations are copious."

— Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 700w

FARRINGTON, OLIVER CUMMINGS. Meteorites; their structure, composition, and terrestrial relations. il $2 O. C. Farrington, 1510 E. 56th st., Chicago 552 16-2631

"The book of Dr. Farrington, here under review, comes opportunely into a field where there is plenty of room. In an octavo volume of 225 pages is given as fully as space will permit, a summation of present knowledge regarding meteorites, their structure, composition and terrestrial relations. The leading chapters deal with the phenomena and time of falls, the size and form of individual meteorites, their structural features, chemical and mineralogical composition, origin and classification, with a final chapter on the principal public collections."—Science

"Will meet a difficulty that has long faced the student who, while desirous of studying this subject, has hitherto looked round in vain for a comprehensive textbook."

+ Nature 98:145 O 26 '16 1000w

"The book shows a thorough knowledge of the results achieved by other workers, and forms a very welcome addition to existing literature. It is well illustrated by half-tone figures of form and structure, those of microstructure being reproductions from Tschermak's well-known 'Mikroskopische beschaffenheit der meteoriten.'" G: P. Merrill

+ Science n s 44:314 S 1 '16 1150w

FAXON, FREDERICK WINTHROP, ed. Annual magazine subject-index for 1915. *$8 Boston bk. 050 (9-32403)

Part 1 of this annual is made up of the magazine subject index for 1915, an index to the less common American and English periodicals (with a few exceptions periodicals not included in the Readers' Guide). Part 2 is made up of the Dramatic index, "covering articles and illustrations concerning the stage and its players, and the periodicals of America and England." To this is added as an appendix a list of the dramatic books and plays (in English) published during 1915. This list was compiled by Henry Eastman Lower and George Heron Milne.

Ath p277 Je '16 40w (Review of pts 1 and 2)

"An invaluable annual for all needing information on stage affairs. It contains . . . what has been difficult to come at, a record of the prominent moving picture plays."

+ Ind 86:554 Je 25 '16 40w (Review of pt 2)

"It would be difficult to bring together a more complete bibliography of the subject. Cross references are carefully given. So far as we have tested the index we have found it full and accurate in its references and singularly free from typographical errors."

+ Nation 102:572 My 25 '16 100w (Review of pt 2)

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA. Selected quotations on peace and war, comp. by the Commission on Christian education. $1 Federal council of the churches of Christ in Am. 172.4 15-24666

"This compilation is made with special reference to a course of lessons on international peace. Among the topics covered are 'The Christian ideal of world-wide fraternity,' 'Dangers in modern nationalism,' 'The character and causes of war,' 'The moral equivalents of war,'

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA—Continued
 'Preventives of war, arbitration,' and 'World federation, a means of international justice.'
 —R of Rs

R of Rs 53:757 Je '16 50w

FELL, EDWARD NELSON. Russian and nomad. il *$2 (4c) Duffield 914.7 16-11164

Tales of the Kirghiz steppes in Russian Central Asia, written by one who for some years was in charge of the works of a mining company situated in that region. He writes sympathetically of both Russian and Kirghiz races, "each in its way so genial, so hospitable, so willing to give the best of itself so whole heartedly to the stranger." The thoughts, customs and activities of these people are intimately revealed, less with the hope of defining the soul of the people than of showing the reader the trend along which it is traveling.

+ A L A Bkl 13:29 O '16

+ Ath p547 N '16 80w

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 17 '16 350w

"The book contains a wealth of interesting and unique material not skilfully handled."

+ — Ind 87:315 Ag 28 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:91 Je '16

"The different tales are more like sketches and essays than stories. This sympathetic and detailed observation of these people gives one a better understanding, not only of them, but of some of the features of the problems that confront the Russian government."

+ N Y Times 21:267 J1 2 '16 350w

Pittsburgh 21:356 J1 '16 40w

"One of the few books in English that give any satisfactory description of that portion of the Russian possessions."

+ R of Rs 54:120 J1 '16 100w

"Not for a long time have we read a book of travel so free from self-assertion or so rich in amusement."

+ Sat R 122:512 N 25 '16 560w

+ Spec 117:539 N 11 '16 100w

"An extremely well-written, interesting book of travel. And the matter of which it tells makes it pretty well unique."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p507 O 26 '16 850w

"His impressions are recorded with the sympathy of a born cosmopolitan, and with a quiet humor that is irresistible. . . . This is an ideal book to read aloud in a select company of friends." W: L. Phelps

+ Yale R ns 6:212 O '16 160w

FELS, MARY (MRS. JOSEPH FELS). Joseph Fels; his life-work. il *$1 (2c) Huebsch 16-16595

The biography of a business man who, having gained a great fortune, was not satisfied in merely giving away portions of it in the name of philanthropy, but who sought instead to advance a constructive plan for a more equal distribution of wealth. Joseph Fels, the manufacturer of "Fels-naphtha," was an ardent advocate of single tax, devoting himself to the spread of propaganda and experiment both here and in England. The process of evolution which led him to accept the single tax principle is most interesting. It began with his interest in vacant lot gardens. His life story is here told by his wife, who since his death has carried on much of his work.

+ A L A Bkl 13:80 N '16

Reviewed by Fola La Follette

+ Bookm 44:300 N '16 1250w

"The knowledge and understanding of the underlying principles of political economy displayed by the author hold the reader's attention from beginning to end." Alexander Mackendrick

+ Dial 61:262 O 5 '16 1450w

+ Ind 88:164 O 23 '16 120w

N Y Br Lib News 3:123 Ag '16

"There is less of the personal element in the book than one might wish; it is more an exposition of the Fels doctrine and views than would be preferable in an ordinary story of a prominent man's life."

+ N Y Times 21:337 Ag 27 '16 1050w

+ R of Rs 54:569 N '16 220w

+ Springfield Republican p6 O 16 '16 950w

"There are two remarkable things about this book—Fels and his biographer. His biography, as here presented, is short. But no one will seriously try to supplant it; although its subject stands out in many minds as one of the truly great men of his age. To see what he saw in the way he saw it can't mean less." E: T. Hartman

+ Survey 37:154 N 11 '16 420w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:409 N '16 50w

FERGUSON, CHARLES. Great news. *$1.25 Kennerley 330.9 15-24948

"Authorized by President Wilson to visit European capitals and various business communities in America as an investigator of the relation of 'big business' to government, Charles Ferguson sums up his observations in 'The great news.'" (Springfield Republican) "Mr. Ferguson tells us that permanent peace will not be secured by setting up high courts, if we do not also create the conditions which will give everybody predominantly the peace motive. . . . The great fact of our modern life is the development of business on an immense scale of production and distribution, with the machinery of banking, and capital control, that operates the business organism. Mr. Ferguson believes that the real function of business in relation to government is to make things cheap, and men dear." (R of Rs)

Lit D 52:1709 Je 10 '16 380w

"Replete with striking passages, the book is in the main founded upon a misconception of the character of modern banking and credit systems."

+ — Nation 103:307 S 28 '16 350w

N Y Times 21:247 Je 18 '16 970w

"Mr. Ferguson has not written a treatise, nor an easy primer for the man in the street. His style is brilliant, but a little difficult and obscure. Yet his book is worth a careful reading. He plows deep, where writers like Mr. Norman Angell scratch the surface of the obvious. He is capable of writing another book, of concrete applications, working out in practical ways the ideas and suggestions with which this book abounds."

+ R of Rs 53:113 Ja '16 210w

"This argument for socialism is presented with an abundance of subtlety and good writing."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ja 28 '16 170w

FERGUSON, JOHN ARDEN. Farm forestry. il *$1.25 (1½c) Wiley 634.9 16-19966

This work by the professor of forestry at the Pennsylvania state college is based on lectures delivered to agricultural students and is intended for use in agricultural colleges and in high schools. The chapters take up: The origin and uses of the woodlot; The tree; The life processes of trees; The life history of trees in the woodlot; Establishing a woodlot by artificial means; Trees to use in starting woodlots, etc. Log tables and volume tables with other information are given in an appendix and there is a species index in addition to the general index.

FERGUSON, MAXWELL. State regulation of railroads in the South. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) pa *$1.75 Longmans 385 16-14059

"An historical account of the development of railroad regulation in the southern states. Though the present system of regulation shows a marked improvement over conditions a few years ago, the author feels, in common with nearly all other students of transportation, that because of the inherent weaknesses of railroad regulation by states and the ever growing problem of conflict between state and federal regulation, the supervision of the railroad business by the states should be supplanted and the work be entrusted for the most part to the federal government."—Ann Am Acad

Ann Am Acad 68:326 N '16 90w

Ath p426 S '16 60w

"Notwithstanding its summary character, which is explained by the author as due to the fact that it is a part of a larger book on railway development in the South, it gives an intelligible and well-balanced account of the struggles for railway control in that section of the country in which the problems are more baffling than in any other."

+ Nation 103:515 N 30 '16 620w

+ Springfield Republican p8 J1 7 '16 350w

FERNALD, JAMES CHAMPLIN. English grammar simplified; its study made easy. *75c Funk 425 16-6424

"This handy and compact little grammar for the man in a hurry by the scholarly author of 'A working grammar of the English language,' 'Synonyms, antonyms, and prepositions,' etc., should meet an existing need. It supplies exactly what the average busy man or woman needs in the way of simple and understandable explanations of difficult points. . . . The aim of the work, as indicated in the preface is 'to include everything in correct English usage that is a legitimate subject of rational inquiry for practical purposes.' It is less a book of rules than of facts, the array of which is comprehensive and satisfying."—Lit D

Cleveland p123 Ag '16

"Too much too detailed and lacking sufficient practise exercises for a school text-book, its simple statements of recognized principles of English grammar, its clear illustrations, and few suggestive exercises fit it especially for reference or for home trainings."

+ Ind 87:235 Ag 14 '16 50w

"Its author deserves and should receive the grateful thanks of every young clerk, stenographer, preacher, and teacher."

+ Lit D 53:755 S 23 '16 320w

St Louis 15:11 Ja '17

FERNAU, HERMANN. Because I am a German; ed. with an introd. by T. W. Rolleston; auth. tr. from the German. *$1 (4c) Dutton 940.91 16-11064

This book by a German writer consists largely of an examination of the anonymous work "J'accuse" and of the German answers to it. We are told that while the book itself was suppressed in Germany, these "answers" in pamphlet and leaflet form were scattered broadcast, so that the German public heard the refutation but not the original argument. It is to give "J'accuse" a fair hearing that this book has been written. The author takes the stand that "J'accuse," no matter how we may criticise its thesis, has opened the debate on the question of the responsibility for the war." As a German he demands that the challenge be taken up and that the instigators of the war (individuals, not nations or systems), be punished.

Army and Navy Journal 53:1513 J1 22 '16 50w

"With all his faults Herr Fernau's book is, just as was 'J'accuse,' the voice of the conscience of Germany, of that silenced Germany whose interests and aspirations are not identical with or are overruled by dynastic needs and ambitions." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:625 Ag '16 450w

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 30 '16 300w

Ind 88:26 O 2 '16 90w

"The German government confiscated all copies of Hermann Fernau's book, 'Because I am a German,' within three weeks after publication, and forbade all further sales. In Switzerland public sales of the book have been forbidden. The renown thus achieved seems to be the main reason for issuing an English translation."

Nation 103:546 D 7 '16 150w

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

"His examination of the arguments of the author of 'J'accuse' is unprejudiced, impartial, and coldly logical. . . . There is much clever irony and veiled contempt in his examination of the answers that have been made to 'J'accuse' and of the position and arguments of philosophic, literary, scholastic, and scientific Germany in support of the war. His own convictions on the subject of modern war, its alleged necessity, and the arguments in its favor are emphatic, stern, and contemptuous."

+ N Y Times 21:233 Je 4 '16 700w

+ Outlook 114:60 S 13 '16 320w

R of Rs 54:117 J1 '16 60w

+ Spec 117:15 J1 1 '16 1200w

Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 120w

"As masterly a statement of the case as we have seen anywhere."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p385 Ag 3 '16 170w

FETTER, FRANK ALBERT. Economics. 2v v 1 *$1.75 Century 330.1 15-20139 v 1 Economic principles.

"Only a part of the field usually covered in a text on economics is included in this first volume, certain practical applications of the principles set forth, such as money, banking, international trade, labor organization, the trust problem, taxation, insurance, etc., being reserved for the second volume, which has not yet appeared. . . . [The author] divides his book into six parts: 1, Elements of value and price; 2, Usance and rent; 3, Valuable human services and wages; 4, Time-value and interest; 5, Enterprise and profit; 6, Dynamic changes in economic society. These titles are not perfectly descriptive. In fact, they are a little misleading; although, as they seem to indicate, the principal emphasis of the book is upon distribution. . . . It is apparent that the author has undertaken two tasks: to explain and justify a new nomenclature and to apply this vocabulary in an exposition of economic theory."—Am Econ R

"One would like to speak of the many excellent features of this work—its faultless diction, its illuminating illustrations, its satisfactory typography, and its graphic devices, some of which are unique and especially helpful; but these are overshadowed by the question as to whether the book itself will prove to be a cradle or a coffin. This depends upon whether the nomenclature is accepted or rejected by economists. If generally accepted and used, it will mean that the business world and economists will no longer speak the same language and that succeeding generations of students of economics will have to read the previous literature of the subject in translation. If the author's terminology is not accepted, the book ought to be rewritten and considerable portions of it discarded before it is accepted anywhere as a textbook." C. W. Dotten

+ Am Econ R 6:343 Je '16 1750w

"Remarkable for the logical consistency of its theoretical structure. . . . It does much to clear up theoretical ambiguities and inconsistencies, but to a beginner it will doubtless be forbidding. There is a quality of simplicity about the whole treatment that suggests ease of assimilation on the part of a student. But this simplicity is more seeming than real. It results from an abstruseness of treatment and a use of distinctions often so broad as to give to the student or general reader the impression that economics is a discipline both unreal and impractical." R. C. McCrea

Ann Am Acad 67:297 S '16 440w

+ Ind 88:35 O 2 '16 70w

"Covers only part of the ground embraced by his 'Principles of economics.' The treatment of the subject in the present work differs considerably from that followed in the earlier work. The most important change has been the separation of the dynamic from the static theory, the former having been relegated to a separate section, with an undoubted gain in clearness. The exercises appended to the older work are dropped from this volume, perhaps with the intention of including them in the second volume."

Nation 102:sup498 My 4 '16 130w

FETTER, FRANK ALBERT—Continued

"He presents a quite new statement of the theory of value, one more in accord with the modern volitional psychology, thus eliminating the old meanings which have been associated with the terms of value ever since the days of Bentham."

Springfield Republican p17 Mr 24 '16 550w

FIELD, JESSIE, and NEARING, SCOTT. Community civics. il *60c (1c) Macmillan 323 16-2108

A series of lessons in good citizenship arranged for the boys and girls of country communities. The lessons begin with discussions of the farm home. From the home as a center they reach out to embrace the community, the state and the nation. Questions and suggestions for investigation and discussion follow each chapter and there are well chosen illustrations to attract the interest of the young people for whom the book is intended.

+ A L A Bkl 12:434 Je '16

"Makes many excellent suggestions, but gives no definite plan for using them. Were sufficient material given, either in the text or by references, the thought-producing questions at the end of each chapter would be useful."

+ Ind 87:237 Ag 14 '16 50w

+ Pratt p23 O '16 30w

R of Rs 53:379 Mr '16 40w

St Louis 14:442 D '16

"Refreshing in its freedom from statistics, examples and 'facts to be remembered.' It is full of live statements, principles and practical suggestions. The book is a real teacher." R. W. Baldwin

+ Survey 36:508 Ag 12 '16 160w

"Inspiringly written, and well illustrated with photographs."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:187 Ap '16 50w

FIELD, LOUISE MAUNSELL. Woman of feeling. *$1.25 (2c) Dodd 16-4749

Studies of three women make this an interesting story of modern life and tendencies. One of these, Vida Dareth, is a social parasite, living a life of ease and luxury for which she makes no adequate return either to her husband or to society. Margaret Lane is a big-hearted woman of the best twentieth century type, keen minded and alive, and awake to the demand for social service. Between these two stands Sylvia Farnham with her girlish enthusiasm and half formed character. From the beginning Vida is her ideal, altho for a brief moment she has a glimpse, thru the eyes of Dr. Alan Macneven of a more useful and more noble type of life. But Sylvia is one of the little people and she chooses a future that promises to be the counterpart of Vida's. This is fortunate, for it leaves Dr. Macneven free to turn back to his more worth while association with Margaret Lane.

"Miss Field has not striven for the unusual, nor to describe deep or tragic emotions. For all that the story strikes a very true note and the workmanship is good."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 1 '16 350w

"Much of the time her people and their environment seem to be spun out of her own brain rather than observed from life. This is not true, however, of her central character, her 'woman of feeling,' who stands out a closely observed, clearly conceived and graphically pictured creation, able to impress the reader as being a real, flesh-and-blood person."

+ N Y Times 21:64 F 20 '16 330w

"The studies of Vida and the young girl are achievements of which a new writer may well be proud, but the doctor and the novelist belong to the class of persons that one seldom meets outside the pages of a novel."

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 27 '16 350w

FIELDING, HENRY. Covent Garden Journal; ed. by Gerard Edward Jensen. 2v il *$5 Yale univ. press 824 16-3780

Henry Fielding's Covent Garden Journal was published during the year 1752 under the pseudonym,

Sir Alexander Drawcansir, knt, censor of Great Britain. The greater part of its contents came from Fielding's own pen, he having written under various signatures. This two volume work reprints all the leading articles, with an introduction, touching on the origin of the journal, its general character, etc., as a feature of volume 1, and notes and an index as features of volume 2. Portraits and facsimiles of pages from the journal form the illustrations.

Ath p242 My '16 60w

+ Ath p523 N '16 520w

"For the first time, the entire contents of the Covent Garden Journal have been edited and annotated, and their more important parts appear in two handsomely printed volumes, with a lengthy critical and historical introduction by Gerard Edward Jensen, and facsimile pages and with reprints of contemporary prints. The Covent Garden Journal is no successor to The Spectator, The Tatler, The Rambler or other papers of that class. Controversy was the breath of its life, and as a revelation of the spirit of the times as well as of Fielding's polemic skill a permanent place belongs to it among his works. The final volume is liberally equipped by Mr. Jensen with all sorts of notes and other critical and historical paraphernalia that throw light upon the time and upon men and affairs of the time." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 4 '16 1500w

"It is inconvenient that he does not attach Fielding's name to the proper contributions in the text, but confines the statement of authorship to the notes—the result being that an easy-going reader may unwittingly peruse an essay by a nonentity while under the impression that he is reading the great Sir Alexander Drawcansir."

+ Nation 103:136 Ag 10 '16 480w

N Y Br Lib News 3:61 Ap '16

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 4 '16 1100w

"Of all Fielding's journalistic enterprises the Covent Garden Journal is perhaps the one best worth reprinting and preserving, and Mr. Jensen, of Yale university, is to be thanked for his very good edition. He gives more of the 'Journal' than Henley, or Leslie Stephen, or any of Fielding's English editors has given."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p174 Ap 13 '16 1600w

"Nothing seems to have escaped Mr. Jensen. In his introduction of 129 pages, he gives us a picture of the London of 1752 that is at once vivid, impartial, and convincing while the notes at the end of the second volume are a marvel of erudition and of accuracy. The make-up of these volumes is unexceptionable." F. S. Dickson

+ Yale R n s 5:865 Jl '16 2300w

FIELDING-HALL, HAROLD. For England. *$1.50 Houghton 821 16-22739

"This book consists of several prose sketches illustrating various English attitudes towards the war; and in between are pieces of patriotic verse. There are the views of the free-thinking pacifist village cobbler, the foe of church and state; of the village Dunois who feels the injustice of his social position, but is converted into a very fine soldier by the pacifist arguments of his friend; of the friendless governess who marries a blind and dying soldier in hospital, of various narrow-minded, conscientious objectors." —Nation

"Some of the theories which the author advances will meet with violent opposition, but they will also stimulate thought."

+ Ind 87:316 Ag 28 '16 40w

"Although neither the verse nor the prose possesses great merit beyond a certain air of conviction, both afford interesting evidence as to the reactions of war upon a typically British temperament."

+ Nation 103:262 S 14 '16 600w

N Y Br Lib News 3:119 Ag '16 20w

R of Rs 54:237 Ag '16 10w

FIFE, ROBERT HERNDON, Jr. German empire between two wars. *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan 943.08 16-10321

A study of the political and social development of the German nation between 1871 and 1914. It is not a war book, altho the first of the four parts is devoted to a summary of the situation out of which the war grew. The author has been interested, first of all, in the striking contrast between Germany's economic advancement and her social and political backwardness and he has sought to find the explanation. Part 1 is devoted to foreign relations; part 2 to politics and government within the empire. Part 3 takes up some of the special problems, including Alsace and Lorraine and the Polish question; Part 4, Transformations and tendencies, is concerned in particular with three German institutions, the city, the school and the press.

"Certain chapters, e.g., those devoted to the Polish question and the issues of state and church in the schools, comprise perhaps the best brief discussions of the subjects of which they treat to be had in English. Statistics are presented very sparingly, and there are practically no citations of authorities. Since the book is designed to engage the interest of the general reader, these aspects of it are perhaps justifiable. But space should have been found for a selected bibliography." F: A. Ogg

+ Am Hist R 22:157 O '16 690w

+ A L A Bkl 13:116 D '16

Cleveland p119 Ag '16 70w

+ Dial 61:69 Jl '15 '16 230w

"The discussion is that of an impartial historian, with a deal more of sympathy for Germany in its central and hemmed-in position than is usual. He pays measured tribute to the traits of discipline and romanticism found in the German character. And just as impressively he notes the characteristic failure of German administration to make headway in winning the Poles from racial solidarity."

+ Lit D 52:1708 Je 10 '16 120w

"In his discussion of the internal problems of Germany, Professor Fife shows marked democratic sympathies. The author gives an eminently just appraisal of the merits and defects of German newspapers."

+ Nation 103:65 Jl 20 '16 250w

N Y Br Lib News 3:91 Je '16

"Decidedly worth reading for the person who wants an unprejudiced account of German institutions and of the German point of view."

N Y Times 21:203 My 14 '16 480w

Pittsburgh 21:357 Jl '16 90w

Pratt p41 Ja '17 20w

R of Rs 53:756 Je '16 90w

"Professor Fife, of the Wesleyan university, U. S. A., was educated in, and has an intimate knowledge of, Germany, to the language and literature of which his educational work in America has been largely devoted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p323 Jl 6 '16 100w

"What is required is that the author should study carefully some of the many defences of German civilization that have recently appeared and test his conclusions by them—i. e., he must go below the surface, and he must understand that to an educated German it seems that Germany appears to be the modern state of the future and that America appears to be content to keep up the ideals of the past."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p392 Ag 24 '16 1450w

FIGGIS, DARRELL. Æ (George W. Russell); a study of a man and a nation. (Irishmen of to-day) *$1 (3c) Dodd (Eng ed 16-12273)

"Mr. Darrell Figgis gives an eloquent appreciation of the many-sided activities of Mr. George Russell—'Æ'—one of the most interesting and helpful figures in the Ireland of to-day—ex-drapers assistant, poet, painter, and mystic; co-operative missionary, organizer and editor." (Spec) "Selecting the best pages . . . we gain a good idea of the life and work of the quiet, devoted poet-economist, and realize what a power he may be for the reorganization of the land he loves. . . . The information given about the conditions of Irish country life . . . is excellently set forth and of value to the student of Irish affairs." (Pittsburgh [Condensed from the Outlook (London), 1916])

"Well intentioned, but inadequate, and the obscure and cumbrous style which he affects is calculated to discourage the reader. Mr. Figgis is at his best in the chapters in which he describes the rise and growth of the co-operative movement founded by Sir Horace Plunkett, with which Mr. George Russell has been closely associated for the past fifteen years."

+ Ath p24 Ja '16 430w

N Y Times 21:249 Je 18 '16 1150w

+ Pittsburgh 21:294 Je '16 60w

"Unfortunately, Mr. Figgis has not been content with recounting the services rendered to Ireland by Mr. Russell; he uses him as a stalking-horse for tilting at his bêtes noires—English imperialism, English industrialism, English blatancy and brutality. . . . Lauds of the living are always dangerous, and when conducted in the spirit shown by Mr. Figgis—a spirit widely differing from the magnanimity which 'Æ' has often shown—lend fresh point to the old prayer, 'Save us from our friends.'"

+ Spec 115:922 D 25 '15 600w

FILLMORE, PARKER HOYSTED. Little question in ladies' rights. il *50c (5½c) Lane 16-18918

A little story about Margery and Willie Jones and a nickel. The nickel belonged to Margery. She had earned it picking blackberries. But it reposed in Willie Jones's pocket, and, being a man, Willie Jones followed a curious code in his dealings with women, and some strategy on Margery's part was necessary before she could gain possession of her own. The first part of the story is taken from "The young idea," an earlier book by the author now out of print. The second part is new.

+ N Y Times 21:461 O 29 '16 200w

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 60w

FILSINGER, ERNST B. Exporting to Latin America; with a foreword by Leo S. Rowe. *$3 Appleton 382 16-17440

"This volume, designed as a handbook for merchants, manufacturers, and exporters, was compiled by the former president of the Latin-American foreign trade association. Mr. Filsinger has given much time to the study and observation of the conditions of which he writes, and he has many suggestions to offer, which, if not conclusive, are at least worthy of serious attention from American business men." (R of Rs) "The one thing that stands out in Mr. Filsinger's prescription is that to win a hold on Latin-American trade it is necessary to do a great deal of hard, intelligent work. If the merchants of other countries, notably Germany, have made an exact science of their export business, the American who expects to compete with them successfully must do as they have done." (N Y Times)

"Classed bibliography (40p)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:200 F '17

+ Ind 88:242 N 6 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:158 O '16 50w

"Precisely what we should do Mr. Filsinger tells us in plain, direct fashion; the value of his book lies in the explicitness of its instructions."

+ N Y Times 21:462 O 29 '16 550w

"His book throughout is written from the business man's standpoint."

+ R of Rs 54:572 N '16 110w

St Louis 14:390 N '16 30w

FINDLATER, MARY, and FINDLATER, JANE HELEN. Content with flies. *$1 Dutton

"The question of economy, and particularly of domestic economy, is of interest to everyone now. This little book—

As cats when they can get no mice
Content themselves with catching flies

FINDLATER, M. and J. H. —Continued
is the motto of it—does not set out to solve any economic problems or to give any very practical hints on housekeeping in adversity. It tells the story of two summer months spent in a Highland cottage without servants by two ladies no longer young and used to all the comforts supplied by a Bridget and a Flora in a house in London. . . . They prove, too, their theory that with increasing poverty many of the trimmings of modern life may be removed, leaving the essential beauty and refinements of home unchanged."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

- + Boston Transcript p7 N 4 '16 180w
- Dial 61:481 N 30 '16 130w
- + Nation 103:590 D 21 '16 200w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:119 Ag '16
- + N Y Times 21:538 D 3 '16 300w
- + R of Rs 54:681 D '16 100w
- + Spec 116:501 Ap 15 '16 1500w
- Survey* 37:53 O 14 '16 140w

"The story is simple and charming and spiced with humour."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p163 Ap 6 '16 470w

FINDLAY, ALEXANDER. Chemistry in the service of man. il $1.60 Longmans A16-1377

"Professor Findlay writes for the intelligent reader who knows a little chemistry and would like to know more. He explains the leading principles of modern chemistry and illustrates their application to industrial purposes. Thus the energy of a chemical reaction is exemplified in the high explosives now being produced—and used—in such appalling quantities. The principle of catalysis has been applied in many ways, not least in the manufacture of margarine. The modern theories of molecular structure, which the 'practical man' would have scoffed at, have formed the basis of the new synthetic chemistry which has given us artificial indigo and camphor, and new dyes and drugs in infinite variety."—Spec

- + Boston Transcript p8 N 11 '16 370w

"In this happy blending of the philosophic and purely scientific with the utilitarian and material the book may be said to fulfil the ideal of what such a work should be. . . . The work is a distinct and valuable addition to the popular literature of science, and it is well worthy of a place in the library of every secondary school." T. E. Thorpe

- + Nature 97:538 Ag 31 '16 900w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:125 Ag '16
- + Pittsburgh 21:578 D '16 80w
- + Pratt p17 Ja '17 50w

"Author is an eminent British authority."

- + Quar List New Tech Bks Ja '17 50w
- + Sat R 122:232 S 2 '16 400w

"Professor Findlay has the gift of lucid exposition, and is not above explaining to the layman why, for example, soap cleans the hands, why a thermos flask keeps tea hot, and why a safety-match will only strike on the box. His book should be widely read; it is a most attractive and convincing plea for the encouragement of chemical science, upon which, indeed, the economic future of humanity depends."

- + Spec 117:136 Jl 29 '16 180w

FINDLAY, HUGH. House plants, their care and culture. il $1.50 Appleton 716 16-10786

"Professor Hugh Findlay of Joseph Slocum college of agriculture, Syracuse university, tells how one should proceed who wishes to have a successful winter garden in his house." (N Y Times) "The work deals with the culture of the common house plants from seed time until they reach the harvest of bloom. . . . Detailed directions are also given regarding the control of diseases and insects. With each plant described, a brief sketch of its history as well as a careful description of propagation is given." (Springfield Republican)

"Fuller than the Rexford book (Booklist, 6:395, Je '10) except for the description of some plants; often more definite, and with more numerous and more useful illustrations, which, however, are seldom beautiful in themselves."

+ A L A Bkl 13:17 O '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16

+ N Y Times 21:296 Jl 23 '16 60w

"The author has been careful to avoid confusing technicalities, and has succeeded in producing a work of unusual interest."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 7 '16 230w

"Separate chapters on bulb culture, the window garden, foliage plants, porch and window boxes and flower baskets. A good book for any library."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:269 Je '16 40w

FINK, BRUCE. Tobacco. *50c Abingdon press 178 15-27915

"All experts on the effects of tobacco condemn its use to a greater or less degree. There are always bad effects in proportion to the amount used, varying with the constitution of the user. No recent expert authority would openly and unqualifiedly advocate the use of tobacco for anyone. Such in substance are some of the facts revealed in this little book by the professor of botany in Miami university. All phases of the tobacco question, its effect on boys, the menace of the cigarette, its relation to degeneracy, the money cost, how to conquer the tobacco habit and other points are ably discussed."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p24 N 17 '15 120w

"Strictly speaking, the book disqualifies itself from consideration as a scientific treatise by its admission of hearsay evidence and exhibits of dubious evidential value. But Prof. Fink, after all is said, makes out a strong case concerning the effect of tobacco on boys and college men, and the waste of money entailed in its use."

+ — Ind 85:237 F 14 '16 80w

Springfield Republican p17 D 21 '15 100w

FINN, REV. FRANCIS JAMES. Cupid of 2 Campion. il 85c (2c) Benziger 16-21053

The author, a Roman Catholic priest, has written this story for Catholic young people. It is well and entertainingly told, altho its plot sounds somewhat sensational in bare outline. Clarence Esmond, a fourteen year old youngster, while stopping over in McGregor, Iowa, on a trip to the coast with his parents, is cast adrift in the Mississippi. He is rescued by a gypsy and held a prisoner in the gypsy camp. Here he has as a companion a little white girl, also a prisoner. He escapes and is again rescued from drowning, this time by one of the boy students of Campion college. The kindly Father rector of the college takes him under his protection and aids in rescuing Dora, the other captive. The Catholic teaching begun by Dora in the gypsy camp is continued in the college, Clarence choosing to become a member of the church.

"To our mind the best of Father Finn's boy stories."

+ Cath World 104:554 Ja '17 90w

FIRKINS, CHESTER. Poems. *$1.25 Sherman, French & co. 811 16-16938

A selection from the verses of the Minnesota journalist and poet who died in 1915, which have appeared in newspapers and periodicals during the past twelve years. The poems are divided into five groups: Poems of city life, Poems of the northwest, Miscellaneous poems, Poems of childhood, Humorous verse. Mr. Firkins' love of nature in the rough has not stood in the way of his perception of the intense dramatic interest of the life of a great city. His poems of city life, particularly "On a subway express," and "Manhattan speaks," are perhaps the most notable in the book.

+ Lit D 53:199 Jl 22 '16 230w

Lit D 53:272 Jl 29 '16 220w

FIRTH, ANDREW. Furnace of iron. *$1.35 Brentano's

"Mr. Firth's strong novel tells of the marriage of an enthusiastic, dreaming girl with an Egyptian studying in London and thinly veneered with western civilization. . . . His young wife's gradual disillusionment and her utter misery with his people in Egypt are clearly shown to be the inevitable sequelæ of all such marriages. The customs and ideals of her husband and his family are as abhorrent to her as hers are to them. We are introduced to a haremlik very different from that of which Mrs. Kenneth Brown has given such alluring pictures."—N Y Times

"Egypt—to those who have any knowledge of the country—is an exceedingly small place. Every one—except during the tourist season in Cairo—knows every one else, especially in the English colony. . . . The author knows Egypt, extensively but somewhat superficially, and has taken liberties with that knowledge, making impossible personages do improbable actions. . . . The present book simply leaves a sense of irritation and disbelief."

—Ath 1915.2:208 S 25 560w

"The story is most unusual."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '16 450w

"With its oriental atmosphere, its intimate knowledge of the Moslem, and its dramatic plot, the novel possesses a peculiar fascination and cannot fail to command a wide circle of readers."

+ N Y Times 21:208 My 14 '16 250w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 4 '16 160w

FIRTH, CHARLES HARDING, ed. American garland. $*1 Longmans 821.08

(Eng ed 16-4109)

"The regius professor of history in Oxford university, C. H. Firth, who is a well-known collector of ballads, has published a selection from his own and other collections of originals under the title 'An American garland.' This attractive book contains some two dozen ballads relating to America, which made their appearance in England between the years of 1563 and 1759."—Springfield Republican

"From various sources, including his own notable collection, the editor has drawn twenty-two pieces of considerable interest to students of colonial history, though no attempt has been made to include the contemporary products of the American press. A majority of them have been reprinted before but they are as a rule not accessible except in large libraries."

+ Am Hist R 21:856 J1 '16 470w

+ Eng Hist R 31:346 Ap '16 380w

+ N Y Times 21:234 Je 4 '16 100w

Pratt p31 Ap '16 25w

"Many of the ballads are here reprinted for the first time, and some, from Professor Firth's own collection, have been hitherto unknown. They make quaint and curious reading. We may add that Professor Firth's introduction is as interesting as the ballads."

+ Spec 116:sup142 Ja 29 '16 230w

"Will find a ready welcome from all American antiquaries and students of history."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 2 '16 1100w

FISHER, ARNE. Mathematical theory of probabilities and its application to frequency curves and statistical methods; tr. and ed. from the author's original Danish notes with the assistance of W. Bonyng, with an introd. note by F. W. Frankland. v 1 il $*2 Macmillan 519 (16-777)

"After an introduction to the general principles and the philosophical aspect of the subject, and a somewhat slight historical sketch, the author develops the fundamental theorems of probabilities, the laws of mathematical expectation, probability a posteriori and Bayes's theorem, the law of large numbers, and the theory of dispersion. This theory is then applied to games of chance and to statistical problems."

—Nature

"Characterized by its breadth of view. There is probably no text in English so good for the student who desires a practical or theoretical knowledge of the subject. Especially welcome are the concluding remarks about the dangers of happy-go-lucky statistical researches." E. B. W.

+ Am Econ R 6:443 Je '16 120w

Ann Am Acad 67:319 S '16 50w

+ Ind 87:242 Ag 14 '16 40w

"Notable as being the most comprehensive work of its kind in the English language and as based upon a sound metaphysical conception of the nature of probability."

+ Nation 102:sup500 My 4 '16 50w

"The treatment is very lucid—the chapter on Bayes's theorem may be selected as a marked example—and the work will be of considerable service to the statistical student. It is to be regretted, however, that the author has not taken up some of the more difficult problems of statistical work and has stopped short at the elementary comparison of the actual dispersion of a series with the combinatorial dispersion. There is no index, and it is hoped that the promised second volume will supply one."

+ Nature 97:179 Ap 27 '16 220w

"One of the most interesting and important parts of this book is its neat and striking applications of Bernoulli, Poisson and Lexis series to the characterization of actual data. Furthermore, the application of the Lexian ratio and of the Charlier coefficient of disturbancy is clearly shown. Taken as a whole, this book will be found of much value to students of the mathematical methods in statistics." H. L. Rietz

+ Science n s 43:896 Je 23 '16 430w

FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD) (MRS. JOHN REDWOOD FISHER). Real motive. $*1.40 (2c) Holt 16-11967

There are a few stories about Hillsboro people in this collection, but there are other stories, too, with settings ranging from Paris to a middle western university town. As the title implies, they are studies in human motives. Most of the stories have appeared in magazines, some of them under different titles. Verses by Sarah N. Cleghorn are also reprinted in the volume.

+ A L A Bkl 12:480 J1 '16

"There is human nature of rare quality in 'The conviction of sin.'" P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 43:539 J1 '16 280w

"Not the least part of what we like in this collection is the fact of its variety. The variety of her own life has given her opportunity to speak authoritatively on many aspects of life. . . . To me the strongest of the stories in the volume is that of 'A good fight and the faith kept.' It belongs I think in a class by itself in its revealing of the power of courage and will."

D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 24 '16 950w

Ind 87:33 J1 3 '16 30w

+ Lit D 53:76 J1 8 '16 190w

"Of the fourteen stories brought together in this collection, five are pre-eminent. In these five Dorothy Canfield puts herself among the most promising of America's short-story writers."

+ N Y Times 21:222 My 28 '16 780w

Wis Lib Bull 12:271 Je '16 20w

FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD) (MRS. JOHN REDWOOD FISHER). Self-reliance. (Childhood and youth ser.) $*1 (1½c) Bobbs 173 16-14259

Believing that the school systems of to-day are making mere imitators of children, Mrs. Fisher advocates small schools in which each pupil will be a greater individual factor. She contends that most of the "questions of modern life would be answered if we could but solve the knotty problem of how best to teach children to stand on their own feet, to shoulder the responsibility for their own actions, to accept with enlightened willingness their fair share of the world's work." Her monograph deals with a solution of the knotty problem.

+ A L A Bkl 13:6 O '16

Boston Transcript p6 Je 21 '16 700w

FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES—Continued

- + Cleveland p130 N '16 50w
- + Ind 87:33 J1 3 '16 40w
- + N Y Times 21:357 S 10 '16 570w

"The methods of the Park school in Buffalo, and their value in child education, have a chapter; there is a good though brief one also on the use of books and libraries."

- + Wis Lib Bull 12:318 J1 '16 80w

FISK, JAMES W. Retail selling; a guide to the best modern practice. (Harper's retail business ser.) *$1 Harper 658.7 16-15799

This volume is the first of a new series. The purpose of each of the volumes, as set forth in the editor's introduction, will be "to develop from actual present-day practice certain simple principles, and illustrate them by examples from the experience of progressive storekeepers in various lines." This first volume "takes up the definite task of explaining in simple fashion . . . how to organize and train the salespeople in any retail store. The author has chosen his material from his personal experience as manager and sales manager in various types of stores, and from that of many others." He is director of selling service for Lord and Taylor's, New York. The book is divided into four parts: Marketing methods; Personal salesmanship; Training people to sell more goods; Supervision of the selling force.

- + Cleveland p114 Ag '16 40w
- + Ind 88:331 N 20 '16 50w
- + N Y Times 21:343 S 3 '16 40w
- Pittsburgh 21:577 D '16

"Valuable to merchants, salesmen, and buyers."

- + Quar List New Tech Bks Ja '17 50w
- R of Rs 54:572 N '16 100w
- + St Louis 15:15 Ja '17 30w

FISKE, BRADLEY ALLEN. Navy as a fighting machine. map *$2 (2c) Scribner 359 16-21557

The purpose of the author is "to answer clearly and without technical language" the following questions: "What is the navy for? Of what parts should it be composed? What principles should be followed in designing, preparing, and operating it in order to get the maximum return for the money expended?" The first part of the book is given to General considerations, the second takes up Naval strategy. Some of the chapters have appeared in the North American Review.

A L A Bkl 13:148 Ja '17

"Whether one agrees with him or not, one cannot fail to recognize the clarity of his style and the logical manner in which he moves from premises to conclusions. . . . In spite of its great merits, this book is not without its faults. It is largely a reprint of former essays in which the same ground is gone over several times, thus occasioning much repetition. It is conspicuously wanting in frank criticism of the manifest defects in our own naval organizations."

- + Nation 103:566 D 14 '16 1250w

"Will prove interesting reading to men who try to keep well-informed. Admiral Fiske is popularly known for his recent controversy with Secretary Daniels." P. R.

St Louis 14:429 D '16 23w

"The publication of 'Our navy as a fighting machine' is fitting and timely, though the temper in which the book is written must be unreservedly condemned."

- + Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 580w

FITCH, ABIGAIL H. Breath of the dragon. il *$1.35 (1c) Putnam 16-21390

An exciting story of adventure in China during the reign of the Empress Dowager, in which intimate glimpses are given of life within the imperial court. The heroine, a beautiful Chinese girl whose lover is condemned to death as a leader of the Young China movement, gains admittance to the imperial household, hoping to win the favor of the empress and thereby to obtain a pardon. A young American, Jack Follingsbee, who can slip in and out of Chinese disguise at will, acts as her agent and messenger, and an American girl, Betty Danforth, plays a part as secondary heroine. The Empress Dowager as she appears in the story is a most interesting figure, and the author also draws a sympathetic picture of the young Emperor.

- + Ath p596 D '16 50w

"A harmless—and commonplace—bit of melodrama with all the old tricks set out in a new but none-too-truthfully portrayed scene."

- Dial 61:193 S 21 '16 170w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:152 O '16
- + N Y Times 21:542 D 10 '16 530w
- + Spec 118:23 Ja 6 '17 30w

"As a narrative the novel has no small merit; and many phases of Chinese life spring into reality as we read it."

- + The Times [London] Lit Sup p550 N 16 '16 110w

FITCH, CLYDE. Plays. 4v ea *$1.50 Little 812 15-25497

"The editors, Montrose J. Moses and Virginia Gerson, have selected three plays for each volume, choosing them so as to illustrate the different types of play to which Mr. Fitch turned his versatile hand. Thus volume 4 contains the serious plays of character and contemporary themes—'The woman in the case,' 'The truth' and 'The city.' At the other end of the series are 'Beau Brummell,' 'Lovers' lane' and 'Nathan Hale.' The intervening volumes contain, respectively, 'Barbara Frietchie,' 'Captain Jinks' and 'The climbers,' and 'The stubbornness of Geraldine,' 'The girl with the green eyes,' and 'Her own way.'—Springfield Republican

Reviewed by Archibald Henderson

- + Dial 61:136 S 7 '16 1650w
- Ind 86:75 Ap 10 '16 50w

"An interesting feature of the volume is the inclusion of the original casts, as well as of casts assembled for important revivals. The introduction is valuable in setting forth the more personal side of Clyde Fitch's life."

- + Nation 102:550 My 18 '16 1200w
- + R of Rs 53:635 My '16 100w

"The editors may be congratulated on having brought together, in an intelligent scheme, the plays of Mr. Fitch that were most significant, or, at all events, most popular in their day, and are most worthy of preservation as an index of his versatile talent. Each volume has a brief and judicious introduction. Regarding the physical qualities of this new edition one cannot speak as highly as one would like to speak. The volumes are heavy, and the glossy paper would stand a type of bolder face. But the binding is substantial."

- + Springfield Republican p18 N 20 '15 600w

"These four volumes, although small in size, and printed in beautifully clear type, contain over 2,600 pages, and include the cream of the author's production. The introductions by the editors are skillfully prepared, giving just the information needed, and quoting freely from Mr. Fitch's delightful personal letters. I am also very glad to find at the beginning of the fourth volume the brilliant essay called 'The play and the public.' Clyde Fitch . . . did more for the American stage than any other man in our history: he is the foremost dramatist that America has yet produced. . . . He was a student of American life; and apart from the historic value of his dramas, they constitute an accurate and vital record of the social life of America at the junction of two centuries." W: L. Phelps

- + Yale R n s 5:861 J1 '16 110w

FITCH, GEORGE. Petey Simmons at Siwash. il *$1.25 (3c) Little 16-16261

Eight genuinely humorous stories of college life, told as all humorous tales should be with an air of perfect solemnity on the part of the narrator. Siwash is a middle western college, not any particular college but just any college or Every-college. And Petey Simmons is Every-freshman. The stories begin with his initiation into Eta Beta Pie and end with his dawning interest in Martha Scroggs and English history. The introduction by Edmund Vance Cooke is a memorial to George Fitch, who died in 1915.

+ A L A Bkl 13:83 N '16

"In spite of all extravagances of plot, a picture of life in a middle west college is given which will take its place among the classics of American 'college' literature. That it carries the author's last message of good cheer gives it a unique appeal."

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 8 '16 370w

"The stories are told in a reminiscent tone, and are all highly amusing."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 27 '16 200w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:411 N '16 30w

FITCH, GEORGE HAMLIN. Great spiritual writers of America. (Comfort books) il $1.50 (2c) Eider 810.9 16-10826

A series of essays on American men of letters intended as a companion volume to the author's earlier books, "Comfort found in good old books" and "Modern English books of power." The authors chosen by Mr. Fitch are those who, in his judgment, best illustrate the American genius. They are Emerson, Whitman, Irving, Poe, Hawthorne, Fenimore Cooper, Longfellow, Lowell, Holmes, Whittier, Thoreau, Francis Parkman, Mark Twain, Bret Harte, Howells, and Edwin Markham. Bibliographical notes are placed at the end.

"Finely illustrated with etchings and photo-gravures, and with facsimiles of manuscripts."

+ Cleveland p102 Ag '16 60w

"The choice of works suggested for first acquaintance and the brief working bibliographies are in most cases good. The criticism is of the sort which may place a half-dozen superlatives on a page. . . . Unfortunately Mr. Fitch has not thought it necessary to be accurate."

+ — Dial 61:355 N 2 '16 370w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 Jl '16 90w

FLACCUS, LOUIS WILLIAM. Artists and thinkers. $1.25 Longmans 16-2251

"In 'Artists and thinkers' Professor Flaccus proposes a question, a question impossible to answer, he assures his readers, but well worth considering: Is the artist a thinker and the thinker an artist? On this as a framework he builds excellent studies of three artists: Rodin, Maeterlinck, Wagner; and three thinkers: Hegel, Tolstoy, Nietzsche."—Ind

"It is not in seeking to prove that among great artists and philosophers the thinker and artist is often combined, that Professor Flaccus's book is interesting, but in the analysis and interpretations of those qualities and moods in the six men he studies in the confirmation of his belief. He makes the question far more important than it has hitherto seemed, and establishes a kind of first principles of critical revaluation."

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 2 '16 480w

"These essays on Rodin, Maeterlinck, and Wagner are real intellectual portraits, type-figures relieved against a background rich in allusion, rich in vistas of the whole complex panorama of modern art and thought. No less vividly typical are the philosophers chosen."

+ Dial 60:511 My 25 '16 280w

"Professor L. W. Flaccus has a refreshing gift of saying what he means and leaving one with a definite impression."

+ Ind 35:430 Mr 20 '16 60w

"His work is fresh and original, the literary manner distinguished, and the collection of essays an auspicious promise of notable future achievement."

+ Nation 102:598 Je 1 '16 130w

FLANDERS, WILLIAM THOMAS, and others. Galvanizing and tinning. il $3 Williams 672 16-3770

"A practical treatise on the coating of metal with zinc and tin by the hot dipping, electro galvanizing, Sherardizing and metal spraying processes, with information on design, installation, and equipment of plants." (Subtitle) The author has had the help of a number of specialists in rewriting, and enlarging the small volume published in 1900 (93p.) and has brought it in line with current practice." (A L A Bkl)

+ A L A Bkl 12:491 Jl '16

"For the man actually handling such work."

+ Cleveland p115 Ag '16 10w

N Y Br Lib News 3:74 My '16

"An exceptionally complete and practical work for those engaged in the shop, or in preparing plans for new plants. Has a good trade directory. Reviewed in Iron Age, April 20, 1916, p. 961."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p12 My '16 60w

+ Pratt p21 O '16 10w

St Louis 14:230 Je '16

FLEMING, ARTHUR PERCY M., and PEARCE, J. G. Principles of apprentice training, with special reference to the engineering industry. $1.20 Longmans 16-44

"The title of Messrs. Fleming and Pearce's book is far too modest. It comprises admirable chapters on the general economic aspect as it affects those entering employment, 'Primary education,' and 'Vocational selection,' besides the subject of the title. . . . Much is said on the question of making education of more practical value. . . . The authors, as they state in their preface, are chiefly concerned with engineering. But most of their remarks owing to the thought and broad common sense they bring to bear, are applicable to the occupations and training of youth generally."—Ath

+ Ath p319 Jl '16 600w

Nature 97:440 Jl 27 '16 350w

FLEMING, GUY. Half lights. $1.10 Longmans A16-1557

"Like the earlier volume ['Life's little tragedies'], this is a collection of very brief tales and sketches, few of them covering more than half a dozen pages, but all—with one or two regrettable exceptions—showing an artistry and insight very far above the average. . . . Several of them have to do with the present war."—N Y Times

"Episodes of real life, pictures of real people, presented with that simplicity and apparent ease which is so difficult of attainment; presented, too, in a way which enables one to see the existence lying before and behind the particular episode narrated."

+ N Y Times 21:374 S 24 '16 650w

"In a few crisp sentences he can conjure up a picture or make plain a situation. His outlines are firm and vigorous. . . . In these days of shoddy and slipshod writing, it is a joy to meet a writer who is master of his craft, and in whom the results of a sensitive literary conscience are so apparent."

+ Sat R 122:304 S 23 '16 140w

FLEMING, GUY. Play-acting woman. $1.35 Longmans A16-472

"The action of the story takes place in the town of Clayton, in Scotland, and the author makes the life of the country village very clear and dear to us. Gavin Newall, the hero, 'was a boy with some ability and very dusty feet,' who read to blind Dr. Dykes in the evenings and stopped the runaway pony of Jennie Dempster, the actress, nearly losing his life, and totally losing his heart thereby. This adoration grows as the boy grows into manhood, and follows him to Glasgow university and then to Oxford, but Jennie sees fit to put away her chance at happiness and waits to confess her love for Gavin when it is too late."—N Y Times

"The whole story is full of charm and originality, but his surprise tragedy fails to satisfy the reader of its probability, and leaves him with a feeling of uncertainty—almost of indignation." R. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Je 21 '16 670w

"All is told from the broad, tolerant viewpoint of the man who loves his fellow-man. But, best of all, are the sly whimsical touches of humor which lift the book above the commonplace and place it on the shelf among the volumes one likes to read again and again."

FLEMING, GUY—Continued

+ N Y Times 21:275 J1 9 '16 140w

"Mr. Fleming has already shown us that he can write admirable English, and his first long novel, which is, we imagine, considerably influenced by Sir James Barrie's Scotch stories, is full of dignity."

+ Spec 116:54 Ja 8 '16 30w

FLEMING, JOHN AMBROSE. Elementary manual of radiotelegraphy and radiotelephony for students and operators. 3d ed, rev il *$2 Longmans 654 16-26860

"This is an excellent elementary text-book on the principles of radio-communication, with enough history inserted parenthetically to add descriptive interest, without sensibly distracting attention from the main line of exposition. . . . The book is divided into nine chapters, relating to the following topics: Electric oscillations, Damped electric oscillations, Undamped electric oscillations, Electromagnetic waves, Radiating and receiving circuits, Oscillation detectors, Radio-telegraphic stations, Radio-telegraphic measurements, Radio-telephony."—Science

+ A L A Bkl 13:92 N '16

"There is not much difference to be noted between the present volume and its forerunners, but certain additions have been made to bring it up to date. . . . It remains the best introduction to the subject for all students, and a sufficient manual for those who intend to take up the practical application, but who do not wish to go too deeply into the theoretical and mathematical side. The book is well and amply illustrated, though some of the process-blocks are not so clear as could be wished." M. S.

+ Nature 97:440 J1 27 '16 230w

"Like all of Dr. Fleming's writings, it is particularly strong on the quantitative side. Nevertheless, the mathematics employed are not difficult. The chapter dealing with radio-telegraphic measurements is particularly good. A blemish in the didactic method is the use of English units of measure in a few of the examples."

A. E. Kennelly

+ — Science n s 44:138 J1 28 '16 180w

FLEMING, RALPH DOUGLAS. Railroad and street transportation. il 25c (2c) Cleveland foundation, Survey committee; Russell Sage foundation 370.91 16-7520

The investigation reported in this section of the Cleveland educational survey was made in the interests of vocational guidance. The qualifications and rewards for service are reported on and the conclusion reached is that the public schools can make little direct contribution to training for transportation work. The three parts of the book are devoted to Railroad transportation, Motor and wagon transportation, and Street railroad transportation.

"Paints a very attractive picture of the opportunities for the boy who goes into railroad-ing. The organization of the railroads is described in simple terms, and the opportunities for desirable positions are set forth in such a way as to stimulate the interest of any ambitious boy. On the other hand, the student of education who reads this volume will be somewhat discouraged in his effort to correlate school work with the opportunities that are described in this book."

+ El School J 16:467 My '16 520w

Pittsburgh 21:351 J1 '16 20w

Pratt p13 Ja '17

+ School R 24:496 Je '16 80w

FLETCHER, ALICE CUNNINGHAM. Indian games and dances with native songs, arranged from American Indian ceremonials and sports. il $1 Birchard 793 15-10057

"A book planned for Boy scouts and Camp fire girls. The first part outlines a number of dances, gives the accompanying music and suggests the properties. Much is left to the volition and individuality of the dancer. The second part describes clearly a number of games played by the various Indian tribes. Part three tells briefly about some of the rituals of naming the Indian child, and gives lists of names. The author has made long and extensive study of this phase of Indian life."—A L A Bkl

+ A L A Bkl 12:415 Je '16

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:319 J1 '16 50w

FLETCHER, JEFFERSON BUTLER. Dante. (Home univ. lib.) *50c (1c) Holt 851 16-12421

"Perhaps the best way to know Dante as a man is to know—accurately and deeply—his poetry," says the author, adding, "I shall attempt in this essay, accordingly, to interpret Dante as far as possible from his own writings." The study is divided into three parts: Dante's personal confessions; The teaching of Dante; The art of Dante.

"The book shows wide knowledge and is interesting, but is not for the beginner, acquaintance both with Dante and his works being taken for granted; and the treatment by subject precludes its use as commentary with text."

+ A L A Bkl 13:74 N '16

Boston Transcript p5 My 17 '16 370w

"Perhaps the best thing about Mr. Fletcher's book is the clearness with which the author explains the rigorous unity of purpose that welds into one body all of Dante's books. . . . It is ungracious to pick a flaw in such a book, but one wishes the author had used translations of his own instead of those by Mr. Henry Johnson, which are new and doubtless faithful but are not poetry."

+ Dial 61:272 O 5 '16 260w

"The third essay and the latter part of the second will rank with the best English criticism of Dante. The thought is sure and swift, the phrasing lively, often memorable. . . . In the interpretation of the 'Vita nuova' and the 'confessional' parts of the 'Convivio' Mr. Fletcher still wanders through paths long marked as treacherous."

+ Nation 103:354 O 12 '16 1600w

+ N Y Times 21:214 My 21 '16 470w

"The author is professor of comparative literature in Columbia university, N. Y."

St Louis 15:19 Ja '17 20w

FLETCHER, JOHN GOULD. Goblins and pagodas. (New poetry ser.) *75c Houghton 811 16-11033

In the introduction to this volume Mr. Fletcher sets forth the ideals and aims of imagist poetry. He also tells quite explicitly what he has tried to do in the poems that make up the two sections of his book, "The ghosts of an old house," and "Symphonies." In "Symphonies" he has aimed "to narrate certain important phases of the emotional and intellectual development of an artist," and he has tried "to state each phase in the terms of a certain colour, or combination of colours, which is emotionally akin to that phase."

"As in his volume of last year, Mr. Fletcher has a preface here to explain the fundamental principles of his art. It is a keen, lucid, explanatory piece of writing, but all the same I wish it had not been included. Whatever his method, the poems must stand by themselves. He must trust their own revealing power. . . . The section of 'Symphonies' contains the very best work Mr. Fletcher has yet given us. . . . It is unquestionably poetry with a new habit of mood and expression, but none the less the very self-same glory and wonder which has been poetry's spirit from the beginning."

W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 17 '16 1400w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins

Nation 104:43 Ja 11 '17 500w

"It is unfortunate that the individual charm, the truth and beauty of his own making that the poet has to offer us must be sought out by the reader beyond the rubble-heap of a long, pedantic preface. . . . Unto each his voice and vision. The reader of 'Goblins and pagodas' will wish from the poet, with something less of the manners of a recent fashion, certainly something more of the style of a voice and vision which is his own." E. W.

+ — New Repub 9:sup11 N 18 '16 820w

R of Rs 54:233 Ag '16 190w

"The present reviewer has tried to read the 'Symphonies,' but he has to confess himself unable to derive any instruction, pleasure, and at times meaning from them."

— Springfield Republican p15 Ja 7 '17 480w

FLEXNER, ABRAHAM, and BACHMAN, FRANK PUTERBAUGH. Public education in Maryland. il pa gratis General education bd., 61 Broadway, N. Y. 379.752 E16-912

The Maryland educational survey commission was created by an act of legislature in 1914. This volume contains its first report. It is devoted to the elementary and secondary schools of the counties. The schools of Baltimore and the higher institutions of the state will be studied later. The chapters of the present report take up: Maryland and its schools; The state board of education; The superintendent of public education; The county school authorities; The county superintendent of schools; The teachers; Enrolment and attendance; Instruction; Finance; Improvements in the state organization; Improvements in the county organization; Financial readjustments. The illustrations show examples of the best and the worst in school buildings and surroundings. A new edition of the work brought out in the same year with the first issue contains an appendix giving the new education laws of Maryland that went into effect in June, 1914.

"The pictures in this report are well chosen, the graphic illustrations are numerous and effective, the report is admirably organized and abounds in definite and constructive suggestions for improvement in administration, organization, equipment, the subject-matter and method of instruction, etc." A. L. S.

+ Ann Am Acad 67:311.S '16 230w

"The authors of the report have exposed the evils of the present organization in vigorous, direct terms. They have recommended changes in the educational laws which, if enacted, will give Maryland a much better school organization. This review takes up the details of the report, however, with a view to urging the validity of a much larger demand. In the long run school reforms will be on a much sounder basis if there is unrelenting insistence on a complete scientific treatment of each problem which comes up. . . . There is complete lack of the comparative material which we have come to expect in expert surveys. There is no account of other state systems, no analysis of other cases where problems have been solved. . . . The seventh chapter dealing with enrolment and attendance contains serious statistical errors."

+ — El School J 16:40 Ap '16 2600w

"Frank and discriminating, the report deserves reading by citizens everywhere."

+ Ind 88:35 O 2 '16 50w

Pittsburgh 21:440 O '16 20w

FLINN, ALFRED DOUGLAS, and others, comps. 2 Waterworks handbook. il $6 McGraw 628.1 16-15554

"This book is a compilation of a large amount of valuable information on matters relating to the design, construction and operation of waterworks. The subject is treated under five parts, as follows: Part 1, Sources of supply; Part 2, Collection and work therefor; Part 3, Transportation by aqueducts, pipe and other conduits; Part 4, Distribution, Hydrostatics and hydraulics, materials much used in waterworks; Part 5, Character and treatment of water."—Engin Rec

+ A L A Bkl 13:154 Ja '17

"This book is unique in its presentation of water-works facts, and many of the data contained, especially in the first and middle parts of the book, are from original sources and now available for the first time. It is a practical book for practical men, compiled with care by able practicing engineers. . . . In its sphere it is undoubtedly one of the most valuable books on water-supply subjects which have appeared." C. M. Saville

+ Engin N 76:551 S 21 '16 1350w

"Generally, the matters presented are well balanced, and give the different viewpoints as fairly as can be expected within the limited space available. . . . In some cases the desire to give the latest information has perhaps led to a neglect of fundamentals which are of greater importance. In the main, however, the book presents an excellent idea of recent development. The book is well illustrated, and is replete with tables and diagrams of value." W. E. Fuller

+ Engin Rec 74:300 S 2 '16 430w

N Y Br Lib News 3:141 S '16

"Reviewed in Canadian Engineer, Aug. 31, 1916; Municipal Journal, Aug. 24, 1916."

N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 N '16 100w

"Valuable reference work."

+ Pittsburgh 21:497 N '16 20w

+ Pratt p21 Ja '17 40w

St Louis 14:395 N '16

FLOY, HENRY. Value for rate-making. il $4 McGraw 658 16-10512

"In his new book on value for rate-making Henry Floy, who barely lived to see his work off the press, has made an important contribution to valuation literature. . . . Three principles are set forth in the preface, and these three show clearly the author's point of view. They are (1) that fair present value should govern, (2) that theoretical depreciation should be ignored and (3) that certain intangibles should be allowed." (Engin Rec) "Mr. Floy's work can best be characterized as a voluminous brief made not by a lawyer but by an engineer to substantiate the above claims and to support them by excerpts from many decisions of courts and commissions." (Am Econ R)

"The volume might be of some assistance to a lawyer engaged in an attempt to prove that a public utility company is entitled to have the highest possible value established as the fair basis for rates but it can not be accepted as the sound and impartial treatment of the subject of valuation which should be expected as the work of a trained engineer." H. V. Hayes

— Am Econ R 6:647 S '16 850w

+ Cleveland p148 D '16 50w

"Only those familiar with the subject can have a just appreciation of the tremendous amount of labor which has entered into the writing of this book. . . . It is the work of an alert and studious mind which has had the benefit of broad practical experience and contact with some of the ablest lawyers and jurists in this country. The arrangement of the matter is logical, the discussion lucid, and the legal citations are apt and up to date."

+ Engin N 76:120 Jl 20 '16 950w

"All through the book is a good presentation of the utility side of the valuation controversy—not rabid, but fair. As previously suggested, those who are definitely of the other school will disagree with the author's axioms. To neutrals, however, if there are any, and to those of the Engineering Record's faith, the volume is heartily recommended." C. W. Stark

+ Engin Rec 74:116 Jl 22 '16 950w

N Y Br Lib News 3:90 Je '16

"Also reviewed in Gas Age, May 15, 1916, p. 572; in Electric Journal, Aug., 1916, p. 24; in Journal of the Western Society of Engineers, May, 1916, p. 473."

N Y P L New Tech Bks p17 Ag '16 150w

Pittsburgh 21:291 Je '16 30w

FOAKES-JACKSON, FREDERICK JOHN, ed. Faith and the war. $1.75 Macmillan 172.4 16-14233

"There can be no doubt that the present war has greatly disturbed modern Christian thinking. . . . The ten writers, all members of the Church of England, have taken it upon themselves to show that even these terrible facts have unshaken the Christian truth that God rules in the affairs of men. In such a discussion the divine purpose is the all important thing. Hence the first three essays consider the problem of Providence, in the individual, in history, in the universe, respectively. The respective authors of the essays are Percy Gardner, Miss Alice Gardner, and F. J. Foakes-Jackson. Then the difficult problem of evil is discussed by one who has made it his specialty, Dr. Hastings Rashdall. . . . Three essays go beyond the present, 'Hope, temporal and eternal' by Dr. W. R. Inge; 'The belief in immortality,' by Professor A. E. Taylor; and 'Faith and reality,' by Mr. E. A. Burroughs. The practical ethical problem must also be met. This is done in three essays, 'War and the ethics of the New Testament,' by C. W. Emmet; 'What is a Christian nation?' by W. M. Glazebrook, and, 'The Church of England after the war,' by Dean H. H. Henson."—Boston Transcript

FOAKES-JACKSON, F. J., ed.—Continued

Ath p13 Ja '16 4550w

+ Bib World 48:376 D '16 520w

"The essays are a profound discussion of some of the most difficult problems which the human mind has to meet, and they are treated not in an apologetic, but in a truly scholarly manner. They are of permanent value."

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 8 '16 500w

Reviewed by H. D. Oakeley

Hibbert J 14:649 Ap '16 1550w

"Far from being an ephemeral piece of work. It would more correctly be entitled 'The faith and war.'"

+ Library Association Record 18:80 F '15 '16 70w

"We have read a good many sermons and essays on this topic since the war began, but we have met with nothing so thorough and so ably argued as Mr. Emmet's essay. . . . On the whole, while admitting the force of the editor's contention that it is 'of the essence of the liberal churchmanship to allow thinkers of every school to deliver each his own message in his own way,' we cannot see the advantage of collecting essays written from many points of view in a single volume, if it is meant, as the editor assures us it is, to help to solve perplexities."

+ — Spec 117:214 Ag 19 '16 1250w

FOAKES-JACKSON, FREDERICK JOHN.
Social life in England, 1750-1850. *$1.50 (3c)
Macmillan 942 16-19958

A volume made up of the Lowell lectures delivered in Boston in March, 1916. The informal style of the lectures is retained in the printed text, making the chapters very pleasantly readable. Contents: Life in the eighteenth century illustrated by the career of John Wesley; George Crabbe; Margaret Catchpole; Gunning's "Reminiscences of Cambridge"; Creevey papers—the regency; Social abuses as exposed by Charles Dickens; Mid-Victorianism: W. M. Thackeray; Sport and rural England.

Reviewed by W. P. Hall

+ Am Hist R 22:438 Ja '17 370w

"Can be used for general reading or for supplementary history work."

+ A L A Bkl 13:217 F '17

+ Ath p600 D '16 50w

"Perhaps the most satisfactory is the lecture on Wesley and his age, in which the author succeeds in sketching both the great preacher and his environment."

+ Dial 61:590 D 28 '16 330w

N Y Br Lib News 3:191 D '16 40w

+ N Y Times 21:524 N 26 '16 80w

Pittsburgh 21:582 D '16 40w

"The references to seventeenth-century manners and customs in rural England are interesting to Americans as indicating many similarities to contemporary customs in the colonies of New England."

+ R of Rs 54:683 D '16 40w

"The list is a credit to the broad-mindedness of the Canon, who is learned in sport as well as theology, and apt in matters of humour as well as history. . . . The one disappointment of the book is the discourse on Wesley."

+ Sat R 122:577 D 16 '16 950w

+ Spec 117:810 D 23 '16 120w

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 14 '16 1000w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p576 N 30 '16 60w

"The title seems to promise something more solid than we have here. . . . In this readable little book with its amusing assembly of quotation from Creevey and Dickens, Trollope and Surtees, the reader slips from one picture to another, and is left for the most part to make up his mind as to the kind of world they illustrate for himself."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p620 D 21 '16 750w

FOERSTER, NORMAN, ed. Chief American prose writers. *$2 (½c) Houghton 810.8 16-22863

A volume of selections from Franklin, Irving, Cooper, Poe, Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau, Lowell and Holmes. These writers, says the author, have become, by general consent, the American prose classics. He has aimed to bring together in one volume illustrations from their best work and has included among his selections some not accessible in textbooks, among them Thoreau's "Life without principle" and quotations from his "Journal." With a few exceptions the selections are unabridged.

FOGHT, HAROLD WALDSTEIN. Rural Denmark and its schools. Il *$1.40 Macmillan 379.48 15-16450

"Some years ago Mr. Foght was sent to Denmark by the Bureau of education to make a study of the rural schools which have been so influential in changing the economic and social conditions of that state. . . . The book discusses the general material and social background of the schools, then gives an account of the elementary rural schools, and finally describes the special agricultural schools and the folk high schools in which the whole community life is made to center. One gets from these descriptions a vivid notion of a thrifty, cultivated people who have learned, not only how to make their farms produce, but also how to live. The various chapters give the courses of study, the methods of organization, and a full statement of the social activities which extend the school beyond the strictly academic work."—El School J

"Small libraries will find the material summarized in Education bureau bulletins by Foght, and Friend."

+ A L A Bkl 12:165 Ja '16

"Mr. Foght's book will help the movement, which is well under way in this country, to make rural life better and more productive."

+ El School J 16:66 O '15 400w

"The book is interesting and effective. The author makes plain the definite relation between the school and the industrial, social, and religious life of the people. He convinces the reader that rural life may be cultured and complete in itself; that co-operative enterprises are advantageous; and that the schools furnish adequate opportunity or means for the accomplishment of desired ends. Denmark demonstrates this truism: 'What you would have a nation become, put into her schools.'" D: A. Anderson

+ School R 24:400 My '16 550w

FOLLETT, WILSON. Joseph Conrad. gratis Doubleday 823 15-24881

The author says in his foreword: "What I have recklessly undertaken to supply, in the narrow space of the essay which follows, is an account in general terms of Mr. Conrad's intellectual and emotional attitude toward his work and of the most striking characteristics of that work." The book is not for sale, but the publishers announce that "as long as the printing lasts copies will be supplied gratis to all who request them."

"The exceptionally fine analysis of the intricacies of Conrad's literary method and the clear appraisal of his genius found in Mr. Follett's discussion of Conrad's great novel, 'Victory,' is typical of the general excellence of this agreeable essay."

+ R of Rs 53:252 F '16 80w

"This study will appeal more to those familiar with Conrad's work than to others."

Springfield Republican p15 J1 30 '16 220w

FOLWELL, AMORY PRESCOTT. Municipal engineering practice. il *$3.50 Wiley 710 16-23017

"The first chapter is devoted to a discussion of certain fundamental data needed by the municipal engineer as a guide in solving many of the problems which fall to his lot to work out. The nine subsequent chapters treat respectively of the city plan; street-surface details; bridges and waterways; city surveying; street lights, signs and numbers; street cleaning and sprinkling; disposing of city wastes; markets, comfort stations and baths; and parks, cemeteries and shade trees."—Engin Rec

"The book contains much that is well designed to interest and assist various councilmanic committees and heads of municipal administrative departments, besides being particularly well adapted to the needs of city and town engineering staffs. The illustrations are particularly commendable, both halftones and line drawings, as aids to the text and often as driving home a story of their own."

+ Engin N 77:106 Ja 18 '17 230w

"The author has brought together matter on several branches of municipal engineering not readily obtainable elsewhere. . . . He has had an exceptional opportunity for acquiring a vast amount of information on the subjects of which the book treats, and from this material he has selected that which has real value."

J: H. Gregory

+ Engin Rec 74:777 D 23 '16 370w

Quar List New Tech Bks Ja '17 50w

FOLWELL, AMORY PRESCOTT. Sewerage; the designing, construction, and maintenance of sewerage systems. 7th ed il *$3 Wiley 628.2 16-3166

"In the present edition of his well-known book on 'Sewerage' the author has confined his attempts at revision to the portion devoted to specifications, where he has substituted the specifications not long ago adopted by the American society of municipal improvements, and to the section on sewage disposal. In the latter he has given chief attention to advances in screening, to changes in tank treatment, and he has added a couple of pages or so on activated sludge. Besides giving a descriptive tabulated list of about 900 sewage-treatment works and adding instructions for testing sewage effluent, the portion of the section on sewage treatment, devoted to what the author terms 'more refined purification,' has been reduced in length."—Engin N

+ A L A Bkl 12:392 My '16

+ Engin N 75:1132 Je 15 '16 330w

"The work as a whole is clearly and concisely written, is free from conflicting data, and is admirably adapted for text-book uses and for reference library work." C: E. Gregory

+ Engin Rec 73:682 My 20 '16 800w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p7 My '16 110w

FORAKER, JOSEPH BENSON. Notes of a busy life. 2v il *$5 (1c) Stewart & Kidd 16-2221

Joseph B. Foraker, ex-senator from Ohio, has filled two volumes with reminiscences from his active life. A brief account of his boyhood, service in the union army, and school days is given in volume 1, but the work is taken up largely with his public career. Volume 2 is devoted entirely to his years in the Senate. The Dingley tariff law, The Panama canal treaties, The Brownsville affray, the presidential campaigns of 1900, 1904, and 1908 are some of the important matters touched on. "As I now look back over my twelve years of service in the Senate," he says in conclusion, "I do not find an important vote or speech that I would recall if I had the power to do so."

"The value of the Foraker memoirs lies not in their judgments, but rather in their citations from correspondence and contemporary newspapers. And even here the student of history must walk circumspectly. . . . While the memoirs supply valuable raw material for the political history of the country from Hayes to Wilson, they are valuable chiefly as guide-posts, showing the way to the student's destination. As a record of political morals and the machinery of politics they are unsurpassed. Mr. Foraker is eminently a 'practical' politician. He has no sympathy for idealists, free-traders, professors, or dudes, to use his own classification. . . . Discriminatingly used, the work is an illuminating contribution to the political history of the past forty years." C. M.

+ Am Hist R 21:835 J1 '16 880w

"The only account of this period which one may care to use with Mr. Foraker's work is Mr. Herbert Croly's biography of Marcus A. Hanna; and where the editor of the New Republic has led in critical interpretation of the changing phases of republicanism, Mr. Foraker excels in realistic presentation of the rough-and-tumble politics of the thirty years that followed the civil war. . . . No student of American history and no thoughtful observer of our national politics can afford to ignore these 'Notes of a busy life.'" E. E. Robinson

+ Dial 60:500 My 25 '16 1600w

Ind 87:69 J1 10 '16 50w

"Will be disappointing to any one who searches the two fat volumes for serious comment on the vital public questions of the day, but whoever wishes to learn the author's opinions of his contemporaries in political life will be abundantly repaid." F. E. Leupp

+ Nation 102:432 Ap 20 '16 2450w

"The book, in fact, impresses one as the record of a sincere man and a hard fighter—an honest and vigorous reaffirmation of views formerly held, a justification of past courses. For those who enjoy hard hitting there are stimulating passages in these reminiscences. On the whole, however, they are less instructive historically and politically, less rewarding in human interest—in anecdotes and estimates of men—than might be expected."

+ No Am 203:628 Ap '16 600w

"The contemporary politician will be interested in all that Mr. Foraker says about the periods of Taft and Roosevelt. Upon certain subjects, such as Panama and the Philippines, Mr. Foraker's chapters are important as contributions to history."

+ R of Rs 53:498 Ap '16 380w

FORBES, EDITH EMERSON, comp. Favourites of a nursery of seventy years ago, and some others of a later date. il *$2 Houghton 821 16-23416

"This collection of nursery rhymes and ballads has been selected to preserve for the children of this century the quaint little stories and verses which were popular about a hundred years ago, and in the later years of the nineteenth century." (Preface) With the verses are reproduced the original illustrations, giving an added touch of quaintness to the collection. The poems are arranged in six groups: Country ballads and animal stories; Mother Goose and other classics; Cautionary stories in verse; The school of good manners and other selections; The baby; bedtime songs and stories and hymns; Ballads. Indexes to titles and first lines follow.

A L A Bkl 13:226 F '17

+ Ind 88:465 D 11 '16 60w

+ Nation 103:520 N 30 '16 50w

"It seems probable that the fathers and grandmothers will find more enjoyment in reading the book than will their precocious descendants."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 620w

FORBES, NEVILL. First Russian book. *85c
Oxford 491.7

"The 'First Russian book' does not go very far, being concerned principally with 'the first difficulties of the language, which are the case-endings.' The verb is to be the subject of the 'Second Russian book,' and the 'Third Russian book' will complete the subject. Mr. Forbes divides his theme into short chapters, any one of which can be easily mastered at a sitting. . . . We should perhaps add, for the benefit of the uninitiated, that the virtual absence of the verb from the 'First Russian book' does not mean that the student will be unable to frame simple sentences. The Russian equivalents of 'to have' and 'to be' are not conjugated on the model of other verbs."—Ath

Ath 1915,2:366 N 20 200w
Pittsburgh 21:364 J1 '16 30w

FORBES, NEVILL, and others. Balkans. maps
*$1.75 Oxford 949.6 16-1466

In this book on the Balkans, Nevill Forbes writes on Bulgaria and Servia, Arnold J. Toynbee on Greece, D. Mitrany on Rumania, and D. G. Hogarth on Turkey. "Each writer, confining himself to his own field, traces the causes which, combined, have produced the unhappy state of the Balkans to-day." (Ath)

"Naturally enough the book presents the long story of the peninsula pretty consistently from a British angle, but with a degree of fervor varying from man to man. Nevill Forbes, the historian of Bulgaria and Serbia, is the most insular of the group of authors. The really valuable contributions in this volume are supplied by Mr. Toynbee (Greece) and Mr. Hogarth (Turkey)." Ferdinand Schevill
+ — Am Hist R 21:807 J1 '16 880w

"Written with sympathy and intimate knowledge."

+ A L A Bkl 12:420 Je '16

"Accurate, singularly free from bias, and pleasant to read, it gives a surprisingly clear view of a confusing and often difficult subject."

+ Ath p25 Ja '16 3250w

"Mr. D. G. Hogarth's short contribution is a miracle of condensation, and is more instructive on the conditions and weaknesses of the Ottoman empire than many longer disquisitions. Nothing could be better than his account of the revival under Mahmud. Mr. A. J. Toynbee's story of the fortunes of Greece is scholarly and spirited." J. B. B.
+ Eng Hist R 31:344 Ap '16 540w

FORBUSH, WILLIAM BYRON. Child study and child training. *$1 (1c) Scribner 136.7
15-13500

"The purpose of this course of study is to furnish a basis of work for classes interested in child study. . . . The course is directed definitely toward a wiser parenthood." (Intro.) The first part of the book is given up to chapters on, Why parents and homes are needed, What complete parenthood involves, The main periods of childhood, The principal types of children, Habit forming, The problems of obedience, Sex instruction and discipline, etc. Reading references follow each of these chapters. The second part consists of laboratory experiments.

+ Bib World 48:128 Ag '16 110w

+ Ind 86:28 Ap 3 '16 60w

Pittsburgh 21:304 Je '16 7w

"It may be used as a practical manual for parents, and contains much material that may be employed to advantage by all who have to do with children."

+ R of Rs 53:509 Ap '16 40w

"Its value lies chiefly in the fact that Dr. Forbush is giving the best of his own personality, experience and study to the reader. If you are not yourself trying to be more and more helpful to some child or children, don't read this book. The most original part of the book is a series of 27 chapters at the end suggesting ways in which you can study actual children and find out for yourself what you need most to know about them."

+ Survey 36:210 My 20 '16 300w

FORBUSH, WILLIAM BYRON. Guide-book to childhood. 4th ed *$2.50 Jacobs 136.7

15-18612

This work was first issued in 1913 as a "hand-book for the members of the Institute of child life." "Part one consists of Outlines of child life, a summary of the best that is known about childhood, condensed from the best authorities. These summaries are presented partly in form of graphic charts and partly in terse statements, often numbered for ease in remembering. Each summary closes with a special list of books for further reading. This part includes a unique Calendar of childhood and youth, a series of original charts, which outline the usual development of the child at each year from birth to maturity. . . . Part two opens with a Chart of parenthood. It consists mainly of several hundred answers to the questions that parents most frequently ask as they meet their daily problems in the home." (School R)

"A great deal of helpful information put in a form which will probably get more attention than will systematically prepared scientific treatises on the same subjects."

+ El School J 16:224 Ja '16 200w

+ Ind 84:443 D 13 '15 50w

"To those parents who feel the necessity of making a scientific study of their children, it is likely to be useful. In any case, a full and descriptive bibliography will show them where to pursue further the study of a special topic. But what chiefly impresses one in this general review is the little that child-study has to say."

+ Nation 102:sup485 My 4 '16 190w

St Louis 14:180 My '16

School R 23:565 O '15 400w

FORBUSH, WILLIAM BYRON. Young folks' book of ideals. il *$2 Lothrop 170 16-22958

A book for boys and girls of adolescent age, devoted to their interests and ideals. It is divided into four parts: The sturdy body; The alert mind; Good fellowship; The awakened self. There are thirty-two illustrations from photographs in addition to a colored frontispiece by Alice Barber Stephens.

N Y Times 21:525 N 26 '16 90w

"To even the casual reader of this book it must easily appear that here in America we are building up a type of manhood and womanhood distinct from that of any other part of the world, a type that should be capable of large things. Such writers as Dr. Forbush are rendering incalculable service to the nation and the churches by their earnest efforts to understand the meaning and needs of youth and to supply tools with which those needs can be met."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 10 '16 380w

FORD, HENRY JONES. Woodrow Wilson: the man and his work. il *$1.50 (2½c) Appleton 16-9569

"In this work I have tried to give a systematic account of what Woodrow Wilson has done, and of the principles on which he acts." (Preface) Contents: Birth and education; His career as an educator; His books and essays; Entrance into public life; Governor of New Jersey; President of the United States; Tariff legislation and trust control; Currency reform; The situation in the Philippines; The Mexican question; The war and its issues; Personal traits; A mid-career appreciation. The author is professor of politics at Princeton university.

A L A Bkl 12:478 J1 '16

"The volume is not a campaign book. It is prepared in a most attractive style and will appeal to any reader with sufficient education to appreciate the political setting." F. A. Magruder

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:781 N '16 600w

"This is a campaign biography. . . . This is shown in the article on the Mexican situation. . . . So also is the intent of the book made clear in the appendix, which consists of Mr. Wilson's letter to Congressman Palmer on the presidency and the second term question. As a consideration of politics and policies as the President looks at them, the book leaves nothing to be desired, but for a characterization along the lines of 'being human' we like Mr. Hale's sketch better." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p10 My 27 '16 410w

Dial 60:555 Je 8 '16 370w

+ Ind 86:404 Je 5 '16 60w

"The chapter on 'Personal traits' gives quite a different impression of Woodrow Wilson from that usually prevailing."

Lit D 53:415 Ag 19 '16 190w

"The book is a strong setting forth of Mr. Wilson's qualities of courageous initiative and masterful leadership. On the other hand the critical reader will at once perceive that Professor Ford has by no means told the whole story."

+ — Nation 103:136 Ag 10 '16 450w

N Y Times 21:218 My 21 '16 650w

"It is strictly neutral. . . . The personal element, the anecdotal side is largely missing. . . . The importance of Professor Ford's book lies in its careful documentation, its wise selection of passages from Mr. Wilson's own writings and utterances, revealing a personality, consistent, determined, hard to move." F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 89:1330 Ap 15 '16 930w

+ R of Rs 53:753 Je '16 170w

"Aside from Dr. Wilson himself the book is worth while for its dispassionate consideration of recent public questions."

+ Springfield Republican p10 O 20 '16 330w

"The author's attitude is very favorable; he considers the Wilson administration 'the beginning of a new era.'"

Wis Lib Bull 12:271 Je '16 40w

FORD, JAMES LAUREN. Waitful watching; or, Uncle Sam and the fight in Dame Europa's school. il *60c (9c) Stokes 940.91 16-17470

A satire on President Wilson's foreign policy. The United States is represented as Sammy, a school boy whose size is out of proportion to his intelligence, who refuses to take part in the quarrel that breaks out in Dame Europa's school, the moral of it all being to the effect that as a nation we have disgraced ourselves by refusing to add our mite to the European turmoil.

"There is some ingenuity in several of Mr. Ford's characterizations and now and then there is a striking phrase. His allegory, however, as is apt to be the way with satires, has in it more of satire than of truth."

+ — N Y Times 21:343 S 3 '16 200w

+ — Springfield Republican p13 S 24 '16 220w

FORDHAM, MONTAGUE. Short history of English rural life; from the Anglo-Saxon invasion to the present time; with preface by C. Bathurst. *$1 Scribner 630.9 A16-817

"This little volume of 183 pages originated in a series of lectures given by Mr. Fordham on the history of English country life to a group of rural villages. The author disclaims any original research. He utilizes material which others have quarried, draws his facts from the recognized authorities, and gives no references. He claims, however, to have selected and handled his material in a judicial spirit." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The author divides his lectures into three groups: 'Medieval rural life in England'; the 'Reconstruction of rural life,' and 'Reconstructing rural England.' An appendix contains much antiquarian data, and a list of royal ordinances and statutes relating to rural conditions in England, from 1429 to 1911." (Boston Transcript)

"Confessedly popular. None the less it aims at comprehensiveness. . . . The book contains so many questionable statements that it must be used with caution. . . . Simpler subjects, such as the agricultural innovations of the eighteenth century or the development of road-building, are more satisfactorily treated, while the beginning and the end of the book are better than the middle of it." H. L. Gray

+ — Am Hist R 22:433 Ja '17 260w

"To all those seriously seeking for a solution of the many English agricultural problems of the day—industrial, social and political—this study of 'conditions prevailing in rural England from the earliest historical times and of the vicissitudes both of our greatest natural industry and of the classes engaged in it,' is indispensable."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 28 '16 400w

Cleveland p113 Ag '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16

+ Pratt p12 Ja '17 20w

"He is certainly most at his ease and will afford most pleasure where he writes as an antiquarian. When he gets to the nineteenth century he becomes more sketchy. Such a momentous event as the Poor law amendment act does not assume anything like its due importance in the perspective, but we are grateful for his paragraphs upon the roads. . . . He has gone to good authorities, such as Arthur Young and Professor Vinogradoff."

+ — Spec 117:sup397 O 7 '16 360w

"The subject bristles with difficulties which have created bitter controversies. It is, therefore, no slight praise to say that, on the whole, he has made good his claim to fairness and impartiality. . . . From his list of authorities one important name is omitted—that of Professor Maitland."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p248 My 25 '16 1000w

FORMAN, JUSTUS MILES. Twin sisters. *$1.35 (1½c) Harper 16-6606

The twin sisters, Diana and Alice, have not seen one another since childhood. When their father and mother separated, Diana went with the one and Alice with the other. They meet by chance in the lake district of Italy and an attempt is made to reunite the two lives. The two girls are somewhat alike outwardly, but time and the developments of the story reveal inner differences of a serious nature. Alice, at the opening of the story, is half engaged to Lord Henry Borrold, but it shortly becomes evident that Diana holds for him the greater attraction. Two other men, an Italian and an American, have a place in the story.

A L A Bkl 12:429 Je '16

"The life-like twentieth-century girl who takes so strong a hold upon us in the opening chapters, very quickly accepts her place among the conventional puppets (however costumed and mannered) of 'society' romance. Let us have done with the pretense that in reading such stories we are in contact with 'real life.'" H. W. Boynton

+ — Bookm 43:317 My '16 380w

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '16 330w

"There are a few questionable statements and a few disagreeable scenes that might have been omitted to the betterment of the story. A westerner will not be pleased with the crude portrait of the domineering Quintus Brown from Idaho."

+ — Cath World 103:267 My '16 100w

+ Ind 86:305 My 22 '16 80w

"A muddle of love-interest, sex-interest (a very different matter, as we have been abundantly instructed of late), character-botching, and plot for its own sake."

+ — Nation 102:380 Ap 6 '16 450w

"A colorful, interesting, energetic novel, full of light and life, with a charming heroine and a hero whose character is skillfully developed, turning the slight antipathy which the reader feels for him in the beginning into a real respect and liking some time before the final chapter is reached. This last book from Justus Miles Forman's pen may be placed side by side with that excellent earlier novel, 'The blind spot.'"

+ — N Y Times 21:106 Mr 26 '16 1000w

"It is well told, and probably more closely mirrors the facts than the majority of novels

FORMAN, JUSTUS MILES.—Continued
purporting to portray diversity of national character."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ap 2 '16 530w

FORSYTH, REV. PETER TAYLOR. Theology in church and state. *$1.25 (2c) Doran 261.7 16-12554

Part one of this book is devoted to a discussion of dogma. Since this is a controversial term, the author carefully explains his understanding of it. The church cannot exist without dogma. "There must be some statement of that which is creative for a church, some truth which is final and for a church can never be other than true." Without such a statement there can be no church. Christian dogma is a truth "not simply held by the church but held as constitutive for it. It holds the church rather than is held by it." The second part considers the nature of church and state. Each is a corporate personality independent of the other. The church can never be a part of the state, for it is the greater of the two. The relation between them is prescribed "neither by the consciousness nor the convenience of the state, but by the genius and content of the church as the trustee of the supreme revelation for society, and its redemption ethical and spiritual." The author is a British Congregationalist, principal of the Hackney theological college.

"In view of the present tendencies in theological thinking, it does not seem likely that the conception of dogma and of the church here presented will win wide acceptance." F. A. Starratt

Am J Theol 20:615 O '16 730w

"Whether our author has solved his problem or not, he will, being a nonconformist, set his readers thinking. We regret the absence of an index."

+ Bib World 47:341 My '16 600w

"If the reader is to understand the full significance of this volume he must remember that the author is a member of a denomination which theoretically 'has little or no connectionalism.' . . . He has something to say of the German church and the war. 'It will never be forgotten by Christendom that the German church had no prophet's voice of protest, condemnation, or even criticism to raise.' This was possible because the German church is the slave of the German state. The book is a timely one for England, and it is a fine justification of America's principle of a free church in a free state."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '16 700w

+ N Y Times 21:312 Ag 6 '16 80w

"Even those whose theology is of a different type from the author's will be well repaid for studying this work. They will receive the stimulus that normally is derived through contact with a strong and acute mind which combines strong conviction and sheer intellectual efficiency."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Mr 5 '16 1300w

FORTESCUE, GRANVILLE ROLAND. Forearmed: how to build a citizen army. *$1 (3c) Winston 355.7 16-15681

The purpose of this book is to give information about the military systems of other countries. "Out of a study of the defense-service of other peoples, American citizens can decide which plan, if any, best suits our race and our traditions." (Foreword) Contents: The Swiss military system; The German military system; The French military system; The Australian military system; The English military system; The new era in warfare; The strategic position of the United States; The instinct of defense; What shall we do?

"Among the many books that the discussion of 'preparedness' has instigated Captain Fortescue's stands out prominently by reason of its moderateness, its judicial temper, its entire lack of both hysteria and rhetoric, and the very interesting quality of the information it offers. . . . Its interest and value are also greatly enhanced by the author's study of the individual and national effects and influences of each system."

+ N Y Times 21:323 Ag 20 '16 700w

FORTESCUE, GRANVILLE ROLAND. Russia, the Balkans and the Dardanelles. il $2 Brentano's 940.91 (Eng ed 15-25943)

"The opinion of Mr. Granville Fortescue, who served with Mr. Roosevelt's Rough Riders in Cuba, has studied military matters as a soldier, and watched the Russo-Japanese war as a correspondent, is entitled to respect. In this book he describes what he saw in Poland and the Dardanelles, and draws conclusions from what he saw. In description he is eloquent, if a little over-vehement at times, and in comment illuminating. Although, as a neutral, he watched the Dardanelles operations from the Turkish side, his heart was wholly with the Allies. . . . In spite of his belief that the losses of the Central Powers have been universally exaggerated, he has no doubt that the Allies will win the war. He thinks that they will do so chiefly by means of economic pressure. 'Let the Allies hold the Germans during the coming winter and the spring of 1916 will see a turn in the tide of battle.'"—Spec

"He sums up at the close the lessons which have been learned by the first period of the great war." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 15 '16 630w

"Granville Fortescue possesses one quality unusual among war correspondents, the art of passing from one side to the other. He is kindly enough, but he is not carried away by enthusiasm, and the reader does not feel that he is recording a personally conducted tour."

+ N Y Times 21:119 Ap 2 '16 450w

"Nothing—not the suffering of Poland, which he found as grievous as that of Belgium, or the impressive stoicism of the moujik—moved him so much as the spectacle of British heroism on the bluff end of the Gallipoli peninsula."

+ Spec 115:832 D 11 '15 1500w

FOSTER, EDNA ABIGAIL, ed. Something to do,—boys! a book for wide-awake boys. il *$1.25 Wilde 790

The title of the book is descriptive. It gives directions which the boy may follow in making useful and interesting models and toys and other articles. The contents are arranged under: Things that a handy boy can make; Useful things that can be made from wood; Toys and models; Intelligent workers; Wonders of the circle; With shears and paste pot; Working with metal; A new kind of metal work; Picnic goodies and candies; For the listening ear; Games and sport; Nature friends. The book is very fully illustrated.

+ Lit D 53:1613 D 16 '16 50w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 30w

FOSTER, JEANNE ROBERT. Wild apples. *$1 Sherman, French & co. 811 16-10828

Having no share in the enthusiasm for the vers libre of the present day, the writer adheres closely to classical standards in the varied verse that makes up "Wild apples." Sonnets, lyrics, ballads and plays are grouped here and dedicated to Yeats whose power to enthral is forcefully limned in a poem entitled "W. B. Yeats—reading."

Ind 86:555 Je 26 '16 50w

+ Lit D 52:1292 My 6 '16 500w

FOSTER, JOHN. Bright eyes of danger. il *$1.35 Lippincott

"Edmund Layton is the hero and narrator of this chronicle of his adventures in the years 1745 and 1746. He was but 23 years of age when on personal business bent he journeyed to Scotland. . . . Loyal to the king with an inactive loyalty rather than to Charles Edward, the picturesque chevalier, he was held as a prisoner by a woman, Charlotte Macdonell, whose heart was with the Pretender. The tale of intrigue, of villainy, of shipwreck, of hidden and sunken gold, of all those thrilling adventures that might befall one in the eighteenth century is woven round the love story of Edmund and Charlotte." —N Y Times

"A very successful piece of work of its kind. The style is happily clear of the cheap fustian sprinkled with modernisms which we have to put up with, for the most part, in so-called historical romances." H. W. Boynton
+ Bookm 12:621 Ag '16 350w

"The story is reminiscent of Scott without the elements of his greatness. But it is enlivening and will serve to pass a summer's day."
+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 30 '16 220w

"A clean romance of the old school."

+ Cath World 104:124 O '16 60w

+ Nation 103:305 S 28 '16 280w

+ N Y Times 21:283 J1 '16 '16 200w

"A most entertaining and romantic novel."

+ R of Rs 54:235 Ag '16 100w

FOSTER, MAXIMILIAN. Rich man, poor man. il $1.30 Appleton 16-2215

"From a general-utility-girl in a New York boarding house to a petted member in a Fifth avenue mansion Bab makes a sudden transition. Then begins a contest royal for her hand, between Rich Man—Poor Man, both fine fellows, and no trace of villainy in the wealthy chap either. . . . It's a fair field and no favor in this case." (Pub W) "There is a mild mystery involved, but the reader shares the secret at so early a point that the romance threading the story's various twists and turns must be regarded as the predominating element." (Springfield Republican)

A L A Bkl 12:383 My '16

"Decidedly mediocre in quality, there is yet enough uncertainty about the outcome of the affair to make it fairly interesting. Mr. Foster has done his job no better and no worse than the average writer of fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 26 '16 180w

"His manner of treating his characters and their surroundings is reminiscent of the worst faults of the Dickensian school, while the depth of his conviction that high social status breeds refinement of nature and appearance could find its parallel only in an English novel written for the circulating libraries."

+ N Y Times 21:179 Ap 23 '16 370w

"A really good story for the story's sake is not unwelcome. The reader will find in Bab, the central figure, not a type, nor a 'study,' but a very charming individual whose affairs keep him interested—and keep him guessing." Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 89:191 Ja 15 '16 240w

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 13 '16 300w

FOSTER, MICHAEL, and GASKELL, JOHN
FOSTER. Cerebro-spinal fever. il $3.75
Putnam 616.925 A16-844

"The authors claim that this monograph has for its aim an attempt to bring together and correlate the clinical and pathological facts which they were enabled to accumulate during the epidemic of 1915 in the Eastern command [England], and the views set forth are the outcome of clinical and pathological observations made in the wards, the laboratory, and the post-mortem room of the 1st Eastern general hospital. There are eleven chapters and two appendices, and the excellent plan of giving a summary in italics of the principal facts dealt with in each chapter is helpful to the reader. There are eleven excellent plates, eight of which are coloured."—Nature

"The book is dedicated by the authors to the memory of their respective fathers, and on account of its careful, lucid, scientific, yet withal practical, exposition of the subject it is a worthy tribute to those two great founders of the modern school of English physiology. . . . A good account of the symptomatology, diagnosis, and treatment of the disease is given. . . . In conclusion, there is an appendix containing a remarkable example of the spread of the meningococcus from carrier to carrier."

+ Nature 97:419 J1 20 '16 830w

"It is likely to be a standard work for a time at any rate."

+ Spec 116:755 Je 17 '16 130w

The illustrations are superb and form a valuable addition—a statement which one finds it difficult to make regarding most medical illustrations. The study is essentially technical, and hence appeals to medical and scientific readers almost exclusively."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p227 My 11 '16 280w

FOSTER, ROBERT FREDERICK. Foster's auction bridge for all. $1 (2c) Stokes 795 16-6412

The author has endeavored to provide a book that will be of value to all players. "The beginner can find in it the fundamentals, the conventions, of the game. The average player will probably discover many little refinements that he has overlooked or forgotten, while the expert will be given ample opportunity to study some absolutely new theories." (Introd.) The book also gives the laws of auction bridge as adopted by the Whist club of New York, revised to February, 1916.

+ A L A Bkl 12:415 Je '16

St Louis 14:237 Je '16 10w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:319 J1 '16 20w

FOTHERINGHAM, JOHN KNIGHT, and WILLIAMS, LAURENCE FREDERIC RUSHBROOK. Marco Sanudo, conqueror of the Archipelago. $3.40 Oxford 945.3 16-14234

"Scholars interested in the Fourth crusade [1202-04] will recall Fotheringham's article on 'Genoa and the Fourth crusade' in the English Historical Review six years ago. That article is the core of the present work and, except for the introductory paragraphs, is reprinted almost verbatim in chapters 2, 3, and 4; there are some slight changes and a few pages are added. The remainder of the book is composed of a chapter on the origin of the house of Sanudo and two chapters on the career of Marco Sanudo in the Archipelago and in Crete; these chapters are almost entirely new. The appendix contains twenty pages of extracts from the authorities, of which the most important are from Venetian manuscripts. The list of works cited takes eight pages and there is a very full index covering sixteen pages."—Am Hist R

"It is distinctly a book of reference for a student and will have no charm for 'the general reader.' The author's opinion on a controverted subject will carry weight because of his critical study and use of sources hitherto neglected. Best of all, he gives full references both to the sources and to the secondary works so that the student can form his own opinion. The book is a valuable contribution." D. C. Munro
+ Am Hist R 21:846 J1 '16 470w

"He has chosen the once brilliant, but now forgotten, history of the rise of Venetian power in the Levant, of the Fourth crusade, and of the struggles of Genoa, Pisa, Venice, and the Eastern empire for the control of the Levantine coasts and islands. Much that the author tells will be new to most readers. His bibliography is a marvel of research."

+ Ath p187 Ap '16 450w

"The best account we have in English of that obscure problem, the partition of the Eastern empire after the Fourth crusade, and the exact nature of the Venetian conquest and domination of the archipelago. The history of the Candiani-Sanudo family may fairly be said to embrace the history of Venice during the tenth century."

H. F. Brown

+ Eng Hist R 31:484 J1 '16 500w

+ Nation 102:679 Je 22 '16 250w

FOULKE, WILLIAM DUDLEY (ROBERT BARCLAY DILLINGHAM, pseud.). Lyrics of war and peace. *$1 Bobbs 811 16-9155

A well tempered volume of verse, mainly in the sonnet form, which, in the more joyous themes, lets lights and shadows of fancy play upon the strongholds of a thoughtful, well ordered life. The war verse introduces a graver theme whose note is the waste, the slaughter, the anguish of this universal woe.

"The general effect is quite pleasing, if only one could forget the fact that nearly everything that Mr. Foulke has to say has already been better said by someone else."

+ — Ath p416 S '16 370w

+ Cath World 103:834 S '16 110w

"The masterly translations from Petrarch published last year are here followed by a few poems from Theocritus. We wish there were more of these."

+ Ind 87:104 JI 17 '16 50w

"Of exceptional beauty and rich with spiritual comforting."

+ R of Rs 53:761 Je '16 30w

"Of considerable technical merit and of even, if not high, poetical value. The poems will be read with pleasure for their quiet and sincere pictures of love and friendship and domestic happiness."

+ Springfield Republican p10 Je 30 '16 370w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p323 JI 6 '16 70w

FWOLE, FRANK FULLER, ed. Standard handbook for electrical engineers. il *$5 McGraw 621.3 15-15858

The third edition of this work was issued in 1910. For the present edition there has been a complete revision. "It will be recalled that the publishers of this book originated the scheme, at least in this country, of a handbook in sections contributed by specialists. Much of the growth in practicality may be attributed to the much stronger staff of section authors of the present edition." (Engin N)

"The compilation of the various sections under an experienced chief, each section having been built up through the co-operation of recognized experts in a particular field, speaks for the quality of material secured and at once makes it recognized as the most authoritative of material available. All data presented show a thorough revision to bring them up to date."

+ Elec World 66:653 S 18 '15 570w

"So little of the old editions is left in the latest one that the volume must be regarded as essentially new. In a work of uniform general excellence, it is useless to comment on the worth of particular sections, but there are two outstanding features which must be commended—the indexes and the bibliographies."

+ Engin N 75:121 Ja 20 '16 1050w

FWOLE, TRENCHARD CRAVEN WILLIAM. Travels in the Middle East. il *$2.50 Dutton 915 16-26994

"Capt. T. C. Fowle, of the British army, has brought out a volume of 'Travels in the Middle East,' giving 'Impressions by the way' in Turkish Arabia, Syria, and Persia. He describes Bagdad, and from Turkish Arabia he passes into Persia, giving in some detail his impressions of life in the towns through which he journeyed. In addition to the photographic illustrations there is a good map of the different countries through which Captain Fowle journeyed."—R of Rs

A L A Bkl 13:168 Ja '17

+ Dial 61:476 N 30 '16 250w

Ind 88:285 N 13 '16 70w

N Y Br Lib News 3:140 S '16

R of Rs 54:458 O '16 80w

"He has an accomplished literary style, which he uses skilfully in order to describe, not only the actual adventures of the road in Turkish Arabia, Syria, and Persia, but to enter into fellowship with the reader, and admit him into the confidence of his thoughts."

+ Spec 117:192 Ag 12 '16 260w

"It is an entertaining and light-hearted account of the jolly life of the road in Asia, and pretends to be nothing more."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p291 Je 22 '16 470w

FOWLER, CHARLES NEWELL. National issues of 1916. il $1.50 (1c) C: N. Fowler, Elizabeth, N. J. 329 16-3320

A book made up of five papers, several of them delivered as speeches on different occasions during the last six or seven years. The first is a plea for preparedness. Contents: The flag and the nation; Lincoln and nationality; On a tariff commission; An American banking system; An American merchant marine. The author was a member of the 54-57th and 58th-61st Congresses as a representative from New Jersey.

"His book reproduces three addresses which contain mostly truisms and pompous phrases."

... The remaining 300 pages of the book are given to a campaign treatment of An American banking system and An American merchant marine. They contain a good, tho diffuse, statement of what has been said on these topics during the past few years."

— + Ind 86:252 My 15 '16 250w

N Y Times 21:205 My 14 '16 50w

R of Rs 53:379 Mr '16 50w

St Louis 14:182 My '16

"Purports to be an impartial treatise on government and liberty and their age-long conflict, but the author, a member of Congress for 16 years from New Jersey, soon leaves this high plane, and descends to a partisan discussion of free trade, protection, the banking system and the merchant marine question."

— Springfield Republican p19 Ap 14 '16 160w

FOWLER, HAROLD NORTH. History of sculpture. il *$2 (1½c) Macmillan 730.9 16-12243

The author has given a connected account of the history of sculpture from the beginnings of civilization in Egypt and Babylonia to the present day, touching also on the sculpture of the Far East—India, China and Japan. He says: "I have tried to include an account of all the important developments in the art of sculpture in ancient, mediaeval, and modern times, with such descriptions of individual works and information concerning individual artists as the space at my disposal and the available information permit. Since the book is a history, not a series of essays, I have attempted no detailed criticism. A brief description of the materials and methods employed in sculpture is contained in the introduction." (Preface) The book is fully illustrated. There is a bibliography of thirteen pages and an index.

"For first purchase a better book than Marquand and Frothingham (A. L. A. Catalog 1904) because it contains more material and includes such recent sculpture as that seen at the Panama-Pacific exposition, but smaller libraries having the Marquand will perhaps not need this."

+ A L A Bkl 13:70 N '16

"A thorough, well-rounded history of sculpture for students and general readers, treating the subject more fully than any general history except Lübke's standard work published in 1870. Contains a satisfactory outline of modern sculpture and an annotated bibliography. The author is professor of Greek at Western Reserve university."

+ Cleveland p116 Ag '16 50w

+ Ind 88:240 N 6 '16 50w

"Where one might desire fuller knowledge is in the Hittite region, the noted figures of the Carchemish, for example, and in the sculpture of India, China, Japan, and Persia. ... In a future edition the text-matter here could be usefully extended. Buddhist, Jainistic, and Hindu sculpture, for instance, calls for sympathetic exposition in the West. In other respects the volume will prove eminently useful."

+ Lit D 53:415 Ag 19 '16 270w

"In every chapter there is the evidence which those familiar with Professor Fowler's work would have expected of sound scholarship, careful accuracy, moderateness of statement, and infinite labor. . . . Another characteristic of the book, which is no less noticeable than those we have mentioned, and which we cannot help marking with regret, [is] namely, the indication in every paragraph of compression to the nth power."

+ Nation 103:360 O 12 '16 830w
N Y Br Lib News 3:108 Jl '16
Pratt p25 O '16 20w

"Intended for use in schools and for the general public. . . . The illustrations are especially deserving of praise; there are nearly two hundred, which have been reproduced from rare prints."

+ R of Rs 54:236 Ag '16 110w

"Professor Fowler has indeed attempted the impossible. His chapters on the ancient East, Greece and Rome, and the Italian renaissance show some attempt to lay stress on the great things, but the rest of the book is an overwhelming mass of dull facts and dates, relieved only by a number of small photographs of typical works. The final chapter, of twelve pages, is devoted to 'Sculpture in the Far East'; it is ludicrously inadequate."

+ Spec 117:293 S 9 '16 160w

"With the increasing number of modern artists, the inclusion of names has been eclectic, but not invidious. The chapter on sculpture in the United States has four illustrations, and it is interesting to note Prof. Fowler's choice. They are Saint Gaudens's 'Lincoln' in Chicago, French's 'Mourning Victory' in Concord, Fraser's 'End of the trail' and Dallin's 'Appeal to the Great Spirit' in Boston."

+ Springfield Republican p6 N 28 '16 310w

"Severe compression lessens its easy use and also its value; nevertheless it is the first volume to buy if a library needs more than 'Apollo' contains, or the different volumes of the 'Ars una' series."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:452 D '16 80w

FOWLER, NATHANIEL CLARK, Jr. Beginning right; how to succeed. *50c (1c) Sully & Kleinteich 174 16-6947

A collection of papers that have appeared in various newspapers of the United States and Canada under the auspices of the McClure newspaper syndicate. Continuity, Keeping your eyes open, Ideals, To-morrow, Keeping on the line, Observation, Keep doing something, How much to save, Opening a bank account, Keeping straight, are characteristic titles.

"There is a good deal of Benjamin Franklin's epigrammatic snappiness and common 'horse sense' about Mr. Fowler's aids to intelligence. It may be safely said that there is something for everyone in them. The chapters are brief, simple, and genuine."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 15 '16 160w

FOWLER, NATHANIEL CLARK, Jr. Principle of suffrage. *25c (4½c) Sully & Kleinteich 324.3 16-6943

Vital, direct and succinct are the fifty-nine pages of this little book of woman suffrage wisdom. Mr. Fowler's contentions are valuable to the suffrage propagandist, likewise to the reader here and there who wishes to inform himself on one of the pressing issues of the day. Mr. Fowler quotes Daniel Webster's statement, "In all governments truly republican, men are nothing—principle is everything," and makes this thought the keynote to his monograph. It is not a question of woman's rights, or of man's rights, but of human rights, asserts Mr. Fowler, "and let man, who is in political control, accept principle, not expediency, and correct the mistakes of his ignorant forbears."

"A wise appeal to every American citizen."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '16 130w

"As a source book for suffrage orators 'The principle of suffrage' ought to prove valuable, but as an argument it fails to convince because of the very multiplicity of its propositions."

+ Ind 86:344 My 29 '16 70w

FOX, WILLIAM SHERWOOD. Greek and Roman [mythology]. (Mythology of all races) $6 (6½c) Jones, Marshall 291 16-15868

This is volume 1 of a series which when it reaches its completion in thirteen volumes is to present a complete record of the myths of all races. Each volume is to be the work of a scholar who has special qualifications for treating his subject, and each author is given wide latitude in planning his book. "It is one of the merits of this collection that it is made for its own sake, with no theory to maintain or to illustrate," says George Foot Moore, the consulting editor. The work is designed for use by the technical student and by the general reader as well. "We have sought to be scientific—in the best sense of the term—but we have also sought to present a book that shall be eminently readable," writes the general editor in his preface. In this first volume Professor Fox of Princeton has given the modern, scientific interpretation of classic mythology, "seeking to present and interpret a number of the typical myths of Greece and Rome as vehicles of religious thought." Notes and a bibliography are provided at the end.

"In a detailed and penetrating introduction Professor Fox analyses the nature of myths." Geoffrey Monmouth

+ Bookm 44:302 N '16 620w

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 11 '16 1500w

"The volume is, according to its plan, excellently done. It is comprehensive, yet condensed, and clear and attractive in formulation. The illustrations are well chosen and unhackneyed, and impart fresh interest to an old subject."

+ Lit D 53:471 Ag 26 '16 230w

+ Nation 103:544 D 7 '16 1000w

"The method [for the series] is not comparative but presentative. Therefore the work will be of use rather to the general reader than to the technical student, although even to the latter some of the volumes may bring new information, so large is the scope of the series and so authoritative the standing of many of the authors. . . . Professor Fox, who is assistant professor of classics at Princeton university, undertook a work of great difficulty in assembling in one volume the myths of Greece and Rome. . . . He has performed his duties in a workmanlike manner and has been animated by the scientific spirit which this sort of study especially needs. . . . The numerous illustrations, in line, half-tone, photograph, and color, are beautiful in themselves and admirably supplementary to the text."

+ N Y Times 21:377 S 24 '16 650w

FOX-DAVIES, ARTHUR CHARLES. Book of public arms. Il *£1 15s T. C. & E. C. Jack, London 929.8 16-3927

"The previous edition of this book, published about twenty years ago, contained only the arms of towns, counties, and universities. In the revised issue under notice the author has added the arms of the British colonies, of schools and colleges, of episcopal sees and deans, of corporate bodies and London livery companies together with the sovereign arms of the different countries in the world, and those of a very large number of continental cities and towns. . . . For the foreign arms in the volume he accepts no responsibility. He gives the best information available; but it has not been possible, for obvious reasons, to verify its genuineness."—Ath

"Mr. Fox-Davies is to be congratulated on the production of a volume which is evidently the result of untiring industry and careful research. It is in the form of a dictionary. The illustrations (over 1,300 in number) are clear and excellently reproduced."

+ Ath 1915,2:484 D 25 480w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES ANATOLE THIBAUT). Path of glory; a tr. by Alfred Allinson. il *$1.50 Lane 940.91 16-4599

English and French versions alternate in this collection of letters and papers written by Anatole France during the progress of the war. That the war cannot end until German militarism is crushed is the thought that is foremost in all of them: "Peace, peace we love so well, it is criminal to call for it, criminal to wish for it, before we have annihilated the forces of oppression that have weighed on Europe for half a century."

+ Ind 86:376 My 29 '16 70w

Library Association Record 18:81 F 15 '16 80w

"One of the volumes published by Edouard Champion to keep the memory of Jean-Pierre Barbier, the hero-writer, green and to bring tribute to the war-funds."

+ Lit D 52:915 Ap 1 '16 160w

+ Nation 102:418 Ap 13 '16 150w

"M. France has forgotten how to sneer. That is the surprising thing about 'The path of glory.' There is not a sneer in it, not even a sneer at Germany. There is no cynicism in it, no irony, no whimsicality. It is as direct and simple as the address of a peasant captain to his peasant soldiers before a desperate charge. It cannot be said that this book represents M. France at his best—at his best as a writer, that is. 'For Christmas, 1914,' has its vivid bits of description, 'A little town of France' keeps its poetic charm even in translation, and the letters to the London Clarion, to the Novosti, (a Russian journal published in Paris), and to William English Walling are vigorous and effective writing. But the exquisite artificiality, the playfulness of the master of ideas and phrases, the originality, the imagination, the humor—the Anatole France flavor, as it were—is not to be found."

+ N Y Times 21:65 F 27 '16 470w

Pittsburgh 21:121 Mr '16 50w

+ R of Rs 53:503 Ap '16 480w

"Through them there persists one note alone—the note of simple patriotism and fervour, of an intense energy of conviction. M. France, indeed, is no longer the ironist with a balance in his hand. He is just an ardent Frenchman—his phrases have the identical ring of the phrases of General Joffre. General Joffre's vaincre ou mourir is aptly written across every page of this patriotic sheaf of papers."

+ Sat R 120:614 D 25 '15 1000w

+ Springfield Republican p19 Ap 21 '16 280w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. (JACQUES ANATOLE THIBAUT). Pierre Nozière; a tr. by J. Lewis May. *$1.75 (3c) Lane 16-14473

At the start this is a study of the adaptation of the human plant to its environment. From the gray byways of Paris and from the quaint souls that inhabit them, dreamy little Pierre Nozière absorbs the aliment that nourishes and develops him. Delightful fancies are strengthened by this food. The second stage finds Pierre a man, and the interest centers in the intimately recorded reactions to his universe. His horizon widens in the third part for he becomes a traveler and yields to his desire, greatly to the reader's profit, to piece together the stories of towns from the pages in stone—"books in very truth, adorned with gracious pictures."

"The translator has omitted five short tales of children told by Madame Nozière to Pierre, as these were appended to 'The merrie tales of Jacques Tournebroke,'"

+ Ath p286 Je '16 90w

"One after another these portraits succeed each other, each yielding something of the delightful atmosphere which makes the book what it is." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Jl 5 '16 830w

"One has a curious feeling in reading J. Lewis May's graceful translation of Anatole France's 'Pierre Nozière' that the book was written in a vanished age of the world—in some golden afternoons a great while ago. The impression is partly due to the reminiscential character of the miscellany, and partly to one's shock at the incongruity of contemporary events in France with the bland and languorous serenity which pervades the volume."

+ Nation 103:490 N 23 '16 460w

"It is the first portion of the volume that is particularly delightful. The child through whose eyes we are privileged to look upon the Paris and the people with which he comes into contact must be the child Anatole himself. The impressions and memories are too fresh and intimate to have come second-hand."

+ N Y Times 21:258 Je 25 '16 1250w

+ R of Rs 54:365 N '16 60w

"His inimitable prose cannot be reproduced, but this easy and, for the most part, natural rendering will show the subtlety which holds in solution the delights of scholarship."

+ Sat R 121:592 Je 17 '16 160w

+ Springfield Republican p13 S 24 '16 330w

FRANCK, HARRY ALVERSON. Tramping through Mexico, Guatemala and Honduras. il *$2 (3c) Century 917.2 16-16395

The appearance of a book by Harry A. Franck, the "incurable vagabond," is always an event. No previous book of his however has appeared at so opportune a time as this one on Mexico. After his manner when traveling in foreign lands, Mr. Franck lived and worked with the men at the bottom, and his book is largely devoted to the Mexican peon. Incidentally it is dedicated to him with "sincerest wishes for his ultimate emancipation." The author crossed into Mexico from Laredo and proceeded south by way of Monterey, San Luis Potosi, Mexico City and Puebla. The events described preceded those recorded in his book on the Canal Zone.

+ A L A Bkl 13:78 N '16

"A contribution of the greatest value to the very slender list of works that make any attempt to get below the obvious in Mexican affairs and conditions and to write the truth about them." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 44:202 O 16 '16 760w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '16 330w

"The writer spoils nearly every chapter by his vulgarity, his newspaper English, and his idle repetition of unimportant happenings. He sees red every time he mentions a Catholic priest or a Catholic church."

+ Cath World 104:391 D '16 150w

+ Cleveland p135 N '16 50w

+ Dial 21:274 O 5 '16 220w

"Illustrated by excellent photographs."

+ Ind 88:235 N 13 '16 40w

+ Lit D 53:1547 D 9 '16 130w

"Franck is always too hurried. . . . He is fond of calling himself a vagabond, an idler, a tramp, but that is just what he is not. He is a hybrid—a dynamic, virile personality, aping the itinerant type of real tramp, and his work suffers in consequence. . . . We like him, we enjoy every experience, we feel every sensation which he feels—but we forget it all as soon as we have read it."

+ Nation 104:138 F 1 '17 210w

"Mr. Franck is too disillusioning when he writes of the church in Mexico. . . . He should take lessons from Stephen Graham, who would somehow have detached the essence of beauty in the church, and set it in relief against its crudities and ugly realism."

+ New Repub 8:200 S 23 '16 510w

"Probably the most trustworthy, first-hand account of conditions in the interior of Mexico that has yet been written. It is unfortunate that he did not journey more widely and visit a greater number of more representative regions. But, for as much of Mexico as he studied, his book is informing, unbiased, and most interesting."

+ N Y Times 21:325 Ag 20 '16 1950w

Reviewed by Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 90:604 Ag 19 '16 380w

+ R of Rs 54:571 N '16 160w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"Seems hardly of the high standard set by his earlier books."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 8 '16 500w

"His is rather the concentrated glance of the surveyor than the roving eye of the vagabond. . . . Mr. Francke writes as if, having been engaged on a definite mission in arduous and unfriendly country, he had been too much preoccupied with arriving quickly at his goal to use his great powers of observation except on the obstacles he was called upon to surmount."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p519 N 2 '16 660w

"It lacks the interest of 'The vagabond journey around the world,' being more comparable to 'Zone policeman 88.'"

Wis Lib Bull 12:409 N '16 110w

FRANCKE, KUNO. German spirit. *$1 (5½c) Holt 914.3 16-11061

Three papers make up this book, German literature and the American temper, The true Germany, Germany's contribution to civilization. The first was written in the spring of 1914, delivered as a convocation address at the University of Chicago in June, and printed in the Atlantic Monthly in November of that year. The second appeared in the Atlantic Monthly in October, 1915. The third was delivered at the Brooklyn Institute of arts and sciences in February, 1916, and has not been published before. The author says, "It seems to me that the three papers together present a view of contemporary Germany which may help Americans to understand better both the sources of enduring German greatness and the reasons why German achievements have so often failed to appeal to America. . . . I should be glad if this little book could do something to restore sympathy and reasonableness."

+ A L A Bkl 12:475 J1 '16

"Of the many authors presenting the side of Germany, Professor Francke alone has understood how to address the people of this country."

+ Dial 61:97 Ag 15 '16 1250w

+ Ind 88:26 O 2 '16 160w

Lit D 52:1708 Je 10 '16 200w

"Professor Francke has occasionally been compared with Carl Schurz. The comparison is superficial, because the Harvard professor lacks utterly the spirit of '48. The average American is not to be persuaded that a government from the top down, however benevolent in its intentions and efficient in its administration, is anything but antipodal to real democracy."

— Nation 103:65 J1 20 '16 290w

"The book needs a sequel—an inquiry into the origin of these different ideas, and an explanation of how they came into being. It is a description, not an explanation. And it is a description that rather obscures explanation than elucidates or prepares the way for it. What is objectionable to all is not the ideas of the poets, philosophers and scientists of the various countries, but the ideas of the ruling class or classes of those countries. But they never dare say so plainly. It is left to the socialist to insist—and he can prove it, too—that 'the ruling ideas of any age are ever the ideas of the ruling class.'" Joshua. Wanhope

— N Y Call p14 My 21 '16 580w

"The sincerest admirers among Americans of the Germany that was, who have sought to keep its old ideals and achievements free in their regard from the stain of its modern methods and purposes, will be taken aback by one of his contentions. For the whole of his paper on 'The true Germany' is devoted to the confuting of the idea that 'the Germany of today is not the real Germany.'"

— N Y Times 21:205 My 14 '16 500w

"We wish that all Americans might read this little volume of Professor Kuno Francke's, especially the first two essays. . . . No American can read it with an open mind and not get a kindlier and, we believe, juster view of the German people."

+ Outlook 114:60 S 13 '16 160w

Pittsburgh 21:355 J1 '16 50w

R of Rs 54:117 J1 '16 70w

Springfield Republican p15 Je 2 '16 270w

Wis Lib Bull 12:269 Je '16 70w

FRANCKE, KUNO. Personality in German literature before Luther. *$1.25 Harvard univ. press 830.9 16-21980

A series of lectures delivered first as the Lowell lectures for 1915 and repeated later at Cornell and at California university. "There are six lectures. The first is upon the chivalric minnesong and the courtly epic of the thirteenth century. . . . The second lecture is upon German mysticism of the fourteenth century. . . . The third lecture is upon popular songs and popular satire from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century. The religious drama of the fifteenth century and Dürer's Biblical illustrations come next. The last two lectures deal with the Humanist enlightenment under Erasmus and the Humanist revolt under Ulrich von Hutten." (Boston Transcript)

+ A L A Bkl 13:210 F '17

Boston Transcript p5 D 6 '16 220w

"To Kuno Francke, this period of German literature is a live thing, and he knows how to make its vitality felt by his readers. Many quotations pleasantly familiar to every student of middle high German are scattered through the pages."

+ Cleveland p144 D '16 60w

"Professor Kuno Francke of Harvard disagrees radically with Burckhardt and other authorities on the renaissance who have asserted that there is an absence of individuality in the middle ages. 'Man,' Burckhardt has alleged of that period, 'was conscious of himself only as a member of a race, people, class, family or corporation—only through some general category.' In opposition to this view, Professor Francke has traced the expression of personality in early German literature, in a short and very readable study."

Dial 62:73 Ja 25 '17 210w

"The treatment is concrete, but pro-German with its superlative praise for almost everything of German origin."

Ind 89:119 Ja 15 '17 60w

FRANCKE, KUNO, and HOWARD, WILLIAM GUILD, eds. German classics of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries; masterpieces of German literature, tr. into English. 20v il subs *$90 German pub. soc. 830.8 14-2927

Volumes 1-5 of the "German classics" were reviewed in the Digest in 1914. The complete work in twenty volumes has now been issued. "Of German literature of the nineteenth century, apart from Goethe and Schiller, Heine, Schlegel, Humboldt, Freytag, Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, and Sudermann, English-speaking readers have remained comparatively ignorant. In an endeavor to correct this condition, the compilers have drawn heavily from Germans who have written within the past fifty years. The reader will see how much they have done so from a statement that the first ten volumes of the twenty end with Bismarck and Moltke, the second ten being concerned with writers of later times. Special emphasis is laid on German dramatic writers of very recent times, and on recent writers of short stories and lyric poems. To these three classes the last three volumes are devoted." (Lit D)

+ — Cath World 103:547 J1 '16 420w

"The latest volumes confirm the impression created by the first as to the remarkable combination of taste, scholarship, and literary skill shown in the work. The illustrations are from the works of contemporary, or recent, artists. They are intended to bring out 'certain broad tendencies of German painting in the nineteenth century,' are presented in half-tone and photogravure, and add notably to the interest of the collection. Paper, printing, and binding are notable for quality and fitness."

+ Lit D 52:79 Ja 8 '16 600w

"Unfortunately, little has been done by the editors to help the reader find his way in the FRANCKE, K., and HOWARD, W. G.—Cont. maze of names and topics. The work contains no index and no general table of contents, the table of contents of each separate volume being, moreover, pitifully meagre. . . . If the anthology, on the whole, fails to impress the American reader with an adequate sense of the greatness of German literature, the fault lies not only in the imperfections we have noted, and the unfortunate character of some of the selections, but—and perhaps chiefly—in the jarring over-emphasis of values other than literary.

— + Nation 102:223 F '24 '16 2550w

"The translations of the first three volumes, especially the rendering of Goethe's exquisite lyrics, are a blot on the undertaking of the German publication society, a great injustice to the noble masterpieces they feign to represent, and somewhat of an affront to the critical powers of the American public. Happily, this is the worst that can be said. The other seventeen volumes deserve, on the whole, unreserved commendation. The work of editing has been earnest and thoughtful if not inspired; the work of translation is perhaps as good as can be expected in an undertaking of this sort. There are some omissions which may puzzle the reader, some which are understandable, though not commendable; von Stein, Karl Marx, Carl Schurz, and Rudolf Eucken might reasonably be looked for in a list of German celebrities."

+ — N Y Times 21:85 Mr 12 '16 1450w

FRANKAU, GILBERT. Song of the guns. (New poetry ser.) *50c Houghton 821 16-11036

These poems of war were written at the front—during lulls in the fighting. "The last three stanzas were written at midnight in brigade headquarters with the German shells screaming over into the ruined town [Ypres]." The poems are, The voice of the slaves; Headquarters; Gun-teams; Eyes in the air; Signals; The observers; Ammunition column; The voice of the guns. In the first the guns are pictured as the masters, the gunners as their slaves.

"The most overwhelming, the most terrible impression of the poem is its striking tale of the machinal character of war. . . . This is the most terrible impression of the 'Song of the guns'; but it is not the most revolting. The most murderous spiritual degradation speaks in the active fighter's pity of the observers. . . . It is fortunate that we possess a poem that speaks this debasing attribute as clearly as 'The song of the guns.'" Edith Wyatt

+ New Repub 9:191 D 16 '16 800w

"The whole horror of artillery warfare has been packed into metrical stanzas without destroying a dominant sense of the lyrical quality of as horrible a thing as an artillery bombardment. . . . Gilbert Frankau is a son of the late 'Frank Danby,' the well-known novelist."

+ R of Rs 54:232 Ag '16 470w

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ja 30 '17 300w

FRANKAU, MRS. JULIA (DAVIS) (FRANK DANBY, pseud.). Twilight. *$1.35 (1½c) Dodd 16-4750

A curious story in which morphia plays a part. A woman of letters who has taken a small country house as a place of retirement after an illness, suffers a relapse and is kept under the influence of drugs. In dreams that come to her she reconstructs the story of three people, one of them Margaret Capel, a woman writer, now dead, who had previously occupied the house. A bundle of letters and an old diary supplement the dreams and help piece out the story. Peter Kennedy, the country doctor who attends her, and a second man, also well known to her, are the other actors in the tragic scenes which she reconstructs during her illness and records after her recovery.

"Frank Danby had a gift of portraying life and living people, and it is really wasted on exotic types such as are here presented."

— Ath p287 Je '16 90w

"A performance very much in the vein of Marie Corelli." Wilson Follett
Atlan 118:499 O '16 40w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:198 Ap '16 700w

"Though the story lacks the vitality of her other novels that has made Mrs. Frankau's fame in modern English fiction, one must admire the carefully built-up atmosphere of pending tragedy, and the real skill and consistency of the author."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 1 '16 250w

"It is Dr. Kennedy, not Margaret Capel, who stands out from the record as a figure of singular and well-nigh tragic strength."

+ Nation 102:359 Mr 30 '16 480w

"Mrs. Frankau falters a little when she plunges from the combined narrative of her own illness and the recurring dreams into the unbroken story of the other woman. It is a crucial point, and she slurs it somewhat, failing to make the reader envisage just what happened, understand just how that part of the story was written. But except for this one blurred spot in the picture, all the rest is done with force and cleverness and most admirable art. . . . Powerful though the book is, and realistic and convincing in high degree, all over it and its people hangs just the faintest haze of unreality, or sense of instability, as of the morphia dreams out of which they purport to be born. And that is the last and finest effect of its author's art."

+ N Y Times 21:66 F 27 '16 750w

"Not perhaps since Henry James gave us the inimitable 'Daisy Miller,' has modern fiction presented the character of a woman so sensitive, so innately innocent in her faults and weaknesses, so inevitably tragic in her fate, as the heroine of this book, Margaret Capel."

+ R of Rs 53:505 Ap '16 190w

+ — Spec 117:191 Ag 12 '16 30w

"It is an affecting, depressing tale, but it has strongly dramatic elements. In hands less capable than Frank Danby's, the story would not have the vivid color of plausibility she injects into it."

+ Springfield Republican p15 F 27 '16 190w

"All the three chief characters are too abnormal for that type of sanity, the gentle reader, to participate in their emotions. And he has the less inducement to do so that—at any rate in the case of women—what unhinges them is merely thwarted vanity; it is not that their trials are great, but that their resistance is small."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p250 My 25 '16 400w

FRANKFURTER, FELIX. Case for the shorter work day; Franklin O. Bunting, plaintiff in error, vs. The state of Oregon, defendant in error; brief for defendant in error. 2v il National consumers' league 338.9 16-27220

"This volume is a reprint of the brief presented to the court in support of the statute [Oregon ten-hour law]. It consists of six pages of legal argument and 959 pages of facts and opinions designed to convince the court of the evils of long hours of labor. The legal argument is the work of Professor Felix Frankfurter of the Harvard law school. The remainder of the brief was prepared by Miss Josephine Goldmark under the direction of Mr. Louis D. Brandeis before his nomination as associate justice of the Supreme court obliged him to withdraw from the case. The non-legal part of the brief is divided into two parts. The first gives a list of statutes in all countries limiting the hours of labor for men and the second shows the experience upon which such legislation is based. This second part is made up largely of excerpts from technical books and journals presenting the scientific conclusions of medical experts upon the deleterious effects of long hours of labor. There is also testimony and argument as to the beneficial effects of short hours of labor on morals and the general welfare."—Pol Sci Q

Ann Am Acad 68:326 N '16 100w

Pittsburgh 21:590 D '16 30w

"The case for the shorter work day' fills a need which has been sadly felt. Its authors have furnished an excellent model for future briefs on similar constitutional questions. In laying emphasis on the exact nature of the question which the Supreme court has to decide, they have made a contribution to jurisprudence and to political science." T: R. Powell

+ Pol Sci Q 26:469 S '16 650w

FRASER, JOHN FOSTER. Russia of to-day. il $1.50 Funk 914.7 16-2398

A work by an English journalist. "It treats of many different parts of the empire in which the author has travelled and made the most of his powers of observation. He has a good deal to say of the present and future of Russia's foreign trade." (Spec)

+ A L A Bkl 12:423 Je '16

N Y Br Lib News 3:37 Mr '16

Pittsburgh 21:296 Je '16 80w

"Any honest and sympathetic book about Russia is welcome now, and this one can claim those attributes. But it does not rise much above journalism in style or matter."

+ Spec 115:sup770 D 4 '15 80w

"While much of its content is true at any time, the frequent references to the conditions brought about by the war will make it quickly out of date. It is more readable than valuable, though it gives a remarkably vivid picture of the city life there today."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:184 Ap '16 60w

FRAZER, ROBERT WATSON. Indian thought past and present. il $3 (3c) Stokes 275.4 (Eng ed 15-27780)

"One result of the present war . . . will be to create in the West an increasing desire to know more, than in the past, of the underlying thought of India, and of how she has striven through the ages to solve the problem of the universe and the relation of man thereto. . . . I have therefore endeavoured to set forth, in as simple a manner as possible, a history of Indian thought in so far as that thought has influenced the aspirations, religious beliefs and social life of all thinking and orthodox Hindus." (Preface) An Introduction is followed by chapters on The Vēdas, The Brāhmanas, The Upanishads, Vēdānta, Sāṅkhya, Vaiśeṣika and Nyāya, Yoga, Buddhism, Hinduism, Past and present position of woman in India, Present Indian thought. There are some thirty illustrations.

"If we seem to have departed from the actual subject of Mr. Frazer's work—an admirable and careful exposition of Indian thought—it is because we have wished to suggest what may be its immediate application to the problems of the West, a question which the author scarcely raises. The book is illustrated by a number of plates representing works of Indian religious art. These are of very varied merit, and those of Indra, Brāhmā, and Varuna were certainly not worth including."

+ Ath 1915,2:413 D 4 1850w

"The book is an excellent summary of Indian philosophical systems; but it is much more; it has in view a practical and political end. . . . It reveals how dependent practical life is upon speculative thinking."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '16 480w

"The author, well known for his 'Literary history of India,' and as an authoritative writer on Indian intellectual life and thought, here furnishes a valuable account of those aspects of religious and philosophical reflection which have influenced the aspirations, the beliefs, and the social ideas of all thinking and orthodox Hindus."

+ Hibbert J 14:667 Ap '16 2900w

+ Ind 87:67 J1 10 '16 400w

"The systematic discussion of the doctrine of Sāṅkara seems the most satisfactory part of the book, and the contrast drawn between his position and that of Buddha is quite felicitous." M. W. Robinson

+ Int J Ethics 27:254 Ja '17 750w

"As is to be expected in a work drawn largely from the lubrications of his predecessors, there is a certain lack of control and of independent judgment which leads to doubtful or erroneous statements. . . . To the historian the best, as it is the most original, part of this work will be the chapter on present Hindu thought as found in Tamil poetry, where, indeed, the author is most at home."

+ Nation 103:424 N 2 '16 470w

"The book as far as it goes, is characterized by honesty of purpose and will be useful to those who read it with care and judgment." Lajpat Rai

+ New Repub 8:72 Ag 19 '16 1450w

+ N Y Times 21:368 S 17 '16 730w

+ R of Rs 54:344 S '16 180w

+ St Louis 14:383 N '16 20w

"An interesting supplement to his well-known 'Literary history of India.'"

+ Spec 116:sup135 Ja 29 '16 90w

FREEHOFF, JOSEPH C. America and the canal title. $1.50 J. C. Freehoff, N. Y.; for sale by Sully & Kleinteich 986 16-4231

This book presents "an examination, sifting and interpretation of the data bearing on the wresting of the province of Panama from the republic of Colombia by the Roosevelt administration in 1903 in order to secure title to the Canal Zone." (Sub-title) The specific accusations brought against the administration are that it "(1) violated international law, (2) violated the treaty of 1846, and (3) rent asunder a sister republic." Documentary evidence is brought forward in proof of these accusations. Contents: Clear the enterprise of every stain; Roosevelt's article—"The Panama blackmail treaty"; President Roosevelt attempted to coerce Colombia; The "vaudeville" revolution on the Isthmus; Violation of the treaty of 1846; President Roosevelt "took" the Canal Zone; Acting as the mandatory to civilization. Roosevelt's messages to Congress are quoted in an appendix. A book on "America and the canal tolls" is promised to follow this.

"In spite of some unnecessary repetitions, Dr. Freehoff's volume contains a clear and detailed account of our diplomatic discourse and of our military action in Panama in 1903. The author is statistician with the Public service commission for New York city, a member of the national Progressive party and has always voted for Theodore Roosevelt. This entire book is, however, a calm and logical arraignment of Colonel Roosevelt's most boasted achievement, the seizure of the Canal Zone." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 F 12 '16 650w

"Mr. Freehoff has rendered a highly desirable service in bringing together a mass of evidence wholly irresistible in its cumulative force."

+ Nation 103:88 J1 27 '16 420w

+ N Y Call p15 D 24 '16 450w

N Y Times 21:278 J1 9 '16 90w

St Louis 14:149 Ap '16

FREEMAN, FRANK NUGENT. Experimental education. (Riverside textbooks in education) il $1.30 (4c) Houghton 370.1 16-16248

In this work the author, assistant professor of educational psychology in the University of Chicago, has outlined a course of experiments which may be carried out by students of education. This field in applied psychology, as the introduction points out, is new and few attempts have been made to organize it. The author's method is to attack directly the particular problem in question and then to apply to it the general psychological principles involved. The subject matter is arranged as follows: Analysis of various types of the learning process; Experiments with school subjects; Tests. Figures and tests for use with the experiments are given in an appendix.

+ A L A Bkl 13:200 F '17

Cleveland p149 D '16 50w

"Illustrates a type of book which is very much overvalued. . . . If conclusions arrived at by the author's method are used to suggest and to criticize, they are well enough. If, on the other hand, they are taken as a basis of ordered practise, they are an insufficient foundation on which to build."

Educ R 53:200 F '17 90w

FREEMAN, FRANK NUGENT—Continued
 + El School J 17:20 S '16 480w
 N Y Br Lib News 3:143 S '16

"The work is characterized throughout by clean-cut descriptions, and the author's insight into the practical problems of education, united with the analytic judgment of the trained psychologist. . . . Teachers of the subject will be grateful to the author for a workable and useful manual." E. H. Cameron
 + School R 25:69 Ja '17 520w

FREEMAN, FRANK NUGENT. Psychology of the common branches. (Riverside textbooks in education) il $*1.25 (2c) Houghton 371.3 16-10361

A book representing an attempt "to apply the knowledge which we have recently accumulated in the scientific applications of psychology to the concrete problems of instruction in the elementary school." (Editor's introd.) It occupies a place between the treatise on psychology and a book of special methods. The author begins with the sensori-motor process of learning to write, proceeds to drawing and reading, which involve perceptual learning, and so on up to the studies requiring abstract thought. Reading references follow each chapter and there is a list of questions and topics for discussion at the end.

"One can hardly fail to note with pleasure the lack of dogmatism in the tone of the work as well as the simplicity and practicality of the suggestions."

+ Cath World 104:413 D '16 110w
 + Ind 87:349 S 4 '16 40w
 N Y Br Lib News 3:91 Je '16
 Pratt p14 O '16 30w

Reviewed by V. A. C. Henmon
 + School R 24:482 Je '16 650w

FREEMAN, WILLIAM, pseud. Awake! U. S. A. diags *$2 (2½c) Doran 355.7 16-13861

On the title page the author asks two questions: Are we in danger? and Are we prepared? The answer to the first is Yes, to the second No. Germany, Japan and England are the countries named as our probable antagonists. The book is divided into seven parts: Are we in danger? Are we prepared? What are our chances? Why we are not prepared; How political militarism fails; Will the proposed plans protect? What each citizen can do.

"Like some other preparedness advocates, William Freeman is given to exaggerated statement. Thus on page 129 of his book is a graphic showing that the United States had no modern dreadnoughts, while Japan has four, Germany fourteen and Great Britain twenty. According to the navy department statistics for 1914 the United States has eight such ships, Japan two, Germany thirteen and Great Britain the number he stated. It is well to be enthusiastic, but it is better to be right."

— Army and Navy Journal 53:1513 J1 22 '16 130w

Cleveland p148 D '16 80w

+ Ind 88:506 D 18 '16 50w
 N Y Br Lib News 3:105 J1 '16

"In all his arguments, facts, and quotations Mr. Freeman considers only that side of his subject which he wishes to prove, ignoring all those which might militate against or modify his contentions. He handles his material with much skill, ingenuity, and forcefulness."

— + N Y Times 21:266 J1 2 '16 210w

"A graphic synthesis of military and economic statistics."

+ R of Rs 54:115 J1 '16 30w

"Compact, tabulated—in a nutshell—here are the 'vital statistics' gathered in a single book."

+ Seven Seas 3:47 Je '16 70w

"Among the idlest of the horde of screaming documents that have fed the hysterical agitation for preparedness."

— Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 70w

FRENCH, MRS. ANNE (WARNER) (MRS. CHARLES ELLIS FRENCH). Susan Clegg and her love affairs. il $*1.30 (2c) Little 16-10880

Mrs. French died in 1913. These stories are the last that she wrote. In them we see Susan Clegg bravely overcoming her intention of marrying Jathrop Lathrop, who has returned from the Klondike as a millionaire, and romantically espousing in his place one Mr. Kettlewell—whose distinctions are a bald head, false teeth and simple-mindedness, but who is a "multi-millionaire" in comparison with Jathrop. Throughout the twelve chapters Susan talks and Mrs. Lathrop listens and rocks.

A L A Bkl 12:480 J1 '16

"Susan bears the stamp of reality. Even at the end of an hour or two with her in Mrs. Warner's pages she begins to pall upon the reader. Her proper place is in the short story, and he who would enjoy her to the full will recognize 'Susan Clegg and her love affairs' as really a collection of short stories, something to be read a bit at a time." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 10 '16 800w

+ Ind 86:405 Je 5 '16 40w

"Anne Warner's contribution to literature has always been clean and wholesome. She had a sense of humor and developed ridiculous situations with a whimsicality and appreciation that cheered and amused her readers."

+ Lit D 52:1468 My 20 '16 280w

"The book is humorous, and the character of Susan Clegg has enjoyed a deserved popularity."

+ N Y Times 21:208 My 14 '16 250w

"Toward the end the fun is somewhat forced."

+ — Springfield Republican p15 S 3 '16 260w

FRENCH, MRS. ANNE (WARNER) (MRS. CHARLES ELLIS FRENCH). Tigress. il $*1.25 (1½c) Watt 16-13510

This book is a distinct departure from the author's accustomed line of work. The Tigress of the tale is Nina Darling, wife, and as the story develops, widow of Colonel Darling of the Indian service. Her game is any man who comes her way and she usually abandons it quickly, possibly because it may seem to her, as it often does to the reader, to be very small game indeed. Colonel Darling shoots himself, by accident or design, after the appearance in India of Viscount Kneedrock, Nina's first lover, who was supposed to have been killed at the battle of Spion Kop. The book is filled with descriptions of Nina's superlative beauty and charm and with her flirtations. The untimeliness of these flirtations constantly interferes with her efforts to win back Lord Kneedrock, whom she really loves. Not until the death of the viscount (from a blow struck by a tiger in the Zoological gardens) is the reader told that the two were married before the South African war.

FRENCH, ROY LEON. Home care of consumptives. il $*1 (2½c) Putnam 616.2 16-20893

The author writes as a social worker who has had wide experience in anti-tuberculosis work. He says, "This book is written to give in compact and definite form the best knowledge now available on the home care of consumptives." In spite of all that has been done to provide hospitals and sanatoria the majority of tubercular patients must still be cared for within the family, and this book is written in answer to the questions of those who ask, "What must we do to give this sick member of our family the best possible care at home?" Matters of housing, climate, cleanliness, food, clothing, precaution against contagion, etc., are carefully covered. The illustrations, showing sleeping porches and other devices for obtaining fresh air, will be helpful. There is an annotated list of helpful books at the end.

"An appendix gives the names of manufacturers of invalid supplies useful in tuberculosis. At the end of the chapter 'Change of climate' a list is given of different states in which conditions are favorable, and addresses to which to write."

+ Cleveland p150 D '16 50w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

+ N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 60w

St Louis 14:393 N '16 10w

"Its special value lies in the fact that it emphasizes the social factors in the treatment of tuberculosis which are frequently ignored by physicians in their discussions of the disease."

+ Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 120w

"Mr. French, out of his years of experience in an executive capacity in the anti-tuberculosis movement, has culled the best that the literature issued by various individuals and organizations has produced, and has compiled it in a readable, compact and easily accessible form. As compared with such an original production along the same lines as Dr. Lawrason Brown's 'Rules for recovery from tuberculosis,' Mr. French's book cannot be considered. This handbook will be valuable in any family where the disease is present." P. P. Jacobs

+ Survey 37:178 N 18 '16 250w

FRENCH, THOMAS EWING, and IVES, FREDERICK WALTER. Agricultural drawing and the design of farm structures. il $1.25 McGraw 744 15-21008

"Being designed 'primarily for students in agriculture and agricultural engineering,' this book first takes up the general subjects of drafting and of working drawings. A long chapter dealing with a great variety of farm structures follows. Next come maps and topographical drawing, pictorial drawing, a variety of construction data and a brief bibliography. The subjects selected are practical, many of them having been chosen from executed designs by the authors."—Engin N

"The first part, a discussion of elementary lettering and drawings, is excellent; the second, a discussion of farm structures, is incomplete and insufficient though it contains many points of value. As a text for a brief course, it is good; as a reference book, not of great value. Bibliography (2½p.)."

+ — A L A Bkl 12:464 J1 '16

Engin N 75:1133 Je 15 '16 70w

"So sensible and practical a volume is a contribution of real value, worthy of being made the text-book in mechanical drawing in every country high school."

+ School Arts Magazine 15:442 F '16 70w

FREUD, SIGMUND. Wit and its relation to the unconscious; auth. English ed., with introd. by A. A. Brill. $2.50 Moffat 157 16-20330

"Dr. Freud is extremely interesting when he extends his theories of the workings of the unconscious mind into the region of wit and humour. His method is much the same, in essence, as that followed in M. Bergson's study of laughter, though the conclusions achieved in the two books are widely diverse. . . . Broadly, the thesis of this book is that wit is produced by a subconscious process of 'wit-work,' analogous both in its means and in its ends to the process of 'dream-work,' with which those who have followed Dr. Freud's system of psychology are already familiar. Dreams are our subconscious attempts, not always successful, to save ourselves from wakefulness. . . . The purpose of a witticism, according to Dr. Freud's argument, is of a like nature, but positive instead of negative. The dream attempts to short-circuit, as it were, a nervous tension in order to preserve the calm of slumber; the successful witticism produces a similar short-circuit of mental energy in order to give a definite pleasurable sensation."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Cleveland p144 D '16 50w

"The impression is more convincing that Dr. Freud has seen the problem correctly, has mastered the approaches and found a key and less convincing that he has utilized to the full the elements of his vision and the possibilities of his technique. . . . And then there remains the constant bug-bear of sex allusions, in which some see significant truth and others irrelevant obscenity. There is less of it in this volume than in others, but enough to disturb the perspective. The book cannot be neglected either by those who wish to study Freud or by those who wish to study the sense of humor."

+ — Dial 61:592 D 28 '16 520w

N Y Br Lib News 3:182 D '16

Pittsburgh 21:594 D '16 80w

St Louis 15:6 Ja '17

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p600 D 14 '16 750w

FRIED, ALFRED HERMANN. Restoration of Europe; tr. from the German by Lewis Stiles Gannett. $1. (4c) Macmillan 172.4 16-13516

The author, an Austrian, who in 1911 won the Nobel peace prize, presents in these one hundred and fifty pages a sane statement of the causes of the war and reasonable, constructive suggestions for its final abolishment. He states that this war is the logical outcome of the kind of "peace" that preceded it, virtually a state of latent and constantly threatening war; that the war (which can only end in exhaustion and can hardly lead to decisive results) is demonstrating the necessity of continuing the evolution out of international anarchy into international organization; that press jingoism, combined with some really wrong ideals of pacifism, is retarding the progress between nations; that a cooperative union must come into existence in which self-interest is strengthened by economic association; finally, that the people must decide whether the future shall revert to barbarism or shall bring in an era of restoration.

+ A L A Bkl 13:163 Ja '17

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:761 N '16 260w

"By far the best work on the reorganization of Europe after the war that has thus far appeared." K. F. Geiser

+ Ann Am Acad 69:290 Ja '17 110w

"The weakness of this particular preachment is that it suggests no way of cultivating that 'will' which is the real task of the pacifists."

+ — Army and Navy Journal 53:1513 J1 22 '16 110w

"Dr. Fried has lived most of his life in Berlin, where for fifteen years or more he edited a pacifist journal. At the breaking out of the war he found it advisable to remove to Switzerland, where he has since lived. There is not the least pro-Teuton learning in his book."

+ Bookm 43:624 Ag '16 770w

"He fails to see that if what he calls the occasion of the war had been taken care of the causes would never have had an opportunity to work. . . . The author seems to have no idea that personal and dynastic ambitions are the root causes of the present war."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 28 '16 530w

"For a number of years Dr. Alfred H. Fried has been numbered among Europe's keenest thinkers and ablest writers on international affairs. During decades, indeed, he has been attacking mediaevalism and militarism in the German and Austrian empires. A quarter of a century ago he assisted in the formation of the German Peace society. For fifteen years he published the 'Friedens-warte' (Watch-tower of peace) in Berlin and since the outbreak of the present war he has continued it in Zürich. He has written a score of books, the best known in America being 'Der Kaiser und die weltfriede.'"

F: A. Ogg

+ Dial 61:350 N 2 '16 580w

+ Ind 88:124 O 16 '16 220w

+ New Repub 9:25 N 4 '16 320w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16

"Sane, practical, farseeing, inspired by the courage of his convictions, Dr. Fried speaks in this little volume in a voice that deserves to be heard the world around. It is doubtful if anything has been written about the war that goes back quite so clearly and surely to its first causes; certainly there has been nothing that has demanded so earnestly of the world that it learn thoroughly the one useful lesson the war can teach—not to let it happen again."

+ N Y Times 21:261 Je 25 '16 670w

Reviewed by Lyman Abbott

+ Outlook 113:459 Je 28 '16 440w

St Louis 15:3 Ja '17 20w

Springfield Republican p6 S 21 '16 340w

FRIED, ALFRED HERMANN—Continued

"Dr. Fried is most illuminating in the lessons which he draws from the progress of the war (to April, 1915, when this book was published in the original). . . . We do not agree with the second conclusion drawn by the author from the progress of the war; namely, that it is impossible to humanize and regulate warfare." B. Lasker

+ — Survey 37:208 N 25 '16 850w

FRIENDS of France. il *$2 (3½c) Houghton
940.91 16-16725

Members of the American ambulance serving in France here describe their field service. Among the contributors are A. Platt Andrew, who writes the introduction, Stephen Galatti, Henry Sydnor Harrison, Preston Lockwood, Everett Jackson, James R. McConnell, Frank Hoyt Gailor, Henry Sheahan, Joshua G. B. Campbell, George Rockwell, Emery Pottle and Waldo Peirce. There is also a section devoted to extracts from letters, another devoted to Tributes and citations. A roster of the members of the American ambulance is given at the end. There are many illustrations including portraits of a number of the men.

+ Am Hist R 22:442 Ja '17 200w

"When the next generation reads the account of this titanic struggle between democracy and autocracy such books as this will be ample proof that Americans embraced what opportunities were offered to help bear the burden." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 16 '16 500w

+ Cath World 104:541 Ja '17 140w

+ Cleveland p137 N '16 60w

"How they worked, lived, and day by day went at the risk of their lives to rescue the French wounded from Ypres to the Alsace front, is simply told, each narrator giving all the credit to his comrades."

+ Ind 88:330 N 20 '16 70w

+ N Y Times 21:364 S 17 '16 750w

"There is no attempt at literary effect, and yet the book possesses that most essential of literary characteristics, simplicity of style. . . . The volume itself is handsomely gotten out and contains more than 50 uncensored photographs of war scenes. It is also illustrated with pen sketches by two famous French artists, M. Charles Huard and M. Bernard Naudin."

+ Springfield Republican p6 O 2 '16 650w

FRÖDING, GUSTAF. Selected poems; tr. from the Swedish, with an introd. by C: Wharton Stork. *$1.25 Macmillan 839.7 16-8362

In the introduction we are told that "the Northmen themselves, whether Norwegians, Danes or Swedes, pride themselves most on their lyric poetry, in which the Swedish muse is by far the most eminent." In this volume one of Sweden's distinguished lyric poets is introduced. Gustaf Fröding was born in 1860 and died in 1911. "He was enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen as no poet has been since Burns," says the translator. Two groups of poems are presented in this book: Vermland poems, in which he sings of his home province, and poems of the city, in which the narrative element is more prominent.

A L A Bkl 13:19 O '16

"The chief impression produced by the volume is one of sordid ugliness."

— Ath p416 S '16 290w

+ Ind 89:118 Ja 15 '17 50w

"Of the modern [Scandinavian] poets, Gustave Fröding is admittedly the greatest. He pulls the mask from reality; he is frank, and does not hesitate to vary the meter, rhyme, and stanzaic arrangement within the compass of a single poem. Form evolves as he composes; there are no set laws for his genius. His folk songs have that rare elemental touch that is so essential, and in all the poems translated for this volume, there is undeniable beauty and power."

+ R of Rs 53:761 Je '16 210w

+ St Louis 14:239 Je '16

"While we gladly draw attention to his well meant version, it would be wrong to pretend that he reproduces the magic of the original. . . . On the other hand, from the eight or nine slim volumes which Fröding published in the brief period of his activity, the translator has chosen extremely well; his selection is highly characteristic. . . . Fröding marks an entirely new departure in the prosodical history of Sweden, and his example must always be felt in the texture of future Swedish poetry."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p378 Ag
10 '16 920w

FROEST, FRANK. Maelstrom. *$1.25 Clode,
2 E: J. 16-8693

"Had it not been for a London fog Jimmie Hallett would not have blundered along through the streets without knowing where he was; if he had not wandered thus bewilderedly he might not have encountered the charming hatless and breathless girl who thrust a package of canceled checks into his hand; if he had not been given those canceled checks he would not have gone to call on James Edward Greye-Stratton; and if he had not gone there he would not have been sandbagged and recovered consciousness to find himself alone in the room with the body of a murdered man lying at his feet. . . . Mr. Froest, himself a former inspector of the Criminal investigation department of Scotland Yard, has no patience whatever with the amateur detective of popular fiction. The murderer of this story of his is finally hunted down through the skill and experience, not of Menzies alone, but of the entire police organization."—N Y Times

N Y Br Lib News 3:85 Je '16

"The tale is ingenious and interesting; but the author would be wise to spend some time and trouble on the improvement of his rather crude style."

+ — N Y Times 21:170 Ap 23 '16 320w

FROST, ROBERT. Mountain interval. *$1.25
Holt 811 16-23235

In his third book of verse Mr. Frost again writes against a New England background. There are five long poems in the book in the narrative style of "North of Boston" and many shorter poems in the manner of "A boy's will." "The simplicity and naive colloquialisms of the speech of Frost's New England natives, by means of a poetic art almost classical in its restraint, bring out the essential spirituality of their lives which he feels in part to be a quality of the land that bore them." (R of Rs)

"The most notable impression to be gained from this new volume of Mr. Frost's poems is that the grimness of 'North of Boston,' presented with no less firmness, is embedded here with the mellow atmosphere of humor. . . . The distinction of this collection is that Mr. Frost takes the lyricism of 'A boy's will' and plays a deeper music and gives a more intricate variety of experience." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 2 '16 1100w

"There are, too, elements of deep divination in his art, where it touches complex human relations and reactions. . . . In 'In the home stretch' the poet is singularly successful in suggesting ghostly presences, in creating a veritable haunted atmosphere for the old New England farmhouse, akin to that produced by the English poet, Mr. Walter de la Mare, in 'The listeners.' Mr. Frost is the one continuator at present of the 'tradition of magic' in American poetry." W: A. Bradley

+ Dial 61:529 D 14 '16 210w

+ Ind 88:533 D 25 '16 600w

Reviewed by Padraic Colum

+ New Repub 9:219 D 23 '16 1150w

"Mr. Frost's new volume is by no means momentous, but the fact that it contains the well-known 'Road not taken' and the poignantly moving 'Sound of the trees' alone makes the new collection interesting."

+ N Y Times 22:2 Ja 7 '17 310w

+ R of Rs 54:674 D '16 260w

FRYER, MRS. JANE (EAYRE). Mary Frances garden book; or, Adventures among the garden people. il *$1.50 Winston 716 16-3148

"The Mary Frances books are for teaching useful things in an interesting way. . . . The children are represented as having so much fun that the reader-children are expected to try gardening for themselves. Illustrations on every page, cut-out play-houses, and seasonable gardens add to the fascination of a book which tells, in story-fashion, the most vital facts in the lives of plants and vegetables, and teach the child when, how and what to plant, how to care for the gardens, and what to avoid."—Lit D

"Wide, illustrated margins, cut-outs for the garden at the various seasons, make the book more suitable for personal ownership; but if the library needs another garden book, this is one the children will like."

+ A L A Bkl 12:434 Je '16

"The explanations, maps, drawings, and diagrams will need the help of some older person—mother or teacher—for the full understanding of them by any child, but as a story-lesson the book is admirable, interesting, and useful."

+ Lit D 52:980 Ap 8 '16 140w

+ Nation 102:418 Ap 13 '16 110w

FULLER, JAMES FRANKLIN. Omniana; the autobiography of an Irish octogenarian. il *$3 Dutton 17-1329

"Humor and drollery of the first quality abound in Mr. James F. Fuller's random reminiscences. . . . Architecture, engineering, authorship, the stage, and one would hesitate to say how many more vocations and avocations have enlisted the abounding energies of this variously gifted son of Erin."—Dial

"Mr. Fuller, indeed, was fortunate in his literary friends and acquaintances—Lecky, Sir Arthur Helps, George Henry Lewes, Samuel Butler, and Dickens, amongst others; he even saw the actual birth of 'The Saturday Review' in the study at Vernon Hill."

+ Ath p417 S '16 970w

"As a lively book of personalia, Mr. Fuller's may take its place beside many of its kind. Its author has had a long and interesting life, and he writes of it as one who has enjoyed its every moment."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 11 '16 530w

"There are so many good and quotable things in this entertaining book that the only safe course is to resist the temptations to quote at all, lest one should go too far."

+ Dial 61:542 D 14 '16 180w

N Y Br Lib News 3:181 D '16

"The book has enough of permanent value to deserve the index which it possesses."

+ Sat R 122:230 S 2 '16 530w

+ Spec 117:658 N 25 '16 1300w

"It is something to have written the memories of a long life without a single bitter word. . . . Like Southey, he is 'circumambagious' in the manner of his narrative; but, unlike Southey, he is never dull."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p343 J1 20 '16 1050w

FULLER, MARGARET. New England childhood. *$1.50 (2½c) Little 16-21576

The child of whom the author writes so charmingly was Edmund Clarence Stedman. Thru long acquaintance with Mr. Stedman as his secretary, and thru lifelong familiarity with his native town, she has been able to recreate the days of his childhood and boyhood. His is a lovable little figure, somewhat wistful and very appealing, yet the story is not without its touches of humor.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 2 '16 580w

"The book is written for the general reader, and it succeeds in giving a more vivid and more interesting picture than is to be gained from the bulky 'Life and letters.'"

+ Dial 61:404 N 16 '16 200w

"The book is a beautiful record of the beginnings of a beautiful life, but it is something else; it is a vivid and charming and true picture of the New England of eighty years ago."

+ Ind 88:163 O 23 '16 120w

+ Nation 103:519 N 30 '16 50w

"The foreword of 'A New England childhood' is directly addressed to children. . . . But the book's actual interest lies equally, if not more, in what it has to offer to the adult reader."

+ N Y Times 22:6 Ja 7 '17 620w

"Gives a sense of actuality that few biographies attain."

+ R of Rs 55:99 Ja '17 120w

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 29 '16 430w

FULLERTON, WILLIAM MORTON. Hesitations; the American crisis and the war. *$1.25 (4c) Doubleday 327.73 16-21957

A criticism of President Wilson's international policy. The purpose of the book is to show "what the United States might have done, and what, indeed, had she been adequately informed and properly guided, she would have done" during the international crises thru which we have recently passed. The contents consist of chapters on: The first reactions of Washington; Incompetent stewardship; American "neutrality"; Action of the government of the United States; Consequences of the action of the government of the United States. An alliance with England and France is the policy recommended by the author.

Ath p439 S '16 100w

Ind 88:367 N 27 '16 200w

"It is the principal weakness of this book that its rehash of 'attacks on the administration' and its foreign policy is not really—except as a question of getting or losing votes—very interesting. It has long since ceased to be novel. . . . On the other hand, 'Hesitations' is written with obvious sincerity. And it does . . . end on a note of real constructive policy. It gives much more than a casual glance, too, to the subject of immigration."

+ — N Y Times 21:455 O 29 '16 310w

R of Rs 55:109 Ja '17 30w

"Mr. Fullerton's statement of the case against President Wilson is distinctly one of the most able we have come across. . . . He says much that we should not wish to say, and which in any case it would be improper for us to say."

+ Spec 117:657 N 25 '16 1750w

"Mr. Fullerton's book perhaps demands closer attention than the average reader will be disposed to give it. The argument is clear only when followed very closely."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 O 19 '16 960w

FURGERSON, ADA MAE, and JOHNSON, CONSTANCE FULLER WHEELER (MRS. BURGESS JOHNSON). From house to house. *$1.50 Dutton 641.5 16-8589

A book of recipes. "In nearly every household there are certain dishes or, at any rate, one dish, on the excellence or the originality of which the family pride themselves." This book represents a collection of recipes for such dishes. They were gathered by a trained nurse as she went from house to house in the exercise of her profession. The book is not "in any sense of the word a text book on cookery; it is meant for the housewife who knows how to cook." The recipes are conveniently arranged on the encyclopedia plan, with cross references.

FURNESS, CAROLINE ELLEN. Introduction to the study of variable stars. (Vassar semi-centennial ser.) il *$1.75 Houghton 523.8 15-23583

"This work is very timely in view of the great expansion in the past few years, not only in the observations of variable stars, but more especially in the deductions from their phenomena. . . . Following the introductory chapter the work falls naturally into four divisions: 1. The equipment of the observer; maps, charts, catalogues: Chapters 2 to 5; 2. Photometry of variable stars; visual, photographic, photo-electric: Chapters 6 to 8; 3. Reduction of the observations; light-scale, light-curves, elements and predictions: Chapters 9 to 11; 4. Deductions from these data; eclipsing and long-period variables, statistics, observing hints, tables: Chapters 12 to 15. That the book is written from the standpoint of the teacher is well evidenced by the care taken to explain the fundamental ideas of each chapter."—Science

FURNESS, CAROLINE ELLEN—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 13:66 N '16

"The author's experience as a teacher and as director of the Vassar college observatory is shown in the quality of the book. The professional as well as amateur observer will read with profit the practical hints given in chap. 15 on the use of the telescope, time, identification of variables, methods of recording, and precautions. From the standpoint of the astro-physicist a few points would seem open to modification. . . ." J. A. P.

+ — Astrophys J 43:86 Ja '16 570w

"We have here for the first time, in clear and simple form, a sufficiently extended presentation of those physical principles which underlie the methods and instruments of investigation, polarized light, analysis of spectra, formation of photographic images, and even the latest developments in photo-electricity. Perhaps the best of all the chapters in this admirable and authoritative volume is the one entitled Stellar magnitude."

+ Nation 102:143 F 3 '16 2100w

"It is a decided merit of the book that it contains a large number of references to original publications." H. E. Goodson

+ — Nature 96:674 F 17 '16 930w

+ R of Rs 54:345 S '16 140w

"It is rather remarkable that no comprehensive work on variable stars had previously appeared in any language, though Hagen's extensive treatise 'Die veränderlichen Sterne,' of which the first two parts have already been published, would soon have been completed had the war not delayed it." J. A. Parkhurst

+ — Science n s 43:501 Ap 7 '16 780w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p5 Ja 4 '17 820w

FURST, CLYDE (BOWMAN). Observations of Professor Maturin. *$1.25 (2c) Columbia univ. press 814 16-7530

Essays, twenty-two in all, which embody the observations of "a philosopher of cheerful mind as they have been remembered by one who, better than any one else, knew Professor Maturin as he thought, as he spoke and as he had his being." The central thought is the pursuit of happiness, the permanent sort of happiness that results from perfect physical and mental fitness, and from harmonious adjustment to work in life. The essays suggest rather than supply the means to this desirable end. For instance, the philosopher, in pointing out the value of a perusal of Brillat-Savarin's "Physiology of taste" says that he himself has become an earnest advocate of that gastronomy, which endeavors to transform eating from the ignorant indulgence it usually is to a reasonable science of nutrition and a refined art of enjoyment. And when the reader has finished this essay he too will want to read Savarin and curb any tendency to over-eating.

"The atmosphere of reflection, of leisure, of good and wide reading, together with the ability to enjoy, pervades the little group of essays concerning Professor Maturin and his observations of life."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '16 550w

+ Ind 87:104 Jl 17 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:87 Je '16

"Mr. Furst's Prof. Maturin shows a range of research somewhat beyond that of the average literary journalist, but he misses the persuasiveness of the ideal causerie by crowding together too many facts, without always pausing to distill their perfume. This collection which first appeared in the New York Evening Post is to be welcomed."

+ — Springfield Republican p8 Je 23 '16 630w

G

G., H. L. Meanwhile—a packet of war letters. 2. *$1 Dutton 940.91

"'Meanwhile' is a packet of letters written by H. L. G. to K. W. in consequence of some sorrow which had come to the latter. What the sorrow is or who the persons are is not stated. But the place is England and as the war is constantly in the background, the sorrow is undoubtedly due to members of the family having been killed in battle. The recipient was so much helped by these letters that permission to publish them was asked of the writer. The letters deal largely with one's attitude toward his own affliction and toward the crisis through which the world is passing. The writer does not take his ground at all times as if he were sure of it, but rather as one who is working his way toward the light."—Springfield Republican

N Y Br Lib News 3:188 D '16

"Beautifully written, sincere, deeply thoughtful, the 'packet of letters' is one of the really fine books from the war."

+ N Y Times 21:567 D 24 '16 530w

+ Springfield Republican p8 Ja 2 '17 180w

GADE, JOHN ALLYNE. Charles the Twelfth, king of Sweden. il *$3 (2½c) Houghton 16-22250

Mr. Gade has made a translation from the manuscript life of Charles XII of Sweden written in his old age by Carl Gustafson Klingenspor, who from boyhood had been the king's friend and loyal follower. "I was a soldier of Charles the Twelfth," he wrote. "To have fought under him was to love him. And now in my old age, scarred and broken in health, I would gather together all I have of him in memory, in letters, and in my diary of the old days, and so write of my king that my children and their children might know and love him, and mayhap also cherish Sweden the more." The translator says of his work, "It certainly forms one of the most veracious if not most interesting accounts of the life and times of King Charles the Twelfth."

"Apart from its romantic interest, which seems to us to be almost univaled, the book has high value as a study of a great military period possessing some phases analogous to our own."

+ Lit D 54:198, Ja 27 '17 980w

+ R of Rs 54:682 D '16 40w

GAËLL, RENÉ, pseud. Priests in the firing line; tr. by H. Hamilton Gibbs and Madame Berton. il *$1.20 Longmans 940.91 16-15279

"The writer of the book is a French priest who, too old to be sent into the fighting, was stationed in a hospital behind the firing lines. A younger man, his close friend, was at the very outbreak of war allotted to the task, filled by so many of the French clergy, of stretcher-bearer at the front. From the writer's own experiences and from the letters of his friend this book is written. . . . The entire book is a collection of sketches, anecdotes, brief glimpses of courage, faith, and suffering. Some of the men of whom the author tells are priests, others soldiers."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p8 N 2 '16 190w

"Touches the heart as no other war book has done."

+ Cath World 104:403 D '16 430w

+ Cleveland p137 N '16 50w

+ Ind 88:328 N 20 '16 160w

N Y Br Lib News 3:137 S '16

+ N Y Times 21:433 O 15 '16 830w

"There is much that is painful in the book; it could not be otherwise; since the wounded and the dying are the priest's chief care; but there is more of amazing heroism in the fighting line and the trenches."

+ Sat R 122:254 S 9 '16 480w

GAHAGEN, WILLIAM ROGERS. How to conduct the real estate, insurance and general brokerage business. *$1 Realty bk. co., 5905 Euclid av., Cleveland, O. 333 16-12742

The author, who has had experience as an instructor and broker, is a member of the Torrens land title registration league of Ohio. He states that "This brief treatise is simply a stepping stone to that field of literature which treats the subject in a detailed and comprehensive manner and goes to make up the real estate man's complete library. . . . It is hoped that the chapters on real estate and personal property, estates, landlords and tenant, real estate titles and rights of property holders, will be found of value to students." (Foreword) Each of the chapters is divided into short topical paragraphs. The book is a revision and extension (64 added pages) of the pamphlet issued in 1912.

GAINES, RUTH LOUISE. Treasure Flower, a child of Japan. il *$1.25 (3½c) Dutton 16-23964

This volume in the "Little schoolmates series" tells the story of the friendship between Treasure Flower, a little Japanese girl, and Lynette, an American. At first Treasure Flower distrusts the little stranger, for she has been taught to look with suspicion on all foreigners. But Lynette is irresistible and the ties are drawn closer when Lynette's father, the American doctor, saves Treasure Flower's life. The little girl, who has been brought up by a foster uncle and aunt, knows nothing of her parents, but in the course of the story her father, who has been a political exile, returns and it is learned that Treasure Flower is a princess. There is an introduction in which Florence Converse writes of the relations between Japan and the United States. The book has beautiful illustrations from Japanese prints.

+ A L A Bkl 13:227 F '17

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '17 210w

+ Ind 88:465 D 11 '16 40w

+ N Y Call p15 Ja 21 '17 160w

+ N Y Times 21:525 N 26 '16 40w

GALLATIN, ALBERT EUGENE. Certain contemporaries. il *$3 Lane 759.1 16-11155

"Certain contemporaries" as Glackens, Lawson, John Sloan, Sargent as a water colorist, are studied in A. E. Gallatin's short but sympathetic notes in art criticism which are attractively reprinted from the leading art magazines and freely illustrated."—Ind

+ Ind 88:241 N 6 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:108 Jl '16 20w

Pittsburgh 21:345 Jl '16 30w

St Louis 15:15 Ja '17

The Times [London] Lit Sup p514 O 26 '16 30w

GALLICHAN, WALTER M. Great unmarried. *$2.25 (3c) Stokes 173 (Eng ed 16-16921)

Among the evils of modern life, the author counts the involuntary celibacy of many women and the pseudo-celibacy of many men. His purpose in this book is to consider the causes and results of this condition and possible remedies. The remedies suggested are positive. He believes that much of the energy expended in the suppression of vice might better be devoted to the encouragement of virtue, and his remedies for the evils of celibacy are the removal of barriers to marriage and the establishment of higher ideals of marriage. He would also make the dissolution of unfortunate marriages easier.

The Times [London] Lit Sup p192 Ap 20 '16 190w

GALLISHAW, JOHN. Trenching at Gallipoli; the personal narrative of a Newfoundlander with the ill-fated Dardanelles expedition. il *$1.30 (2c) Century 940.91 16-22247

Like so many personal narratives of the war, this one was written after its author had been wounded and retired from active service. He is a Newfoundlander who was studying at Harvard when the war broke out. He enlisted at once in the First Newfoundlander regiment. In London he was detailed for duty in the war office, his regiment was to go to the front without him. But he wanted to go with it, and how he did so is told in his first chapter. The complete table of contents reads: Getting there; There; Trenches; Dugouts; Waiting for the war to cease; No man's land; Wounded; Homeward bound; "Feenish."

+ A L A Bkl 13:214 F '17

+ Nation 103:491 N 23 '16 320w

+ N Y Times 21:468 N 5 '16 1050w

GALLOWAY, THOMAS WALTON. Reproduction. il 60c J. G. Coulter, Bloomington, Ill. 612.6 16-1763

"Prof. Galloway's little book on 'Reproduction' in the School science series develops one, and a very excellent, method of approaching the subject. The main features of human reproduction, without suggestive details of any description, are enveloped in the generous cloak of animal and plant processes. Reproduction by division, by spore-formation, by budding, and by gametes is described in simple terms and in progressive development up to the complex conditions in human society. Self-control, chivalry, and sacrificial care of young are shown to be the higher products of human activity in dominating over the primitive animal sex-instincts."—Nation

+ A L A Bkl 12:458 Jl '16

"The subject is presented so tactfully and judiciously that the book may be safely recommended to young people."

+ Nation 102:sup504 My 4 '16 150w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:407 N '16 50w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. A sheaf. *$1.50 Scribner 824 16-19830

"A sheaf" is a compilation of various published and unpublished papers and essays. The book is divided into two parts, and might be termed a volume of humane protests and warnings. The first is a collection of protests against stupid national cruelties and injustices to humans and animals. . . . The first half of the book closes with, 'The will to peace,' which relates Galsworthy's reaction, just previous to the war, on reading a poster entitled, 'Why England and Germany must go to war.' . . . The second half of the book was written after the war and has two psychological divisions. One group of essays might be gathered under the head of 'First reactions to the war.' The latter portion Mr. Galsworthy himself entitles 'Second thoughts on the war.'—Bookm

+ A L A Bkl 13:112 D '16

Reviewed by Roberta Madison

+ Bookm 44:304 N '16 1150w

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 4 '16 1350w

+ Nation 104:24 Ja 4 '17 300w

"The book will be of intense interest to every American concerned in the contemporary civilization and honor of his own nation. It treats with knowledge, imagination and humor, the subject which is, in my own view at least, the most important consideration before our whole country to-day. Cruelty. It brings that subject before us at a time when we especially need to think of our own national conduct in this respect." Edith Wyatt

+ New Repub 9:sup5 N 18 '16 1250w

"There is hardly a page on which we do not feel the author's passionate wish for the upbuilding of a real democracy. . . . The book is grave, passionate, unblinking—never bitter, never trivial. It is also a mass of lucid and specific detail. . . . He is an artist in all that he does; he is a creative artist first of all. But he has set all his art, and his very love, of beauty, to the service of a suffering world."

+ N Y Times 21:437 O 22 '16 1150w

+ Spec 117:733 D 9 '16 110w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN—Continued

- + Springfield Republican p6 N 7 '16 620w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 O 12
'16 30w

GAMBLE, ELIZA BURT. Sexes in science and history; an inquiry into the dogma of woman's inferiority to man. *$1.50 (1½c) Putnam 396 16-23944

This is a revised edition of "The evolution of woman," published in 1894. The author says, "In this later work much added evidence appears going to prove the correctness of the theory advanced in the former work. In it the subject of sex-development has been brought down to the present time and in this later investigation it is found that each and every fact connected with the biological and sociological development of the last twenty years is in strict accord not only with the facts set forth in 'The evolution of woman' but with the conclusions therein arrived at." The book consists of three parts: The theory of evolution; Prehistoric society; Early historic society. The thesis it sets out to prove is that the female organism is in no way inferior to the male and that the former represents a later and higher development.

"The wide research and acute observation of the author cannot fail to lend considerable interest to the book."

- + Boston Transcript p8 Ja 3 '17 230w
— Springfield Republican p6 Ja 9 '17 330w

GANTT, HENRY LAURENCE. Industrial leadership. diags *$1 (6c) Yale univ. press 658.7 16-4452

The Page lectures for 1915 before the senior class of Sheffield scientific schol. That a higher degree of organization seems possible under an autocracy is one of the facts brought out by the war. "In this course of lectures," says the author, "I have tried to set forth the principles on which I believe an industrial democracy can be based which will be even more effective than any system of industrialism which can be developed under autocracy." Later on he states his belief that while industrial organization can be carried on more rapidly by autocratic means, its results, under a democracy, are more permanent and less liable to be perverted to false ends. Contents: Industrial leadership; Training workmen; Principles; Results of task work; Production and sales.

"A due regard for Mr. Gantt's professional bias in favor of the engineer and his apparent unfamiliarity with the problems, methods, and work of financiers, merchants, and economists will enable one to understand certain evident deficiencies in his treatment of industrial problems. . . . This is not a scientific book nor an exposition of scientific management. It is 'wisdom literature' for the guidance of men young or old who are engaged in the administration of industrial enterprises, and as such it is to be highly commended." C. B. Thompson

- + — Am Econ R 6:380 Je '16 830w

A L A Bkl 12:409 Je '16

"Unfortunately, Mr. Gantt is not as expert in organizing his writing as he is in creating a system of management. He knows the value of a plan in a factory but evidently does not realize that a logical outline is a necessary prerequisite for making a book. To a reader of penetration, and one possessed of a knowledge of Mr. Gantt's earlier book 'Work, wages and profits,' this latest effort is an interesting piece of industrial philosophy, but to other readers it is quite apt to be a puzzle, all the more complex because oftentimes it looks easy of solution." Malcolm Keir

- + — Ann Am Acad 65:316 My '16 380w
+ Boston Transcript p8 S 6 '16 190w

"The first of the addresses, bearing the same title as that of the volume itself, is most inspiring and will repay reading again and again. In the remaining chapters there is much that has been gone over at various times since the scientific management movement gathered force. Mr. Gantt's statement, however, is lucid and brief and will interest those who have not closely followed this important subject. The chapter on production and sales contains some unusually interesting sale-price curves."

- + Engin Rec 73:650 My 13 '16 320w

"It is the bias toward democracy and the rights of the workers that makes Mr. Gantt's views particularly significant."

- + Ind 87:314 Ag 28 '16 250w

"Mr. Gantt goes over much of the ground already covered in his 'Work, wages, and profits,' published some years ago. His view of industrial leadership is, however, more clearly outlined here than in the earlier volume. . . . Thus are the compatibility of scientific management and democracy revealed. When Mr. Gantt passes to a discussion of problems in economic theory, he is not so successful."

- + — Nation 102:sup497 My 4 '16 250w

Pittsburgh 21:351 J1 '16 20w

R of Rs 53:637 My '16 120w

Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 180w

GARDEN CITY COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES. Ideal homes in garden communities; a book of stock plans designed by Francis Pierpont Davis, and others. 2d ed il *$1 McBride 728.6 16-11389

A group of architects and engineers have collaborated in an attempt to bring together stock plans of the highest order for the use of the speculative builder and of individuals who cannot afford to employ architects. Individuality of design, utility and beauty have been the watchwords. One of the novel plans is that of a colonial bungalow, which consists of a group of individual apartments, each a complete home, facing upon a central court with a common entrance upon the street. The book is designed mainly for suburban builders.

- + Ind 87:32 J1 3 '16 40w

N Y Br Lib News 3:77 My '16

- + Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 300w

GARDNER, CHARLES. Vision and vesture: a study of William Blake in modern thought. *$1.25 Dutton 16-19836

"To Mr. Gardner the chief interest of Blake is his religion; and his poetry and art are expressions of that, like the art of a Gothic cathedral. . . . Blake had a certain view of the universe which he got from certain mystics so far as it was not original to himself; and it gave a unity to all his work which is not to be found in any other poet or artist of his age. The aim of Mr. Gardner's book is to insist upon this unity. He has evidently studied the prophetic books with great care and not as mere curiosities."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

- Ind 88:329 N 20 '16 170w

"Mr. Gardner is well read in the literature of his predilection, and his comments on Blake are often illuminating. . . . But in the main he suffers from the modern fallacy of identifying license with strength and sentimentalism with insight."

- Nation 102:651 Je 15 '16 600w

"To take merely the dogma of Blake's religion, as does Mr. Gardner, and then to try to relate him in a philosophic scheme with Schopenhauer and Nietzsche, to say nothing of dragging in by the heels, Goethe, Shaw, Strindberg and W. B. Yeats, is a comic misconception."

- New Repub 8:308 O 21 '16 270w

N Y Br Lib News 3:87 Je '16

"There is much good writing and not a few clever phrases in his book, but little clear and consistent criticism."

- Springfield Republican p17 Je 11 '16 900w

"For Blake life did not consist in looking for things that he might make art out of them. It was one great and coherent experience of which his art, like the art of Chartres cathedral, was an expression, not all happy or clear, for he was a human being with human imperfections, but all consistent and free from the blind caprice of the purely natural man. The great merit of Mr. Gardner's book is that it makes this plain."

 + The Times [London] Lit Sup p163 Ap 6 '16 1450w

GARDNER, EDWARD HALL. Effective business letters. 2d ed il $2 Ronald 658 16-10752

"A complete manual for business correspondence, equally suitable for the business man and the high-school student of correspondence." (School R) "Part 1 discusses general principles in simple terms adapted to the beginner's understanding. Part 2 takes up the mechanics of the art—make-up, heading, address, spacing, paragraphing, punctuation, paper stock, envelopes, etc., with a chapter on mistakes in language. . . . Part 3 goes into more explicit directions for specific types of letters, and deals as much with the thought as with the form. In part 4 the author returns to general principles, but now speaks of unity, coherence, emphasis, and other general aspects of the subject." (Nation)

"A most satisfactory manual, for either the business man or student, based on the best current practice."

+ A L A Bkl 12:117 D '15 (Review of 1st edition)

+ Educ R 51:417 Ap '16 30w (Review of 1st edition)

"A good textbook, in that it instructs and informs, with abundant sub-headings and examples, and does not go into lengthy justification of the principles advanced. There is much valuable information for the business correspondent in this book."

+ Nation 101:724 D 16 '15 350w (Review of 1st edition)

"By far the best book on the subject of correspondence which has come to the notice of the writer. This book aims to place the study of correspondence where it really belongs, in the third or fourth year of the high-school course." D. W. Morton

+ School R 23:727 D '15 450w (Review of 1st edition)

GARDNER, FRANK DUANE. Successful farming. il $2.50 Winston 630 16-16132

"This book is written for farmers. It makes a popular appeal to all men engaged in farming. It will also be of interest to the student of agriculture and the prospective farmer. It is designed to be a handy reference on the whole range of agriculture in the United States and Canada." (Preface) The ten parts into which the book is divided are devoted to: Soils and soil management; Farm crops; Horticulture, forestry and floriculture; Livestock farming; Dairy farming; Farm buildings and equipment; Farm management; Plant and animal diseases, insect enemies and their control; Home economics and agricultural education; Tables of weights, measures and agricultural statistics. The author is professor of agronomy at Pennsylvania state college and experimental station, and many of the special chapters of the book are contributed by experts. The index seems to be comprehensive.

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:158 O '16

"An attractive, authoritative 'farmer's book' and reference source of nearly 1100 pages and over 400 illustrations. . . . The tables at the back of the volume give statistics and valuable data concerning farm products."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p21 N '16 180w

GARDNER, MARY SEWALL. Public health nursing. $1.75 (1½c) Macmillan 610.7 17-118

Public health nursing is the latest development of modern nursing work. It is the outgrowth of the district nursing movement. The district nurse worked only with the poor in their homes. The public health nurse works thru the department of public health, the public school, the store, factory, etc. It is part of the modern tendency to substitute social service for charity. Part 1 of the book gives a history of The public health nursing movement. Part 2 takes up Visiting nursing. Part 3 is devoted to Special branches of public health nursing, some of which are Tuberculosis nursing, Child welfare nursing, School nursing and Mental hygiene nursing. The author is superintendent of the Providence district nursing association, and the book is published with an introduction by M. Adelaide Nutting, professor of nursing and health in Teachers' college, Columbia university.

GARDNER, MONICA M. Poland. $1.25 Scribner 943.8 (Eng ed War16-56)

"Miss Gardner has long been a student of Polish history, literature, and national character, and is the author of a critical and biographical study of Adam Mickiewicz, the most famous of Polish poets. In this book she attempts to interpret the national ideals of the Polish people through their literature, and especially as those ideals have found expression in the work of several of the most important poets who have written in that tongue. . . . Against oppression and persecution Miss Gardner shows the Polish spirit of intense patriotism battling to retrieve national existence, to save the land, to cherish the literature, language, and ideals. Out of the spiritual conditions thus created she sees the evolution of the special characteristics of Polish literature, especially Polish poetry. And by reason of those conditions Polish poetry embodies, she thinks, the very soul of Polish national aspirations and ideals. In each of five poets here studied she finds some distinctive expression of Polish national character, experience, or aspiration."—N Y Times

+ Boston Transcript p7 Jl 19 '16 720w

"The best gems of Polish poetry are lavishly presented in the pages of the volume, and they enhance its value. It is a supremely difficult task to render in a foreign language the dazzling imagery, and the almost aerial, impalpable beauty of Polish poetry but the writer has courageously undertaken and admirably performed her task."

+ Cath World 103:682 Ag '16 600w

+ Ind 88:75 O 9 '16 60w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:87 Je '16

+ N Y Times 21:305 Ag 6 '16 700w

"Miss Monica Gardner in her eloquent and touching book is not concerned with any comparisons, nor does she dwell, except incidentally, on the sufferings of Poland in the last year and a half. Her aim is rather to bring home to her readers the expression of the soul of a people by its poets, and in particular by Mickiewicz, Krasinski, Slowacki, Zaleski, and Ujejski, and to emphasize the peculiar qualities which distinguish them from the poets of other lands. . . . She gives us an excellent account, enriched by many spirited translations, of the principal works of these remarkable poets."

+ Spec 116:83 Ja 15 '16 950w

GARLAND, HAMLIN. They of the high trails. il $1.35 (2c) Harper 16-10307

A group of stories representative of the author's work of the past ten and more years. All are stories of the Rockies, written with none of the sensationalism that characterizes the usual western tale. Contents: The grub-staker; The cow-boss; The remittance man; The lonesome man; The trail tramp; The prospector; The outlaw; The leaser; The forest ranger.

"Readable, though they often portray the sordid and the melodramatic."

+ A L A Bkl 12:481 Jl '16

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 27 '16 600w

"He certainly knows and for years has known the high country of the mountain west, and the people who have passed up into it. When the frontier is absolutely gone—indeed, they say there is none now—his book, like Mr. Wister's will keep in mind a passing phase of American civilization better than some more formal histories." E. E. Hale

+ Dial 61:27 Je 22 '16 600w

"Garland writes of the outdoors understandingly. But when he sets people to influencing people his insight is less true. He falls back on the accepted formulas of magazine fiction, and the men and women in his stories fail to live up to the possibilities of their setting."

GARLAND, HAMLIN—Continued

+ — Ind 86:486 Je 19 '16 80w

"No lover of the west could read the volume without feeling his heart lift again in the presence of her grandeurs and warm in recognition of her inimitable human kind."

+ Nation 103:132 Ag 10 '16 380w

"They are atmospheric and real, and you feel their sincerity."

+ N Y Times 21:202 My 14 '16 450w

+ R of Rs 53:760 Je '16 70w

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 200w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:322 Jl '16 30w

GARLAND, JOHN, pseud. Ross Grant, gold hunter. il *$1.25 (1c) Penn 16-13744

This story for boys is a sequel to "Ross Grant, tenderfoot." Ross is a boy whose father has sent him out to Wyoming hoping that an active life will turn him from his desire to study medicine. But experiences in the mountains, where his knowledge of first aid methods win him the sobriquet, "Doc Tenderfoot," help to fix the boy's determination to follow medicine rather than business. At the opening of this story he is just ready to start for the east when an emergency call takes him back to the mountains. The result is that he is drawn into an exciting contest for a gold claim. His patient, Hans Holzworth, holds the right to a rich claim on which Sandy McKenzie, Ross's old enemy, has cast a covetous eye, and it is to protect Hans's interests that Ross turns gold hunter.

GARNETT, MRS. LOUISE AYRES (MRS. EUGENE H. GARNETT). Master Will of Stratford; a midwinter night's dream. *50c Macmillan 812 16-5889

A play for children in three acts with prologue and epilogue. The prologue and epilogue show the interior of John Shakespeare's house in Stratford. Mistress Shakespeare, her lad Will, a boy of twelve, a little neighbor and Sir Thomas Lucy are the characters. The three acts form a play within a play. Will falls asleep by the fire and fancies come to him in dreams. Puck, Titania and the fairies, together with Sir Thomas Lucy and Queen Elizabeth. All these are shown in the play. There is a glossary of Warwickshire dialect and notes at the end of the play.

A L A Bkl 12:487 Jl '16

"A fantastic and rather futile little play. Not in the least objectionable; it possesses, in the main, merely negative qualities."

— Boston Transcript p4 My 24 '16 170w

"Over-long and involved for use with children of the age for which it is intended, but the glossary of Warwickshire dialect and notes at the end are aids to interpretation."

Cleveland p68 Je 190w

+ Ind 86:183 My 1 '16 80w

"The whole thing is in the nature of a fairy pantomime, and does not challenge serious criticism, but the dialogue is brightly written and the entire scheme . . . is worked out with much natural cleverness, if without much regard to theatrical difficulties. Will really is the sort of boy that Shakespeare might have been."

+ Nation 103:617 D 28 '16 270w

"One could hardly conceive of a more delightful drama for boys and girls and for all who are young in heart. The author, Louise Ayres Garnett, has handled the Warwickshire dialect of the period with great skill, and the effect of the quaint words enhances the value and heightens the atmosphere of the play."

+ R of Rs 53:633 My '16 150w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:187 Ap '16 30w

GARRETT, ERWIN CLARKSON. Army ballads and other verses. *$1 Winston 811 16-9572

This book is made up of verses reprinted from the author's two earlier volumes, "The Dyak chief and other verses," and "My Bunkie and other ballads," together with fifteen later poems not heretofore published in book form. Part 1 consists of American army ballads based on the author's experiences in the Philippines; part 2 contains the new verses; part 3 is made up of a miscellaneous collection, and part 4 gives his long poem, "The Dyak chief."

"The tone and temper is a pale reflection of the Kipling influence which was stronger ten years ago than it is today."

Boston Transcript p8 O 18 '16 300w

N Y Br Lib News 3:181 D '16

+ N Y Times 22:8 Ja 7 '17 80w

GATES, ALICE JANE, comp. Catalogue of technical periodicals, libraries in the city of New York and vicinity. (Bibliographical contributions) $3 United engineering soc., 29 W. 39th st., N. Y. 016.6 15-16022

"The library of the Engineering societies, New York city, has begun a highly commendable work in compiling a bibliography of engineering literature. . . . Seven libraries are included in this catalog: Columbia university, Chemists' club, American society of civil engineers, Engineering societies, New York public library, Plainfield (N. J.) public library and Stevens institute of technology." (Engin N) "It contains about 2600 main entries and cross-references, with an entry for all general indexes and an indication of the library or libraries in which each periodical is to be found." (Elec World)

+ Elec World 66:710 S 25 '15 50w

"This bibliography will be an exceedingly useful tool in the office of any engineer who has access to one or all of the libraries listed. It is hoped eventually to extend the list to other engineering libraries throughout the country."

+ Engin N 74:788 O 21 '15 300w

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p25 F '16 30w

GAY, CARL WARREN, ed. Breeds of livestock. (Rural text-book ser.) il *$1.75 Macmillan 636 16-6660

"The original material of which this work is composed was prepared for the 'Cyclopedia of American agriculture' by men who have been more or less eminently identified with the respective breeds of which they write. This subject matter has been revised, rearranged, amplified and brought up to date by Dr. Carl W. Gay, professor of animal industry, University of Pennsylvania. The work considers separately all the important breeds of livestock which are of general utility in American agriculture."—Springfield Republican

"Intended as a handbook for the breeder, and as a text for the student. Considers horses, cattle, sheep, goats, and swine."

A L A Bkl 13:155 Ja '17

Ind 87:421 S 18 '16 20w

N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 26 '16 230w

GEHLKE, CHARLES ELMER. Émile Durkheim's contributions to sociological theory. *$2 Longmans 301 15-4217

"This monograph which is published as the first study in volume 63 of the Columbia studies in political science is an attempt to evaluate the doctrines of Émile Durkheim. It should be of especial interest to those who do not find readily available the works of this eminent French sociologist." (Int J Ethics) "The ethical theories of Durkheim are especially interesting. Morality is a system of rules emanating from a group and imposed upon its members. At first there was the clan, then the village, and then the nation. At present the transition from the morality of the national group to the morality of the occupational group has not yet been accomplished. . . . Dr. Gehlke makes a few critical remarks which are just and moderate. He points to the genius as evidence against this theory of social causation." (J Pol Econ)

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 1 '16 90w

"The author has not merely given a fair account of Durkheim's doctrines supplemented by numerous references to the original works, but also has offered a number of excellent criticisms. These are directed to the premises underlying Durkheim's theories. Of especial interest to the student of ethics is the material devoted to the discussion of the ethical implications of Durkheim's sociology." J. K.

+ Int J Ethics 26:145 O '15 300w

"An interesting presentation of the essentials of Durkheim's sociological theory. A summary and interpretation of this system ought to prove of considerable value to English-speaking readers, especially as the material it presents can otherwise only be found scattered throughout a number of different books and pamphlets."

+ J Pol Econ 23:410 Ap '15 350w

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD; an account of its activities, 1902-1914. Il General education board, 61 Broadway, N. Y. 37.6

15-2090

This is the first complete report of the General education board, altho since its organization in 1902 reports have been made annually to the Department of the interior and printed in the reports of the department. The entire field of the board's activities is covered, with chapters devoted to: History of the General education board; Resources and expenditures; Farm demonstrations, boys and girls clubs; Secondary education; Colleges and universities; Medical education; Rural education; Negro education. There are 31 maps and a number of half-tone illustrations, also an index.

GEORGE, W. L. Intelligence of woman. *$1.25 (2c) Little 396 16-23071

A book that will prove exasperating to many readers. The advanced, intellectual woman will not like Mr. George's title essay, and the domestic, home-keeping woman will turn and rend him for his proposed "break-up of the family." However this quotation from his first essay will define his position, one to which no thinking woman should take objection: "I believe that these differences [between the male and female intellect] are superficial, temporary, traceable to hereditary and local influences. I believe that they will not endure forever, that they will tend to vanish as environment is modified, as old suggestions cease to be made." And in "Woman and the paint pot," a discussion of the position of woman in art, he says again, "If woman is producing inferior work it is because she is still an inferior creature, but I do not think she will remain one." Some of the seven essays have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly, others in Harper's magazine.

+ — A L A Bkl 13:148 Ja '17

"No one will agree with everything in this book, some will be immensely angered by many of its assertions and assumptions. That does not alter the effect that it is as good reading as anyone is likely to come across this year, that it is intensely interesting and consummately well written."

+ N Y Times 21:498 N 19 '16 900w

+ R of Rs 55:214 F '17 70w

"The fact that the woman question which is primarily one of politics, can be made one of sex, is the sensationalist's opportunity. . . . Were the work sincere, sober and scientific, his discussion of the woman question could excite no reasonable objection no matter how many heartburnings it might cause. But it is merely a journalistic exploitation of a subject which, unfortunately, has a 'racy' side."

— Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 230w

Wis Lib Bull 12:450 D '16 60w

GEORGE, W. L. Strangers' wedding; the comedy of a romantic. *$1.35 (1c) Little 16-1396

The story of a marriage between two young people of different station who find contact on any plane but that of physical attraction impossible. Roger Huncote, after leaving Oxford takes up residence in a social settlement. In the sweetness and seeming simplicity of one of the girls of the neighborhood he finds an irresistible charm and, with the fatuity of a man in love, believes that he can overcome the little personal characteristics that jar on his fastidious senses and make of her the ideal of what a wife should be. The author traces the development of their relationship after marriage and leads up to the sudden reaction of each. Fortunately for Roger, it is Sue who takes matters into her own hands and who, in company with an old lover, finds the way that sets them both free.

+ A L A Bkl 12:288 Mr '16

Reviewed by Wilson Follett

Atlan 118:501 O '16 70w

"With his latest novel, 'The strangers' wedding,' Mr. W. L. George makes secure his claim to be ranked among writers who count. It also makes secure his claim to be ranked chief among the few writers who really understand that vital and most hampering factor in modern life, the influence of the infinitely little. It is a book of unusual insight, wonderfully comprehending, interpreted in short, snappy sentences that are tantalizingly quotable." Rupert Scott

+ Bookm 42:714 F '16 800w

"Of course through some two hundred pages Mr. George manages this situation with no little skill. It is, however, all very futile, and he adds nothing to the wide knowledge of it given us by other novelists. Continuously we have thrust in our faces its unoriginality and the uselessness of telling it all over again. . . . Many passages in the novel make, however, for our understanding of the novelist's capacity to depict human and social emotions." E. F. E.

— + Boston Transcript p10 Ja 1 '16 1300w

Reviewed by E. E. Hale

Dial 60:214 Mr 2 '16 800w

+ Ind 83:393 Mr 13 '16 80w

"If Huncote were not a snob and an ass to begin with, and if his Sue were not a born dillard and vulgarian, the story of their relations might be more subtle, and therefore more interesting. But Mr. George is content to take the situation broadly, as it has so often been taken before. He produces his phial of oil and his phial of slightly colored water, and with vast enthusiasm demonstrates the undeniable fact that they will not really mix. Here, as in 'The second blooming,' he displays that amazing and complacent cleverness of workmanship which is the curse of his school."

— Nation 102:107 Ja 27 '16 700w

"The novel is subtitled 'The comedy of a romantic,' and in its quiet irony it well merits the name; but there is tragedy in it, too. It is admirably written, and the plot and characters develop naturally, without jerk or strain. It is an artistic piece of work, and an excellent presentation of certain phases and facts of life."

+ N Y Times 21:5 Ja 2 '16 1000w

No Am 204:292 Ag '16 7100w

"Do not miss 'The strangers' wedding.' In spite of the fact that the first hundred or so pages are not as good as the last couple of hundred, Mr. George has here done a real piece of work, marked by the same fine qualities which distinguished 'The second blooming.'" Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 89:188 Ja 15 '16 700w

"As a picture of English class differences, it is an absorbing and exceedingly well-written work."

+ R of Rs 53:245 F '16 100w

"Apart from the artificial main plot of the story, Mr. George draws some very interesting and vivid pictures of life among the London classes among which the settlement workers move. . . . The novel is without the 'naturalistic' unpleasantness of 'The second blooming,' and while one may not think the author's thesis proved or worth proving, the book is not without cleverness and meritorious workmanship."

— + Springfield Republican p15 Ja 2 '16 600w

"Mr. George has much skill in bringing out the atmosphere of place or condition; and clearly his rather acid sense of humour is particularly attracted by the half-baked. The settlement is half-baked; both the leading characters are half-baked; the boy's mother is half-baked. . . . This is no 'comedy of a romantic,' for the hero was no romantic. The first thing asked of a romantic is love, and we see no evidence that Roger Huncote loved Sue Groby."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p56 F 3 '16 380w

GEORGIAN poetry, 1913-1915. *$1.50 Putnam
821.08 16-8836

A volume of "Georgian poetry, 1911-1912" was issued two years ago. In the contents of this second volume the same poets, with few changes, are represented. A few contributors to the former volume are not included, "either because they have published nothing that comes within its scope, or because they belong in fact to an earlier poetic generation." Two new names, Ralph Hodgson and Francis Ledwidge, are added. Two plays are included "King Lear's wife," by Gordon Bottomley, published here for the first time, and "The end of the world," by Lascelles Abercrombie.

A L A Bkl 12:417 Je '16

"We do not imagine that the selection before us will meet with the applause which was bestowed upon its predecessor. Apart from certain exceptions, the poets of the present day, as represented in this volume, appear to have a distinct leaning towards unpleasant subjects, out-of-the-way themes, and noisy effects. Rupert Brooke and J. E. Flecker, two of the most noteworthy contributors to the volume, have finished their work. Messrs. W. H. Davies and Walter de la Mare stand out, we think, above the remaining poets; and Mr. John Masefield, since his abandonment of the transportine manner, has renewed his claims on our admiration. We do not understand why Messrs. G. K. Chesterton and Sturge Moore have been allowed to drop out."

— + Ath 1915,2:461 D 18 280w

"Mr. Abercrombie is fortunately a man who can afford an occasional failure, a man capable of outliving 'The end of the world.' . . . The second volume of 'Georgian poetry' is in the main wisely chosen, and the editorship is sound." O. W. Firkins

+ — Nation 103:348 O 12 '16 470w

+ N Y Times 21:368 S 17 '16 760w

"Looking through this volume of poetry—poetry which has appeared during the last few years, mainly the work of the young poets who stand for the 'Georgian revival'—one cannot fail to be struck by an intermittent complaining tone. Among much that is adolescent and vital there continually appears the sick whine of the period before the war—a discontent peevish rather than passionate. There are exceptions to this discontent. Occasionally a pure note sings out. Such is the note of Rupert Brooke, whose song of delight in all things rings like an echo of Browning. Such, too, is the note we hear in the poetry of another contributor to this book. We have not found, since Browning died, any such positive and assured belief in life as we find in Mr. Ralph Hodgson's 'Song of honour.'"

— + Sat R 121:136 F 5 '16 1000w

"The general characteristic of the verse is a certain forcing of the note. There is a feverish anxiety at all costs not to be commonplace. If allowance is made for the objection we have just described, it must be admitted that there is a great deal of conscious art and of high poetic intention in much of the Georgian verse. Even if the note is forced, the singer makes an appeal to ear and mind which is often extraordinarily attractive. . . . Considering the book once more as a whole, we say deliberately that all who care for the future of English poetry—we hope there are a great many people who care a very great deal about it—should certainly read and consider 'Georgian poetry,' and thereby learn something of the goals upon which our younger poets are now fixing their eyes."

+ — Spec 116:190 F 5 '16 1600w

GEROULD, GORDON HALL. Saints' legends.
*$1.50 (1½c) Houghton 820.9 16-19451

This volume on saints' legends as a part of English literature is contributed to the "Types of English literature" series, edited by William Allan Neilson. The author has had to do pioneer work, since, as he points out, no such study has heretofore been made for any of the European literatures. It was found necessary first of all to define and limit his subject matter and he offers the following as his working definition: "The saint's legend is a biographical narrative . . . concerned as to substance with the life, death, and miracles of some person accounted worthy to be considered a leader in the cause of righteousness; and, whether fictitious or historically true, calculated to glorify the memory of its subject."

+ A L A Bkl 13:102 D '16

"The student of literary history, the lover of religious art, and the student of folk-lore will all profit by reading Professor Gordon Hall Gerould's 'Saints' legends.' . . . To cover so wide a field in less than four hundred pages calls for extreme compression and the almost complete avoidance of illustration,—qualities that are not likely to attract the general reader."

+ Dial 61:402 N 16 '16 600w

N Y Br Lib News 3:167 N '16

+ R of Rs 54:565 N '16 110w

St Louis 15:18 Ja '17

"The book represents the results of more than ten years' research and other preparation. . . . Treating such a very special field as it does, and that in so great detail, the book will hardly appeal to the general reader. It will have some interest, however, for the literary or ecclesiastical antiquarian and for the specialist in English study."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ja 9 '17 400w

"As a manual of fact, the book is eminently satisfactory and astonishingly complete. Only in one direction is it inadequate. The fascinating relations between some of the most popular and picturesque (if least spiritual) of the legends, the 'Vitæ patrum' for instance, and that sophisticated literature of Constantinople that in the earliest middle ages represented culture in the European world, have been insufficiently studied." H: S. Canby

+ Yale R n s 6:436 Ja '17 960w

GEROULD, (MRS.) KATHARINE FULLERTON. Hawaii; scenes and impressions. il
*$1.50 (6c) Scribner 919.69 16-18497

The impressions of one month spent in the islands constitute the content of this book. It is a very personal book: "I have tried not to vex the pages with history or statistics," says the author. "Information I have tried modestly to leave to the encyclopædic mind." There are three papers, reprinted from Scribner's magazine, on Honolulu: The melting-pot; Byways in Hawaii; Kalaupapa: the leper settlement on Molokai. The author's handling of her subject in the last chapter is masterly, and she pays a tribute to the efficient and humane management of the settlement: "I have never seen anything in our contemporary chaos of prophylactic legislation and humanitarian hysteria one half so humanly fine as what has been done, as quietly as the coral-insect builds the reef, on the low promontory of windward Molokai."

A L A Bkl 13:118 D '16

"Mrs. Gerould has discovered Hawaii for American literature." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 27 '16 1400w

Dial 61:474 N 30 '16 290w

+ Ind 88:408 D 4 '16 70w

N Y Br Lib News 3:170 N '16

"The part dealing with Kalaupapa, the leper settlement on Molokai, is of genuine historical significance. . . . Mrs. Gerould deals with it sanely and comprehensively, giving her reader a clear understanding of the nature and extent of the work. . . . But the chief service which is done by this part of Mrs. Gerould's book has to do with the memory of Father Damien."

+ N Y Times 21:485 N 12 '16 570w

+ R of Rs 54:571 N '16 10w

St Louis 14:403 N '16

"The book is illustrated with a series of fine reproductions of pictures taken during the month spent by Mrs. Gerould on the islands, and these add much to its charm."

+ Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 320w

GIBBON, JOHN MURRAY. Hearts and faces.
*$1.35 (1c) Lane 16-10723

A novel which promises at the outset to be a story in broad Scots dialect, but which later, as the action is transferred to London and Paris, is carried on in the King's English. George Grange is a student in Aberdeen university when the story opens. He is young and unsure of himself and of the future. He thinks half-heartedly of taking up medicine, but a chance meeting with Nathaniel Reid, a fine old Scotch painter, turns his attention to art and determines his later career. Reid teaches him how to see color and starts him on his way to success. The story moves in a leisurely manner; the conventional love story is lacking and so are references to the artistic temperament.

"The real quality of the book is its truth to human nature. Mr. Gibbon goes sufficiently deep into life to select unusual types and situations; but his selection is so just and his treatment so careful that the types become real persons, and the situations sequences of actual events. There are some clever sketches of Aberdeen and typical Scots."

+ Ath p287 Je '16 150w

"A distinctly interesting description of artist life in Scotland, London and Paris. Tho much of the material is unpleasant, it is sanely and simply treated. The plot is weak, but the characters are extremely well done."

+ — Ind 86:405 Je 5 '16 40w

Lit D 53:75 Jl 8 '16 180w

"Those who like best to look upon the sunny side of life probably will not enjoy Mr. Gibbon's novel. For it is grim and ironic and it deals much with the dark and seamy sides of human nature. It is said that some of his characters are thinly veiled portraits of people well known in London."

+ — N Y Times 21:230 Je 4 '16 690w

"Since George Moore, in 'A modern lover,' sketched the career of a successful artist we remember nothing in fiction so vivacious and veracious as Mr. Gibbon's study of a Scotch painter."

+ Sat R 122:19 Jl 1 '16 310w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 4 '16 320w

"He does not make Grange convincing; there is so little movement in him and there are so many jerks. The details, including the art critic, are cleverly contrived, and there are careful descriptions of the north-east coast and of the forest of Fontainebleau."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p296 Je 22 '16 400w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. Blackest page of modern history. *75c (11c) Putnam 956 16-6087

In this little book the author sets forth events that took place in Armenia in 1915. He says: "It is because the Armenian massacres in Turkey are clearly established, because responsibilities can be definitely fixed, and because an appeal to humanity can be made on behalf of the remnant of the Armenian race in the Ottoman empire without the slightest suspicion of political interest, that I feel it advisable and imperative at this moment to call attention to what is undoubtedly the blackest page in modern history. to set forth the facts, and to point out the responsibilities." (Foreword) The charge he makes is that the Ottoman government set out deliberately to exterminate the Armenian race, and that Germany, having the power to prevent this, refrained from using that power, apparently from selfish ends.

A L A Bkl 12:421 Je '16

Ind 86:254 My 15 '16 180w

"Professor Gibbons is at pains to clear the question of all the crude and befogging data that have been so assiduously dispensed from Constantinople; he meets every charge and excuse with 'authentic eye-witness testimony,' carefully sifted and verified, and was himself present at Adana when the massacre was in progress, besides visiting various other places immediately after fire and sword had been at work. It is difficult to refrain from quoting at length from his harrowing pages."

+ Nation 102:572 My 25 '16 670w

+ N Y Times 21:148 Ap 16 '16 400w

R of Rs 53:503 Ap '16 20w

"It is a terrible indictment, which we hope will be widely read in America and elsewhere."

+ Spec 116:694 Je 3 '16 180w

Springfield Republican p13 S 24 '16 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p230 My 18 '16 250w

"The author's long residence in Asia Minor and Constantinople gives him familiarity with the problem and he speaks with impassioned authority."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:269 Je '16 50w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. Foundation of the Ottoman empire. maps *$3 (5c) Century 949.6 16-9416

This history covers the years 1300-1403. It is devoted to the four emperors under whose rulership the Turkish empire took shape, Osman, Orkhan, Murad, and Bayezid. To each of these one of the four long chapters that make up the book is devoted. In addition there are two appendices, giving Traditional misconceptions of the origin of the Osmanlis and their empire, and The emirates of Asia Minor during the fourteenth century. There are six maps, a chronological table, a bibliography of fifty pages, and an index. The author was for some years a resident of Constantinople as a teacher in Robert college.

"The best feature of the work is the bibliographical study, which includes in about five hundred titles Byzantine writers, translated Turkish historians, chronicles of various peoples, state papers, popular songs, and European books. . . . The preface, notes, and appendices reveal a degree of self-consciousness and an interest in displaying the errors of predecessors that would be more tolerable if Dr. Gibbons were himself more exact. . . . A more fundamental deficiency lies in a failure to analyze and appraise the testimony of the Ottoman historians, even as thoroughly as can be done without a knowledge of their languages." A. H. Lybyer

+ — Am Hist R 22:140 O '16 700w

"The early history of the Osmanlis has never been more clearly or forcibly written, or better authenticated by frequent references to the contemporary Byzantine historians, and to the recent researches of Slavonic scholars. . . . Some exaggerations tend to confirm an attitude hardly that of an historian. It is to be regretted that the oriental side of his work is weak."

+ — Ath p121 Mr '16 900w

"What he terms traditional misconceptions of the origin of the Osmanlis and their empire is here presented by a devoted student with evidence of great care and after painstaking research. Having no Ottoman sources to which to turn for the origin of the Ottoman people and royal house, Mr. Gibbons has recourse to traditions, which he says are essential in considering the origin of a people. These traditions he appears to have carefully examined and weighed." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 18 '16 650w

"It possesses a further value as a reference volume for its excellent chronological tables and copious authoritative notes."

+ Ind 86:255 My 15 '16 140w

+ Lit D 52:1106 Ap 15 '16 500w

+ Nation 103:446 N 9 '16 390w

"The two most serious historical studies of the Ottoman empire in the days of its early vigour and its flower [have] come from America — Dr. Lybyer's able treatise on the administrative system of Suleyman the Magnificent and the present scholarly, and extremely well-written history of the beginnings of Ottoman domination. Dr. Gibbons, however, seems to us rather to exaggerate the novelty of his views. His weak point is his ignorance of oriental languages, in spite of some years' residence in Turkey; and if we are obliged to notice his shortcomings from the oriental side it is with no wish to depreciate an otherwise valuable and scholarly work. . . . He has worked up the numismatic data very imperfectly, and his statement that he has 'not heard of such a coin existing today' as those presenting the names of the three sons of Kay-Khusrau is astonishing in the face of the fact that seven of them are published in the official catalogue of the British museum collection, to which he frequently refers. The index might well be enlarged, but the bibliography is elaborate and for European sources almost exhaustive."

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS—Continued

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p111 Mr 9 '16 1800w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. New map of Africa (1900-1916). *$2 (1½c) Century - 960 16-23056

This work is supplementary to the author's "New map of Europe." He calls it "a history of European colonial expansion and colonial diplomacy" and in it considers the causes and possible consequences of the war as they relate to Africa. He covers the period between the end of the Boer war and the conquest of the German colonies in 1916. In a final chapter, devoted to African problems for the peace conference, the author says, "Unless the African settlement is made upon a basis of broad statesmanship, the peace treaty will contain embers of a fire unquenched ready to break out again when fresh fuel is thrown upon it. The great question is this: Will Germany be excluded from Africa, or will she be readmitted to cooperate in the development of the continent on a basis that will give satisfaction to the abilities and necessities and aspirations of the German people?"

+ A L A Bkl 13:215 F '17

"Out of the host of books that have emerged to throw, each in a different way, some light on the causes of the Great war, this by Dr. Gibbons stands alone, and is unlikely to be eclipsed unless Dr. Gibbons himself should write another to surpass it. . . . From the first to last the reader will be absorbed." Talbot Mundy

+ Dial 61:575 D 28 '16 1550w

"By the aid of a series of colored maps the reader follows intelligently the fascinating story of civilization's conquest of the Dark Continent in our own time."

+ Lit D 53:1719 D 30 '16 440w

+ R of Rs 55:216 F '17 100w

GIBSON, HENRY WILLIAM. Boyology; or, Boy analysis. (Boy life ser.) il *$1 Assn. press 173 16-14892

A book based on lectures delivered before Y. M. C. A. audiences, mothers' meetings, parent-teachers' associations, etc. Book one is devoted to the characteristics of boyhood, with chapters on physical, intellectual, emotional, social, moral, religious and vocational characteristics. Book two is devoted to General characteristics and observations, and has chapters on Parental delinquency, The church, the preacher, the sermon, the boy, etc. A selected bibliography of books about boys and boy life is given at the end.

"Suggestive but does not replace Forbush (Booklist, 11:385, My '15)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:145 Ja '17

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 1 '16 170w

Pratt p7 Ja '17 20w

GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON. Battle, and other poems. *$1.25 Macmillan 821 16-7525

This new volume of Mr. Gibson's poems is made up of three parts. Part 1 contains the poems of battle, short stanzas giving pictures of war, relentless in their revelation of its ugliness. The second part, headed "Friends" and dedicated to the memory of Rupert Brooke, is made up of some twenty poems on varied themes. Part 3, "Stonefolds," gives six short plays of English rural life.

A L A Bkl 12:417 Je '16

"With the exception of Rupert Brooke's five sonnets, '1914,' 'Battle' contains, we think, the only English poems about the war—so far—for which any one would venture to predict a future on their own merits."

+ Ath 1915,2:433 D 11 800w

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 44:511 Ja '17 330w

"Short, compressed and glowing verses make up the section called 'Battle' in this new volume. They are nothing more than etchings, vignettes, of moods and impressions, but they register with a burning solution on the spirit what the personal side of the war means to those in the trenches and at home." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 3 '16 1300w

+ Ind 88:162 O 23 '16 130w

"The most distinguished of the lyrics are studies in atmosphere, elaborate bits of word-painting."

+ Lit D 52:1225 Ap 29 '16 500w

"He handles his plain strong people as he handles the plain, strong words—largely monosyllables—which make up the steadfast and massive substance of his grave, tranquil, low-keyed, and slow-pacing blank verse." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 103:347 O 12 '16 980w

"Mr. Gibson is a poet of the people, a lyricist who penetrates the heart of humanity."

+ R of Rs 53:762 Je '16 70w

"Mr. Gibson's war poems are notable for their laconic simplicity and their freedom from literary artifice. His best effects are achieved by contrast, by their illustrations of the hark-back of memory."

+ Spec 116:662 My 27 '16 120w

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 4 '16 150w

"Alone of the poets this day, he has seen to the heart of things in 'Battle.' Under the impact of the greatest crisis in history, he has been not stunned to silence or babbling song, but awakened to understanding and sober speech, and thereby has proved his genius." J. H. Holmes

+ Survey 37:410 Ja 6 '17 550w

Wis Lib Bull 12:319 Jl '16 40w

GIGNILLIAT, LEIGH ROBINSON. Arms and the boy. il *$1.50 Bobbs 371.73 16-17149

"'Arms and the boy' is the appropriate title of a volume devoted to the subject of military instruction in schools and colleges. The author is Col. L. R. Gignilliat, superintendent of Culver military academy, and the book is the result not only of his own large experience in the well-known institution with which he is connected, but also embodies opinions gathered elsewhere. The secretary of war, Hon. Newton D. Baker, supplies an introduction."—R of Rs

Boston Transcript p8 S 6 '16 470w

+ Cleveland p131 N '16 70w

+ Ind 88:35 O 2 '16 60w

"Altogether Colonel Gignilliat has clothed what has hitherto been a matter of more or less academic interest with the romance of reality, and his book will be of value not only to teachers and instructors, but to parents and guardians. The book is copiously illustrated with excellent photographs, showing the military life of the cadets in different aspects, and is an important addition to the literature of citizenship."

+ N Y Times 21:406 O 8 '16 880w

Pittsburgh 21:514 N '16 50w

+ R of Rs 54:461 O '16 110w

GILBERT, ELEANOR, pseud. (ANN ROSENBLATT). Ambitious woman in business. il *$1.50 Funk 658 16-22760

"The author writes not only from the point of view of the woman employee, but also from that of the woman's employer. She sifts the public and private discussions of investigators, newspaper discussions, and personal expressions direct from women who work and from employers of women, and summarizes their opinions. The chapters cover business opportunities, remuneration, the marketing of ability, family versus career, and the business woman's finances. The author argues for definite vocational education."—R of Rs

"Accurate but popular, adapted to the use of girls, simple and direct in treatment, it is probably one of the best books yet written on the subject. Author is one of the editors of the woman's page of the New York Sun and the Philadelphia Public Ledger. Contains a bibliography of business books."

+ A L A Bkl 13:151 Ja '17

+ Ind 89:119 Ja 15 '17 40w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:189 D '16 30w

+ R of Rs 54:685 D '16 140w

GILBERT, HENRY. Boys' book of pirates. il 2 $1.50. (1½c) Crowell 910.4 A17-49

This book for boys covers the fascinating subject of piracy from Caesar's time to the nineteenth century. Contents: The pirates who captured Caesar; The pirates of the Saxon shore; The pirate who founded a dukedom; The corsairs of the Mediterranean; The buccaneers of the Spanish main; The last of the pirates.

"Well illustrated, and told in clear, interesting style. For children twelve years old and over."

+ A L A Bkl 13:227 F '17

Pratt p35 Ja '17

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p606 D 14 '16 90w

GILBRETH, FRANK BUNKER, and GILBRETH, LILLIAN MOLLER. Fatigue study; the elimination of humanity's greatest unnecessary waste; a first step in motion study. il $1.50 (5½c) Sturgis & Walton 658.7 16-8721

A technical study of fatigue, the aim of which is to outline both the elementary and scientific methods of fatigue elimination and to put the available material for fatigue study into such shape that any one interested may make immediate, definite, and profitable use of it. The authors have reduced the problem to its simplest forms and have met it with a solution that is based on the most recent psychological and industrial investigations on the subject.

+ A L A Bkl 13:106 D '16

"'Fatigue study' is a corollary to F. B. Gilbreth's earlier 'Motion study'. . . . We would be rash to predict for it such widespread attention as the predecessor received, for it does not present to the world such a new contribution to thought." M. K.

+ Ann Am Acad 69:280 Ja '17 110w

+ Cleveland p112 Ag '16 20w

Ind 87:425 S 18 '16 150w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:94 Je '16

+ N Y Times 21:296 J1 23 '16 70w

+ Pratt p24 Ja '17 20w

St Louis 15:15 Ja '17

"The book is written in so technical and formal a manner and with so great a tendency to tabulate and reduce the matter to the form of a handbook, that it does not make interesting reading for the layman. As a book of instructions for one who would make a fatigue study of a plant and, indeed, as a report of what has been done in certain cases, it has its uses."

+ — Springfield Republican p8 Je 27 '16 170w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p552 N 16 '16 80w

GILDER, RICHARD WATSON. Letters; ed. by his daughter, Rosamond Gilder. il $3.50 (4c) Houghton 16-22427

Everyone who knew Richard Watson Gilder borrowed from his love and loyalty, from his humor and efficiency, from his tender sympathy. Therefore we, in turn, borrow for him the title that is another's and call him the "friend of all the world." It is this inclusiveness that Mr. Greenslet emphasizes when he quotes: "His presence always brought a sense of life with it, the whole of life." It is this vital interest in all that makes for righteousness and beauty that necessarily fills the pages in which his daughter has brought together his letters. The years from 1844 to 1909 cover his boyhood, his service at the front in the civil war, his marriage to Helena de Kay and their first home in the stable-studio in East 15th street, New York—the home where Jefferson and Modjeska, Whitman and Saint-Gaudens, and hosts of other later-celebrities were familiar guests—the founding of the Society of American artists, the editorship of the Century magazine (1881-1909), the friendship with President Cleveland, the fight for international copyright, civil service reform, tenement house reform, etc., the resting hours at Marion and T'yringham valley with friends and family about him. Through all the years in which his energies were absorbed by public duties somehow he made the time to write the verses which brought him the joyous consciousness that he, too, was included in America's "household poets." With his inner life as a poet Miss Gilder deals no less sympathetically than with the career which for forty years was part of American literary and civic history.

+ A L A Bkl 13:173 Ja '17

"His was no reflected celebrity, for in distinction he stood shoulder to shoulder with men of great repute in varied walks of life. He was himself a writer and a maker of writers, but his world was the world at large and not merely the world of literature." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '16 1650w

+ Dial 61:455 N 30 '16 1200w

+ Ind 89:153 Ja 22 '17 230w

Reviewed by H. B. Fuller

+ Lit D 53:1547 D 9 '16 150w

"The book is valuable in giving us the solid moral background of the man. . . . We like to think how he would have said what he once wrote to his fellow-poet, George E. Woodberry, after the sea fight off Santiago: 'War is hell'; perhaps that is the reason it is 'the greatest thing on earth.' It isn't the killing, but the sacrifice of war that makes it enticing, after all."

+ Nation 103:589 D 21 '16 720w

"The book is a labor of love and has the worth and value of its quality. In addition it is the story of a life that touched practically everything of significance in American art, literature, and politics, that reached out in a thousand avenues of use and kindness. . . . As you read on from letter to letter, and Miss Gilder has placed them with the greatest skill, you feel the movement and sense the glow not alone of the life of the city but of the country."

+ N Y Times 21:529 D 3 '16 870w

+ R of Rs 55:99 Ja '17 210w

"The 'Letters' cover a long and useful life, and afford glimpses of many men and present many interesting opinions. One cannot, however, derive from them much information about the magazine business, the changes in which must have harassed Mr. Gilder greatly in the last years of his life. . . . The index is copious and careful."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 1250w

GILL, ANNA A. Practical basketry. il $1 (5c) 2 McKay 689 16-15164

The author has prepared a guide to basketry which may be used for self-instruction by the individual or may form the basis for a course given in schools. Most of the models described, the author says, have been used successfully with children of the backward delinquent class. The book is illustrated by twenty diagrams and eighty-one plates.

"Simple and clear directions."

+ A L A Bkl 13:155 Ja '17

N Y Br Lib News 3:190 D '16

GILLETTE, JOHN MORRIS. Constructive rural sociology; with an introd. by G. E. Vincent. il $1.60 Sturgis & Walton 630 16-1723

A revised edition of a work published in 1913. Parts of it have been rewritten and new material, including a chapter on Physical condition of the United States and agriculture, added. The references at the ends of the chapters have also been revised.

A L A Bkl 12:392 My '16

"A book of great use, not only to the teacher and student, but to the intelligent farmer as well. In a general way, Professor Gillette takes into consideration all the most important aspects of rural life, and makes exceedingly practical suggestions as to their betterment."

GILLETTE, JOHN MORRIS—Continued

+ Nation 102:sup499 My 4 '16 200w

+ St Louis 15:14 Ja '17 20w

"Over a hundred pages larger than the first edition."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:319 J1 '16 50w

GILLETTE, JOHN MORRIS. Sociology. (National social science ser.) *50c (1½c) McClurg 301 16-12256

A brief introduction to sociology, intended to meet the needs of those "who have some curiosity about the nature of society and sociology, but have not a great deal of time in which to satisfy it." The hope is expressed, however, that the references provided for each chapter may lead to further reading on the subject. Contents: The science of sociology; The origin of society; Origin of races and institutions; The nature of social evolution; Factors which determine social evolution; The nature of society; The social order; The social mind; Social selection; Progress and its conditions; The equalization of opportunity; The elimination of the unfit.

Reviewed by C. A. Ellwood

+ Am Econ R 6:881 D '16 140w

"The first five chapters, explaining the results of historical studies, are much better in quality than the later chapters devoted to topics of a somewhat theoretical nature. Chap. 6, especially, on 'The nature of society,' is weak, as, for example, in the discussion of the social-contract theory. . . . A good index completes the volume." J. Q. Dealey

+ Am J Soc 22:405 N '16 220w

+ A L A Bkl 13:60 N '16

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:757 N '16 100w

"It is just the sort of simple and brief manual to awaken interest in the casual reader."

+ Nation 103:243 S 7 '16 320w

N Y Br Lib News 3:106 J1 '16

"The author has for the most part followed the teachings of the generally accepted authorities on the many branches of social science which are synthesized under the name of sociology, making clear differences of opinion among the doctors without detracting from the unity of his little treatise. So large is his subject, however, that he has had to be more or less dogmatic. In some cases more elaboration would have been welcome."

+ Springfield Republican p8 J1 13 '16 580w

"A useful little book where there is a demand for a very brief survey. . . . Ellwood's 'Sociology and modern social problems' is preferable where there is any interest in the subject."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:450 D '16 50w

GILLILAN, STRICKLAND W. Including you and me. *$1 Forbes 811 16-11613

Mr. Gillilan is a popular platform lecturer and author of the famous "Finnigin to Flannigan." This is his second book of verse, made up of poems on homely themes, some in dialect, many of them humorous.

"In a vigorous strain of optimism, genial sentiment, and high spirits."

+ Ath p284 Je '16 30w

St Louis 14:400 N '16

Springfield Republican p8 J1 6 '16 50w

GILMAN, DOROTHY FOSTER. Bloom of youth. *$1.25 (2c) Small 16-26318

A pleasant story of a girl's home and college life told with humor and gentle irony. "Where is Radcliffe?" asks a Harvard senior, and "What is Radcliffe?" might represent the attitude of Leslie Wyman's Boston family and friends when she announces her intention of entering that Cambridge institution in preference to "coming out" in society. It is a blow to Leslie's mother, whose only ambitions for her daughters are matrimonial; but, whereas Allison, who is acquiescent to her mother's wishes, makes a failure of society and goes off to Labrador as a nurse, Leslie, the independent, ends her four years of college with the announcement of her engagement to the most socially eligible young man in the circle her mother had hoped to see her enter.

+ A L A Bkl 12:333 My '16

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:322 My '16 220w

"Miss Gilman brings out very clearly that American socialism—or rather the impulse which would be socialism in other countries—is really concerned with economic rather than social ideals. . . . It is undoubtedly true that its appeal for many will lie in the intimate details of Boston society and the bits of local color it introduces freely. These are well done, but there is a broader, firmer foundation for praise of the novel than this. It is rather the fact that she has caught and made visible to others that impalpable spirit of college youth, bringing out in sharp contrast the triumphs, the ideals, the disappointments and that residuum of fine things which survive to make up the spirit of modern American youth as it steps forth from the thresholds of the American colleges." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p25 F 23 '16 750w

"The narrative is crude and thin, and there is no evidence that it is the work of a spontaneous story-teller."

— Nation 102:313 Mr 16 '16 250w

"The book contains well-drawn characters and some clever dialogue, but its workmanship is uneven. It bears the hallmark of a first novel. The author's grasp is not yet firm, but she has achieved a pleasant and readable tale, wherein there is a promise which causes us to await with interest her future work."

+ N Y Times 21:125 Ap 2 '16 170w

"There is a vein of delicate humor permeating it throughout, and she displays no little talent for character portraiture. The Radcliffe and Harvard background will be of chief interest to graduates of those institutions, but there are other phases of larger interest which do not depend on college associations for appreciation."

+ Springfield Republican p13 F 21 '16 450w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:186 Ap '16 50w

GIRAN, ETIENNE. Modern Job; tr. by Fred Rothwell; with an introd. by Archdeacon Lilley. il *75c Open ct. 216

"This 'Essay on the problem of evil' is set in dialogue form, and the characters are figured as descendants of their prototypes, whose names they bear, in the Book of Job. The time is not far from the present, and the state of religious opinion is that prevailing to-day. The place, though this matters little, is a cottage by a canal in the author's adopted country, Holland. Here the Job of M. Giran's imagining has withdrawn, and here his friends Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar come to offer their sympathy, and are drawn into the quest of an explanation for his woes." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) "The main idea in the book is that religion must become a problem before it can ever hope to make an appeal to thoughtful people." (Int J Ethics)

"The volume is worthy of careful reading, for it presents various tendencies found in our world to-day, and also shows that it is dangerous to build one's theology and religion in any one-sided fashion. Mr. Rothwell is to be congratulated on the translation: it is clear and inspiring." W. T. Jones

+ Int J Ethics 27:117 O '16 700w

"Very cleverly conceived, though somewhat disappointing in the realization. . . . M. Giran cannot suggest the sound of the still, small voices nor the vision of limitless power and understanding, and the end is somehow empty, and a silence only prevails after the war of words."

+ Spec 117:sup531 N 4 '16 920w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p459 S 28 '16 770w

GLADDEN, WASHINGTON. Commencement days. *$1.25 (2½c) Macmillan 374 16-8467

A book of essays drawn from the commencement addresses and baccalaureate sermons that the author has delivered to many graduating classes. "No one could get the consent of his own conscience to bring anything other than his best thought to such an occasion," he says. The essays contain "the sober counsels of one who has never found it needful to talk down to young people, nor expedient to flatter them, but who has learned to believe that the call to the highest things is the call to which they are most ready to respond." (Preface) Contents: The school of work; Castles in the air; What is worth while? Some things I have learned; Short cuts; Study and growth; Books and reading; What for? Good work for graduates; Leaders or followers? Form and substance.

- + Bib World 48:128 Ag '16 60w
- + Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '16 280w
- + Ind 86:403 Je 5 '16 40w
- + N Y Times 21:319 Ag 13 '16 60w

GLADDEN, WASHINGTON. Forks of the road. *$1.00 (2½c) Macmillan 172.4 16-10803

In this essay (awarded the Church peace union prize) the author finds that the inadequacy of the moral leadership of the Christian church brought to light by this war is due to "the feebleness of its grasp upon the fundamental laws of life." And the fundamental law of human life is the law of love, the law which says that human beings can only live together thru cooperation and good will. This is the law of Christianity, but it takes Christ's name only because he formulated it. It is universal and absolute in its workings, as absolute as the laws of chemical affinity or of gravity. But the piling up of big armaments by the Christian nations of the world, based on the belief that every other nation is an enemy, is the negation of this law. At the close of the war these nominally Christian nations will find themselves at the crossways. They may go on in the old way or take a new turning. America at this moment stands at the crossways.

Ath p473 O '16 460y

"His arguments are somewhat rambling, not wholly conclusive, and are to be praised more for their sincerity than on account of their actual explication of the broad international problems which are necessarily involved in any such discussion."

- + — Bib World 48:64 J1 '16 70w
- Bookm 43:629 Ag '16 340w

"A wise and noble essay which will arrest the thought of those who, from their comfortable 1913 belief that war is practically of the past, have swung to the more intelligent but more dangerous 1916 opinion that war is an inevitable fact in human life."

- + Ind 86:303 My 22 '16 430w
- Lit D 53:625 S 9 '16 170w

"The work makes an inquiry, calm, concise, logical and marked throughout by practical common sense, into the reasons why war persists in a civilization founded upon Christianity and considers the possibility of such a guidance of thought, conviction and action as would do away with armed conflict. Small as the book is, it is full of 'meat for strong men,' and its closely reasoned argument is likely to set many people thinking along unaccustomed lines."

- + N Y Times 21:205 My 14 '16 800w
- Pittsburgh 21:366 J1 '16 60w
- + — Springfield Republican p6 Ag 11 '16 830w
- The Times [London] Lit Sup p396 Ag 17 '16 100w

GLADDING, EFFIE PRICE. Across the continent by the Lincoln highway. il *$1.50 (3c) Brentano's 917.3 16-13765

A motor journey from Pacific to Atlantic is described in this book. Trips up and down California preceded the long trans-continental journey and the first 100 pages are devoted to these. The larger proportion of the book is given up to the mountain and plateau states. This is true of pictures as well as of text. The author says: "The Lincoln highway is not as yet a road for those motorists who wish only luxurious hotels, frequent stops, and all the cushioned comfort of the much-traveled main roads of the favorite tourist parts of Europe. It is, however, perfectly practicable in its entire length of 3200 miles, and rich in interest and charm for those who care for what it has to give."

"Of timely interest and informing to the real or fireside traveler."

- + A L A Bkl 13:29 O '16

"A folding map shows the course of the Lincoln highway from coast to coast together with its laterals. But the volume does not aim to offer, as does Mrs. Post's, a study of the route that will serve as a handbook for other motorists."

- + N Y Times 21:237 Je 11 '16 350w
- + Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 210w

GLANCEY, REV. MICHAEL F., ed. Orbis Catholicus. *$1.50 Herder 282.

A year book of the Catholic world. "The volume consists of three parts. Part 1 treats of Rome itself, giving us a complete list of the popes; the papal chapel and household; the papal orders of knighthood; the college of cardinals; the Roman curia; the diplomatic representatives; the apostolic delegations. Part 2 describes the church outside of Rome. . . . Part 3 gives a list of patriarchs, archbishops and bishops, with date and place of birth, date of ordination, nomination and consecration; the sees each has filled, etc." (Cath World)

- + Cath World 103:691 Ag '16 160w

GLASGOW, ELLEN ANDERSON (GHOLSON). Life and Gabriella; the story of a woman's courage. il *$1.35 (1c) Doubleday 16-2137

Altho life deals severely with Gabriella, it never succeeds in making her a victim. This she refuses to be: "You can't be a victim unless you give in," says Gabriella, and because courage is her outstanding virtue, she does not give in. She is a southern girl, brought up in traditions of the old school. She marries, as all well-brought-up girls should, and her marriage, insecurely founded on sudden passion, comes to a sudden end. Left to her own resources, with two children dependent on her, Gabriella takes her life in her own hands and makes a success of it. At thirty-eight she is a successful New York business woman, self-reliant and independent. Then comes her second love affair and in it her common sense wars with tradition, for the man she loves is not of the "old school" type. But common sense, with love as its ally, wins, and we leave Gabriella with the feeling that life has done well by her after all.

- + A L A Bkl 12:289 Mr '16

"Gabriella's intelligence is not what we are asked to believe it," Wilson Follett

- + — Atlan 118:500 O '16 890w

"Most admirable is the art with which Miss Glasgow catches the social atmosphere and puts it, living and colourful, into these pages. She has never done finer, truer work than these delicate, firm strokes with which she paints the life of Gabriella and her family and friends."

F. F. Kelly

- + Bookm 43:80 Mr '16 900w

"Sex is the triumphant note of 'Life and Gabriella.' Scarcely a moment in it fails to bring before the reader that overwhelmingly important theme. His mind is never permitted to stray from it. Persistently it is thrust before him, continuously in plot, in dialogue and in characterization it confronts him. The novelist presents humanity composed solely of men and women who are in love, who are married, or who are participants in intrigue. She depicts them completely as subjugated to the obsession of sex. . . . Twenty years out of the life of Gabriella Carr are unrolled by Miss Glasgow, and during them all she is in the midst of the difficulties that come to a woman because she is a woman. . . . As the chronicle of a woman 'Life and Gabriella' is filled with reality. The obsession of sex is no stronger in its pages than we find it in the world outside of them, and we follow Gabriella's career with the intensest interest." E. F. E.

GLASGOW, ELLEN ANDERSON—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p26 Ja 19 '16 1450w

"We feel the thing that Gabriella does more distinctly than we feel Gabriella herself. One feels that one is following a preconceived idea rather than being shown some of the strangely complex workings of the human spirit." E: E. Hale

+ — Dial 60:282 Mr 16 '16 480w

+ Ind 85:316 F 28 '16 160w

"This romancer, who has written so many books and acquired an audience so considerable in numbers, has reason to suppose that her method of story-telling is satisfactory to that audience. Doubtless she finds profit in being verbose, being obvious, dealing much in repetitions and reassurances. These are the methods by which one approaches children, theatre audiences, and a vast and enthusiastic section of the reading public."

— Nation 102:197 F 17 '16 250w

"'Life and Gabriella' is a sound novel, the work of a writer who knows her task and does it. But it has, of course, the defect as well as the advantage of the sturdy intelligence which produced it. Dealing always with the very stuff of woman's modern adventure, it is not adventurous." L. C.

+ New Repub 6:194 Mr 18 '16 600w

"For it all goes back to that—to Gabriella herself, the finest, most lovable and thoroughly worth-while heroine it has been our good fortune to meet in many a long day. A real flesh-and-blood woman, not perfect by any means, making mistakes, learning many an enforced lesson, but always normal, optimistic, true and dependable as steel. The book is exceedingly well written; it has humor and pathos, reality, an exceptional insight into character and a brave and inspiring philosophy of life. It sets a very high standard for the novels of 1916; those that measure up to it will be notable ones indeed."

+ N Y Times 21:17 Ja 16 '16 1200w

Pittsburgh 21:133 Mr '16 50w

"The story lacks the intensity of the novel preceding it, and the sense of inevitability that pervaded 'Virginia' is lacking too. Perhaps it is unfair to attempt comparisons with still earlier books by the author without a careful re-reading, but if memory serves, there is less firmness in the handling of character than in those first books. The author here is using types that suit her purpose. But as a novel to be read for enjoyment, 'Life and Gabriella' is to be preferred to its immediate predecessor. Humor has more place in it, and through all its course, from 1895 onward, it offers an illuminating commentary on contemporary tendencies." M. K. Reely

+ Pub W 89:187 Ja 15 '16 1200w

+ R of Rs 53:377 Mr '16 180w

+ Sat R 122:205 Ag 26 '16 260w

Spec 117:217 Ag 19 '16 20w

"If her motion is leisurely, so is her novel. Thus we find that the portrait of each individual progresses toward completion only by the bringing out of all his traits, prejudices and preferences, and by dwelling on his ancestry, business environment and energy—or the lack thereof. 'Life and Gabriella' is all too neatly worked out, no doubt, to be a great novel, but it is an agreeable one."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 30 '16 850w

"A good example of the careful, assured study of social life and character which marks this novelist's work."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p299 Je 22 '16 160w

Wis Lib Bull 12:90 F '16 50w

GLEASON, ARTHUR HUNTINGTON, and GLEASON, MRS. HELEN HAYES. Golden lads; with an introd. by Theodore Roosevelt. il $1.30 (3c) Century 940.91 16-10128

Mr. and Mrs. Gleason were members of the Hector Munro ambulance corps in Belgium. One book by Mr. Gleason, 'Young Hilda at the wars,' has already resulted from that experience. In this volume he gives a more direct account of his experiences and observations. Part I, 'The conquerors,' is an unsparring condemnation of Germany. The second, 'Golden lads' is a tribute to the boy soldiers of Belgium and France. There is a chapter too on 'Women under fire' and another chapter by Helen Hayes Gleason on 'How war seems to a woman.'

A L A Bkl 13:163 Ja '17

Army and Navy Journal 53:1184 My 13 '16 240w

"It is through the little pictures, the side lights which we find here and there among his pages, that we gain our best impressions of the scenes he describes." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 3 '16 700w

"Mr. Gleason also saw the ruins of bombarded Belgian cities. Otherwise his evidence is at second or third hand mainly. More convincing is the author's chapter on the spy. Especially noteworthy is Mrs. Gleason's contribution."

+ Ind 86:399 Je 5 '16 300w

Lit D 53:312 Ag 5 '16 120w

Nation 103:43 Jl 13 '16 250w

"The pages deal with facts, not with abstractions, and tell many specific instances which show that successful warfare depends as much upon patience with an obliviousness of disagreeable surroundings as upon spiritual exaltation."

+ N Y Times 21:181 Ap 30 '16 620w

R of Rs 53:755 Je '16 80w

GLUECK, BERNARD. Studies in forensic psychiatry; from the Criminal department, Government hospital for the insane. (Criminal science monograph, no. 2) *$2.50 (2½c) Little 132 16-20410

A presentation of a series of case histories of criminal types as studied from the psychopathologist's viewpoint. The aim is to emphasize the necessity of the psychopathological mode of approach to the problem of criminology, the slogan being "intensive study of the individual delinquent from all angles and points of view." Chapters: Psychogenesis in the psychoses of prisoners; The nature and treatment of the psychoses of prisoners; The forensic phase of litigious paranoia; The malingering; a clinical study; The analysis of a case of kleptomania.

+ Ind 88:550 D 25 '16 280w

"The author is an instructor in psychiatry and neurology in the medical departments of George Washington and Georgetown universities, and his studies result from a long period of investigation in the criminal department of the Government hospital for the insane."

+ N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 130w

"Prison reformers, lawyers, judges, all who come in contact with offenders, will value this sound work that offers a scientific basis for the classification of criminals."

+ R of Rs 55:105 Ja '17 120w

"He has made his studies from first-hand observations, which have forced him to discard many of the theories held by the old school of criminal psychologists. The work is comprehensive in its scope and must be rated among the most important on the study of criminology."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 720w

GODLEY, EVELINE CHARLOTTE. Great Condé; a life of Louis II de Bourbon, Prince of Condé. il *$6 Scribner (Eng ed 15-15182)

"History and biography can seldom work more harmoniously together than in the life of Louis de Bourbon, Prince of Condé. His career, to which the French seventeenth century largely owes its romantic character, was not only that of a distinguished soldier but also that of a more than typical French prince and noble." (Spec)

"The first of the three parts into which the volume is divided covers the period of its subject's early triumphs. . . . The second and much the largest section of the book is concerned with Condé's struggle with Mazarin and his career as an ally of Spain. . . . Miss Godley's concluding section shows him as a pardoned rebel, prematurely aged, laboriously regaining a measure of favour, and winning no laurels comparable to those of his first, or even of his second period, yet honoured in his retirement by men of all ranks, and dying as a national hero." (Ath)

"The archives of Chantilly and the treasures of the Bibliothèque nationale have been drawn upon with excellent effect; and the assistance of a military kinsman, aided manifestly by some natural aptitude for strategics, has removed any trace of amateurishness on the technical side. The book, in fine, may be termed worthy of its subject."

+ Ath 1915.1:398 My 1 1050w

Sat R 119:429 Ap 24 '15 1400w

Spec 114:sup868 Je 26 '15 1650w

GOEBEL, JULIUS. Recognition policy of the United States. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) *$2.50 Longmans 341 15-15231

"This treatise of 228 pages is devoted to a question of much practical as well as some theoretic interest, viz., the principles to be followed by a state in determining when to recognize either the creation of a new state out of some preëxisting political community, or such a change effected by force in the government of an existing community as makes its government a new one. The inquiry into these principles which the treatise attempts is historical rather than theoretical, and is confined to cases in which the United States has acted, but it is prefaced by a long disquisition on the more general and abstract aspects of the subject."—Nation

"When the writer attempts a juristic basis for recognition he is not so easily followed. The terminology of Jellinek is not easily turned into English, and without some background of 'Das recht des modernen staates' the author's endeavors to frame a theory will not be readily responded to. Yet he has a theory, and to that extent he makes a contribution. . . . In many respects one wishes the writer had given fewer expressions of personal opinion and greater attention to the more or less normative force of facts." J. S. R.

+ Am Hist R 21:859 J1 '16 520w

"Without showing marked evidence of original work, this volume presents the most elaborate discussion yet given of the policy of the United States with regard to the recognition of new states and of new governments—the recognition of belligerency is not treated. The fact cannot but be the occasion of surprise that the author does not in any way indicate indebtedness to F. L. Paxson's 'Independence of South America: a study in recognition and foreign policy.' This book is listed in the author's extensive bibliography at the end, but no reference whatever is made to it. The three central chapters of the present book follow so closely the lines laid down by Dr. Paxson in his work from original materials, that if this work was familiar to the author, it is hardly conceivable that it was not of use to him." R. T. Crane

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:378 My '16 420w

"Very timely is this study now that the question of the recognition of some government in Mexico is so prominent in the public mind. Editors will find in it authoritative material for use in informing the people as to the justice and wisdom of the course pursued by the present national administration."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 29 '16 100w

"The utility of the treatise lies in the historical account which follows the views which have from time to time guided the policy of the United States in deciding when to accord and when to withhold recognition. The comments are sensible, the selections from speeches and public documents are well chosen, and a spirit of fairness is visible throughout. We should, however, have desired a somewhat fuller and more exact examination of the principles which ought to be adopted in future in the presence of conditions which are only too common in the case of the minor Central and South American states."

+ Nation 101:691 D 9 '15 1200w

GOETHALS, GEORGE WASHINGTON, ed. Panama canal; an engineering treatise. 2v il *$7.50 McGraw 626.9 16-14460

"A series of papers covering in full detail the technical problems involved in the construction of the canal. Prepared by engineers and other specialists in charge of various branches of the work and presented at the International engineering congress, 1915, under the direction of George W. Goethals." (Subtitle) Among the subjects treated are: "The commercial and trade aspects of the canal, by Emory R. Johnson; An outline of Canal Zone geology, by Donald F. McDonald; Sanitation in the Canal Zone, by Charles F. Mason; Preliminary municipal engineering at Panama, by Henry Welles Durham; Municipal engineering and domestic water supply in the Canal Zone, by George M. Wells; The working force, by R. E. Wood; The purchase of supplies, by F. C. Boggs; Climatology and hydrology of the canal, by F. D. Willson; Terminal works, dry docks and wharves, by H. H. Rousseau; Coaling plants and floating cranes, by F. H. Cooke, and Aids to navigation for the canal, by Walter F. Beyer." (Engin Rec)

"Should certainly find a place in every engineering reference library."

+ Engin N 76:310 Ag 17 '16 350w

"The most authoritative and exact technical exposition of the many correlated tasks accomplished in the monumental work of digging the Panama canal which is now available."

+ Engin Rec 73:778 Je 10 '16 350w

"A complete and noteworthy book which should prove of interest not only to the engineer but in many ways to the general reader as well. Reviewed in Engineer, Sept. 8, 1916."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 N '16 150w

GOFF, EMMETT STULL. Principles of plant culture. 8th ed (Rural text-book ser.) il *$1.25 Macmillan 16-6768

"A useful text-book for beginners in agriculture and horticulture that has had a test of nearly twenty years in the hands of teachers and students at schools of agriculture throughout the country. The work has now been revised by Professors L. R. Jones and J. G. Moore, of the Wisconsin college of agriculture, and a preface is supplied by Professor L. H. Bailey, of Cornell."—R of Rs

"This new edition has been reset, put in rather better form and, in places, slightly rewritten. Bibliographies at chapter-ends have also been slightly revised."

+ A L A Bkl 12:491 J1 '16

Ind 87:419 S 18 '16 50w

"It goes straight ahead from start to finish, without any unnecessary excursions into the neighboring fields, and yet it maintains its attractiveness throughout. It is a treatise which can be used to advantage by any serious amateur, as well as by the student who has the guidance of a teacher."

+ Nation 102:sup503 My 4 '16 140w

"There is a great temptation, which the authors have not been altogether able to resist, to wander into other fields. This has resulted in several rather surprising errors. There is some confusion between 'potash' and 'potassium' which ought to have been put right before now. Much of this chapter might well have been omitted." E. J. R.

+ Nature 98:245 N 30 '16 450w

+ R of Rs 53:765 Je '16 80w

St Louis 14:395 N '16 30w

"Few agricultural textbooks have attained greater popularity among agricultural students and farmers than 'The principles of plant culture,' which was first published by the late Prof. E. S. Goff of the University of Wisconsin in 1897."

GOFF, EMMETT STULL—Continued

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 26 '16 130w

GOGOL, NIKOLAI VASILIEVITCH. Mantle, and other stories; tr. by Claud Field. *$1.25 (2½c) Stokes 16-10453

Five short stories with an introduction quoted from Prosper Mérimée. Gogol's powers as a satirist, emphasized in the introduction, are best shown in the first story, in which the delight of a poor, underpaid government clerk in a new coat proves the man's undoing. This tale was issued in translation in 1886 as "The cloak." The other stories are "The nose," a fanciful tale, quite absurd, "Memoirs of a madman," a remarkable study of a deranged mind; "A May night," a story of Little Russia, and "The Viy," a Little Russian folktale.

Cleveland p33 Ap '16 50w

+ Library Association Record 18:176 Ap 15 '16 90w

GOLDBERG, ISAAC, ed. and tr. Six plays of the Yiddish theatre. *$1.50 Luce, J. W. 892.4

The plays in this volume, says the editor, are "representative of a dramatic movement in its making." It is a movement that attempts "to give articulate expression to the esthetic sense of a widely scattered people whose social isolation has preserved to them traditions, customs and habits of thought which, with but slight variation, have persisted from the earliest period of recorded history and are alien to the people among whom they dwell." The first two plays, "Abigail," a Biblical drama, and "Forgotten souls," a play of the Russian pale, are by David Pinski, whose longer drama, "Treasure," was published last year. The third play, "She must marry a doctor" is by Solomon J. Rabinowitsch, known as "the Yiddish Mark Twain." Then follow two plays by Sholom Ash, "Winter" and "The sinner," and one by Perez Hirschbein, "In the dark."

"Few long plays on the modern stage have more to give than the one-act piece, 'Forgotten souls,' by David Pinski, in the way of a poignant pity for the commonplace, the undistinguished, the unimportant, quite literally the 'forgotten souls,' expressed as it is in terms of an appropriate simplicity. . . . It is a contribution to letters as lovely as it is strange and novel. . . . The peak of the book rests upon 'The sinner,' a one-act piece by Sholom Ash, who has unescapably challenged comparison with Maeterlinck. . . . The book is not one simply to be commended; it is one that cannot be neglected." B. K.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 13 '16 630w

N Y Br Lib News 3:170 N '16 20w

GOLDRING, MAUDE. Charlotte Brontë, the woman. *$1 Scribner (Eng ed 16-3482)

"In her 'Charlotte Brontë: the woman,' Maude Goldring seeks to interpret the personality of her heroine rather than to analyze her literary work. She writes in a mood of unrestrained adulation, and in view of what Charlotte Brontë accomplished and what she was, that spirit is by no means unpardonable. . . . Three chapters and an appendix make up Miss Goldring's little book. The first chapter is entitled 'Preparation,' the second 'The coming of love,' the third 'Loneliness and fame,' and into the appendix are gathered some hitherto unpublished manuscripts."—Boston Transcript

"Miss Goldring's little monograph will prove more than acceptable to the many who know that the last word can never be written about either the personality or the work of Charlotte Brontë." E. F. F.

+ Boston Transcript p25 F 23 '16 550w

"Delicately and with a woman's sympathy and insight Miss Goldring handles her subject."

+ Dial 21:274 O 5 '16 220w

"This is a book of gossip, pure and simple—perhaps the characterization would be sounder if the first of these adjectives were omitted. . . . It is a pity that Charlotte Brontë, to whose high imagination and brilliant craftsmanship the world owes so much, should be subjected to this sort of indignity."

— N Y Times 21:455 O 29 '16 200w

"Except for a lack of restraint here and there, the little book is well written; but why did Miss Goldring choose as the title of one of her chapters the absurd heading 'The coming of love' . . . The book includes a hitherto unpublished poem by Charlotte at the age of sixteen, characteristic in thought but—perhaps naturally considering her age—somewhat amateur in workmanship, and some letters from Mr. Brontë."

+ Spec 116:sup142 Ja 29 '16 290w

GOLDSMITH, MILTON. Practical things with simple tools. Il *$1 (1c) Sully & Kleinteich 680 16-19967

In his introduction to this work for young mechanics, the author says, "It has been my aim to select only such articles as can be made with the simplest of tools and with little or no preparatory knowledge of carpentering. The saw, hammer, chisel, square, knife, plane, screw-driver, and auger are all the implements needed. Many of the articles can be made of boxes, boards and remnants of wood." Among the articles for which working directions are provided are, a carpenter's bench, tool chest, pushmobile, sidewalk coaster, kites, tops, spring guns, doll's house, toboggans, bobsleds, etc.

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 70w

GOLDSMITH, PETER H. Brief bibliography of books in English, Spanish and Portuguese, relating to the republics commonly called Latin American. *50c Macmillan 016.98 16-919

A bibliography prepared by the director of the Pan-American division of the American association for international conciliation. The preface says: "The method pursued in making up the list was as follows: first, to introduce the titles of widely heralded works, without regard to their merit, in order to discriminate between them; and, second, to bring forward less well known publications so as to draw attention to their excellencies." The titles are arranged in one alphabet by author and each is accompanied by a brief comment. There is a subject index.

"Comprehensive without being exhaustive, briefly but intelligently annotated, and has the further merit of wasting no space on works hopelessly difficult of access. Nothing is included that will not be found in the libraries of New York. About three hundred titles are embraced in this well-selected list."

+ Dial 60:36 Ja 6 '16 90w

"Some of the author's comments are more frank and blunt than judicious."

+ Educ R 52:425 N '16 60w

Ind 86:185 My 1 '16 70w

"It is open to grave doubt whether a bibliographer who aims to guide the public in reading and buying books has any right to bring forth so hasty a compilation. There are the most extraordinary inclusions and omissions. . . . In short, such haphazard selection denotes a hastiness in compilation that is absolutely inexcusable in a reader's guide of this sort. With regard to the 'critical comment,' some of it is excellent, but one's faith in the commentator is destroyed by his pedantry and superficiality. Those who are already familiar with the literature of the subject will find considerable amusement in watching Mr. Goldsmith deal out praise and blame; but those who are unfamiliar with it are warned that a list 'with comments' such as those herein contained is useful only as an indication of the personal opinions and prejudices of one whose superficial acquaintance with the subject is so unblushingly exhibited in his acknowledged methods of selection."

— Nation 102:412 Ap '13 '16 900w

"The book is valuable to any library and to any person who buys or reads books pertaining to Latin America. Mr. Goldsmith's critical comments are keenly made, and they contribute, no less than does the list of books which he has compiled, to the justness and fairness of the claim of the publishers that 'the volume is a well informed and sympathetic guide to the best literature on South America.' M. H.

+ Special Libraries 7:93 My '16 270w

GOLLANCZ, ISRAEL, ed. Book of homage to Shakespeare. il *$8 Oxford 822.3 16-17367

"A noble quarto compiled by Dr. Israel Gollancz, with the approval of the Tercentenary committee, of which he is the honorary secretary. It is, in a sense, an official publication. . . . Not only the number of the contributors—100 English and nearly seventy foreign—nor the number of languages—some thirty—nor the number of countries which they represent, but the many different orders of mind which have found pleasure in Shakespeare and have an apt word to say upon his greatness, illustrate his universality. . . . Shakespeare's language is discussed by Dr. Bradley and Sir Sidney Lee; his 'unworldliness' by Mr. Clutton-Brock; his character by Mr. Morton Luce; his haunts in London by Mr. H. B. Wheatley; his previous centuries by Sir A. W. Ward. Scholars and critics beyond enumeration offer suggestion and discovery. Even at the present time such a book would have been incomplete without such a paper as Dr. C. H. Herford's on 'The German contribution to Shakespeare criticism.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Beginning with some verse by Mr. Thomas Hardy which conveys, as usual, an arresting idea, and ending with a somewhat affected epilogue in blank verse by the editor, this handsome book contains an astonishing variety of comment and eulogy in which every reader should surely find something to his taste. Some of the briefest comments seem to us the best."

+ Ath p240 My '16 180w

Boston Transcript p9 S 13 '16 210w

"Throughout the book the tone is admirable. The bitterness of the present hour does not obtrude itself into the 'calm serene.' . . . If one might venture an impression of the whole, it would be that the qualities for which the present time of stress most values the poet are his sanity and his common-sense orthodoxy."

+ Nation 103:469 N 16 '16 460w

"Of the literary articles, by far the most interesting are those by Mr. A. C. Bradley on 'Feste the jester,' and by Mr. Clutton-Brock on 'The unworldliness of Shakespeare,' as illustrated by 'Hamlet' and 'King Lear.' Of the articles by experts, all commendably short, we must single out for special praise that by Mr. Spielmann on Shakespeare's portraits; not so much for the letterpress, which adds little to what he has told us elsewhere, as for the pictures with which he has illustrated it. . . . The poet's relations with various towns are treated in a series of interesting articles."

+ Spec 116:661 My 27 '16 1350w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p223 My 11 '16 550w

GOLLANCZ, ISRAEL, ed. Parlement of the three ages; an alliterative poem on the nine worthies and the heroes of romance. il pa *$1 Oxford 821

"Prof. Gollancz has added a new volume to his attractive series of 'Select early English poems' which opened with 'Patience' last year. This second volume contains 'The parlement of the three ages,' edited by him for the Roxburghe club in 1897, and now reprinted with a glossary, and a number of valuable new suggestions in elucidation of textual and etymological difficulties. The fresh edition includes critical readings based upon a comparison of the two existing mss. of the poem, and is to be welcomed as bringing an interesting and hitherto not easily accessible poem within the reach of every student."—Ath

"Prof. Gollancz has not reopened the question of authorship, except by a reference to Dr. Neilson's assignment of this and other poems to Huchown. More guidance might perhaps have been given to the student on this point, and some reference made to Dr. Henry MacCracken's substantial refutation of the Huchown theory in the Publications of the modern language association of America for September, 1910 (vol. 25). But the editor has made clear elsewhere his view that the 'Parlement' is not by Huchown, and any discussion of the question at length is beyond the scope of his series."

+ Ath 1915,2:292 O 23 1050w

"For this interesting fourteenth-century alliterative poem dealing with the 'nine worthies,' the editor has provided full critical apparatus. But, more than that, he has made accessible, almost for the first time the fullest mediæval treatment of the eternally popular subject of heroes. We are especially grateful when we can have such attractive printing of mediæval texts."

+ Dial 60:176 F 17 '16 80w

"Particularly welcome, as the poem (665 lines in all) has hitherto been accessible only in the rare Roxburghe club edition (1897), also by Professor Gollancz. . . . The vocabulary of these alliterative poems is notoriously difficult, so that the careful glossary of the present volume is especially valuable. Altogether, Professor Gollancz has put so much good work into this edition that one cannot but regret that he did not put somewhat more and make it final. We refer particularly to the preface, where a detailed discussion of the relation of the poem to the other poems of the same general group (in respect to language, etc.) and of the historical development of the theme of the nine worthies is obviously desirable."

+ Nation 102:172 F 10 '16 650w

Spec 115:sup426 O 2 '15 200w

GOMEZ-CARRILLO, E. Among the ruins; tr. by Florence Simmonds. *$1.50 (2c) Doran 940.91 (Eng ed A16-1079)

The author is a Spanish journalist who went to the front as soon as possible after hostilities began. His account of what he saw as given in this book covers the period between November 15, 1914, and March 10, 1915. It is an extremely personal account in narrative style and the many stories of atrocities in Belgium and northern France are corroborated by this new witness.

Ath p118 Mr '16 170w

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '16 530w

+ Ind 87:130 Jl 24 '16 110w

"Of all the neutral countries Spain is probably the most sharply divided in public sentiment concerning the war. A book on the war by an able Spanish journalist is, therefore, of more than usual interest. . . . The especial charm of his book lies in the felicity with which against the horrors of ruined cities and the devastating march of armies he has sketched in a background of literary and historical allusion."

+ Nation 102:678 Je 22 '16 530w

N Y Br Lib News 3:70 My '16 20w

"It views the conflict from the Spanish viewpoint and presents the narrative after the methods of the Spanish journalist. . . . As far as possible he talks with the inhabitants and quotes their descriptions of what they had seen and endured. The quotations are direct, simple, and dramatic, and the reader gets a much more vivid idea of war terrors and horrors than from the indirect narratives in which American and English correspondents are more apt to write their descriptions."

+ N Y Times 21:233 Je 4 '16 490w

"The visit to Gen. Joffre is of especial interest for it corrects the legend that has been accepted without question. The French commander is not silent, taciturn, mysterious or lugubrious. The most marvelous thing about him is his power of endurance. His staff, though young, look weary. He is always fresh, always patient and confident."

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 19 '16 390w

GOOCH, FRANK AUSTIN. Representative procedures in quantitative chemical analysis. il *$2 Wiley 545 16-772

"It opens with a brief discussion of non-reversible and reversible reactions, including the

GOOCH, FRANK AUSTIN—Continued
mass law and the principle of LeChatelier. This is succeeded by a full consideration of the processes of weighing and measuring. The analytical procedures are, as usual, subdivided into gravimetric and volumetric analyses, the latter including brief sections upon gasometric and colorimetric methods. The concluding chapter deals with systematic analyses of brass, limestone, silicates, substances yielding ammonia, and a few applications of indirect methods of analysis."—Science

+ Cleveland p112 Ag '16 20w
+ Pittsburgh 21:348 J1 '16 30w

"A noteworthy and valuable addition to the literature of analytical chemistry. It contains much that is of novel interest to a more experienced analyst, but it is probable that many teachers will question whether a beginner, lacking a background of experience, will be able to appreciate and use the descriptive material which is included in the text, but not directly applied to definite analyses. This material is, however, so arranged as to permit of selection, and it is all stimulating to the interested worker." H. P. Talbot

+ Science n s 43:643 My 5 '16 450w

GOODCHILD, GEORGE, ed. Blinded soldiers and sailors gift book. il $*1.50 (1½c) Putnam 16-1292

Many distinguished authors have contributed stories, poems or sketches to this book, the profits from which are to go to the support of a home for blinded soldiers and sailors. Most of the contributions touch in some way on the war. Robert Hichens, John Galsworthy, Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler, Eden Phillpotts, H. G. Wells, E. Nesbit, and A. C. Benson are among the contributors. The pictures are by well-known artists. They do not illustrate the text, however, but, like the stories, represent offerings to a worthy cause. With a few exceptions they have no relation to the subject of the book.

"Altogether it is a notable collection, not unworthy of the cause which it is to benefit."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 15 '16 200w

"Of varying excellence and on widely varying themes are these gratuitous contributions; but surely the purpose of the volume—the forwarding of the good work at St. Dunstan's in helping the blinded war-victims to help themselves—should procure for it a good sale."

+ Dial 60:176 F 17 '16 300w

+ Sat R 120:524 N 27 '15 150w

"Some of the most popular artists of the day have contributed to the book, and the result is a very varied and entertaining volume. One of the most amusing things is a short article by Mr. G. K. Chesterton on 'Shakespeare and the Germans.'"

+ Spec 115:834 D 11 '15 730w

GOODCHILD, GEORGE, comp. Lore of the wanderer. (Wayfarer's lib.) *40c Dutton 820.8 A16-336

"In this open-air anthology may be found a collection of nature essays by Stevenson, Hazlitt, Dickens, Ruskin, Bacon, Leigh Hunt, Richard Jefferies, Thoreau, Mrs. Mitford and others. Some of these essays are well known, some are little known, and all give pleasure to the traveler along the road and the wanderer in the fields."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 12:328 Ap '16

Boston Transcript p9 Ja 15 '16 630w

+ Cath World 102:397 D '15 30w

GOODNOW, FRANK JOHNSON. Principles of constitutional government. (Harper's citizen's ser.) *$2 (2½c) Harper 342 16-14589

This book is based on a series of lectures delivered in the year 1913-14 before the students of Peking university by the present president of the Johns Hopkins university. The author had been called to China as legal adviser to the government. In this capacity he was called on to answer the question, What are the essentials of constitutional government? He has prepared this book in the belief that his attempt to answer this question in a way that would be clear to a people having no experience with constitutional government will be of value to students taking up the subject for the first time. He explains the forms of constitutional government carried out in the United States, Canada, Australia and the countries of Europe. He discusses the bicameral system, the position and powers of the courts in the various countries, etc. The texts of the constitutions of the United States, France, Germany, Belgium and Japan are given in an appendix.

A L A Bkl 13:9 O '16

+ Boston Transcript p7 J1 22 '16 250w

+ Ind 88:286 N 13 '16 70w

+ Nation 103:283 S 21 '16 700w

"He never allows himself to be led away by that plethora of facts which too often tempts the writer of a text-book into dullness. His style, if it is too rarely dignified, is always simple and clear. . . . Its main defect is a certain absence of arresting personality, a determination to be pedagogic where there is the opportunity to be vivid. . . . The one substantial defect in Dr. Goodnow's book is the absence of any discussion of the future of the parliamentary system."

H. J. L.

+ New Repub 8:48 Ag 12 '16 1350w

+ N Y Times 21:315 Ag 13 '16 1200w

"Apart, however, from such distinctly controversial points, it may be said that Dr. Goodnow's book, by reason of its comprehensiveness and its critical and comparative method, is in no ordinary degree enlightening."

+ No Am 204:461 S '16 800w

R of Rs 54:455 O '16 130w

"The book is not only a popular treatise on constitutional government, but it is hardly less valuable for its brief and incidental, but comprehensive, review of recent political development in the western world."

+ Springfield Republican p8 J1 13 '16 650w

GOODRICH, ARTHUR (FREDERICK). Sign of freedom. il $*1.35 (2c) Appleton 16-9543

When David Warburton is left orphaned at his mother's death, he is "bound out" to Ebenezer Strong, a narrow-minded, cruel-hearted farmer. Under harsh treatment the boy becomes sullen and bitter. He is allowed to grow up in ignorance and when he happens by chance on a country Fourth of July celebration, he understands nothing of its meaning. Little Mary Graham enlightens him, and the course of his life is thereafter changed. The latter half of the story covers the civil war years. David enlists and before the war is over wins the rank that had been held by an ancestor in the revolution, becoming Major Warburton.

+ A L A Bkl 13:221 F '17

"'The sign of freedom' may or may not strut its little hour as a 'best seller,' but it has already proved its right to a better distinction, that of a well-written and interesting book."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '16 250w

+ Ind 86:405 Je 5 '16 40w

"Mr. Goodrich rightly calls his new story 'A romance of patriotism,' the sign of freedom being our country's flag. The story will command the interest of young readers, and will, no doubt, fulfill its purpose of stirring their love of country and loyalty to its symbol."

+ N Y Times 21:253 Je 18 '16 210w

"Mr. Goodrich has written a very entertaining story. It pulses with restrained patriotism, stirring action and honest romance, and will be found altogether absorbing by devotees of light fiction."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 4 '16 300w

GOODSELL, WILLYSTINE. History of the family as a social and educational institution. *$2 Macmillan 392 15-27974

"Beyond indicating that this book is a 'history' and in a 'textbook series in education,' the author does not offer any explanation of its purpose or scope. As history, it follows the time relation consistently, and only the last ninety pages are devoted to the contemporary family. As a textbook, it is clearly written, has short chapters with brief bibliographies of sources and secondary works, and is an extremely valuable condensation of facts and direct citations which otherwise would require laborious research for the average student."—Am J Soc

"This book is a genuine contribution for which many of us have looked. Bridging as it does the gap between Westermarck, Howard, and other technical writers on the one hand, and younger minds confused by their infinite detail, it will be useful, if not the most useful, for undergraduate work in the study of the family for a long time to come." B. W. Brown

+ Am J Soc 21:702 Mr '16 500w

+ A L A Bkl 12:453 Jl '16

"The book adds nothing to our present knowledge of the subject, but it does present the latest views and theories, together with an abundance of concrete information in a comprehensive manner. Judged by the standards of a text book it is a splendid achievement and is destined to an extended use." J. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 67:311 S '16 280w

+ Educ R 52:194 S '16 750w

"Even better than the historical treatment of the family is the frank yet fairly conservative comparison of current theories of adjustment and reconstruction of family relationships."

+ Ind 86:29 Ap 3 '16 60w

"It is a sign of the wholesome change which has taken place in the public attitude that the author describes with frankness certain conditions associated with the family, such as prostitution and social diseases, whose treatment has heretofore marked a book as unfit for general circulation and even for college students."

+ J Pol Econ 24:732 Jl '16 300w

"Our author is as discreet and has as delicate a sense of propriety as could be desired. . . . Our doubts as to the adaptability of the volume for use as a textbook are based upon the question as to whether topics involving sex can be acceptably treated, except in the most summary and partial fashion, in a textbook. For the graduate student, however, this volume will be most useful as a book of reference."

+ Nation 103:402 O 26 '16 750w

"From the particular point of view of education the book is perhaps least satisfying, but the task which Prof. Goodsell undertook was one of extraordinary difficulty. It called for scholarship of a high order, and, above all, for a philosophical outlook which would help to preserve unity of aim and balance of treatment. Although defective in these respects the book is full of human interest."

+ Nature 97:477 Ag 10 '16 930w

R of Rs 53:380 Mr '16 30w

"Selected bibliographies at the close of each chapter and a fine and complete index of thirty-five pages complete the volume. Conflicting theories are fairly stated, essential points are clearly made, and useless detail is ignored."

J. Q. Dealey

+ School R 24:634 O '16 290w

"Has rather too much of a dual nature. It is a text book. But from the method by which the author has approached the subject, and the argumentative style, some may gather the impression that the book is intended to propagate certain theories of reform. Propagandist works have their place, but not as text books in an advanced educational institution, where the object is to instill the scientific method."

+ Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 570w

"The strangest omission in a book devoted to the family as a social and educational institution is the failure even to refer to the modern agencies and institutions effectively at work to reinforce the family when it is weak, to supplement the equipment of the home and to substitute something to take the place of the family when it has failed or does not exist."

+ Survey 36:526 Ag 19 '16 650w

GOODSPEED, EDGAR JOHNSON. Story of the New Testament. (Handbooks of ethics and religion) *$1 (3c) Univ. of Chicago press 225 16-13525

The books and letters which compose the New Testament were written to meet special situations or were called forth by definite crises in the history of early Christianity. "This practical and occasional character of the books of the New Testament can hardly be overemphasized," says the author, "for it is only in the light of the situations that called them forth that these books can be really understood." The purpose of this book is to make clear those situations. Suggestions for study at the close of each chapter make the work adaptable to textbook use. The author is professor of Biblical and patristic Greek in the University of Chicago.

"The conclusions of critical scholarship are presented simply and without extended argument. . . . The style of writing is such as to attract the general reader. The questions at the end of each chapter will be helpful in individual or class use." J. P. Deane

+ Am J Theol 21:127 Ja '17 270w

+ A L A Bkl 13:145 Ja '17

+ Ind 89:118 Ja 15 '17 60w

N Y Br Lib News 3:107 Jl '16

"Clear, simple and to the point, it opens at once to what the average student of the New Testament would like to know."

+ Springfield Republican p7 N 26 '16 90w

GOODSPEED, THOMAS WAKEFIELD. History of the University of Chicago. II *$3 (1c) Univ. of Chicago press 378 16-13367

The University of Chicago, founded in 1890, is now a quarter of a century old. Dr. Goodspeed, who writes this history of its first twenty-five years of activity, is the real founder of the institution. He conceived the idea which Mr. Rockefeller's endowment put into effect, and he has been connected with the university in one official capacity or another, since its founding. Two thirds or more of the book are devoted to the administration of William Rainey Harper. The expansions of the last ten years under President Judson are covered more briefly. There are a number of illustrations showing the development of the university buildings.

"The many extracts from private letters here printed for the first time are of permanent interest. In them we read the minds of the quite unusual group of men who conceived the university before either the founder or the first president had given it any thought."

+ Am Hist R 22:214 O '16 530w

"In planning his volume he has allotted no space whatever to the life of the students, which detracts from its comprehensiveness. It is, however, one of the three or four excellent histories of an American university yet written."

+ Nation 103:284 S 21 '16 700w

N Y Br Lib News 3:143 S '16

+ R of Rs 54:348 S '16 100w

Springfield Republican p8 Jl 20 '16 260w

GORDON, GEORGE ANGLIER. Aspects of the infinite mystery. *$1.50 (2c) Houghton 230 16-20598

"This volume is somewhat of the nature of a confession of faith," says the author. Having given many years of thought to what he calls the "Eternal wonder that is the object of all faith" he is ready to record what it means to him. The book represents the "sobered, purified, residual faith" that is the result of "the discipline of time upon the free mind." The idea that gives unity to the volume is "the idea of the god as the inevitable quest of the human spirit." Contents: The meaning of the title; The god as the path to God; Personality in God; Fatherhood in God; Man the host of the infinite; The historic reality of Jesus; Man and the moral ideal; The reality of inspiration; The dualism in man; Moral evil and racial hope; The mystery of redemption; The mystery of the end.

GORDON, GEORGE ANGIER—Continued
A L A Bkl 13:197 F '17

"The timeliness of this book by Dr. Gordon cannot be overestimated. . . . It is unquestionably the best ever issued by the author, for it is more personal and intimate. It is more nearly a spiritual biography, and is perhaps as much of the story of the preacher's lengthening experience as we are ever likely to get." F. B. N.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 4 '16 700w

"Overmastering idealism, moral passion, and unshakable faith in the triumph of righteousness are the soul of his work."

+ Ind 89:30 Ja 1 '17 150w

N Y Br Lib News 3:156 O '16 40w

St Louis 15:6 Ja '17

+ Springfield Republican p8 D 8 '16 580w

GORDON, JAN, and GORDON, CORA JOSEPHINE. Luck of thirteen. il *$2.50 Dutton 16-18499

"This account of 'wanderings and flight through Montenegro and Serbia' last year gives a vivid impression of these lands and their peoples at a critical period. The authors left their studios in Paris for medical relief work in Serbia in the early part of the year, and describe in a short recapitulatory chapter the difficulties faced and overcome while typhus was still raging. Their wanderings began as a kind of strenuous holiday when typhus was past, and culminated, when Serbia was overrun, in a flight through the mountains in a party of thirteen English to the coast of San Giovanni di Medua."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Reviewed by Harold Stearns

+ New Repub 9:sup24 N 18 '16 100w

"They were eventful weeks filled with all sorts of adventures and misadventures, but the couple rarely failed to get amusement out of whatever happened, and they tell the story with quizzical humor and never failing buoyant good nature."

+ N Y Times 21:247 Je 18 '16 150w

+ R of Rs 54:237 Ag '16 20w

"The description of the flight with the Serbians into Montenegro is an admirable piece of sustained and vivid writing, and makes an absorbing climax. The book is admirably illustrated by paintings, good photographs and graphically humorous tail-pieces in black and white."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p122 Mr 16 '16 520w

GORDON, SAMUEL. God's remnants. *$1.35 (1½c) Dutton 16-8811

Stories of the Jewish people in Austria, Galicia, Poland, Russia, eastern Prussia, London and New York. The life of the Hebrews, their faith, their traditions, their longings, sufferings and heroisms are intimately portrayed in the following interpretations: Black flame; A deal in land; The riots; A family gathering; Shepherd and sheep; The height of the occasion; The parting of the ways; A mesalliance made in heaven; The stolen blessing; The lighter sentence; A righteous renegade; The cloven heavens; God's balance; The nameless grave.

"Samuel Gordon has drawn the significant characteristics of the Jewish temperament with a sympathetic presentation of their racial point of view, too frequently misunderstood."

+ Ind 86:486 Je 19 '16 70w

+ New Repub 9:103 N 25 '16 320w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 J1 '16 30w

GORDON, WINIFRED (MRS. WILL GORDON). Woman in the Balkans. il *$3.50 (1c) Dodd 914.96

The journeys thru the Balkan countries described in this book are not dated, but they seem to have been taken at a time when those unhappy states were at peace with one another. The historical chapters, however, are in each case brought down to date, account being taken of the two earlier and the present wars. The author is an experienced traveler who can draw comparisons with Mexico and Korea or with Norway and the Rockies, and she writes of the significant little things that catch a trained eye. Each of the Balkan capitals is given a chapter. Many prominent men and women, including members of royalty, enter into the narrative. An interesting chapter in the section devoted to Roumania gives an account of gypsy lore and music. There are many illustrations from photographs and a folding map.

+ A L A Bkl 13:119 D '16

"Her chronicle unconsciously reflects the charm of the blithe spirit whose unflagging interest and enthusiasm are contagious. . . . Through the story throbs the unconquerable spirit of the Balkan peoples."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 11 '16 660w

+ N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 120w

+ Spec 117:321 S 16 '16 120w

GORKY, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVITCH PYESHKOFF). Confession; tr. from the Russian by Rose Strunsky; with an introd. by the translator. *$1.35 (1½c) Stokes 16-8813

The story told in "The confession" is the story of a man's quest for peace and satisfaction and for understanding of life. After the death of his young wife, Matvei, who has struggled upward from a founding childhood, turns to religion for the answer to the doubts and fears that oppress him. But he finds no answer there. In the monastery in which he seeks seclusion from the wickedness and injustice of the world, he finds baseness and deceit and almost unspeakable vileness. He leaves the cloister in disgust and after varied experiences awakens to a sense of the class struggle and in the movement of the people for freedom finds that for which he has been seeking, an ideal that is worth living for, and in brotherhood he sees the purpose and meaning that make human life divine.

"This modern 'Pilgrim's progress' is as replete with hope and as poignantly touching as Bunyan's other-worldly search, notwithstanding the bitterness of satiric intention underlying Matvei's naively simple style." Winifred Smith

+ Dial 61:267 O 5 '16 200w

"Of Russian novels recently translated, this is the most artistic. . . . At last peace and understanding of the meaning of life dawn for the wanderer. The reader also is content with the conclusion: 'Great are the Russian people and indescribably beautiful is life.'"

+ Lit D 52:1463 My 20 '16 170w

"Gorky's present translator expresses her faith in him as an interpreter of the Russian spirit. He does indeed see beyond the bad dream of life as it is a mystical vision of life as it may or even shall be. . . . What puzzles and harasses us in reading fiction like Gorky's is that it seems to bring us into contact with a people totally lacking mental and moral stability, a race with childish deficiencies of humor and common-sense—never, at best, escaping the psycho-physical torments of a mentally precocious puberty." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 102:569 My 25 '16 750w

"Rose Strunsky, the translator, who has succeeded admirably in preserving the strength and poetic beauty of the original, gives a vivid sketch of Gorky's life and character and of the Russia of the revolution, which adds materially to the reader's understanding and appreciation of 'The confession.'"

+ N Y Times 21:290 J1 23 '16 1000w

"Gorky is again living in Russia and working for a new social order that shall wipe away blood and lust from the earth. 'The confession' is a great advance over his past work. It places him in a niche with Dostoevsky and Turgenev. The translation and excellent foreword are by Rose Strunsky."

+ R of Rs 53:758 Je '16 300w

"The new novel by Maxim Gorky is an event not so much because it is a new Gorky novel as because it departs from the theme of social ferment for which its author has heretofore been conspicuously noted. . . . There is little of the old Gorky here, but there is enough of him, as in the descriptions of the horrors of Matvei's life as a monk, to make it clear that he has not deserted his old tenets, didactic or stylistic."

+ Springfield Republican p10 Je 30 '16 230w

GORKY, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVITCH PYESHKOFF). Twenty-six men and a girl, and other stories; tr. from the Russian by Emily Jakowleff and Dora B. Montefiore. (Readers' library) *$1.25 (3c) Stokes (Eng ed W15-106)

The four stories that make up this book are: Twenty-six men and a girl; Tchelkash; My fellow traveller; On a raft. They are unrelated and have been chosen as typical of Gorky at his best. Mr. Garnett in his introduction points out the essential difference between the English and the Russian conception of what is 'immoral' in literature, and says of the title story that it is "a good illustration of the fact that the art that analyses human nature is immeasurably superior to the art which falsifies human nature to suit a moral purpose." "Twenty-six and one, and other stories" was published by Brentano's in 1902.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Mr 25 '16 480w

"Two of the four stories in this new collection of Gorky's work have been recently published in other English translations. It is only fair to say that the version by the Misses Jakowleff and Montefiore is exceptionally good—less literal, perhaps, than the earlier one, but conveying the meaning in freer, more flexible English. . . . If there is a more horrible story written than 'Twenty-six men and a girl' we do not know it—unless perhaps it may be one or two others by the same author. . . . What redeems him, both as man and artist, is his lack of perfunctoriness."

N Y Times 21:342 S 3 '16 300w

GOSS, GEORGE E. Life saving. il $1 (4c) Assn. press 614.8 16-18578

How to save life in the water is the subject of this book by the physical director of the Y. M. C. A. of Manila. The first chapter, A call to duty, emphasizes the importance of such knowledge on the part of all swimmers. The succeeding chapters take up: Essential swimming strokes to use in rescue work; A typical rescue; Methods of release; Methods of rescue; Resuscitation; Method of drilling mass classes in life saving; Organizations in the United States engaged in life saving; Suggestions. Almost every process described has an accompanying illustration.

+ A L A Bkl 13:107 D '16

"Excellently written and fully illustrated. Just the book to give to a Boy scout or any other live 'boy' from ten to sixty years old who likes swimming." F. R.

+ Pub W 90:606 Ag 19 '16 220w

GOSSE, EDMUND WILLIAM. Inter arma. *$1.50 Scribner 824 (Eng ed 16-26772)

"Contains 'War and literature,' 'The unity of France,' 'The desecration of French monuments,' 'The Napoleonic wars in English poetry,' 'War poetry in France,' 'A French satirist in England,' and 'The neutrality of Sweden,' all of which were originally contributed to the Edinburgh Review." (Ath M '16) "Mr. Gosse says in his preface that these essays represent the direction of his own thoughts under the excitement and anxiety of the war; but such words as 'causerie' and 'passing impressions' are too modest for the actualities he offers to his readers. What he does offer is, in fact—whether of set purpose or as a subconscious result of long experience and acute sympathy—a revelation, especially needed in these times, of all that France means to the world, both in her past and her present." (Ath Je '16)

+ A L A Bkl 13:20 O '16

Ath p239 My '16 40w

+ Ath p275 Je '16 1650w

"The one paper in the collection, however, that brings us most closely to the war, and that discloses most clearly the enormity of German crimes, is Mr. Gosse's account of 'The desecration of French monuments.' In it he writes an historical essay of the utmost permanent value." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 1 '16 1350w

+ Nation 103:111 Ag 3 '16 1050w

"A paper on 'The neutrality of Sweden,' written a little more than a year ago, points out with calm appraisal of value what the British have lost by their indifference, both before and since the beginning of the war, to the friendliness of Sweden and the possibilities of closer relations with that country, literary and otherwise. He shows also how the Germans had done their best to improve those relations. The paper is very modestly done, but it shows that kind of far-sighted observing and thinking and friendly intention that go toward the making of international policies of the highest and finest type. It is an essay whose general reading in this country would benefit public thought because of the applicability of its reasoning to some of our own international relations."

+ N Y Times 21:280 Jl 9 '16 680w

"Whether Mr. Edmund Gosse, an intimate of France, lays a late laurel on the tomb of Paul Déroulède, utters a balanced appreciation of Charles Péguy, or strays into study of a forgotten, or one might nearly say, unknown, poem of Auguste Barbier, he writes not for to-day alone, but for the coming generation of English and French leaders who in time of peace will need an entente of the mind and heart."

+ Sat R 121:495 My 20 '16 780w

+ Springfield Republican p8 Jl 20 '16 420w

"Behind his familiar elegance glows a new warmth; and, if some of his conclusions are disputable, his readers will be the richer for his knowledge and the keener for his convictions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p197 Ap 27 '16 1350w

GOULD, BENJAMIN APTHORP. Greater tragedy, and other things. *$1 (3c) Putnam 940.91 16-8946

A collection of papers on the war written by an American who is living in Canada. The author is pro-Ally and anti-Wilson. "The Wilson administration has from the beginning of the war stood for national selfishness," he says. He writes of: The Lusitania; Has Germany wanted America in the war? The war against war; Neutrality; Our national conscience; Canadian friendship, etc.

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:581 Ag '16 60w

"It is somewhat emphatic in its expressions of opinion and in its criticisms of certain national policies, but there is evident a note of optimism as to our future which must serve to commend it to any serious-minded American."

+ Army and Navy Journal 53:1184 My 13 '16 130w

R of Rs 53:628 My '16 20w

Spec 117:348 S 23 '16 110w

GOULD, ELIZABETH LINCOLN. Cap'n Gid. il *$1 Penn 16-4425

"As foremost citizen of Pelling, Vt., Cap'n Gid discovered that Pelling was not the whole world, when he moved to Mrs. Rose Tippet's select boarding house in the city. The story concerns his adventures there, the friends he made, and the enemies he combated within the boarding-house fold. There was the eternal dyspeptic, the loud-voiced suffragette, the eavesdropper, and so on. There is a middle-aged romance and a young romance besides included in the tale."—Boston Transcript

"A short story with no problems, good for reading aloud or to recommend for the sick room."

+ A L A Bkl 13:124 D '16

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 11 '16 80w

"The book has a charming and friendly tone throughout."

+ Dial 61:400 N 16 '16 100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:136 S '16

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 180w

GOULD, FREDERICK JAMES. Worth while people. il *75c (2½c) Harper 170 16-18585

As in his books, "Heroes of peace" and "Victors of peace" the author honors men and women of all walks of life who have done things worth while. In his first chapter he tells the story of Thermopylae and then brings together from many times and places incidents that illustrate the same type of courage. Similarly, in the chapter that opens with an account of the building of the Panama canal, he tells stories of men and women who have displayed the same qualities of determination and perseverance which made the building of the canal possible. This, in general, is the plan of the book.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 13 '17 200w

+ Ind 88:404 D 4 '16 30w

"The stories are brief and dramatical. . . . with a tendency to set an example to the boy and girl of to-day."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 50w

GOULD, GEORGE MILBRY. Practitioner's medical dictionary. 3d ed, rev and enl by R. J. E. Scott. *$2.75 Blakiston 610.3 16-6968

"This new edition is unsurpassed as to comprehensiveness, clearness and size. It contains over 70,000 words. To reduce the size of the book and to make it a handy volume a small type had to be selected, but the type is very clear and legible and is even a little larger than that used in Webster's unabridged dictionary. Each word is accompanied by its pronunciation and followed by its etymology. The definitions are clear and concise. The book contains all the numerous and latest eponyms in their proper alphabetical order, such as Abderhalden's test, Alzheimer's disease, Lane's kink, Meltzer's method, Schlatter's disease. An important feature is the large number of new words with which the medical vocabulary has been enriched during the last few years. The book contains such new words as anoci-association, biometer, colli-culectomy, gassed, kerithery, leukotoxic, serobacterins, sympathoblasts, etc."—Science

"Unique among modern dictionaries." A. Al-leman

+ Science n s 43:897 Je 23 '16 470w

GOULDSBURY, CHARLES ELPHINSTONE. Tiger slayer by order. il *$2.50 Dutton 799

"Entertaining reminiscences of a Bombay police official [Digby Davies] put into connected form by one of his brother police. Mr. Davies for many years employed his various activities in the tracking of criminals and tigers. His accounts of the big-game shooting, which was part and parcel of his appointment, are of sustained interest. His nature notes are, on the whole, reliable."—Pittsburgh (Condensed from Outlook [London] 1916)

+ Ath 1915,2:417 D 4 450w

"The conditions which the book describes are those which were to be found thirty years ago in India."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '16 270w

"Mr. Davies gives good advice concerning arms, ammunition, and the curing of skins. His knowledge of the habits and haunts of tigers, as well as of the numerous other wild animals and game, his keen interest in the life and customs of the Bhils and other tribes he met, make this book worth reading by both laymen and sportsmen."

+ Nation 103:41 JI 13 '16 500w

+ Pittsburgh 21:288 Je '16 50w

"The merit of the book is that the stories and nature notes are as pleasant for the ordinary man to read as the rest of the book is valuable for the sportsman. It is a book full of knowledge drawn from experience and close observation, and this fact is compensation enough for any weakness in literary craftsmanship."

+ Spec 115:sup603 N 6 '15 1700w

GOWIN, ENOCH BURTON. Executive and his control of men. *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan 658.7 15-23606

For descriptive note see Annual for 1915.

"Readable, with much biographical anecdote, which some claim causes the discussion to become rambling and aimless."

+ — A L A Bkl 12:322 Ap '16

"The book is carefully prepared, ably analyzed, and well-written. A prodigiously broad reading and observation have preceded writing. One can but wonder, however, whether a study so broadly academic in character, one which will appeal to the philosophical mind, will be sufficiently specific to interest the executive,—he of the motor type, whose power is to him an unanalyzed art." J. H. W.

+ Ann Am Acad 68:324 N '16 210w

"In spite of the distinctly commercial attitude of the author, the book contains a mass of valuable material."

+ Ind 86:458 Je 12 '16 90w

"The book is highly organized—in fact, is very minutely outlined. The sources from which the author has drawn his material are correct and the material is utilized for the most part in a discriminating manner. While the book offers little new material, nevertheless it contributes to the organization of the material already available and shows its bearing upon problems of executive leadership that will undoubtedly be helpful to one not acquainted with the psychological and sociological sources. It should be decidedly stimulating to the public at large and to executives in particular. The great mass of illustrative and biographical material skillfully woven in holds the interest from the start. It may well serve as a book for collateral reading in university courses in management." H. D. Kitson

+ J Pol Econ 24:310 Mr '16 600w

GOWIN, ENOCH BURTON, and WHEATLEY, WILLIAM ALONZO. Occupations. il $1.20 (1c) Ginn 174 16-7923

A book designed to serve as a guide to the high school boy in choosing his life work. It is adapted for classroom use and may be used in a course for first or second year pupils. The authors believe that such a study of vocations "besides being intrinsically interesting to the pupils, gives them greater respect for all kinds of honorable work, helps them later to choose more wisely their life work, convinces them of the absolute necessity for a thorough preparation before entering any vocation, and holds to the end of the high-school course many who otherwise would drop out early in the race." Part 1, Introduction to the study of vocations, has chapters on: Importance of vocational information; Characteristics of a good vocation; How to study vocations. Part 2 consists of a Detailed study of the most important life vocations. Part 3 has three chapters on Vocational adjustment. Reading references follow each chapter and there is a list of vocational libraries and additional reference material in an appendix.

+ Ind 88:34 O 2 '16 40w

Nation 103:237 S 7 '16 120w

N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16

"An excellent text. The authors wisely discuss groups and classes of occupations, rather than detailed trades, and discuss them in a thorough and scholarly manner."

+ School R 24:495 Je '16 25w

"It is easy to imagine employers buying this book in large quantities and distributing it among boys. It is difficult to imagine labor unions doing the same thing. . . . With a single exception unionism itself is not even mentioned. Similarly, the whole matter of hours is passed over. . . . Our young employe is left prepared to enter upon his 'life career' quite free from any annoying notions of duty to his fellow worker, quite unconscious of the meaning of solidarity, quite full of ideals of 'loyalty' to his employer."

+ — Survey 36:543 Ag 26 '16 430w

GRAEVE, OSCAR. Keys of the city. *$1.35 (2½c) Century 16-17655

The story of a little boy who spends his childhood in Bay Ridge, a suburb of Brooklyn overlooking distant Manhattan. To David Wells, a fisherman's son, it is the city of dreams which he is some day to conquer. The conquest begins low down, in an insurance office in Wall street, but after three years of drudging at work that gives no scope to his imagination, David sees that this is not the way upward for him. He ultimately finds his opportunity, climbs to the top, wins money and ease, marries and enters an assured place in the social world. Then he meets Nora Davenport, the playmate of his childhood, and finds that all his achievements are as nothing. The reader is left in doubt as to the future of David and Nora.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '17 170w
Ind 89:72 Ja 8 '17 130w

"Whether Mr. Graeve meant to show us how seldom real life fulfills the dreams and aspirations of youth is a question, but that seems the only motive that would justify a description of lives that realized ideals so little, that missed the good things all along the line and evidently compromised by assuming, in the end, that self-gratification justified conditions which could be only unconventional, irregular, and illegal. . . . The descriptions and style are more agreeable than the story."

— + Lit D 53:1040 O 21 '16 210w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. Through Russian Central Asia. il *$2.25 (3c) Macmillan 915 16-14709

The journeys described in this book were taken in the early summer of 1914. Starting from Vladikavkaz, a point in European Russia, Mr. Graham traveled eastward on foot, crossed the Caspian sea into Central Asia and proceeded thru storied Bokhara, Samarkand, and Tashkent and on up to the Siberian border where, in a Cossack village, the news of the war reached him. It was at this point, it will be remembered, that his book, "Russia and the world" began. Appended to his story of travels are two papers discussing world politics, one on "Russia and India and the prospects of Anglo-Russian friendship," one on "The Russian empire and the British empire."

+ A L A Bkl 13:29 O '16
+ Ath p290 Je '16 70w

"What Mr. Graham saw he felt; what he felt he preserved in his memory. All that he saw and felt he passes on to his readers." E. F. E.
+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 2 '16 1350w
+ Ind 88:285 N 13 '16 50w
+ Lit D 53:1344 N 18 '16 200w
+ Nation 103:326 O 5 '16 930w

"Nor are episodes on the road just gracefully reported; they are refracted through an alert intelligence. And the sum of this method of approach is a picture of great beauty and vigor and authenticity." H. S.

+ New Repub 8:200 S 23 '16 760w
+ N Y Times 21:305 Ag 6 '16 830w

"Mr. Graham himself is inveterately alive to differences of soul. Fundamentally the charm of Mr. Graham's book is poetic—though his language is the most natural of prose and his point of view admits the commonplace. Like poetry, this book, in particular, is a widener of mental horizons and a balm to the spirit."

+ No Am 204:463 S '16 650w
+ R of Rs 54:458 O '16 90w

"Mr. Stephen Graham has the true heart of the tramp. We all know the style of the man who is out for intellectual exploitation; he shows his condescension and his arrogance even while he tries to hide them. But there is no trace of these things in Mr. Graham's writings."

+ Spec 117:16 Jl 1 '16 2050w

"The fact that it is Russian Central Asia heightens the romance of it. It is a region difficult of penetration even for a Russian unless he is a colonizing peasant. It is an adventure of which almost any writer could write interestingly; with Mr. Graham telling about it, the wonder of it is trebled."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 7 '16 580w

"To read Mr. Graham's book is as near a substitute for going there oneself as one can have. . . . In his generalizing Mr. Graham would seem an unsafe guide. He has an imperfect sense for the difference between statements which are well-supported by evidence, statements which are possibly true but questionable, and statements which are flat against the facts."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p247 My 25 '16 1200w

GRAHAME, KENNETH, ed. Cambridge book of poetry for children. il *$1.50 Putnam 821 16-10825

The high standard set by Mr. Grahame has made this a not over large collection, and the eliminating tests he has applied have limited it chiefly to lyric poetry. And this, he says, is no bad thing. "Lyric verse may not be representative of the whole range of English poetry, but as an introduction to it, as a wicket-gate, there is no better portal." The poems are arranged in three groups, For the very smallest ones, For those a little older, For those still older.

+ A L A Bkl 13:88 N '16

"Grown-ups who are interested in what they give children to read will find much food for thought in the short but meaty and also amusing preface given the book by the editor," G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:404 D '16 480w
+ Dial 61:546 D 14 '16 60w

"Not a large book, it has good variety. There are the old favorites from 'Wynken, Blynken and Nod' to Byron's 'Sennacherib,' and many less known, as Thorbury's 'Riding to the tournament.' Its English genesis is oddly shown in the inclusion of 'Sheridan's Ride' and the omission of Paul Revere's, altho Longfellow is the most quoted American in the collection."

+ Ind 88:466 D 11 '16 90w
Lit D 53:1562 D 9 '16 200w

"The best selection of poetry for children we have as yet encountered."

+ Sat R 121:351 Ap 8 '16 1100w

"One has the right to expect that the author of 'The golden age' would have that whimsical intuition which is indispensable to the chosen companion of children. Reading this anthology assures one that both he and they may safely trust the author's judgment."

+ Springfield Republican p10 O 13 '16 600w
+ Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 40w

GRAHAME-WHITE, CLAUDE, and HARPER, HARRY. Learning to fly; a practical manual for beginners. il *75c Macmillan 629.1 (Eng ed 16-15162)

"A companionable little volume intended to stimulate the interest of the novice who has decided to enter the great and growing industry of aviation, and who feels that he should, as a preliminary step, learn to fly. He will not find here much that is closely technical or thorough, but he may apprise himself in a general way about the various steps of instruction, something about the airman's temperament, perils of the air and factors that make safety. There are brief records of some of the great pilots, and chapters on cross country flying, aviation as a profession, and the future of flying."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

N Y Br Lib News 3:154 O '16

"Reviewed in Aerial Age, Oct. 9, 1916; Aeronautics, July 19, 1916."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p3 N '16 110w
+ R of Rs 54:685 D '16 60w

GRAND, SARAH, pseud. (MRS. HALDANE MACFALL). Winged Victory. *$1.50 (½c) Appleton 16-18562

When the Duchess of Castlefield Saye finds that her eldest son is in love with a young country girl, she sends him off on a voyage around the world and establishes the girl, who is a skilled lacemaker, in a shop of her own in London. Society takes to the idea, the business prospers and Ella Banks becomes a social favorite. But while the Duchess continues to act as a patroness to the enterprize, it soon appears that it is the Duke who stands back of it. Ella sees in his open friendliness sanction of his son's suit. The world sees in it something else. The explanation which is reserved to the end of the book, proves both assumptions to be wrong. Ella is the Duke's daughter and this revelation, coming just after her marriage with the son, leads to the young man's suicide. The story is a sequel to "Adnam's orchard."

GRAND, SARAH, pseud.—Continued

"Her novel will accomplish its purpose, we believe, in widening the outlook of the average novel-reader, but, to our mind, in addition to other faults, she has omitted the pith of the matter. Had she more plainly analyzed the nature of the soil from which the roots of the tragedy drew their nourishment, it would have been more helpful. . . . There are delineations of the good and bad sides of society which are worthy to be mentioned along with the great names of Thackeray and Meredith."

+ Ath p420 S '16 1500w

"An unintentionally criminal faux pas and a 'startling revelation' of a gratuitously unpleasant sort, are the great events of the plot. . . . Colonel Drindon, the unsuccessful suitor, is the most real of all the ephemeral characters. Perhaps he will be the hero of the conclusion, without which this novel, however long, is not complete." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 4 '16 500w

+ Ind 88:552 D 25 '16 70w

"Viewed from the standpoint of art, Sarah Grand's book is frankly impossible. . . . Her novel is burlesque when she does not intend it to be burlesque. It is melodrama when she has no idea of being melodramatic. . . . The psychology is all wrong. The men and women are not human. They are freaks—not, perhaps, so much freaks as puppets, in whom it is impossible to believe. There is no illusion. Every now and then it seems that one or other must be galvanised into life by sheer force of circumstance, but the author will not have it so."

— Sat R 122:231 S 2 '16 600w

Spec 117:348 S 23 '16 30w

"A preposterous story, preposterously related. . . . What she betrays is a most marked and unfortunate innocence regarding certain canons which, in literature, are more easily recognized than defined. . . . Sarah Grand's minor infringements, though numerous, may be forgiven, as they are amusing. But in two instances the transgression is so notable as to be almost beyond pardon."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p404 Ag 24 '16 1000w

GRANDE, JULIAN. Citizens' army. il *$1.25 (4½c) McBride 355.7 (Eng ed 16-14248)

A description of the Swiss military system. The book's purpose is "to show that it is possible to have an army without militarism." (Author's note) There is an introduction by Colonel F. Feyler, the Swiss military critic. Contents: Universal military service; The origin of the Swiss army; The Swiss military system to-day; Rifle-shooting in Switzerland; The training of officers and non-commissioned officers; Compulsory service and industrial progress; What the German-Swiss say concerning the practical working of their military system; What the French-Swiss say concerning the practical working of their military system; How the Swiss army mobilises; The Swiss military system and its possible application to the United States.

"Tho its suggestions for adoption in this country are superficial, and one wishes more stress had been laid on the compulsory athletic training of school boys, Julian Grande provides plain answers to many of our questions as to military training."

+ Ind 88:167 O 23 '16 70w

"Mr. Grande offers what is perhaps the most comprehensive and detailed account of the Swiss military system and of its influence upon the Swiss people that has yet been given to American readers."

+ N Y Times 21:345 S 3 '16 480w

Pittsburgh 21:515 N '16

"Pages as entertaining as they are factul."

+ Sat R 121:sup4 Je 24 '16 1150w

Springfield Republican p13 N 12 '16 500w

GRANDGENT, CHARLES HALL. Dante. (Master spirits of literature) *$1.50 Duffield 851 16-23422

The author says: "It has been my purpose to present my hero, not as an independent figure, but as the mouthpiece of a great period of the world's history. I have attempted to trace a portrait of the middle ages with Dante's features showing through. . . . Thus I have hoped to differentiate my study from the many volumes already devoted to the Florentine poet, and, at the same time, to contribute somewhat to the diffusion of knowledge of the interesting but still generally unfamiliar epoch which he represents." Contents: Dante Alighieri; Society and politics in the middle ages; Church and state in Dante; Medieval song; Language and poetry; Didactic, moral, satirical, and religious literature; Medieval learning; Theology; Man and his world; Man and his works; Allegory; The medieval temper; The masterpiece.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 3 '17 210w

GRANGER, ALFRED HOYT. England's world empire; some reflections upon its growth and policy. *$1.50 (2c) Open ct. 327.4 17-2186

This work is primarily an answer to Mr. Roland Usher and others who advocate an alliance with Great Britain after the war. Its object, as stated by the author is, "to call the attention of its readers to what has been Great Britain's policy towards foreign nationalities for the past three hundred years, to urge caution before deciding to irrevocably tie ourselves up to her or to any one power." The one alliance to be countenanced is one looking toward an organization for permanent peace, and certain internal social readjustments will be necessary before we are ready for that. The book is made up of three parts: The upbuilding of Great Britain; England in the twentieth century; Conclusions.

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '17 230w

"In so far as the book warns America against entering into an alliance with England, it has an intelligible purpose; but the author weakens his case by his blind admiration of Germany, which he seems to regard as a socialistic country under the guise of autocracy, and by citing arguments against England from the writings of extreme pacifist doctrinaires of the type of Russell, Morel, etc."

Springfield Republican p15 Ja 14 '17 260w

GRANT, ARTHUR JAMES, and others. Introduction to the study of international relations. *75c Macmillan 16-22840

"This [volume] contains six essays, written and collected to form a general text-book of the subject, at the suggestion of the Council for the study of international relations. Professor Grant, of Leeds university, writes on 'War and peace since 1815'; Mr. Urquhart, fellow and tutor of Balliol, on 'The causes of modern wars'; Mr. A. Greenwood, of Leeds university, in 'International economic relations' and on 'International relations and the growth of freedom'; Mr. J. D. L. Hughes, on 'International law'; and Mr. P. H. Kerr, editor of the Round Table, on 'Political relations between advanced and backward peoples.'—The Times [London] Lit Sup

St Louis 14:428 D '16

"Each writer is a well-informed student of his subject, and the Council for the study of international relations will do good service if it stimulates further thought upon these lines."

+ Spec 116:755 Je 17 '16 330w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p191 Ap 20 '16 90w

"The authors of the essays have many helpful suggestions to make. They know what they wish; some of the essayists have very clear ideals as to the changes which they desire."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p207 My 4 '16 850w

GRANT, HAMIL, ed. Last days of the Archduke Rudolph. il $2.50 (4c) Dodd

The author, who gives some biographical details concerning himself and family in the first chapter, was private secretary to the Archduke Rudolph during the last years in his life. His book gives an account of those years, and of the events that preceded the mysterious death in the hunting lodge. The author discredits the suicide theory and advances his own, of a plot emanating from Berlin, in its stead.

"The book would have carried much greater authority if the author's name had not been withheld. . . . Still, it is obviously written in good faith. . . . It is not quite new, and such things have been in history, but the evidence adduced in its favour is of the flimsiest."

+ Ath p374 Ag '16 370w

"Whether or not this is the actual story of the secret of Meyerling, or whether the author of the diary has been led astray by his own theories and observations, it is quite clear that his story contains plenty of circumstantial evidence, and that his arguments against the suicide theory are telling ones." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 4 '16 500w

"Though one is about as wise at the end as at the beginning, it is not bad reading for those that like that kind."

+ Dial 61:473 N 30 '16 180w

"The author is something of a scoundrel in any event. If what he says is false, he libels Prussian officials anonymously by insinuating that they were accessory to one of the blackest deeds in history. If what he says is true, he was a scoundrel not to have revealed it, though at the risk of his life, in 1889."

Nation 104:80 Ja 18 '17 500w

"Our anonymous author exposes his case for the prosecution of the Hohenzollerns with all the skill one demands of Gaboriau or M. Le Blanc. Indeed, his story seems too much like good dramatic fiction to be cold fact."

Sat R 122:sup4 N 4 '16 1150w

GRANT, MADISON. Passing of the great race; or, The racial basis of European history. maps $2 (4c) Scribner 572 16-22372

The author considers European history in terms of race. "Race," says Henry Fairfield Osborn in his introduction, "has played a far larger part than either language or nationality in moulding the destinies of men." Three European races are recognized: the Nordic, the Mediterranean and the Alpine. Of these it is the Nordic, embracing the Scandinavian and the Teutonic peoples, whose passing is regretted. It is the superior race, par excellence, but many factors are uniting to destroy it—war, climate, alcohol, disease (in particular tuberculosis) and voluntary race suicide. In America we are accelerating the process by unrestricted immigration. The author is essentially aristocratic in his point of view: democratic control and universal suffrage point the way to degeneration; the declaration of independence was based on a false conception of the power of environment.

"Bibliography (3½p.)."

A L A Bkl 13:205 F '17

"This is a book to be read and considered by thinking men among us. Mr. Grant utters a warning which should be heeded before it is too late. His earnestness and his profound learning attest its importance."

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 9 '16 450w

"The opinions expressed in this book are, however, so dangerous, that the very fact that the author is well known on account of his scientific interest, and that the book is introduced by a man so eminent as President Henry Fairfield Osborn, makes it necessary to expose the fallacies on which it is built up. The author does not refer to previous writers who have expressed similar opinions; but this book is practically a modern edition of Gobineau, and a reflex of the opinions of Chamberlain. . . . First of all, the whole concept of heredity as held by him is faulty." Franz Boas

— New Repub 9:305 Ja 13 '17 1600w

"Among the more interesting chapters of this vigorous and outspoken book, specific mention should be made of that dealing with European colonies and pointing out the widely prevalent tendency of the Nordic to deteriorate in warmer climates; also the chapter dealing briefly with the present war." F. T. Cooper

Pub W 90:2076 D 9 '16 1000w

GRANT, ROBERT. Their spirit. *50c (4½c) 2 Houghton 940.91 16-22661

A little book giving impressions of England and France in war-time. The author visited both countries in the summer of 1916 and his notes on what he saw and heard appeared first in the Boston Evening Transcript. He expresses a hope that they may help American readers "to comprehend the unity and to realize the heroic temper of two peoples, whose cause, although they have avoided its burden, is essentially their own."

+ Cath World 104:696 F '17 120w

"A pen picture of England and France in war time, truthful, restrained, and accurately reflecting the poise of both nations."

+ Springfield Republican p8 O 28 '16 90w

GRANVILLE, GRANVILLE LEVESON-GOWER, 1st earl. Private correspondence, 1781-1821; ed. by his daughter-in-law, Castalia, Countess Granville. 2v il $10 Dutton (*32s John Murray, London) 16-15698

"Lord Granville Gower was born in 1773, and became an important figure in the diplomatic world during the reigns of George III and George IV. The letters give the political, social, and theatrical gossip of the time, and introduce many of the illustrious men and women of that age."—Ath

"An interesting and most entertaining book, admirably edited."

+ Ath p246 My '16 50w

+ Ath p271 Je '16 970w

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 6 '16 1250w

"A wonderfully vivid picture of the social life of the time is given in her letters."

+ Dial 61:315 O 19 '16 580w

Reviewed by W. Hunt

+ Eng Hist R 31:650 O '16 2000w

"Such a work as Thackeray would have loved."

+ Ind 88:75 O 9 '16 50w

"Not the least attractive feature of these singularly interesting volumes is the series of beautiful portraits by Romney, Gainsborough, and other celebrated painters of the time."

+ Lit D 53:898 O 7 '16 720w

"No papers since those published from the material at Brompton by the Historical manuscripts commission throw so vivid a light on the revolutionary and Napoleonic era from the standpoint of aristocratic England." H. J. L.

+ New Repub 9:190 D 16 '16 1100w

St Louis 15:23 Ja '17

"Many of the letters are trivial, or uninteresting, and had they been omitted the effect of the book would have been doubled. There are two or three letters which had better have been omitted for a graver reason. . . . Gainsborough has done much for Georgiana Duchess of Devonshire, and Macaulay has done something. Castalia Lady Granville would have been well advised to screen the domestic politics of this happy Whig family from the vulgar. The story of Devonshire House at this period is emphatically what the French call 'une sale histoire'; and it would have been wiser, in the interests of Whiggism, if even the corner of the curtain had not been lifted."

+ Sat R 121:469 My 13 '16 1450w

"The various political and social episodes narrated live again under the vivifying touch of

GRANVILLE, G. L-G., 1st earl—Continued

two highly cultivated ladies who excelled in the essentially feminine art of letter-writing—Lady Stafford, the first Lord Granville's mother, and Lady Bessborough. Castalia, Lady Granville, has fully earned the very high compliment that the two volumes, each of some five hundred pages, which she has given to the world, may be read from cover to cover without the reader once feeling that they could advantageously have been curtailed. The notes descriptive of all the individuals mentioned are excellent, and have been manifestly prepared with great care." [Earl of] Cromer

+ Spec 116:576 My 6 '16 2300w

"It is not a book to read in a couple of afternoons and then to lay aside; but it will take, and hold, a place among the best memoirs and biographies of that generation—by the side of Creevey and Greville."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p175 Ap 13 '16 2100w

GRAS, NORMAN SCOTT BRIEN. Evolution of the English corn market from the twelfth to the eighteenth century. (Harvard economic studies) *$2.50 Harvard univ. press 338 15-18858

"This study of the English corn (grain) trade from the twelfth to the eighteenth centuries is based on manuscript materials now utilized for the first time. It interprets the so-called corn laws of England from the viewpoint of the actual condition of the trade itself." (R of Rs) "The main thesis of this book is, briefly, that the English corn market, during the time in which the author considers it, passed through three distinct stages. The first stage he designates as the stage of the manorial market, the second, that of the local market, and the third, that of the metropolitan market." (J Pol Econ)

"The backbone of the book is the assembling and interpretation of the prices of five centuries. Previous authors have interpreted the corn trade from the too narrow statutory viewpoint alone. Professor Gras gets behind legislation and makes the actual conditions of the corn trade explain the legislative program. This shift of viewpoint is the greatest contribution of the author. It is a study like that of Professor Usher's for France, of the origins, development, and internal transformations in the trade itself. These two works present a new phase of attack in economic history; and, if future studies prove as fruitful, the innovators deserve high credit." R. B. Westerfield

+ Am Econ R 6:98 Mr '16 800w

"Incidentally the book throws new light on many aspects of English mercantile and social economy."

+ Am Hist R 21:584 Ap '16 780w

"The analysis of the local market is less satisfactory than any other part of this study. It may be that the sources do not afford much evidence of the precise nature of the relations of markets to each other, but Dr. Gras attaches more significance to averages of prices than one can properly assume." A. P. Usher

+ Ann Am Acad 64:254 Mr '16 350w

+ Ind 84:276 N 15 '15 30w

"Research students in English economic history have good reason to be eternally grateful to him for revealing the wealth of material in the English port books which he has, apparently, been the first student to exploit. Scarcely less illuminating has been his work in the records of the city of London and in the archives of the various London companies. His statistics on the export and import of corn from the various English ports during the period from 1550 to 1700 (Appendices C, D, E) are invaluable, though they are probably incomplete. His corn prices for London in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries (Appendix E) supply a grave omission in Thorold Rogers' 'History of agriculture and prices.'" Conyers Read

+ J Pol Econ 24:191 F '16 1650w

"Though the present work pretends to be merely an economic study, it is nevertheless crowded with information of value to students of the English renaissance. Half the five hundred pages are given up to appendices, chiefly of a statistical nature, and there is an exceptionally complete bibliography."

+ Nation 102:361 Mr 30 '16 970w

Pittsburgh 21:105 Mr '16 20w

R of Rs 52:759 D '15 40w

GRASP of the Sultan. il *$1.25 (2c) Houghton 16-14869

A story of Constantinople, in which a young Englishman, on the rebound from reaping the whirlwind, is employed as tutor to the Osmanli princes in the Sultan of Turkey's palace. His favorite among his charges is the youngest prince whose eighteen year old mother is in disgrace because she dares to defy the Sultan. Her imperiousness, without parallel among his wives, piques the ruler into devising various cruelties. The tutor and a trusted eunuch secretly conspire to make life bearable for the unhappy woman during the five years that have, by the way, afforded the Englishman only one glimpse of the sultana's face. It is enough, however, to set his imagination to work, so that when a sudden grave turn in affairs demands action he is ready. He and the eunuch plan an escape that quite rivals Anthony Hope's achievements of the kind. Color and atmosphere abound in the tale, which is published anonymously. The illustrations are by W. T. Benda.

"Sophisticated only in its local color, which is painted on so thick that in some places it scales." Wilson Follett

— Atlan 118:494 O '16 30w

"Entertaining reading, though we cannot help describing it as pure romance instead of crediting it with the ring of truth which the anonymity of the author would seem to wish to ask for the book."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Je 24 '16 600w

"An exciting book, cleverly constructed and tensely absorbing."

+ Lit D 53:471 Ag 26 '16 300w

N Y Times 21:283 Jl 16 '16 400w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Jl 23 '16 210w

GRAVES, CLOTILDE INEZ MARY (RICHARD DEHAN, pseud.). Earth to earth. *$1.35 (1c) Stokes 16-22629

This is the second book of short stories from a pen that has written two or more rather big novels. There are twenty or more stories, distinguished for variety of theme and setting. In several of them the same character, MacWaugh, a big hearted Scotch artist, appears. All are stories in which character is of more importance than plot.

"The MacWaugh, who might have passed muster as one of many characters in a long book, is, in the episodes given, a singularly boring person."

— Ath p195 Ap '16 170w

+ — N Y Times 21:362 S 17 '16 470w

"Though entertaining, they go far to prove that the talent of 'Richard Dehan' is much better employed on long novels."

+ — Spec 116:609 My 13 '16 20w

"Some of the other tales are of life in India; some of high life and some of low life. All have vigour and point, and are told with economy and skill. Perhaps the finest of all in idea and workmanship is 'A nursery tea.' . . . If there were more of such work in this book The MacWaugh would seem more oleographic in colouring, perhaps, than he actually does."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p164 Ap 6 '16 350w

GRAVES, CLOTILDE INEZ MARY (RICHARD DEHAN, pseud.). Gilded vanity. *$1.40 (1½c) Doran 16-17727

A light society novel centering about the activities of Diana Lady Baintree as a matchmaker. Altho her matches invariably prove failures, more than one ending in divorce, she is indefatigable in her efforts. Only one victim eludes her, her cousin Hilary Warr, whom she is most anxious to see "settled." Unknown to her, Hilary falls in love with Elizabeth Colquhoun, but has his prospects for happiness ruined by Diana herself who steps in and marries off Elizabeth to a degenerate nobleman. Later the opportune appearance of a wife with a prior claim undoes the mischief by setting Elizabeth free.

"In spite of the pleasure which we gain from the story, we cannot suppress the feeling that it is scarcely worthy the mettle of an author who could write 'Between two thieves' and 'The man of iron.'"

+ — Boston Transcript p8 D 30 '16 1550w

"Those who have read 'The dop doctor' will be unhappily surprised in 'The gilded vanity.' . . . It is a clever little book, fit to place on the table in a pink boudoir."

+ — N Y Times 21:548 D 10 '16 370w

"Hotch-potch of chatter and sentiment, grandiloquence, millinery and good fun."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p392 Ag 17 '16 580w

GRAY, HOWARD LEVI. English field systems. (Harvard historical studies) maps *$2.75
Harvard univ. press 333 15-20138

"Since 1883, when Frederic Seeböhm published his ingenious and epoch-making 'English village community,' no English work has appeared which gives so much valuable information about mediæval agriculture as this study of Professor Gray's. Incidentally it also throws light on enclosures, units of land measure, and the vexed question of the nature of the Anglo-Saxon settlement." (Nation) "The great result of the investigation is the conclusion that three distinct types of field prevailed in as many parts of England. The author's researches enable him to map these areas." (Am Hist R)

"The appearance of a work like Professor Gray's is an event, and his careful study is a notable contribution. Its scope is defined by the effort to solve the problem of the racial element in manorial origins, which was so forcibly presented a generation ago by Seeböhm. The chief interest of the general reader in the book will arise from the fact that it is the first thoroughgoing attempt to deal with this problem; but it is important for other reasons." W. A. Morris
+ Am Hist R 21:783 J1 '16 570w

"The advance in our knowledge of English agriculture which the book makes justified a reconsideration of the problem of origins, and the solution now suggested, be it right or wrong, provides a working theory for further discussion and research." James Tait
+ Eng Hist R 31:626 O '16 1250w

"In that part of 'English field systems' in which he deals with the familiar two- and three-field systems, Dr. Gray has made a valuable contribution to our knowledge of the history of English agriculture. . . . His argument for racial influence as determining field systems seems to rest on too many hypotheses to be conclusive." N. Neilson

+ — J Pol Econ 24:614 Je '16 950w

"It is often highly technical, but always lucid and always careful in observing the difference between proven facts and probable hypothesis."

+ Nation 103:222 S 7 '16 800w

Reviewed by Harriett Bradley
Pol Sci Q 26:453 S '16 1500w

GRAY, MAXWELL, pseud. (MARY GLEED TUTTIETT). World-mender. *$1.35 Appleton 16-14091

A new story by the author of "The silence of Dean Maitland." "The narrative tells of the career of George Darrell, a young Englishman who sacrifices everything to a political career. He is the grandson of an old nonconformist couple living in a tiny village on the outskirts of a landed estate. He belongs to the younger generation in England who feel the stirring of new forces, and through his championship of the masses becomes known as 'The people's man.' At the height of his career he sacrifices the meed of his power and the love of a beautiful and gifted girl to an entanglement with an adventuress."—R of Rs

"An interesting study of English life as represented by the abler classes of the aristocracy—alive to their responsibilities, political and social, and capable of filling them—and by those less fortunate in birth and position, but equally able and right-minded. Barring the melodramatic adventuress, 'The world mender' is a plausible leaf out of life."

+ — Boston Transcript p9 S 2 '16 330w

+ — Nation 103:261 S 14 '16 380w

"A serious novel whose purpose the author has evidently worked out with the greatest earnestness and conviction."

+ N Y Times 21:267 J1 2 '16 670w

"As a typical story of English life, of excellent workmanship rising at times in descriptive passages to poetic beauty, this novel should find a large number of readers."

+ R of Rs 54:234 Ag '16 250w

"Contains careful pictures of the social conditions before the war."

+ Spec 117:107 J1 22 '16 20w

+ Springfield Republican p15 J1 16 '16 430w

GRAY, PHOEBE. Golden lamp. il *$1.35 (1½c) Small 16-10306

When two babies are left on the door step of Molly and Bill Binford, Molly's warm heart opens and takes them in. The two boys are brought up as twins, no one but Molly knowing that they must have come from widely differing stations. She puts away the little garments that tell her this and keeps the secret. Bill is a seaman who is away from home much of the time and Molly doesn't read the papers, so they never connect the finding of the two babies with the disappearance of the little Belflower heir. Tom and Susan Belflower, at first driven to the point of madness by their loss, learn in time to find some relief in service to others. In Neighborhood Haven they come in touch with the Binfords, and gradually step by step the mystery is cleared away and little Billy Binford is restored to his rightful place as Tom Belflower, Jr.

"The story of men and women who are very human and exceedingly lovable. It ends happily with an overdose of sentiment as all good novels should! It is legitimate sentiment, however, which ought to prove a healthy antidote to the extravagant vapid vagaries of Gene Stratton Porter."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 8 '16 210w

"In style and dramatic power it shows a marked advance upon her former book."

+ N Y Times 21:149 Ap 16 '16 240w

GRAY, WILLIAM BEALL. Gray's plumbing² design and installation. il $4 Williams 696 16-16546

"A veritable encyclopedia of modern practice based on work done by the author and other experts in every branch of the plumbing and allied trades and covering approved practice in every part of the country." (Title page) The work is divided into five parts: Tables, rules, and helpful data, etc.; Supply; Plumbing fixtures; Soil, waste and sewer work; Miscellaneous subjects relating to plumbing and kindred work. There are 500 illustrations and 34 tables. The double-column index takes up 27 pages.

N Y Br Lib News 3:190 D '16

+ Quar List New Tech Bks Ja '17 70w

GRAY, WILLIAM BEALL, and BALL, CHARLES BACKUS. Plumbing. il $1.50 Am. technical soc. 696 16-21203

"A working manual of American plumbing practice, including approved fixtures, piping systems, house drainage, and modern methods of sanitation." (Subtitle) As the authors point out, the modern plumber must really be a sanitary engineer, and it is to provide up-to-date information on this side of his business that their book has been prepared. Mr. Gray is author of "Gray's plumbing"; Mr. Ball is chief sanitary inspector for the city of Chicago.

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

GREEN, ANNA KATHARINE (MRS. CHARLES ROHLFS). To the minute, Scarlet and black; two tales of life's perplexities. il $*1 (2c) Putnam 16-20555

The mystery in the first of these two stories centers about an old house. Neither Albert Mann nor his cousin Judith can understand the interest Seth Fullerton takes in the house that has been willed to Judith by her grandfather. She soon comes to see that his wish to marry her is only the outcome of his desire to gain possession of the house. Failing in that he offers to buy it for three times its actual value. The two people wisely decide to wait for an explanation before accepting his offer. A house is also the scene of the second story, Scarlet and black. A New York doctor who is starting on a trip to Europe turns back to his home to secure valuable papers he has left in an unlocked drawer and finds that two beautiful Russian women have taken possession in his brief absence. He decides to let the steamer sail without him while he remains to solve the mystery of their presence.

"The stories are too short to give her the necessary scope. . . . 'To the minute' is far and away the better of the two. . . . Of 'Red and black' little can be said in praise. It is conventionally, absurdly impossible, and its characters are stereotyped in the extreme."

— + N Y Times 21:487 N 12 '16 410w

— + Sat R 122:580 D 16 '16 130w

"Well-nigh mediocre in comparison with the other stories by this author."

— Springfield Republican p13 N 12 '16 220w

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p638 D 28 '16 150w

GREEN, FREDERICK ERNEST. Surrey hills. il $*2 Warne 914.2 16-3461

"Surrey is one of those counties on which Englishmen most pride themselves. . . . A combination of wilderness with blossomy softness, green freshness, lovely grassy downs, rough heathery commons, flowering lanes, clustering woodlands, embowered villages, an accessibility from London with the almost savage solitudes that here and there skirt the King's highway, as on the road to Portsmouth, a pervading sense of English history at its oldest, Briton, Saxon and Roman—such is Surrey, and much more. All this F. E. Green has given us in his book, which is not merely an admirable guide book to the various places of interest, but a sort of sentimental journey, full of romantic invitation to the reader to take the way with him and track the various beauties and memories of the county for himself."—N Y Times

"Every one knows of the discovery of the charms of the country near Haslemere by those of a past generation who began to change 'Hindhead' into 'Mindhead.' Mr. Green has much good-natured gossip about most of these celebrities, but he has more to say about a younger literary circle that lived chiefly round Limpsfield at the other end of the county, including Octavia Hill, Stephen Crane, Harold Frederic, Mr. E. V. Lucas, and Mr. Edward Garnett. . . . Mr. Green is disappointing concerning the charm of the Surrey village church. . . . One last complaint about a book with which, in the main, lovers of Surrey will certainly be pleased: there is no index."

— + Ath 1915,2:382 N 27 870w

"An excellent descriptive volume on Meredith's country, with frequent quotations from the novelist's letters and a fine series of illustrations. As an informal and attractive guide to some of the more interesting parts of Surrey, the book could hardly be better."

— + Dial 59:576 D 9 '15 200w

"Mr. Seabrooke has supplied twenty-eight illustrations, and as an artist with an eye for broad vistas and a poetic temperament he was especially fitted to do justice, as he has done, to the landscape beauties of the Surrey hills. One shortcoming of the book is the absence of an index."

— + Int Studio 57:146 D '15 400w

"It ought to be in the hands of all who visit this attractive region with the primary object of studying its flora and fauna. Such readers will find much of the book of real service as a guide to the topography, even although it is only casually interpolated in the author's entertaining chat concerning past and present dwellers in what is, unfortunately, rapidly becoming suburb rather than countryside." F. C.

— + Nature 96:535 Ja 13 '16 70w

"His various descriptions of the little hamlets, the old village greens, the ancient manors, and rambling farmhouses will make any Surrey man who reads them homesick for his pine-wooded countryside, and the American pilgrim—than whom the English countryside has no more passionate admirer—anxious to explore so favored a stretch of England for himself."

— + N Y Times 21:109 Mr 26 '16 500w

"He strikes an individual note which should make a place for his book on Surrey shelves—or on those, at all events, whose owners are not in violent disagreement with his views on politics. Mr. Green is not an enthusiastic supporter of hunting or of landlords. But he contrives to bring the open air into his pages, and interspersed with quotations from other writers who have travelled by Surrey roads, he has gathered together a considerable amount of material of his own, particularly in the form of conversations with farmers, labourers, and other country folk."

— + Spec 116:22 Ja 1 '16 350w

GREENE, JOSEPH K. Leavening the Levant. il $*1.50 (1½c) Pilgrim press 266 16-17677

Many years of residence in Turkey as a missionary have fitted the author to write this book. He says, "My purpose was not to write a history of the work of the American board in Turkey, but to set forth its object in sending missionaries to that land and to indicate the agencies and methods which have been adopted in carrying forward the work, with sketches of some of the principal workers." The book is divided into four parts: General survey of Turkey; Survey of the American missions; Survey of the educational system; Miscellaneous and personal. There are a number of illustrations and maps.

"Dr. Greene studies carefully the Young Turk movement, especially as witnessed in the Armenian massacre, from 1895 to 1916, giving in this connection a remarkably comprehensive yet brief account of the life of Mohammed, within the inconsistencies of whose teaching is mixed so much that is admirable." F. B.

— + Boston Transcript p9 N 15 '16 430w

N Y Br Lib News 3:167 N '16

N Y Times 21:481 N 12 '16 60w

"Not to be overlooked by any student or friend of missions. Disclaiming to be a history, it is such a valuable 'source' as might be transferred wholesale into a reputed history. The makers of the missions are alive in these pages."

— + Springfield Republican p15 D 10 '16 330w

GREENLAW, EDWIN ALMIRON, ed. Familiar letters, English and American. (Lake English classics) *40c Scott 826 15-17821

A collection of letters selected and arranged for school use. The centuries from the sixteenth to the nineteenth are represented in letters by Sir Thomas More, Sir Henry Sidney, Sir Francis Bacon, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Jane Austen, Charles Lamb, Jane Welsh Carlyle, Robert Louis Stevenson, and others. The editor provides an interesting introduction on the art of letter writing.

"The little volume deserves a warm welcome, for it covers a field that has long awaited from a compiler's hand just such competent and scholarly treatment as Professor Greenlaw has here succeeded in giving it."

— + Dial 60:176 F 17 '16 70w

"Letters by great writers have recently formed a part of the high school curriculum. For this course Greenlaw's 'Familiar letters' is arranged to show easily the different types."

— + Ind 87:234 Ag 14 '16 30w

"One regrets that he has not included any letters of James Russell Lowell."

— + Nation 102:sup489 My 4 '16 60w

GREGOR, ELMER RUSSELL. War path and hunting trail; adventures of Indian boys. il *60c (1½c) Harper 16-11582

A group of short stories for boys. They reproduce the Indian life of the olden times before the red man's ways had been modified by contact with the white. The author says: "I have aimed to tell stories of clean and wholesome adventure which have a certain historical value because they show the Indian as he was. . . . Whatever the faults of the Indians were, they should be judged according to their standards, and assuredly their unflinching faith and courage, their self-denial and loyalty, have some lesson for those who have come after them."

R of Rs 54:122 JI '16 30w

"For the entertainment of boys of 12 to 15 years who are fond of clean, stirring adventure tales."

+ Springfield Republican p15 JI 23 '16 130w

GREGORY, SAINT. History of the Franks. (Records of civilization: sources and studies) *$2.50 (2½c) Columbia univ. press 944.01 16-20457

The "History of the Franks" written in the sixth century and covering the period from the creation to the year 591, was complete in ten books. From each of these books Dr. Brehaut has made selections for translation. The parts of the work that have a value as history of fact are contained in the later books in which the author was writing of his own time but the earlier portions have an importance of their own as a record of the attitude of mind and state of knowledge at the time. As the translator says, "The great value of Gregory's writings is that we get in them an intimate view of sixth-century ideas." A few selections from Gregory's "Eight books of miracles" are also included, and there are notes, a bibliography and an index.

Boston Transcript p6 D 13 '16 440w

"Scholars will be hungry and thirsty for these volumes and for more like them."

+ Educ R 52:529 D '16 70w

+ Ind 89:153 Ja 22 '17 120w

GREGORY, ISABELLA AUGUSTA (PERSE), LADY. Golden apple; a play for Kiltartan children. il *$1.25 (4c) Putnam 822 16-21257

The author has made a play out of the legend of the King of Ireland's son who goes in search of the apple of healing for his father, the king, who lies at the point of death. Other characters are the Witch and her daughter, Pampogue, and the King of Spain's daughter, Muireann, who is held captive in the Witch's garden.

"It is a wonderful little bit of literature and will find many friends." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:407 D '16 210w

+ Lit D 53:1613 D 16 '16 40w

"A thoroughly Irish play. It is not a bit like any other." Frank Macdonald

+ N Y Call p14 D 10 '16 480w

R of Rs 54:566 N '16 110w

St Louis 15:25 Ja '17 30w

"Written with all the ironic humor characteristic of Lady Gregory's work and of a certain section of the Irish dramatists. The play is intended for children, but we doubt whether it will find as much favour with them as with audiences of a riper age."

Spec 117:556 N 4 '16 120w

"The book has illustrations by Margaret Gregory, which are quaint and distinctive."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 380w

"It would be, as Lady Gregory explains, quite easy to 'produce'; the book gives the tunes of the songs, and the laughter and excitement would be uproarious."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p608 D 14 '16 620w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 20w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Outlaw. il *$1 (1c) Dodd 16-4748

Hal the outlaw had won his title at the early age of twenty-four by sundry experiences in shooting up Queen City while drunk. But he is only a boy and far from a "bad man" at heart. The change in him begins when he is sent to meet the Overland that is bringing the "Old man's" two sisters to visit the ranch. The "Old man," Hal's employer, is Oscar Estabrook, a youth of his own age who has been sent west in the hope that the change will reform him. But Oscar Estabrook has not reformed as later events concerned with acts of real outlawry go to show. Of the two girls who play a part in the story it is Sibyl the elder and more beautiful, who first charms Hal, but it is Yvonne, the younger, who comes to count in the end.

"Told as only he can who knows well the picturesque but swiftly disappearing life whereof he writes."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 29 '16 270w

"The story moves with the rapidity of the motion picture which it suggests."

+ N Y Times 21:149 Ap 16 '16 250w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Short cut. il *$1.35 (1½c) Dodd 16-21050

The two brothers, Wayne and Arthur Shandon, are joint owners of a ranch. When, early in the story, Arthur, the younger, is found dead, the older brother believing that he had taken his own life, leaves the country. His only thought is to save his brother's name from disgrace. He does not know that suspicion may fall on himself. Even when he returns, a year later, he does not realize this, for the group of men who have it in their power to convict him, have another plan to defraud him of his land and they keep silent. In the end their plot is uncovered and the real murderer is brought to punishment. The "short cut" is a daring leap across a rock-bound stream, taken once by Wanda Leland on skis, once by Wayne himself on horseback.

"Full of action."

A L A Bkl 13:221 F '17

"The story is vividly told, and its interest is well sustained. The characters are vigorously drawn, the women particularly fine. The short cut' possesses all the elements of a deservedly successful book."

+ N Y Times 21:566 D 24 '16 110w

GRENFELL, WILFRED THOMASON. Tales of the Labrador. il *$1.25 (2½c) Houghton 16-22895

Many tales of adventure and daring must be at the command of Dr. Grenfell of Labrador. He has told some of them in this volume, true stories, or at least stories that have the semblance of verity. Contents: That Christmas in Peace Haven; Sainte Anne de Beaupré; The Christmas voyage of the Handy Lass; The gifts of poverty; Paingo, the lonely one; The northern chief; Uncle Lige's story; White Fox; Three Eyes; The luck of the Little Rover; Kommak the Innuk.

+ A L A Bkl 13:221 F '17

"So vividly told that we hold to the little volume, at one sitting, until we have read all the exciting tales."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 6 '16 270w

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 9 '16 130w

GREY, ZANE. Border legion. il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 16-11386

Joan Randle, the approved type of border maiden, rides to seek her lover, Jim Cleve, with whom she had just quarreled. The time is that of the rush West for gold; the place southern Idaho. She falls into the power of Kells, the leader of the Border legion, a band of desperadoes. To protect herself she shoots Kells and then nurses him back to health. Wild adventure follows wild adventure until it "all comes right in the end."

GREY, ZANE—Continued

"The Border legion," with its crude sensationalism, its hardly literate style, its blunt demands upon the credulity of the observer, is a movie in print." H. W. Boynton

— Bookm 43:536 J1 '16 170w

Boston Transcript p9 Je 24 '16 470w

"Strange to say, tho the story is absolutely impossible, its swing and clever telling hold the reader's attention and keep his interest at highest pitch during the most blood-curdling situations, unusual experiences and hair-raising scenes."

— + Lit D 53:77 J1 8 '16 200w

— Nation 103:133 Ag 10 '16 230w

N Y Times 21:230 Je 4 '16 370w

"The action is fast and furious. Not for an instant does the story lag or fail in interest. Love, danger, and breathless adventure run a swift race through the pages."

— + R of Rs 54:124 J1 '16 140w

"A plethora of cold-blooded villainies and blood-letting."

— Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 120w

GRIFFIN, GRACE GARDNER, comp. Writings on American history, 1914. *$2 Yale univ. press 016.97

This is the ninth annual volume of a series that began in 1906. The aim of the compiler has been to include all books and articles relating to the history of the United States and British North America and all articles relating to Latin America and the Pacific islands published in the United States and Europe. A topical arrangement is followed.

GRIFFIS, WILLIAM ELLIOT. Bonnie Scotland² and what we owe her. il *$1.25 (2c) Houghton 914.1 16-19957

The author of "Brave little Holland" here writes of Scotland, attempting "to tell of the Scotsman at home and abroad, his part in the world's work, and to picture 'Old Scotia's grandeur,' as illustrated in humanity, as well as in history, nature, and art, while showing in faint measure the debt which we Americans owe to Bonnie Scotland." There are sixteen illustrations from photographs.

"A six-page, double-column index, good but not free from omissions (what index is?), closes this well-made book."

— + Dial 61:475 N 30 '16 230w

— + Ind 88:410 D 4 '16 90w

N Y Br Lib News 3:191 D '16

— + N Y Times 22:11 Ja 14 '17 260w

Pratt p36 Ja '17

GRIFFITH, IRA SAMUEL. Woodwork for secondary schools; a text-book for high schools and colleges, prevocalational and elementary industrial schools. il $1.75 Manual arts press 684 16-17162

"This book is almost an encyclopedia of wood-working—'Every chapter a book in itself'—and there are nine of them, with 580 illustrations. If one looks to this book for a definite course of instruction, a program of projects, he will be disappointed. The book furnishes everything but that. Much of the subject matter, should limitations of time or equipment prevent its use in connection with specific shop experience, may be assigned for reading and study from the purely informational point of view."—School Arts Magazine

— + A L A Bkl 13:107 D '16

Pratt p14 Ja '17

— + School Arts Magazine 16:89 O '16 110w

GRIGGS, EDWARD HOWARD. Maeterlinck:² poet and mystic. *50c Huebsch 842 17-2180

A handbook of six lectures which may be used as an outline for the study of Maeterlinck. Contents: The youthful dreamer; The poet of mystery; The interpreter of life; The nature lover; The mystic philosopher; The poet of the spirit.

N Y Br Lib News 3:182 D '16 20w

GRIMSHAW, BEATRICE ETHEL. My lady of the island (Eng title, Red Bob of the Bismarcks). il *$1.25 (1½c) McClurg 16-6201

A tale of the South Sea islands. The hero, young Paul Corbet, son of a Liverpool manufacturer, wearies of his monotonous life and longs for the adventures for which his temperament and abilities fit him. He goes on board the Empress of Singapore, just for the love of a ship and the thought of the far lands to which she is sailing,—and the act is his undoing; he knows that he can never again go back to his father's mill. He ingeniously contrives to stay on board, wins the confidence of Vincent Gore, a famous English explorer and ethnologist, and is attached to him as secretary. Together the two go through a series of thrilling adventures in and about New Guinea. Several German colonial officials enter into the story, as does a young girl who has just been married against her will to a German officer. The action takes place in 1914 and the three, Vincent Gore, Paul, and the girl Isola return from a remarkable two months of adventure in the interior to find that German New Guinea is no longer German and that the fortunes of war have set Isola free.

— + A L A Bkl 13:83 N '16

— + Ind 87:70 J1 10 '16 70w

"Beatrice Grimshaw has done a rather notable thing in this new book. She has written it in the masculine personality without any obtrusion of the underlying feminine. The book is a fine, exciting story of South Sea adventure, as full of gorgeous color as a tropic sunset."

— + N Y Times 21:124 Ap 2 '16 630w

"When a writer's permanent address is Port Moresby, Papua, there is at least presumptive evidence that he—or she, as it happens to be in this case—knows something about New Guinea."

... When all is said and done, the deepest impression is created, not by the characters of the plot, but by the Papuan landscape—the spell of New Guinea, with her sunsets like the Judgment day, at once beautiful and terrible."

— + Spec 115:670 N 13 '15 1150w

"She has adopted New Guinea as her own especial field, and it must be granted that she employs the mystery and remoteness of the south Pacific islands effectively. This book is an entertaining example of the common type of adventure tales."

— + Springfield Republican p15 Mr 26 '16 140w

— + Wis Lib Bull 12:272 Je '16 60w

GROAT, GEORGE GORHAM. Introduction to the study of organized labor in America. *$1.75 (1c) Macmillan 331.87 16-14060

The author takes as his motto: "I am not defending; much less denying; I am explaining." He says: "The study of labor organization here presented is offered in the hope that it will encourage a more general interest in the subject."

... Its aim is to promote discussion—to promote difference of opinion if need be. ... With this end in view representative opinions have been introduced on various sides of the questions." It may appear, he says later, that undue emphasis has been placed on the side favorable to the unions but he feels that this is justified by the fact that in public discussions generally their side does not get a fair hearing. "There is no danger at present of their cause being presented too favorably or of readers being prejudiced in their favor." The book is divided into six parts: The background; The structure; Collective bargaining; Political activity; Transitional stages; Conclusion.

"The book should be classified as a source-book in the study of organized labor—unfortunately without exact citation of the sources—rather than as a textbook. In the judgment of the reviewer, the chief value of the book will be for handy reference to the facts relating to the structure and policies of labor organizations in America. Viewed from this angle, the volume is a valuable addition to the literature dealing with the problems of organized labor. ... A few erroneous statements have crept into the volume." F. T. Carlton

— + Am Econ R 6:913 D '16 770w

"The strength of the book lies in its impartial attitude, in the excellent description of the structure of the American Federation of labor, and in the extensive discussion of the legal aspects of unionism. Its weakness is that it does not give the reader an acquaintance with the trade unionists as people or with the spirit of organized labor; also, one wonders why no analysis of the railway brotherhoods was included, in view of their pre-eminent success and significant characteristics." E. H. Sutherland

+ — Am J Soc 22:405 'N '16 770w

"Carlton (Booklist, 8:201, Ja '12) is wider in scope, devoting much space to special labor problems, but is not so full on strictly trade-union history, present conditions and tendencies. Marot (Booklist 11:155, D '14) presents the subject from the trade-union viewpoint."

A L A Bkl 13:148 Ja '17

Am Pol Sci R 10:757 'N '16 220w

Reviewed by Alexander Fleisher

+ — Ann Am Acad 68:327 'N '16 350w

Cleveland p109 Ag '16 50w

"All this is preëminently descriptive, and so completely and accurately done that the volume will probably supplant previous ones in textbook availability and value for the general reader. . . . But as an interpretative piece of work the book is a failure—and this is the second reason why, in the opinion of the reviewer, the time and material have perhaps been wasted." Lindsay Rogers

+ — Dial 61:585 D 28 '16 720w

+ Ind 88:32 O 2 '16 100w

"The author seldom suggests the important sources from which he has drawn his information, nor does he give in connection with his various chapters a list of references that might be useful in guiding further study by the student. . . . There is a distinct failure to stress cause-and-effect relations. . . . The student will, I am afraid, lay down the book with a feeling of regret. He will catch no such inspiration as may be gained from the works of the Webbs, nor does the text measure up to the standard set by Commons and Andrews in their recent book in the kindred field of labor legislation." F. S. Deibler

+ J Pol Econ 24:906 'N '16 1100w

"'Organized labor in America' is being used at present at the University of Chicago as a guide in the course in trade unionism. The introduction also contains a list of references which is very valuable for those who want to know the union movement." Dora Lipshitz

+ Life and Labor 7:29 F '17 190w

+ Lit D 53:1044 O 21 '16 420w

"It is ponderous, it is dull, and I am afraid that it cannot be called illuminating. . . . It gives solid masses of statistics. It is packed with definitions. Like the true text book, it does not deflect the reader's attention by the presence of footnotes. It will be admirable for the purpose of the class-room 'quiz' and the sessional examination. But when these merits have been emphasized its value is exhausted."

+ — New Repub 7:231 J1 '16 1100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:122 Ag '16

"The reader who follows Professor Groat will excuse all because he sees all, or at least sees more than almost anybody who is either capitalist alone or unionist alone."

+ N Y Times 21:300 J1 30 '16 930w

+ R of Rs 54:456 O '16 90w

St Louis 14:387 N '16 50w

"The author has drawn freely from the works of contemporary writers on various phases of the labor question and has been skilful and judicious in the many summaries which his large task has called for."

+ Springfield Republican p6 J1 14 '16 160w

"A solid and substantial professorial textbook—in headed paragraphs—for the serious student of American labour problems."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p466 S 28 '16 20w

GRONDYS, L. H. Germans in Belgium. *50c Appleton 940.91 (Eng ed 15-12104)

"The record, mainly in diary form, of a few weeks of travel by a Dutch professor in Belgium during the early weeks of the war. He went because he wanted to see for himself whether or not the stories of the 'frightfulness' practices of the German army were true, and his diary entries show that what he himself saw and experienced amply satisfied him. The question in his mind at the start had overwhelming answer in the affirmative. As a neutral belonging to a nation whose favorable attitude Germany wished to secure he had plentiful privileges of travel and observation, and he went about almost as he pleased."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p9 Mr 25 '16 220w

"He tells of German kindness and courtesy as well as of German cruelty and unmannerliness."

+ Ind 85:429 Mr 20 '16 60w

"He finds that the German atrocities rested in part on the Teutonic 'scientific' conception of warfare, but even more on the embarrassment and panic of the conquerors. They burned and slew out of fear. It is the most enlightening book on the German devastation of Belgium which has come to our hands."

+ Nation 102:523 My 11 '16 250w

"He was in Louvain during its sack and burning, in the home of a professor of the university, and the inside view he gives of the events of those days is most interesting and informing."

+ N Y Times 21:148 Ap 16 '16 150w

"Such an observer has a right, more especially as he is a completely impartial witness, to be taken very seriously when he speaks of the terror in Belgium. Professor Grondys has to conclude that the panic at Louvain was not the cause, but the excuse for the sack which followed. In this, as in many other matters, Professor Grondys's book is an important document."

+ Sat R 119:sup6 Je 15 '15 290w

GROSS, CHARLES. Sources and literature of English history, from the earliest times to about 1485. *$6 Longmans 016.9 15-16893

A second edition of a work published in 1900. "After Dr. Gross's death, in 1909, it was decided to prepare a new edition on the basis of the collections which he had made for that purpose, and this was undertaken by his colleagues in the historical department at Harvard university. The editors have faithfully retained all the features of the original book, and even when the classification stood in need of improvement they have hardly ever felt themselves at liberty to make a change." (Eng Hist R) "Nearly thirty-five hundred titles are given, with explanatory and descriptive notes. The volume is divided into four parts dealing with the 'General authorities,' 'Celtic, Roman and Germanic origins,' 'The Anglo-Saxon period,' and 'From the Norman conquest to about 1485.'" (Boston Transcript)

"The principal advantage of this new edition is, naturally, its enrichment with new titles. Of these there are between 1,300 and 1,400. Including subordinate references to other works this brings the total number of books described well up toward 5,000 titles. Another improvement consists in bringing down to date new editions, continuations of older works, and extensions of series of government publications. The 180 volumes of the Historical manuscripts commission 'Reports' listed in this as compared with the 85 of the first edition is an instance of this and a measure of the rapid progress of our time in making historical sources accessible. It is pleasant to find, notwithstanding the extensive changes, the same typography and appearance to which we have become accustomed in the earlier edition. This new edition not only guarantees the continued accessibility of a work which was sure otherwise eventually to become hard to obtain, but is a valuable improvement upon the original." E: P. Cheyney

+ Am Hist R 21:569 Ap '16 670w

+ A L A Bkl 12:98 N '15

"The progress of learning in ten years may be estimated by a comparison of the bulk of the several sections of the two editions. As might be expected, the additions are largest in the sections devoted to 'General authorities' (including auxiliary studies), and 'Modern writers on the post-conquest periods.' In these cases the new matter amounts to about a third of the old. . . . It would be easy to extend such detailed criticism, but the really important fact is that this new edition is indispensable to historical workers, and a worthy memorial to a great scholar."

GROSS, CHARLES—Continued

+ Ath 1915;2:88 Ag 7 650w

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 21 '15 380w

"Such errors as were necessarily found have been, we can testify from close examination, most carefully and exactly corrected. But the editors have done much more than revise the book; they have continued it so as to comprise the publications of at least a dozen years. They modestly profess to aim at completeness only as far as the end of 1910, but in fact they have included most of what is of value down to 1913 and even 1914. We have searched, as it was our duty, for works omitted, and we have searched in vain. Granted that the scheme of the book was to be preserved without modification, we have nothing but praise for the new edition. Its size has increased from 638 to 844 pages; this is to be regretted, but it was no doubt unavoidable." R. L. P.

+ Eng Hist R 31:191 Ja '16 290w

+ Ind 84:276 N 15 '15 30w

"The superiority of Professor Gross's bibliography to similar guides to the study of continental history has always lain in the inclusion of descriptions of secondary works, supplementary to critical estimates of the sources; his bibliography was far more than a mere list of titles. It is, therefore, with satisfaction that the new edition is found to contain many additional critical estimates of both sources and modern works. Dr. Gross has indeed been fortunate in his editors, Professors Emerton, Haskins, and Gay. . . . The addition of a section on Celtic philology is noteworthy. . . . To the student, the new edition will be even more invaluable than the old. To the intelligent lay reader of English history it is recommended as no other guide to any field of history can be."

+ Nation 102:227 F 24 '16 1000w

GROVES, ERNEST RUTHERFORD. Moral sanitation. *50c (2½c) Assn. press 170 16-17680

"This book is written for those who minister to the moral needs of men and women. It attempts to uncover some of the sources of moral failure and to suggest methods for their prevention. It has grown out of a study of Freudian psychology." (Preface) Contents: Introduction; The method of Freud; Moral education; Cravings; Repentance; The moral importance of the home; The moral significance of work; Happiness and asceticism; Moral sanitation and the study of conduct.

Reviewed by I. S. Wile, M. D.

Survey 37:342 D 23 '16 500w

GRUENBERG, MRS. SIDONIE MATZNER. Sons and daughters. *$1.40 (2c) Holt 173 16-9558

This book follows "Your child today and tomorrow," published in 1913, and has to do with the training of older children, boys and girls of adolescent age. The author's attitude is wise and sane; her methods unite what is best of the old and the new ideals in child training. She points out in her first paper that many of the supposed innovations in the bringing up of children are only efforts to restore to them what they have lost in the advance of industrial civilization. The book is made up of short chapters grouped under the following headings: Modern parenthood; The physical basis; Every one in his own way; The changing child; Responding to the environment; The child's pugnacity; Initiative and spontaneity; Character as habit; The child's activities; Justice and the child; The management of children; The child and society.

+ A L A BkI 13:55 N '16

"The writer shows a rich experience from her contact with her own and other children.

The anecdotes and illustrations used are unusually well chosen. This fact, with the excellent psychology underlying the plan, are the strongest features of the work."

+ Ind 87:69 J1 10 '16 130w

Pittsburgh 21:304 Je '16 40w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:450 D '16 40w

GUENTHER, LOUIS. Investment and speculation. 2d ed il $2 (2½c) La Salle extension univ. 332 16-5652

This book, evidently planned as a textbook for university extension courses, offers much information for the small investor. There are chapters on Nature of investment and speculation, The intelligent employment of capital, Farm loans and mortgages, City real estate, Government, state, and municipal bonds, Railroad bonds, Bonds for women and estates, The science of speculation, The nature of exchanges, Panics, The get-rich-quick lure, etc. The author is editor of the Financial World.

"Mr. Guenther is pungent, pointed, and suggestive rather than in any sense complete or thorough. His treatment of such a vastly important branch of securities as municipal bonds is far too brief. He hardly mentions a growing and very important class of investments, public utility holding company securities. He affords an excellent account, considering the space at his disposal, of farm loans and mortgages, city real estate, and land booms. A slight but concrete feature of his book is the inclusion of a complete list of railroad guaranteed stocks. He has edited for some years a financial publication which excels in the exposure of worthless, stock jobbing enterprises. As might be expected his chapters on these subjects make interesting reading." A. W. Atwood

+ — Am Econ R 6:372 Je '16 320w

"In brief, this volume seems to suffer from three great defects (1) lack of arrangement of topics, (2) carelessness regarding details and (3) too much attempted in the available space. It would be unfair not to mention some characteristics worthy of praise. It has the advantage often lacking in books on financial subjects of being capable of comprehension by the average reader. The greater part also has the very good feature of being quite interesting reading, likewise not very common in financial books. The portions treating of the dealings on exchanges are perhaps the best although here also inaccuracy of statement is sometimes apparent." Robert Riegel

— + Ann Am Acad 67:305 S '16 830w

Cleveland p148 D '16 20w

"It can lay no claim to being a discussion of the principles of investment and speculation. It is valuable chiefly for the practical information it contains set down by a man in close touch with the matters concerning which he is writing."

+ — J Pol Econ 24:827 O '16 300w

N Y Br Lib News 3:95 Je '16 30w

"The book is superficial and in places inexact, but it is interestingly written and contains some valuable illustrative material."

— + Pol Sci Q 31:651 D '16 70w

"Its pages are filled with good business advice."

+ Springfield Republican p6 J11 '16 70w

GUINCHARD, AXEL JOHAN JOSEF, ed. Sweden; historical and statistical handbook; pt. 1. Land and the people; pt. 2. Industries. 2v il $8 Bonnier 914.85 (Swedish ed 16-1898)

"The first edition of this comprehensive handbook was published 1898-1904, the cost being mainly defrayed by the Riksdag. It appeared in three issues, French, Swedish, and English. In 1911 the Central bureau of statistics reported that a new edition was desirable; and the Riksdag made a state grant for producing a Swedish, an English, and—chiefly in view of the 1914 Baltic exhibition at Malmö—a German issue. A large number of authorities on different subjects contribute to the work. At the end is a bibliography of Sweden in foreign literature (15pp)."

—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The second volume should be of particular interest to Americans who are trying to increase our trade with Sweden. . . . For reference purposes it is invaluable."

+ N Y Times 21:478 N 12 '16 50w

"The chapter on touring gives some useful information for those who, in the happy days after the war, may think of visiting the country."

+ Spec 117:sup534 N 4 '16 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p478 O 5 '16 90w

GULICK, SIDNEY LEWIS. America and the Orient; outlines of a constructive policy; pub. jointly by Missionary education movement and Laymen's missionary movement. diags 25c Missionary education movement 327.52 16-14882

"Dr. Gulick, in 'America and the Orient,' discusses, out of his long experience in Japan, the relations and responsibilities of the United States with China and Japan and the solution of their grave problems by understanding and justice, or by force. The immigration difficulty he attacks by a scheme for percentage limitation, applying to all nationalities, a plan original and apparently so workable and just that one would like to see it tried."—Ind

"Few persons are so well qualified to speak on this momentous subject. . . . The busy person who wants the whole situation in a few well-chosen words will find it here."

+ Bib World 49:49 Ja '17 100w

Ind 88:30 O 2 '16 130w

"The treatment by the author seems fair throughout and the book can be recommended for careful consideration."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 250w

GULLIVER, LUCILE. Daniel Boone. il *50c (1c) Macmillan 16-9411

Uniform with "True stories of great Americans." The adding of another volume to the long list of biographies of America's greatest trail-maker finds extenuation in the fact that the story is written for young readers. The sketch portrays a red-blooded American, hardy and courageous, whose service to the nation stands out as a unique contribution to the best form of patriotism. Not only are his heroic qualities extolled but also those simple, lovable, unworldly ones that make him live today in the hearts of the people.

"Well worth preserving for the reading of all ages."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 23 '16 180w

+ Ind 87:236 Ag 14 '16 20w

+ Nation 103:546 D 7 '16 130w

N Y Br Lib News 3:92 Je '16

+ N Y Times 21:288 J1 16 '16 40w

"Valuable for supplementary reading in the study of American history, and interesting as a true story of adventure."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:272 Je '16 18w

GUYER, MICHAEL FREDERIC. Being well-born. (Childhood and youth ser.) il *$1 (1c) Bobbs 575.1 16-2623

The author, professor of zoology in the University of Wisconsin, calls this "an introduction to eugenics." Professor O'Shea in his introduction says, "Professor Guyer, who has studied the whole problem in a thoroughgoing, scientific way, has prepared this book with a view to illuminating some of the mysteries that surround the subject of heredity, and to dispelling the illusions that persist regarding it." Contents: Heredity; The bearers of the heritage; Mendelism; Mendelism in man; Are modifications acquired directly by the body inherited? Prenatal influences; Responsibility for conduct; Mental and nervous defects; Crime and delinquency; Race betterment through heredity. A glossary, references for further study, and an index follow.

"I am impressed with the fairness of the author and believe that he has given us a book of marked merits and few defects. It is so packed with information that it will prove very valuable for class and club use." Carl Kelsey

+ Am J Soc 22:99 J1 '16 1000w

+ A L A Bkl 12:323 Ap '16

"A book for the layman, but not written down to a 'popular' level. The understanding of the data requires close attention; and the subject deserves the effort. . . . In view of the low price of the book it is likely to be widely circulated and to become a standard introduction to a vital phase of public enlightenment."

+ Dial 61:71 J1 15 '16 210w

+ Ind 86:342 My 29 '16 100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:26 F '16

+ N Y Times 21:261 Je 25 '16 80w

R of Rs 53:509 Ap '16 40w

St Louis 14:188 Mr '16

"It is of interest to note that, wisely, only four pages are given to the statistical descriptions of heredity, and that the author takes a conservative position regarding the Mendelian interpretation of some of the data from the Eugenics record office. Two long chapters entitled 'Are modifications acquired directly by the body inherited?' and 'Prenatal influences' are certain to be of very great value to the general reader. The materials are well considered, lucidly presented and a clear distinction made between the scientific and the superstitious conceptions of prenatal influence." W. E. Kellicott

+ Science n s 43:606 Ap 28 '16 650w

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 23 '16 360w

"Perhaps the greatest service which Professor Guyer has rendered in writing this book is to clear the air with respect to the criteria of eugenic excellence. . . . As a work for the general reader, the parent, teacher or social worker, and as a text-book for classes in applied eugenics, this work has not a peer." E. W. Young, M. D.

+ Survey 36:462 J1 29 '16 330w

"A readable, sound, thorough, and as little technical as possible presentation of heredity, genetics and science of eugenics. It will interest any person alive to the importance of these subjects. Glossary, references and good index."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:144 Mr '16 60w

GUYOT, YVES. Causes and consequences of the war; tr. by F. Appleby Holt. *$3 Brentano's 940.91 (Eng ed 16-19225)

"The important part of M. Guyot's book on the war is his consideration of the terms of peace. It will be, he says, a peace of 'force' because it will be the result of victory in the war. It will result in the dissolution of the German empire, the dismemberment of Austria-Hungary. It will grant Constantinople and the Strait to Russia, take away Germany's colonies, restore Alsace-Lorraine. It will demand an indemnity from the conquered nations, and it will compel Germany to adopt free trade. Thus far does M. Guyot go with the parties of belligerent nationalists who would 'crush' Germany. But beyond this point the French economist is not in sympathy with these 'extremists.' . . . 'The causes and consequences of the war' delves far back into history, national and political, in tracing the events that led up to the war's beginning. It examines economic conditions, trade rivalries, the commercial interrelations of the countries before the struggle broke out. On the basis of all these it outlines possibilities of peace."—N Y Times

+ Ath p387 Ag '16 150w

"A cool analytical examination of the causes of the war. . . . In many respects the most remarkable book the war has produced." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 14 '16 700w

+ N Y Times 21:388 O 1 '16 1550w

"In the second place, M. Guyot throws a light on the methods adopted by the German government for manoeuvring the hesitating and only half-willing ministers of the Sultan into open hostility towards the Allies. . . . The fallacy that Germany was necessarily forced to adopt an expansive policy in order to obtain room for a redundant population has already been exposed by many writers. It may be as well, however, to quote the figures which M. Guyot gives on this subject. They are conclusive. Germany is at present far from being overpopulated. . . . M. Guyot appears somewhat to overlook the great importance which should be attached to the ambitious projects entertained at Berlin in connexion with German domination not only in the Near East but in Asia. As regards the terms of peace, M. Guyot's proposals are very drastic." [Earl of] Cromer

GUYOT, YVES—Continued

+ — Spec 117:264 S 2 '16 2000w

"There is no denying or questioning the novelty of his treatment of some parts of a well-worn theme, or of his conclusions. Some of them are startling. . . . The value of the book does not consist of these predictions and comminations. M. Guyot's service is to bring to the discussion of post-war problems unusually wide knowledge; to study the aspirations of the many ethnic groups which the Central empires have crushed, and to which this struggle has brought new hopes. . . . M. Guyot's uncompromising economic creed is not that of many of his readers. But all may profit by his remarks even if they disagree with his conclusions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p327 J1 13 '16 1400w

GWYNNE, AGNES. Bathing-man. *$1.25 (1c) Lane 16-19066

The readiness with which his father and everyone else, including Betty, who had just promised to marry him, believe evil of him drives Jack Saxsonham from his English home. Jack's likeness to an ancestor, who has been the skeleton in the family history since cavalier days, has often been marked and it seems to add something to the possibility of his guilt. When Jack next appears it is as Giacomo, the bathing-man at an Italian coast resort, where he is the friend of all children, in particular of Maria, a red haired little English girl of thirteen or so. Of course there is a dramatic meeting between Betty and the bathing-man in which the girl's flint-like hardness displays itself. Betty makes a brilliant marriage and Jack is left at the end of the story quite satisfied with things as they turn out for himself and content to wait for Maria. Incidentally the stain on the name of the cavalier ancestor is removed.

"The novel is readable, but the note of distinction is wanting."

+ — Ath p480 O '16 90w

"The volume abounds in local color, both English and Italian. There are exciting moments and humorous moments."

+ N Y Times 21:536 D 3 '16 320w

"A mildly interesting story."

Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 90w

H

HAGAR, GEORGE JOTHAM. Plain facts about Mexico; the country, states and cities, the people, the resources, government and statistics. maps *50c (2½c) Harper 917.2 16-16099

A book intended for the "busy man"; also, it might be said, for the business man, for first place is given to facts of economic importance. The chapters take up: Natural and racial features and population; Agricultural and mining industries; Mexico's greatest natural asset; Commerce, banking, and finance; Transportation, telegraph, and telephone companies; Constitution and government; States and territories of the federation; American investments.

"As simple and straightforward as the multiplication table." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 44:205 O '16 310w
Boston Transcript p8 O 7 '16 290w

+ Ind 87:390 S 11 '16 40w

+ N Y Times 21:369 S 17 '16 70w

+ R of Rs 54:456 O '16 60w

St Louis 14:440 D '16

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:409 N '16 40w

HAGEDORN, HERMANN. Great maze, and The heart of youth. *$1.25 Macmillan 811 16-6135

In "The great maze," a long poem in blank verse, Mr. Hagedorn tells anew the story of Agamemnon's return from the ten years' siege of Troy—tells it in a way that makes each of the three actors, Agamemnon, Clytemnestra and Ægisthus, stand out in a new light and gives a new interpretation to the age-old tale. A portentous figure in the story is that of the child Electra, who appears but twice, once in a poignant scene with her father in the garden, and again for a moment at the end, foreshadowing the later tragedy that is to come. "The heart of youth" is a short play written for the dedication of an outdoor theater at the Hill school in Pottstown, Pa., and performed there in June, 1915. It was published in the Outlook for November 24, 1915.

+ A L A Bkl 12:418 Je '16

"Beautiful, powerful, unfolding itself from the beginning with simply but imaginatively and melodiously wrought lines of blank verse, this poem is the finest thing Mr. Hagedorn has done, and another addition of the glowing power in contemporary poetry." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 15 '16 1600w

+ — Nation 103:151 Ag 17 '16 480w

+ — New Repub 7:234 J1 1 '16 400w

"Several of his books are listed as being out of print. One may hope that this will be remedied and that a public will be found to demand and to cherish the work of this writer, whose themes, albeit laid in an ancient day, are too passionately human to be anything less old or less young than the heart of man itself."

+ N Y Times 21:87 Mr 12 '16 1000w

"In his present volume Mr. Hagedorn has combined all the virtues of his previous works. He has gained tremendously in sustained technical ability, he has gained tremendously in his understanding and presentation of character. His latest work shows a wider and more catholic outlook on life than anything that he has hitherto published."

+ Outlook 112:999 Ap 26 '16 700w

"I must confess to finding the manner of this play too often inferior to the really exquisite matter. When Mr. Hagedorn is most colloquial, he is most disappointing; when he forgets to write down to his actors and audience, he speaks truly and beautifully not only of but straight to the 'tormented, irresponsible, gay, eager, burning, foolish heart of youth.' To 'The great maze,' one may apply the epithet which seems to fit the Parthenon—satisfactory. It is a great subject, greatly handled. The whole poem is full of pictures that live and breathe. This poem is a thing to be read by many, and not once nor twice." A. J. Burr

+ Poetry Review 1:15 Je '16 1000w

"There is nothing finer in modern American poetry."

+ R of Rs 53:762 Je '16 110w

"Mr. Hagedorn has risen to a higher poetical height in this poem than in 'The great maze.' It is a poem that grown people should read for a better understanding of the heart of youth."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ap 2 '16 630w

Reviewed by E: B. Reed

+ Yale R ns 6:420 Ja '17 230w

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER. Ivory child. il *$1.35 Longmans 16-8072

"The story is concerned with two quests—to kill the elephant-god, Jana, which is worshipped by the Black Kendahs, and to find the wife of Lord Ragnall, who has been enticed into central Africa to become oracle to the 'Ivory child,' fetish of the White Kendahs. Two years before he undertakes the journey, two mysterious strangers from Africa have visited Quatermain in England and urged him to return and hunt down the feared Jana. Circumstances eventually shape themselves to make Quatermain's preparation for this expedition coincide with Lady Ragnall's disappearance. He learns of this when Lord Ragnall unexpectedly joins him in Natal. Together they undertake the hazardous journey to the land of the Kendah. Some of Quatermain's old retainers accompany him, and places visited in other stories are again touched at."—Springfield Republican

A L A Bkl 12:481 J1 '16

"It is, on the whole, a good sample for the Quatermain collector. But it shows distinct signs of a note forced by fatigue; the archaeology is somewhat threadbare; 'Macumazahn' has lost much of his spontaneous modesty; and the hero and heroine, such as they are, do not by any means come up to the 'mighty man and wondrous woman' of the old days."

+ — Ath p38 Ja '16 220w

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '16 1250w

+ Nation 103:84 J1 27 '16 330w

+ N Y Times 21:146 Ap 16 '16 700w

"The tale is an allegory of the worship of the earth spirit Isis, the eternal mother of all life, and of the conflict between good and evil."

+ R of Rs 53:759 Je '16 250w

"Interesting problems have to be solved, and solved they are, to an accompaniment of mystery and magic, hairbreadth escapes and desperate hand-to-hand fighting, handled in Sir Rider Haggard's best manner."

+ Spec 116:229 F 12 '16 1350w

"Quatermain's adventures possess a degree of fresh surprise and genuine thrill comparable to the narratives of African explorers of two decades ago."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 23 '16 230w

Wis Lib Bull 12:272 Je '16 40w

HAIG, ROBERT MURRAY. Exemption of improvements from taxation in Canada and the United States. pa Committee on taxation, room 914, Municipal bldg., N. Y. 336.2

15-28013

"Dr. Haig's timely study is an important contribution to the literature on taxation of land and improvements. It is the first (and the more valuable) of two reports which he has prepared for the Committee on taxation of New York city, and presents the results of a field investigation carried on in the summer of 1914. The report is divided into two parts. Part one (pp. 11-258) is 'an effort to state concisely all the available facts which may aid in understanding the system of taxation in force in the various cities or throw light upon its effects.' . . . Part two (pp. 261-80) is entitled 'Generalizations and conclusions.'"—Ann Am Acad

"Dr. Haig has carefully analyzed his data, and both of his studies are useful contributions. They represent industrious and painstaking work." A. N. Young

+ Am Econ R 6:158 Mr '16 1450w

"Dr. Haig has aimed to show the place of these land taxes in the scheme of provincial and local finance, and, as a result, his report is a valuable compendium of the fiscal systems of the Canadian west." A. N. Young

+ Ann Am Acad 64:239 Mr '16 470w

HAINES, LYNN. Your Congress; an interpretation of the political and parliamentary influences that dominate law making in America. il $1.15 National voters' league 328.73

15-24664

"As secretary to the National voters' league Mr. Haines has devoted the past two years to the impartial study of Congress in action. To the present and future work of the National voters' league, its reconstructive program, much of this book is devoted. The immediate reforms look to a simplification of House procedure and organization on lines of common-sense business efficiency, and to a relief of the congestion. More basically, it is proposed to strike at patronage by an extension of the civil service, and to eliminate 'pork' appropriations by the establishment of an executive budget system. The election of representatives by groups from large districts is proposed as a substitute for our present system of petty single-member districts. . . . Throughout the book Mr. Haines regards government in the proper perspective, as a mere instrument of that unity of sovereignty and society which is democracy. In the light of such a concept our 'end-in-itself political system' must go. But this small volume performs a still more valuable service, of which the title is significant: 'Your Congress' is addressed to the ordinary citizen—a challenge to know and then to act."—New Repub

A L A Bkl 13:9 O '16

"Though 'Your Congress' is popular in tone, it has the meat of original and practical research in it, and with the monthly bulletin serves to keep information up-to-date on the current activities of Congress as seen by experienced and impartial observers. Its popular character is in keeping with its purpose of showing to the individual citizen his own interests in efficient government. This book and the league for which it speaks are effective instruments for the much needed reconstruction of the governmental machine, the efficiency of which is an almost absolute prerequisite to any substantive social reform; they therefore merit the support of all good citizens, whatever their social creed." W. H. Haines

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:389 My '16 1150w

"In so far as 'Your Congress' incites its readers to inquire more diligently what their law-makers are doing and why they do it, there can be no doubt of its being an instrument of good to the community. But the only proof of the effectiveness of Mr. Haines's radical projects would be their adoption for practical test, and then it would be too late to go back if they played false to expectation."

+ — Nation 102:409 Ap 13 '16 1150w

"It is thus unusually heartening to find a recent book of such a sanely hopeful outlook as 'Your Congress'—sane because it is based on a complete knowledge of the unpleasant facts, hopeful because of an unwavering faith in the future of the democratic idea of the United States." W. H. H.

+ New Repub 6:50 F 12 '16 870w

HAKE, THOMAS, and COMPTON-RICKETT, ARTHUR. Life and letters of Theodore Watts-Dunton. 2v il $7.50

This life of Theodore Watts-Dunton, with many extracts from his letters, fills two volumes. Volume 1 opens with an account of his life at St. Ives, from early childhood to maturity, followed by the story of his literary beginnings in London. Other chapters in this volume are devoted to his friendship with Whistler and with Dante Gabriel Rossetti. In volume 2 four chapters are given up to Mid-Victorian friendships. To this volume Mrs. Watts-Dunton contributes a chapter and there are also personal impressions contributed by three friends, Coulson Kernahan, Herbert Jenkins, and John Lawrence Lambé.

"If the biographers occupy their pages with some matters of no moment, when they come to Watts-Dunton's verse and criticism they are eminently judicious in their summary of his work and claims, and they have an intimate knowledge of his ways and moods."

+ Ath p575 D '16 1850w

"Contains no small amount of valuable personalia, but it is put together in a distractingly chaotic and ill-arranged manner. . . . Both Mr. Hake and Mr. Compton-Rickett knew Watts-Dunton well, Mr. Hake having served as his secretary for more than a decade of his last years." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 27 '17 1300w

+ N Y Times 22:25 Ja 28 '17 1850w

"It is tactful to an almost provoking extent, and yet it is not tactful enough. . . . We are glad to have incorporated in Watts-Dunton's biography some very interesting examples of his forgotten or hitherto unpublished work. . . . The thrilling sonnet, 'Suspense,' printed by Mrs. Watts-Dunton in her really vital and revealing narrative of friendship and

HAKE, T., and COMPTON-RICKETT, A.—Cont. love, shows that his craftsmanship in verse at the close of his worldly career was as clever as ever it was. W. H. Chesson

+ — Sat R 122:623 D 30 '16 1150w

"He knew every one worth knowing in the later Victorian period. He made it his business to know them and to serve them, and it is in connexion with them that his biography can interest the world."

+ Spec 117:771 D 16 '16 1250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p535
N 9 '16 1350w

HALBE, MAX. Youth; tr. by Sara Tracy Barrows. (Drama league ser. of plays) *75c (3½c) Doubleday 832 16-10677

A modern German drama, first produced in 1893. The scene is a small town in Polish West Prussia and the story that of two young people who meet, fall heedlessly in love and are required, like Shakespeare's immortal young lovers, to pay a price for their brief moments of joy. Ludwig Lewisohn in his introduction says, "Shakespeare stirs us to a higher admiration of the art of poetry and dazzles us with the visible splendors of the world. I am not sure that Halbe does not move us more deeply and more humanly, and reaches more poignantly, our sense of the realities of youth and love."

A L A Bkl 13:20 O '16

"Professor Lewisohn in his introduction compares the play with 'Romeo and Juliet,' and adds, 'I am not sure that Halbe does not move us more deeply and more humanly.' This is the very ecstasy of nonsense. . . . 'Youth' is a rather nauseous mixture of German sentimentality and naturalism. . . . Sometimes, as at the conclusion, the play becomes unintentionally comic." H. E. Woodbridge

— Dial 62:69 Ja 25 '17 140w

N Y Br Lib News 3:92 Je '16

St Louis 14:439 D '16

Springfield Republican p8 Je 23 '16 150w

HALE, MRS. ANNIE RILEY. Eden sphinx. $1.25 Mrs. A. R. Hale, lock box 15, Station N, N. Y. 324.3 16-6942

"Mrs. Hale takes up various phases of the contest on woman suffrage. . . . After a brief inquiry into the psychological causes underlying the suffrage movement, she traces the history of feminism from its earliest manifestation to the present time. . . . Then she devotes a chapter to 'The suffragette intellect,' of which her opinion is not very high, and another to 'The male suffragist and the case for the anti.' . . . In the last chapter on 'New woman or new mother?' Mrs. Hale makes an earnest plea for the realization by women of the power for molding character, and hence the progress of the world that rests in their hands."

—N Y Times

Ind 87:33 Jl 3 '16 50w

N Y Br Lib News 3:75 My '16 30w

"Her book must be counted among the sprightliest and cleverest that have appeared on either side of the controversy."

+ N Y Times 21:164 Ap 16 '16 480w

HALE, BEATRICE FORBES-ROBERTSON. Nest-builder. il $1.35 (1½c) Stokes 16-26771

Conflicting ideals in marriage furnish the theme of this novel by Mrs. Hale, eminent feminist and author of "What women want." To Stefan Byrd marriage meant a glorified companionship with the woman he loves. She is to be to him an object of adoration and an inspiration in his art. To Mary, the lovely English girl who marries him after a short, breathless courtship, it means the making of a home to which children are to be welcomed. Stefan is artist and lover; Mary is essentially mother. How shall these two opposing types adjust themselves to the conditions of marriage? This is the question the novel sets out to answer.

"Readable, but one feels the characters as types rather than people."

+ — A L A Bkl 13:84 N '16

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:184 O '16 550w

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '16 190w

"The book, though not memorable, holds the attention. There are some clever vignettes of character, and what Mrs. Hale has to say she says in fluent, nervous English, with considerable wit; such crudities as exist are of thought, not expression. The general morale is healthful, but wholly secular and sophisticated; and discrimination is called for in distribution of the novel, for at several points the author's judgment—though never her intention—is in error."

+ — Cath World 104:110 O '16 400w

+ Dial 61:538 D 14 '16 220w

"The story is an eloquent appeal from thin-souled, callow individualism to the pride of racial sacrifice and strife and glory."

+ Ind 89:72 Ja 8 '17 120w

"The other people in the story sometimes have the air of being there for the sake of the story, but Mary and Stefan are there for their own sakes, original creations, pulsing with life, creating and finally interpreting and illuminating their own problem in life; the problem which has agonized many another couple, and will wring the hearts of many another man and woman for ages yet to come."

+ N Y Times 21:352 S 10 '16 1050w

HALE, JOSEPH WOODWELL LEDWIDGE. Practical mechanics and allied subjects. il $1 McGraw 621 15-15652

"This book is designed as a text for use in railroad shop-apprentice schools and mechanical trade schools in general. Within its pages are presented such elementary principles of science and mathematics as will enable one to understand many of the processes and operations carried on in the average machine shop, as well as the simpler principles underlying the adjustment, mechanical arrangement and operation of common shop tools."—Elec World

"The subject matter is presented throughout in a direct, simple and logical manner, and the book seems to fulfill the need for a text especially adapted to the requirements of trade-school and shop-apprentice-school students."

+ Elec World 66:710 S 25 '15 170w

"A practical little book."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p14 S '15 70w

HALE, LOUISE (CLOSSER) (MRS. WALTER HALE). We discover the Old Dominion. il $2.50 (3c) Dodd 917.5 16-22356

A book of pictures by Walter Hale with accompanying narrative by Louise Closser Hale, or the other way about, if one prefer. The narrative, which is bright and sparkling in the author's usual manner, follows the course of a journey thru Virginia, southward down the Shenandoah valley, eastward past the Natural bridge and thru Appomattox to Norfolk, and then northward thru Richmond, and on to New York and home.

+ A L A Bkl 13:168 Ja '17

"The past and the present mingle in Mrs. Hale's pages. Many books of travel have been written, and many more will be written, but there are few so delightful as this. . . . And no better illustrator to accompany her could be found than Mr. Hale." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 25 '16 1450w

+ Dial 61:474 N 30 '16 140w

+ Ind 88:408 D 4 '16 60w

+ Nation 103:519 N 30 '16 70w

"Numerous whimsical anecdotes add to the interest."

+ N Y Times 21:512 N 26 '16 70w

+ R of Rs 54:680 D '16 60w

"One of the books which entice owners of automobiles to try the route themselves, but such should not depend upon Mrs. Hale as an infallible guide. . . . A careful driver will take care to bring along with this volume many others with more detailed and more authoritative information upon such necessary matters as hotel accommodations. To the stay-at-home Mrs. Hale's book will perhaps be all sufficient, although at the same time it may induce further reading along similar lines."

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 2 '16 470w

HALE, WALTER. By motor to the firing line. il *$1.50 (3½c) Century 940.91 16-10127

"An artist's notes and sketches with the armies of northern France, June-July, 1915." Walter Hale's drawings have been used before to illustrate the books of other war correspondents. In this book he appears as both correspondent and illustrator. Thirteen of his drawings are reproduced in addition to many photographs. Contents: A voyage of adventure; A new Paris of old memories; A motor tour to Rheims and the Champagne district; In the Aisne valley; Soissons—a retrospect; A little journey to Compiègne; The beleaguered city of Arras; Back of the front—Doullens and Albert; One day (July 8) in the Artois sector; Afterward—motoring in the path of war.

"Appeared in Collier's Weekly and the Century."

+ A L A Bkl 12:472 J1 '16.

"Being an artist it is with the artistic losses of France that Mr. Hale is chiefly concerned. His sketches, rendering all the atmospheric effects which he is able to produce so well, and catching many times moments and impressions which the camera cannot render, make the book memorable among war books." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 6 '16 1200w

+ Ind 86:400 Je 5 '16 240w

+ Lit D 53:85 J1 8 '16 220w

+ Nation 103:263 S 14 '16 170w

"For years Mr. Hale has been a lover of and frequent visitor to Paris and northern France, and back of all his drawings and descriptions are his memories of them as they were in former years—memories that give to many of his pages a sympathetic tenderness that is very appealing."

+ N Y Times 21:192 My 7 '16 500w

R of Rs 53:755 Je '16 130w

"He writes with no little humor, a quality that one may not perhaps be expected to look for in such a book, but which has its place on the fighting line as well as elsewhere."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 30 '16 370w

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:321 J1 '16 70w

HALL, ALBERT NEELY, and PERKINS, DOROTHY. Handicraft for handy girls; practical plans for work and play. il *$2 (3c) Lothrop 790 16-23462

This book opens with the statement: "It is a mistaken idea that girls cannot drive a nail straight." After that it goes on with a discussion of "Carpentry that a girl can do" and with chapters on: Small gifts made of wood; Household gifts; Spool gifts; Cretonne-covered carpentry; Home-made frames for small pictures; Basket making; Home-made pottery, etc. The authors say, "Following the plan of the boys' handy books, 'Handicraft for handy girls,' has been prepared with the purpose uppermost in mind to encourage the utilization of materials to be found at home, especially those which are ordinarily classed as waste."

"Gives simple directions with pictures and diagrams for hundreds of things girls can make, including more out-of-door things than Beard's 'American girl's handy book.' (A L A catalog 1904). It will not replace that but may well be used with it. Up-to-date, few of the things are absolutely useless; has a special chapter for Camp fire girls."

+ A L A Bkl 13:182 Ja '17

"Possesses the virtues of a textbook or reference book. It is suitable for girls of 12 years and up."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 2 '16 190w

HALL, ALFRED DANIEL. Agriculture after the war. *$1.25 Dutton 333 (Eng ed 16-12410)

"Mr. Hall has given and taken a great deal of evidence upon British agriculture, and here he sets out the sum of his conclusions upon the immediate problems that confront us. . . . There can be no dissent from his desire to see more food produced in these islands and more men attracted to rural life. . . . The arguable points are, as usual, how to secure the means to the ends in view. Like most enthusiasts, Mr. Hall wants state action; but, unlike some, he faces the objections, and realizes that each act of state interference is but a step to another to counterbalance the last. He admits that his path leads logically to a land monopoly under state ownership. Mr. Hall considers the necessary means to be protective duties on corn or bounties on new arable land, with safeguards against the absorption of the benefits by the landlord, and, further, a minimum wage fixed by the state for labourers. He also wishes to see the state fostering, or even undertaking, some large experimental farms upon industrialized lines, and some co-operative small-holding colonies."—Spec

"The scheme suggested is comprehensive and logical, but it has its revolutionary aspect, and the final solution, in his own words, is 'for the state to become the ultimate landowner.' . . . This problem is for the statesman, and when he comes to deal with it he will find Mr. Hall's book a useful guide." E. J. R.

+ Nature 97:459 Ag 3 '16 630w

Spec 117:78 J1 15 '16 330w

"Written by a man who not only is one of the most scientific and progressive of agriculturists, but is also the author of the fullest survey of the existing conditions of farming. 'Small in size, but great in value,' the work deserves wide circulation and careful consideration."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p219 My 11 '16 1000w

HALL, ARNOLD BENNETT. Outline of international law. $1.75 La Salle extension univ. 341 15-15114

"'Outline of international law,' by Arnold Bennett Hall, assistant professor of political science in the University of Wisconsin, should prove very useful to the student who is interested in the understanding of these problems."

In his treatment of his subject, the author discusses the general conceptions of international law, the independence and equality of states, territorial domains and jurisdiction, relations between states in peace, war and neutrality. The text matter fills about half the book, the rest being devoted to valuable appendices. The first appendix contains classified bibliography, while the others contain the reports of the Hague conferences, together with the declaration of London."—Springfield Republican

"The book is full of interesting information put in such simple form as to be clear and understandable. It fills a real present need, gives much light on the legal side of current war events, and at the same time it is dignified and scholarly." W. W. Pierson

+ Am J Soc 22:109 J1 '16 400w

"A popular, non-technical survey of the whole field, accurate as to facts, intended as a bird's eye view for busy readers. Differs from most other works on the subject in its brevity and cheapness. Appendices contain a useful classified, but not exhaustive bibliography (15p.), those articles of the Hague conferences of most interest, and other documentary material."

+ A L A Bkl 12:165 Ja '16

"Mr. Hall reveals a good grasp of his subject, and is clear in his statements. His 'Outline,' however, is so palpably an outline that its 106 pages virtually constitute hardly anything more than an expanded syllabus. One cannot but be somewhat apprehensive that skeleton outlines may tend to encourage superficiality of thought. When one brings to mind such excellent books of handy reference as Wilson's 'Handbook of international law,' and Hershey's 'Essentials of international law,' both of which are replete with marginal references and documentary data, it is difficult to understand just

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HALL, ARNOLD BENNETT—Continued
 why it should have been thought desirable to publish this 'Outline.' It would seem fair to assume that Mr. Hall's little book is particularly calculated to be of service as a textbook to be used subordinately as a sort of syllabus in a brief course of lectures. In this sense it would seem to be of rather restricted utility, as most teachers of international law would either prefer a more comprehensive textbook or supply their own individual outline of lectures." P. M. Brown

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:184 F '16 350w

+ Int J Ethics 26:438 Ap '16 150w

"Doubtless many readers will find it useful. It does not attempt, however, to discuss current controversies, though its preface bears date of June, 1915. We have discovered no allusion to rules which should govern submarine or aeroplane warfare, or the treatment of non-combatant populations, or the imposition of indemnities upon invaded territories. The appendices, it is true, contain much valuable information."

+ Nation 102:83 Ja 20 '16 200w

+ Springfield Republican p17 D 17 '15 190w

"Professor Hall's outline of international law is a boon. In little over a hundred readable pages the main outlines are given, and it is surprising how far the phrases and legal points that have puzzled the layman in his newspaper reading are here made intelligible. No one interested in public affairs and not already posted on international law can afford not to read through this most convenient handbook." E. G. Balch

+ Survey 37:92 O 28 '16 70w

HALL, BAYNARD RUSH (ROBERT CARLTON, pseud.). New purchase; or, Seven and a half years in the far West. il $2 (1c) Princeton univ. press 977.2 16-21241

This is a reprint of an early work giving a picture of life in Indiana in the early nineteenth century. The "New purchase," obtained by treaty with several tribes of Indians in 1815, was a large tract occupying what is now the north central portion of the state. Here Baynard Rush Hall came in 1823 to be principal of the newly founded Indiana seminary, now the University of Indiana. He "entered with spirit and sympathy into all the life of the backwoods," says the introduction, and on returning to his home in the east wrote this account which has been pronounced "one of the best books ever written concerning life in the West." It is edited by James Albert Woodburn, professor of American history in Indiana university and is published in honor of the Indiana centennial by the Princeton university press, Princeton thus doing honor also to the author, one of her graduates.

+ A L A Bkl 13:188 Ja '17

"It presents, as no other book has done, the conditions of life in the pioneer days of Indiana. . . . In the new edition just published the story of pioneer life is told as in the original issue, and there is a key to characters and places which makes this a valuable contribution to Indiana history."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 29 '16 700w

+ Dial 61:482 N 30 '16 180w

+ Ind 88:242 N 6 '16 100w

"All his experiences he set down under a pseudonym, with a crude but serviceable style, with many faults of taste and narrative design, with a humor often coarse, and with a sometimes tiresome insistence upon detail. But the five hundred pages also contain the life of a people."

+ Nation 103:545 D 7 '16 380w

+ R of Rs 54:683 D '16 130w

"One sees in this book some of the shrewd homely and human qualities, out of which our great middle west, now at last become dominant in the nation, developed the democracy which seemingly holds the promise of the future."

+ Springfield Republican p6 N 30 '16 1350w
 The Times [London] Lit Sup p24 Ja 11 '17 80w

HALL, CLIFTON RUMERY. Andrew Johnson, military governor of Tennessee. $1.50 (2c) Princeton univ. press 973.8 16-21420

"This book, as its title implies, is an attempt to trace the personality of Andrew Johnson through the years 1862-1865, when the burden of military government and reconstruction in Tennessee rested principally upon his shoulders." (Preface) The author names as his chief sources, the Johnson papers, the "Official records of the union and confederate armies," and the contemporary newspapers, in particular the Nashville Union. In treating his subject, the author has tried to show that this experience was preparatory to the tasks that fell to Johnson later. He says, "It will be seen, I think, that his attitude, as president, toward the problems of reconstruction, was, in most respects, a natural consequence of his experience as military governor of Tennessee."

Boston Transcript p8 N 4 '16 1050w

+ R of Rs 54:682 D '16 160w

+ Springfield Republican p8 Ja 9 '17 470w

HALL, MRS. FLORENCE MARION (HOWE). A-B-C of correct speech and the art of conversation. (Harper's A-B-C ser.) *50c (2c) Harper 420 16-8922

The author devotes herself to the discussion of general principles and the consideration of specific errors rather than to the laying down of rules. Some of the chapter titles are: How can we learn to speak correctly? The genius of the English language; On quotations from foreign languages and the pronunciation of foreign proper names; Slang and over-precision of speech; Voice, utterance, and accent; Certain forms of mispronunciation; Condemned words and phrases; Criticisms and Americanisms; Qualities of the good talker; The true object of conversation.

"Is directly and simply written and is shorter and less general than Conklin's 'Conversation: what to say and how to say it' (Booklist, 9:318, Ap '13)."

+ A L A Bkl 13:105 D '16

Pittsburgh 21:442 O '16

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 19 '16 170w

HALL, MRS. FLORENCE MARION (HOWE). Story of the Battle hymn of the republic. il *50c (2c) Harper 16-22824

The story of the writing of Mrs. Howe's "Battle hymn" is the story of the stormy days preceding the civil war. It has been Mrs. Hall's purpose "to give to the present generation some idea of the fervor and ferment, and exaltation of spirit" of that time. The little book has chapters on: The anti-slavery prelude to the great tragedy of the civil war; The crime against Kansas; Mrs. Howe visits the Army of the Potomac; "The battle hymn of the republic"; The army takes it up; Notable occasions where it has been sung; How and where the author recited it; Tributes to "The battle hymn"; Mrs. Howe's lesser poems of the civil war; Mrs. Howe's love of freedom an inheritance.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 15 '16 650w

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 240w

HALL, HERBERT JAMES, and BUCK, MERTICE MACCREA. Handicrafts for the handicapped. il $1.25 (5c) Moffat 689 17-182

This volume supplements "The work of our hands," by the same authors. It is intended as a textbook for a few crafts which have proved to be of special value to handicapped workers. These crafts are: Basketry; Chair seating; Netting; Weaving; Bookbinding; Cement working; Pottery making; Light blacksmithing. It is not supposed that disabled workers may become wholly self-supporting thru these occupations, but, the authors say, "if they help to keep the wolf from the door, if they restore confidence and courage, if they do in some measure reduce the burden of public and industrial obligation to the handicapped, they will serve a most valuable purpose."

"Not only is a thorough system of the method and means of their teaching given, but also a brief history of each, adding a picturesque touch to the homely details."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 6 '17 400w

HALL, HERBERT JAMES, and BUCK, MERTICE MACCREA. Work of our hands. il *$1.50 (5c) Moffat 615.8 15-23309

"The work of our hands' tells of productive occupation for invalids and cripples according to their ability to work, whether less than an hour or eight hours a day." (Ind) "For several years Dr. Hall and Miss Buck have given special attention to the development of modified work as a remedy for those who are broken down nervously, and as a source of livelihood for the blind, crippled and infirm. . . . They review the work that is now being carried on in the large state institutions, especially in Massachusetts and New York state, and discuss the possibilities of its further development." (Springfield Republican)

+ A L A Bkl 12:220 F '16

"Full of suggestion."

+ Educ R 51:533 My '16 30w

Ind 84:478 D 20 '15 50w

"They have covered the whole subject in a way that is both authoritative and helpful, the result being a work that should prove as interesting to the general reader as to those engaged in dealing with the various phases of the problem."

+ Springfield Republican p17 D 10 '15 300w

HALL, JAMES NORMAN. Kitchener's mob. il *$1.25 (3c) Houghton 940.91 16-11985

A series of articles reprinted from the Atlantic Monthly. The author is a young American from Iowa who was touring the British Isles on a bicycle when war was declared. He hurried to London and enlisted, and in these articles has been giving some account of his experiences in Kitchener's army. Contents: Joining up; Rookies; The mob in training; Ordered abroad; The parapet-etic school; Private Holloway, professor of hygiene; Midsummer calm; Under cover; Billets; New lodgings; "Sitting tight."

+ A L A Bkl 13:24 O '16

+ Ath p387 Ag '16 40w

"Mr. Hall makes his narrative of real value by his straightforward simplicity."

+ Ath p413 S '16 910w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 17 '16 500w

"For a concrete example of the difference between an organized society recognizing mutual obligations, and individualism lacking all the ties of ethical cohesion, read 'Kitchener's mob.'"

+ Ind 88:72 O 9 '16 340w

"Vividly entertaining in part, and in part is terribly horrible. It would well serve the propaganda of preparedness if that for which a nation must prepare, now urged so strongly, were not portrayed with so much of lifelikeness leading to so much of sickening death."

+ Lit D 53:313 Ag 5 '16 110w

"The title 'Kitchener's mob,' which was applied to the early thousands of the new armies and has stuck to them now that they are counted by millions, is by no means a sobriquet of contempt; it is the name the men chose for themselves, and the fact that they did so is perhaps as good an answer as could be found to the fear that England herself may be subdued to the militaristic spirit which she is fighting. . . . Some things in the book are particularly well done, notably the very interesting and detailed description of the trench-system. It is worth remarking, too, that Mr. Hall has little but praise for the organization that created the new armies."

+ Nation 102:626 Je 8 '16 530w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16

+ N Y Times 21:233 Je 4 '16 250w

+ Pittsburgh 21:358 J1 '16 80w

"His admiration for the rank and file is unstinted. During six months' service in the trenches Private Hall saw only two cases of drunkenness, and never did he see a woman treated discourteously by an English Tommy Atkins. The scenes of actual battle, of hand to hand conflict are described with a simplicity that carries their horror deep into the mind."

+ R of Rs 54:116 J1 '16 300w

"His criticism of our [British] training is that the soldier does not often enough develop the power of personal initiative. . . . Whether this be an avoidable failure or not, Mr. Hall has established his title to criticize by writing one of the best appreciations of the British private's character we have come across."

+ Spec 117:103 J1 22 '16 2500w

"This volume duplicates no other."

+ Springfield Republican p8 Je 27 '16 370w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p371 Ag 3 '16 50w

"One of the most readable books we have had."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:321 J1 '16 80w

HALL, SIR JOHN RICHARD. General Pichegru's treason. il *$4 Dutton

"In this historical monograph Sir John Hall seizes upon the occasion of a general war in Europe to bring to the surface some forgotten details of the European disturbances which preceded and followed the French revolution and the fall of Louis XVI." (Boston Transcript) He tells "the story of the French general who in 1795 entered into a conspiracy for the return of Louis XVIII to power, and who has been shown by French historians to have had a part in the plots fomented by the British government at that time against Bonaparte." (R of Rs)

Ath p20 Ja '16 380w

Boston Transcript p22 F 2 '16 1100w

N Y Times 21:178 Ap 23 '16 60w

R of Rs 53:500 Ap '16 50w

HALL, JOHN WILLIAM, and HALL, MRS. ALICE CYNTHIA (KING). Question as a factor in teaching. il *$1.25 Houghton 371.3 16-21040

The word "teaching" as used in this book means "the stimulation of genuine constructive thinking directed toward a definite and desired end." This definition taken in connection with the title will indicate the importance attached to the "question." It is to be considered as a means of stimulation rather than as an instrument for testing what has already been learned. F. M. McMurtry in his introduction says that the main purpose of the question in teaching is "to supply motive for effort, and a basis for the selection and organization of data." The authors treat their subject in relation to elementary school teaching. Contents: The question as a factor in teaching stories; Some studies in teaching stories; Principles of method involved in teaching stories; The question as a factor in teaching other subjects.

+ A L A Bkl 13:200 F '17

"It is all well enough, but why so much of it."

+ Educ R 53:200 F '17 50w

"When two skilful teachers who have for a long time been engaged in dealing with classroom methods record their views on such an important problem, the result is sure to be of interest to everyone connected with schools either in a practical or in a theoretical way."

+ El School J 17:226 D '16 500w

"Mothers, teachers and Sunday school workers will find it useful."

+ Ind 88:553 D 25 '16 40w

Pratt p14 Ja '17

HALL, MORRIS ALBERT, and CRAVENS, GEORGE W. Automobile driving and repairs; a practical guide to proper methods of driving, solving road troubles, and making repairs, including tire vulcanizing, and autogenous welding. il $1.50 Am. technical soc. 629.2 16-21730

"This volume is designed for the owner, or the driver, who wishes to properly take care of his car, and for the repairman who is anxious to broaden his own experience." (Introd.) The four parts of the book are devoted to: Automobile driving; Troubles and repairs; Welding in automobile repair shops; Private garages and repairs. The work is fully illustrated and is indexed.

N Y Br Lib News 3:190 D '16

HALLET, RICHARD MATTHEWS. Trial by fire. il *$1.25 (3c) Small 16-14052

"A long-drawn-out dachshund of the lakes" was the "Yuly Yinks," a boat on which the forepart scarcely knew the hindpart by sight, so widely were they separated by actual distance and social distinction. Circumstances bring young Alexander Grant to ship as a deckhand forward at the same time that his father and a party of friends, one of them Avis Wrenn, are passengers at the other end. But Alexander, sweating down in the hold, does not know the true inwardness of all these circumstances. Only Cagey the fireman knows. Something of a Caliban is this Cagey, capable of ruminating half intelligently on life as he has seen it, and capable too of rising to a certain height of self-sacrifice.

+ A L A Bkl 13:84 N '16

+ Bookm 43:619 Ag '16 200w

"In Mr. Hallet's first novel we were moderately interested. In this, his second book, we are frankly disappointed. We feel that this particular writer has completely subordinated his plot, fine character drawing and sense of literary proportion to an inordinate desire to bury his characters in soul-stirring descriptions. Apart from their vagueness, these descriptions are not beautiful. They are brutal; they are extravagant, and they are inartistic."

— Boston Transcript p6 Je 10 '16 400w

+ Nation 103:133 Ag 10 '16 570w

+ New Repub 9:158 D 9 '16 760w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 J1 '16

+ N Y Times 21:275 J1 9 '16 330w

"No summary of the story would convey its vivid realism. The language is stripped to the bone of every superfluous phrase, allusion and description. Dramatic scenes are dashed on the canvas with a minimum of colorful words. Cagey is a creation; and Avis Wrenn the heroine is charming. The book is of outstanding merit."

+ Springfield Republican p13 J1 2 '16 330w

"A gripping story of the life of the stokers on lake freight-boats, picturing their brute strength and elemental passions. The melodramatic plot is subordinate and is neither pleasant nor convincing."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:272 Je '16 30w

HALSEY, FREDERIC MAGIE. Railway expansion in Latin America. il $1.50 Moody magazine & bk. co. 385 16-11173

"Mr. Halsey has prepared the first connected account of the origin and development of South and Central American railroad systems. Besides the thrilling story of the mastering of tremendous engineering difficulties, this little book supplies useful and fresh information regarding the investments in Latin-American railroads of European capital. There are numerous illustrations in half-tone, and four insert maps."—R of Rs

"It is technical in nature and should prove of great value to the student of business and trade expansion."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 12 '16 70w

N Y Br Lib News 3:124 Ag '16

+ R of Rs 54:120 J1 '16 70w

HAMBLIN, STEPHEN FRANCIS. Book of garden plans. il *$2 Doubleday 710 16-20305

"The plans presented in the following pages are offered merely as suggestions showing how some of the principles of modern gardening may be applied to everyday problems." (Introd.) The author has chosen concrete problems, a farm home of five acres, a village home of five acres, a small suburban lot, a small informal garden, etc., and has illustrated them with blue print plans and pictures from photographs. A planting list also accompanies each plan.

"Describes conditions in New England and would be suggestive for those planning small city parks."

+ A L A Bkl 13:158 Ja '17
Cleveland p154 D '16 50w

"A practical, comprehensive, and thorough manual for the house-and-home builder who would 'visualize his garden,'"

+ Lit D 53:1547 D 9 '16 140w

+ N Y Times 21:547 D 10 '16 30w

St Louis 14:435 D '16

+ Springfield Republican p15 O 15 '16 250w

HAMEL, FRANK. Human animals. *$2.40 (2½c) Stokes 393 16-22830

The author says, "From the abundant records and traditions dealing with the curious belief that certain men and women can transform themselves into animals I have collected a number of instances and examples which throw fresh light on the subject both from the point of view of folk-lore and occultism." Among the subjects taken up in the chapters are: The bush-soul; Human souls in animal bodies; Animal dances; Man-animal and animal-man; Scapegoat and saint; The wer-wolf trials; The wer-wolf in myth and legend.

"The volume, besides the natural interest attaching to it for the sake of its subject, is delightful reading, full of anecdote and legend and the poetry which underlies all primitive and natural conceptions." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 1 '16 1150w

"To the lover of the marvelous these strange beliefs will have a strong appeal. The monsters of mythology (and even those of fiction, such as Gulliver's yahoos) have been given consideration and their various significances explained."

+ N Y Times 21:488 N 12 '16 140w

HAMILTON, ALLAN MCLANE. Recollections of an alienist. il *$3.50 (2c) Doran 17-417

The Thaw case and other sensational trials in which Dr. Hamilton has held an important place as a witness are left to the second part of this work. The first and larger part of the book is devoted to personal interests, beginning with childhood, recollections of the civil war period, impressions of Lincoln, etc., and ending with a chapter on London in war time. Part 2, devoted to professional interests, has chapters on Strange cases, Judges, experts and juries, A visit to Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, Simulation and imposture, Political murders.

A L A Bkl 13:219 F '17

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 9 '16 1350w

+ Lit D 53:1548 D 9 '16 130w

+ N Y Times 22:11 Ja 14 '17 1450w

"Gossipy, anecdotal, entertaining; but throws little or no light on the subject of mental diseases. It would have been greatly improved by a thorough excision of minor details that are neither important nor interesting."

+ Outlook 115:208 Ja 31 '17 30w

"There is not a dull page in the book—not one that fails to reflect in a distinctive way the author's individual mentality."

+ R of Rs 55:99 Ja '17 160w

"He is a humanist as well as an alienist. . . . He has produced an entertaining and often charming book of wide public interest, and especially valuable for its preservation of ennobling associations no longer possible for the growing person in the literary or public life of our country."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 7 '17 1400w

HAMILTON, COSMO. Sins of the children. il
*$1.40 (1c) Little 16-21052

The responsibility of parents who do not instruct their children in matters of sex is the theme of this book. Peter Guthrie, whose stern, silent father has never made a companion of his children, goes to Oxford as a Rhodes scholar. Peter in his innocence misjudges the character of Nicholas Kenyon, the degenerate heir to a title, whom he makes his friend. He invites Nicholas to his home in New York where that ingenious villain proceeds to corrupt Peter's younger brother and only fails in his attempt to seduce his sister. He succeeds too in involving Peter in a compromising situation and drives him to the point of suicide. Saved from this, Peter turns on his father with an accusation of criminal neglect, and the story closes with a reunited family and a father begging his children's forgiveness.

"To judge such a novel by the usual standards would be unfair. . . . He believes—and we agree with him—that melodrama has a wider popular appeal than tragedy, that the method of Hamilton is more effective than the method of Brieux. . . . If Mr. Hamilton had not been obsessed with the thesis which he had set out to prove he would have recognized that his story was really a study of the subtle influences on character of suddenly acquired wealth and would have told it somewhat differently."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 O 18 '16 770w

"If great scientists, Rhodes scholars, and their kin use such English as Cosmo Hamilton finds necessary to tell the unpleasant story of 'The sins of the children' we have something to reform in our schools as well as in our fathers."

— Ind 88:165 O 23 '16 40w

"There is something strained and hectic about the whole performance; and however sincere its purpose, it is impossible not to feel that it is the product of a species of sex-obsession, and therefore a product far from wholesome."

— Nation 103:565 D 14 '16 380w

"A book which many parents would do well to read."

+ — N Y Times 22:5 Ja 7 '17 610w

Reviewed by E. P. Wyckoff

+ — Pub W 90:1407 O 21 '16 380w

Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 260w

HAMILTON, DOUGLAS THOMAS. Cartridge manufacture. il $1.50 Industrial press 623.4 16-2416

"A treatise covering the manufacture of rifle cartridge cases, bullets, powders, primers and cartridge clips, and the designing and making of the tools used in connection with the production of cartridge cases and bullets, together with a description of the principal operations in the manufacture of combination paper and brass shot shells."—Sub-title

N Y Br Lib News 3:93 Je '16 50w

"Not only of interest to cartridge makers, but to those who desire to know of approved methods for the drawing of deep metal shells for any purpose. Gives principal dimensions, weights and other details of the cartridges used by the various nations. Well illustrated."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p13 My '16 43w

"Compilation dealing with practical manufacture. Description of sheet-metal drawing practice will be of value in other industries."

+ Pittsburgh 21:290 Je '16 17w

St Louis 14:230 Je '16

HAMILTON, DOUGLAS THOMAS. High-explosive shell manufacture. il $2 Industrial press 623.4
16-5981

A companion volume to "Shrapnel manufacture" by the same author, reprinted in part from the periodical, Machinery. It is described by its sub-title as "a comprehensive treatise on the forging, machining and heat-treatment of high-explosive shells and the manufacture of cartridge cases, primers, and fuses, giving complete directions for tool equipment and methods of setting up machines, together with a review of the making of powders, high explosives, and fulminates."

Cleveland p113 Ag '16 20w

N Y Br Lib News 3:103 Jl '16 20w

"Gives directions for machining British, Russian, Serbian and French shells. Has interesting data on the cost of munitions."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p13 My '16 40w

Pittsburgh 21:350 Jl '16

St Louis 14:433 D '16 20w

HAMILTON, LORD ERNEST WILLIAM. First seven divisions. maps *$1.50 (2c) Dutton
940.91 16-11741

Captain Hamilton of the 11th Hussars has written a detailed account of the part played by the first British expeditionary force. It covers the fighting from Mons to Ypres, from August 22, to November 17, 1914. The four maps make it possible to follow the movements of the different divisions thruout the campaign.

"Unlike most 'war books,' this is a soldier's technical narrative and has a decided importance from a military viewpoint as an unofficial but authoritative account of that long series of actions carried on in a retreat."

+ Army and Navy Journal 53:1513 Jl 22 '16 70w

+ Cath World 103:694 Ag '16 130w

+ Cleveland p137 N '16 50w

"He nowhere abuses a courageous enemy, and goes further by acquitting the Germans in two instances of treachery. For students of this part of the great war, this book is invaluable."

+ Ind 87:421 S 18 '16 120w

+ Lit D 53:1182 N 4 '16 380w

+ Nation 103:402 O 26 '16 220w

"Only the unimaginative will find it unimaginative writing." Harold Stearns

+ New Repub 9:sup24 N 18 '16 140w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 Jl '16

"The narrative is full of heroic incident. There is a refinement of language in the descriptions of the gruesome spectacles that is unusual in these days of bloody emphasis over war narration. There is no bombast—just a plain, unvarnished tale of happenings."

+ N Y Times 21:241 Je 11 '16 580w

"His book is valuable not only as an authoritative account of the fortunes of the allied armies at the most critical period in the war, but also as a professional study in modern strategy and tactics."

+ R of Rs 54:116 Jl '16 90w

"Full of amazing short stories of physical and mental endurance, stories in which individual acts of heroism have to be picked out as representative rather than exceptional. This book should be possessed and read by all. It gives in succinct and clear form the materials of a fighting epic."

+ Sat R 121:421 Ap 29 '16 1350w

"Lord Ernest Hamilton's book has a particular value which belongs to no other yet published about the early fighting in the war. He has not only described the immortal work done by the first seven divisions of the British expeditionary force—that had been done already—but has given us the names of the battalions engaged in each enterprise, and not merely the names of battalions, but in detail the names of companies, platoons, individual officers, N. C. O.'s, and privates. His story, therefore, has reality which has been necessarily absent from other narratives of this period."

+ Spec 116:467 Ap 8 '16 1850w

Springfield Republican p6 Jl 27 '16 120w

"In an admirable way it combines brevity with perspective and narrative vigour, and the attention paid to individual exploits and brilliant minor engagements never confuses the main thread of the story. On the whole, the book is well supplied with maps."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p136 Mr 23 '16 650w

HAMILTON, MARY AGNES. Dead yesterday.
*$1.50 (1c) Doran 16-14599

There are those who say that war elevates and ennobs; others who believe that it only intensifies. The author of this earnest and thoughtful novel comes nearer to agreeing with the latter opinion, for of her characters those who were bored with life in time of peace, find themselves equally wearied in war time. Welcoming the war at first as an opportunity for a new sensation, they come in time to find it dull. "After all, one does get sick of soldiers," says Myrtle Toller. Many types are presented in the book, Nigel Strode, a superficial, charming-mannered journalist, capable only of measuring values in the terms of his own shallow sensations; Mrs. Leonard, a pacifist, who feels the war's tragedy passionately; Daphne, her daughter, who feels it dumbly; Hugh Infield, who, hating war, goes out to France to do what he can in the ambulance service, Lionel Delahaye, who hates it and volunteers hoping to help end it, and Herbert Toller, the soldier, who treats it as a matter of business and refuses to sentimentalize over it.

"It is not destined to be a popular book. Many a reader of 'best-sellers' would toss it aside as drab and disappointing. But by its insight, its honesty and its able workmanship it will amply reward the discriminating reader." F. I.

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 4 '18 1300w

"The cause of pacifism, damaged as it has been by zealots who base their pleas upon an undignified, irrational sentimentality, or the yet more ignoble ground of utilitarianism, is now presented in a manner that commands respect."

+ Cath World 104:543 Ja '17 660w

"A book for the serious reader, and one well worth his undertaking."

+ Dial 61:469 N 30 '16 230w

+ Ind 88:165 O 23 '16 40w

+ N Y Times 21:386 O 1 '16 950w

"It is the rare distinction of 'Dead yesterday' that while its author clearly delimits her theme, the characters work out their own destiny as individuals. . . . The material is mastered, and the novel is a work of literature as well as the exemplification of a theme."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 8 '16 1250w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p226 My 11 '16 120w

"The first thing to be said about this book (lest it be forgotten, and not said at all) is that it is a fine novel. . . . It will not, however, be discussed in the world as a work of art, but as a document on London life and opinions before and after August 4, 1914. . . . With fine judgment she strikes the note of boredom first and firmly. The social historian may trust absolutely her picture of that set. Where he must check Mrs. Hamilton's observation is in a few passages, and particularly one in chapter 26, which seem to imply that all London, all England, were sick of the same disease. . . . To one class she falls short of justice (unless Hugh Infield is intended to stand for it) the people who honestly and profoundly hate war but regard armed resistance to Germany as, in the present instance, inevitable and righteous."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p236 My 18 '16 580w

HAMLIN, ALFRED DWIGHT FOSTER.
2 History of ornament; ancient and medieval.
il *$3 (5c) Century 740.9 16-23391

Among the many books on ornament there is none, the author says, giving in English a systematic history. He says, "I have for years felt the need of some such text-book for students in my own courses in Columbia university in the history of ornament." To meet this need he has prepared this volume, which covers ancient and medieval styles of architecture and which is to be followed by a second volume devoted to renaissance, modern and oriental styles. The illustrations, of which there are 401, consist of drawings inserted in the text and reproductions from photographs. Lists of Books recommended are appended to the chapters.

"Concise, orderly, comprehensive, and beautifully illustrated."

+ Dial 62:30 Ja 11 '17 300w

"While learned, and for the technical student, it is immensely interesting to anyone interested in art."

+ Ind 88:414 D 4 '16 130w

+ N Y Times 21:572 D 24 '16 150w

+ Pittsburgh 21:569 D '16 40w

HAMLIN, TALBOT FAULKNER. Enjoyment of 2 architecture. il *$2 (3c) Duffield 720 16-25111

"Architecture is of all the arts the one most continually before our eyes," says the author. To hear music, to see pictures, or to enjoy literature, we must step aside from our usual routine, but we live in houses, work in office buildings and factories, all of which may be works of architecture. The book is addressed to the layman and not the least of its value lies in the attention it gives to the architectural achievements of America. For comment and pictorial illustration the author chooses not only the Parthenon and the Gothic cathedrals, but also the Pennsylvania station in New York city and the Missouri state capitol. Contents: The appeal of architecture; Laws of form in architecture; The architect's materials (two chapters); The decorative material of architecture; The criticism of ornament; Planning; The meaning of style; The social value of architecture.

"There is truth and soundness in all his judgments. . . . Those who are searching for information or for help in the desire to improve our modern building, will find both instruction and genuine inspiration in his book." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 10 '17 630w

"His book is full of the fine enthusiasm of youth without the rawness of youth. . . . But the great defect of Mr. Hamlin's attitude to American architecture is his incorrigible optimism. . . . Of the vast incongruity, the illogicality of nine-tenths of what we essay, he is himself unconscious, or his optimism covers it up for fear that it might act as a deterrent to 'enjoyment.' . . . His book is so tremendously good that one cannot help wishing it were tremendously better." Claude Bragdon

+ Dial 62:17 Ja 11 '17 1200w

+ Outlook 115:114 Ja 17 '17 100w

+ R of Rs 55:219 F '17 60w

"The fault of the book is a tendency to esthetic abstraction, as in the discussion of the relation between music and architecture, but in the main Mr. Hamlin's instruction is agreeably elementary. His style is uneven, but his judgment is generally sound."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 31 '16 630w

HAMMOND, H. W., and HERZBERG, MAX J.
Style-book of business English. 7th ed il
85c Pitman 652

The object in revising this standard work has been to adapt it more closely to present conditions. "It has been the design of the authors to fit it particularly for use in the commercial courses of high schools. But, as in the past, it will be found well suited for use in business colleges, in the business courses of colleges and universities, and in the general and academic courses of high schools." (Preface)

HAMMOND, JOHN MARTIN. Winter journeys in the South; pen and camera impressions of men, manners, women, and things all the way from the blue Gulf and New Orleans through fashionable Florida palms to the pines of Virginia. il *$3.50 (10c) Lippincott 917.5 16-23067

"The material in the following pages has been collected through many years of acquaintance with the South, and through a special series of visits undertaken last winter with this work in mind. I have tried to give the things one notices and talks about to his friends. The book is not, primarily, a guide-book, or a hotel directory, but it contains such information of this character as I have found of value to myself." (Preface) Palm Beach, Miami, St. Augustine, Ormond, New Orleans, Augusta, Aiken, Pinehurst, Asheville, and other southern resorts are described, with beautiful pictures from the author's camera to enhance their attractions.

+ A L A Bkl 13:168 Ja '17

"There are some inaccuracies to be noted, among them the definition of a Creole."

+ — Dial 61:474 N 30 '16 180w

+ Lit D 53:1548 D 9 '16 150w

Reviewed by M. K. Reely

+ Pub W 90:1418 O 21 '16 230w

"The author has imbibed something of the spirit of the places treated and has made a strong appeal on grounds higher than mere pleasure, ease or luxury."

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 28 '16 380w

HAMMOND, MRS. LILY (HARDY). In the garden of delight. *$1 (2c) Crowell 16-17728

The woman who tells the story is an invalid, chained close to a couch and a wheeled chair. But circumscribed as her world is, it is full of interest. All of outdoor life, the changing seasons in her garden, the mating and passing of the birds, the human affairs that go on about her, especially those that concern the two children to whom she is foster mother, are matters for her pen to record. Such plot as the little story has is woven about the love of these two, David and Caro.

A L A Bkl 13:221 F '17

"It is subtly filled with the spiritual side of nature, which in the present day has found expression too seldom in fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 21 '16 630w

"The legend upon the wrapper of 'In the garden of delight' challenges comparison with James Lane Allen's 'Kentucky cardinal,'—a just but daring proceeding. For the little book, though full of quiet charm, just misses the elfin poetry and enchanting style of its prototype."

+ Dial 61:589 D 28 '16 160w

HAMON, AUGUSTIN FRÉDÉRIC. Twentieth century Molière: Bernard Shaw; tr. from the French by Eden and Cedar Paul. *$2.50 (3c) Stokes 822 (Eng ed 15-19386)

A French appreciation of Bernard Shaw. It was M. Hamon who made the first translation of Shaw's plays into French and who further introduced him to French audiences thru a series of lectures at the Sorbonne in 1908-9. He was chosen by Shaw himself as the translator of the plays because of his sympathetic attitude on social questions. The chapters of the work deal with: The man; Analysis of Bernard Shaw's dramatic method [two chapters]; Shaw and the dramatic critics; Parallelism between the drama of Shaw, the Græco-Roman drama, the medieval drama, the drama of Molière, and the drama of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries; General considerations on dramatic art exemplified with reference to the work of Bernard Shaw.

"Needed only in libraries serving special students of Shaw, where it will have interest as presenting a French point of view."

+ A L A Bkl 12:418 Je '16

"M. Hamon understands to a remarkable degree the art and philosophy of the dramatist, and discerns the purpose that lurks beneath his wit."

+ Ath 1915,1:524 Je 12 790w

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 12 '16 830w

"He sums up his observations and opinions in a remarkable 'synoptic table,' in which the resemblances between the dramatic works of Shaw and Molière are listed and numbered, with appropriate comments. . . . One regrettable tendency of M. Hamon is to make sweeping statements, without bothering to attempt to justify them. This bad habit he perhaps acquired from the subject of his critique. . . . It is good to find a critical work written so conscientiously and ingeniously as this, although the reader may regret that so much time and thought have been devoted to a subject which, after all, is not one of the greatest importance."

+ — N Y Times 21:189 My 7 '16 630w

R of Rs 53:629 My '16 80w

HAMPDEN, MARY. Every woman's flower garden. il *$1.50 Duffield 716 15-25553

"The helpful purpose of this book is to tell women how they may make and keep their gardens beautiful. It has not been written for those whose gardening ambitions involve the services of a small army of hired labourers. . . . The first necessary preliminary to success, says the author, is to love the hobby. Then, the necessary piece of land being available, the purchase of a four-pronged fork for three shillings. Sets of tools for ladies' are to be avoided. All the advice given is of an admirably practical nature. Lists of flowers for various purposes are included, the coloured illustrations are decidedly attractive, and the designs for beds, rosaries, etc. should prove useful."—Sat R

"A readable book, filled with practical, elementary advice, by an Englishwoman who writes from her own experience and with encouraging enthusiasm. Adapted to milder conditions here."

+ A L A Bkl 12:223 F '16

St Louis 14:155 Ap '16

+ Sat R 119:560 My 29 '15 130w

HANDCOCK, PERCY STUART PEACHE. Archaeology of the Holy Land. il *$3 Macmillan 913.33 (Eng ed 16-22738)

"This book gathers up the results of the excavations in Palestine in the sphere of archaeology. It is based upon the reports of the excavators at Gezer, Taanach, Jericho, Megiddo, Samaria, Bethshemesh, Lachish, Tell-ej-judeideh, Tell-es-Safi, Tell-andahannah, and Tell-Zakariya. It brings together within easy access of the student the data from these various sites bearing upon such topics as caves and rock-cuttings, architecture, pottery, terra cotta, burial-customs, and worship."—Bib World

"The author concerns himself little with the mere record of excavations but deals rather with questions of interpretations and with the reconstruction of ancient civilization in Palestine from the earliest recorded times."

Am Hist R 21:873 Jl '16 60w

+ Ath p483 O '16 60w

"Profusely and richly illustrated. It furnishes a wealth of material for the student of archaeology. But the casual reader will come across much of interest. The volume is one that belongs in every biblical library and will commend itself to scholars by its caution and sanity."

+ Bib World 47:343 My '16 250w

"He shows a somewhat close familiarity with the scriptures, the more especially with the Old Testament and in this light he interprets to us many of the discoveries which would otherwise undoubtedly remain mysteries." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 8 '16 650w

"It is evident that the author himself has formed no clear conception of the successive periods of civilized progress or of the advance of human culture in Palestine. . . . As a catalogue of available materials, Mr. Handcock's book will prove useful for reference, until the schooled and many-sided archaeologist required for such a task shall give us a picture of the advancing composite civilization of Palestine from the earliest times to the Roman empire."

— + Nation 103:136 Ag 10 '16 520w

Pratt p36 Ja '17

St Louis 14:197 My '16

"Mr. Handcock gives his information in close detail, without embellishment; but its lucidity

HANDCOCK, P. S. P.—Continued and the form in which it is printed adapt it for the average reader of intelligence no less than for the specialist."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p478 O 5
'16 150w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p500 O 19
'16 550w

HANNAH, IAN CAMPBELL. Arms and the map; a study of nationalities and frontiers.
*$1.25 (3c) Shaw, G. Arnold 911.4

(Eng ed 16-26415)

The author, formerly president of King's college, Nova Scotia, says in his preface: "My object in writing this little work is not to make any prophecies, still less to air any uninformed opinions of my own, but rather to give in a broad and general way the more obvious facts which it is right to know when considering the possible form of the new map. While avoiding intricate detail, I have tried to indicate all the important cases in Europe where the bulk of the population of a district is of another race than that of the rulers of the land." The treatment is not limited to the countries at war; there are chapters on: The German empire; France; The Low Countries; The British Isles; The Russian empire; The Balkan states; The Austrian empire; Italy; Turkey; Greece; Scandinavia; Switzerland; The Hispanian peninsula; The expansion of Europe.

A L A Bkl 12:421 Je '16

"Shows the new interest in the question, 'What is a nation?' . . . Freeman's words suggest the attitude of the great historians up to the last few years, and so distinguish it from that of the students of nationality of the present generation. Mr. Hannah's book is, on the whole, fair, and may be a useful guide to the complicated nationalist aspirations now stirred up by the war to an unprecedented pitch."

+ Ath 1915,2:228 O 2 190w

"A handy reference volume."

+ — Ind 87:102 Jl 17 '16 200w

"An elementary but accurate study of the geographical growth and present boundaries of the chief nations of Europe. The author has nothing new to say. He simply sets forth the more obvious territorial tangles which ought to be straightened out when the present war is settled."

+ Nation 102:141 F 3 '16 120w

+ N Y Times 21:132 Ap 9 '16 300w

+ Pittsburgh 21:124 Mr '16 80w

"An admirably simple, though learned, study in nationalities and frontiers." Dr. Hannah's style is bright and lucid, nor are his chapters overloaded with irrelevant detail. He wisely discriminates between the cases in which the present rulers are of one blood with their peoples, and those in which they have imposed themselves—by the conquest or diplomacy—upon an alien race. In his final chapter on 'The expansion of Europe' Dr. Hannah etches an incisive outline of German methods of colonization and their result. A well-drawn, though small, ethnological map completes a useful and interesting piece of work."

+ Spec 115:sup689 N 20 '15 480w

+ Springfield Republican p6 Jl 10 '16 280w

HANNAH, IAN CAMPBELL. Quaker-born; a romance of the great war. il *$1.35 (2c)
Shaw, G. Arnold 16-20553

The position of the Quakers, who are among the "conscientious objectors" in England, is made the subject of this story. Edward Alexander, a very normal young man, Quaker-born, is a student at Cambridge when the war breaks out. His friends enlist and the temptation to do likewise is a strain on his deeply ingrained principles. He is on the east coast when the first bombardments occur, and his horror drives him to the point of enlistment. But he is recalled to the north of England to his mother's deathbed and his Quaker faith again triumphs. When he goes out with an ambulance unit, many of his friends, among them Katharine Majendie, are scornful, believing he has chosen a coward's part. But the report of his death brings a change in their attitude. The report proves false and he returns to marry Katharine.

"The tale is told with a rollicking good-humor that reminds one of Jerome K. Jerome, Ian Hay, and other British jesters."

+ Dial 61:539 D 14 '16 170w

+ Springfield Republican p13 D 24 '16 90w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM, pseud.). Gossamer. *$1.25
(1½c) Doran 15-22542

As one of the characters in this story says, the financiers of the world "have spun fine threads, covering every civilized land with a web of credit, infinitely complex, so delicate that a child's hand could tear it." It is with these threads of gossamer as they were related to and affected by the events in Ireland early in 1914 and the larger events on the continent later in that year, that the story deals. It is a novel of ideas rather than of action, and it reflects the points of view of the four persons who are its chief characters, Gorman, an Irish nationalist, Ascher, a German-English banker, Mrs. Ascher, an American woman superficially devoted to the arts, and Sir James Digby, a deposed Irish landlord, who tells the tale.

+ A L A Bkl 12:339 Ap '16

"The author's humor is not so kindly in 'Gossamer' as elsewhere; he is ironical at the expense of both schools of Irish politicians, and of the English as well. Mrs. Ascher, the wife of the financier, is less sketchily constructed than the majority of the author's feminine characters, though the other characters in the book are by no means up to the author's usual mark."

— Ath 1915,2:243 O 9 170w

Reviewed by Wilson Follett

+ Atlan 118:495 O 16 380w

"Under its brilliant surface a big idea floats, a big emotion flows. It is the sort of interpretation we look for and so rarely find in a literature of crisis. . . . Ascher, the man of great affairs, is also the man of simple heart. His author, in creating and interpreting him, does a new thing, a very striking thing. . . . It is a fine conception, finely and consistently wrought out: the conception of a soldier sworn to battle not for his country but for the world." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 43:313 My '16 870w

"Heavier in substance than Mr. Birmingham's other novel, it is no less light in treatment and manner. It is especially shrewd in its revelation of human weaknesses, and keen in its demonstration of the combined altruism and egotism that exist in every man." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p7 F 19 '16 1250w

"The book is well written, although its humor at times is a bit forced, and its portraits a bit over-drawn."

+ — Cath World 103:558 Jl '16 120w

+ Cleveland p33 Ap '16 110w

"The book of a man who has thought and felt deeply on many matters besides high finance—perhaps even beyond it—and who has devised a singularly perfect way to suggest to us his thinking and his feeling." E. E. Hale

+ Dial 60:337 Mr 30 '16 580w

"Ascher is one of the most original and appealing figures in recent fiction."

+ Nation 103:63 Jl 20 '16 600w

"A novel of three hundred pages that has not the faintest semblance of a plot, that is entirely without incident—as that word is used in connection with the usual novel—that is equally lacking in love interest, that has no dramatic situations, that makes no attempt at any time to keep the reader's interest in suspense. And yet it does hold the interest from the moment of beginning until the last word is reached. . . . The book is worth reading once for the sake of Ascher alone, and a second time to get the full flavor of Sir James Digby and Michael Gorman."

+ N Y Times 21:49 F 13 '16 1350w

HAPGOOD, ISABEL FLORENCE, tr. Epic songs of Russia. *$1.50 Scribner 891.7 A16-539

"A reprint with slight corrections and alterations, of the translation published thirty years ago, one dollar cheaper. A new introductory note is written by J. W. Mackail. The stories are prefaced with a discussion by the author on the survival and collection of the epic songs, and have interest because of their historical literary value and also because of their poetic imagination."—A L A Bkl

+ A L A Bkl 12:393 My '16

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '16 570w

"The only collection in English of the Russian 'byliny'. . . . The method throughout is dil-ettante, not critical; no exact indications are given of the sources of the texts, and the introduction and appendix will by no means satisfy serious students of folk-lore."

+ — Nation 103:615 D 28 '16 100w

+ R of Rs 53:631 My '16 250w

"The songs are of extraordinary interest, not only for their literary charm, but as leading to 'a better and larger understanding, both of Russia and of those middle ages out of which, in Russia as elsewhere, the modern world was born.' The historical basis on which these songs are founded is considerable. Comparison with the ancient chronicles shows that the heroes are thoroughly Russian, and that the pictures of manners and customs which they present are valuable for their accuracy. Perhaps the most curious feature in the collection is the place occupied in these legends by women."

+ Spec 116:259 F 19 '16 1700w

HARBEN, WILLIAM NATHANIEL (WILL N., pseud.). Second choice. il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 16-17494

Wynn Dunham, the young farmer who is the hero of this Georgia novel, works against odds. Edna Wrenn, the girl whom he hopes to make his wife, is poor like himself, but the family pride and social ambitions of her mother put her out of his reach. Edna, altho she is fond of him, listens to her mother and accepts a more promising suitor, and Wynn in discouragement goes West. In Montana he makes money in real estate and comes back in five years' time to find that his true friend, Cora, Edna's younger sister, embodies all the ideal qualities he had once seemed to see in Edna.

Reviewed by P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 44:272 N '16 480w

"A homespun story of genuine people."

+ Ind 88:76 O 9 '16 50w

"Sure of a welcome from Harben devotees. It is not easy to understand the excessive popularity of this writer. Even his deepest-dyed villain is not convincing."

— Lit D 53:1338 N 18 '16 290w

"'Second choice' reads like a book written by a formula."

— + N Y Times 21:536 D 3 '16 450w

"The tale compares favorably with Mr. Harben's best stories."

+ Springfield Republican p13 S 24 '16 300w

HARCOURT, CYRIL. Pair of silk stockings. il *$1.25 (2c) Dodd 16-2565

Throughout the reading of this story the reader will visualize its action as taking place on a stage. It follows closely the three acts of the play, even to the division into three parts. The close proximity of a divorced couple, who have not by any means fallen out of love with one another, in a country house is the theme around which the play was built. In attempting to gain an interview with his wife the husband is taken for a burglar. The stockings in the case are used later in his identification and help bring about the happy "making-up."

"An entertaining story, and well worth reading."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 12 '16 210w

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

"Mr. Harcourt has made a novel out of his jolly comedy of the same title which not long ago enjoyed a considerable success in New York. He has supplied an ample background for the action by explaining and describing, in a genially humorous style that catches the spirit of the comedy, all the chief characters and their relations with one another."

+ N Y Times 21:114 Mr 26 '16 90w

HARDING, GARDNER LUDWIG. Present-day China; a narrative of a nation's advance. il *$1 (3c) Century 951 16-11738

"An impression of people and things rather than a history of events and causes" is the way the author characterizes this book. "I have attempted to interpret the quality of mind which produced the Chinese revolution," he says. He does not believe that the revolution has failed. It was only part of a movement that will go on. Contents: What the republic has meant to China; The woman's part; Social reform; Radicalism and the radicals; Leadership and Yuan Shih-K'ai; Clutching hands; The future. The final chapter emphasizes the importance of China's railway situation as a factor in the future peace of the world.

+ A L A Bkl 13:24 O '16

"Harding has had unusual opportunities to know this new China of which he writes. He was probably the only white man who enjoyed the complete confidence of Dr. Sun Yat Sen and his party in the recent revolution." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '16 890w

"The book is of much greater value than its small compass would seem to indicate."

+ Dial 61:316 O 19 '16 300w

+ Ind 87:461 S 25 '16 220w

N Y Br Lib News 3:91 Je '16

"To the reader unfamiliar with the history of China, Mr. Harding's book, lacking in historic background, will be somewhat unsatisfactory. As a word picture of the China of today, however, it is most interesting."

+ — N Y Times 21:228 My 28 '16 350w

"Readable as narrative, entertaining in its incidental pictures of life and in the glimpses it gives of notable persons, it puts vitality into one's conception of China, and it clearly embodies a definite and ethical idea of world-policy."

+ No Am 204:150 Jl '16 420w

"Mr. Harding traveled in China after the collapse of the revolution in order to find out just what the republic had really accomplished there. Cotton factories, coal mines, railroads, schools, prisons, the leading figures of political China came under his observation. Peking's model prison he finds exceedingly creditable to the social reform spirit of the Chinese."

+ R of Rs 54:106 Jl '16 970w

Springfield Republican p6 Jl 28 '16 200w

"His analysis is very clear, his appraisal of Japanese policies conservative, his opinions based on first-hand investigation. Its chief fault lies in its brevity. It deals simply with certain particular developments, thus not entirely living up to its title."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:321 Jl '16 80w

+ Woman's Journal and Suffrage News 47:390 D 2 '16 180w

HARDY, ARTHUR SHERBURNE. Helen. il *$1.35 (2c) Houghton 16-22403

Two orphans, the son and daughter of an American who married into a titled French family, the American grandmother who had brought up the children, the French grandmother, a princess, a French youth and the American executor of the legacy for the orphans, are the principal characters in this pleasant story. The interest centers in the reaction of the elder orphan, Helen of the title, to her wealth, but more especially to the world of human beings that had been denied to her in the cloistral atmosphere of her grandmother's home.

+ A L A Bkl 13:175 Ja '17

HARDY, ARTHUR SHERBURNE—Continued

"A very charming novel of the day-before-yesterday in Europe."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 2 '16 160w

"Mr. Hardy is a writer who knows his setting with a rare completeness; he is rare in one other respect—that he is not unwilling to spend time and care on his work. But his people are not quite flesh and blood; they are seen but dimly, like figures behind ground glass."

+ — Dial 61:588 D 28 '16 240w

+ Lit D 54:82 Ja 13 '17 150w

"Mr. Hardy is the American Halévy, but this time he sacrifices sharpness of vision to experiments in psychological situation."

Nation 103:488 N 23 '16 270w

"Nice, clean, wholesome novel."

+ N Y Times 22:13 Ja 14 '17 300w

HARDY, THOMAS. Selected poems. (Golden treasury ser.) *$1 Macmillan 821

"This selection is divided into three parts: poems chiefly lyrical, poems narrative and reflective, and war poems and lyrics from 'The dynasts.' Except for a few narrative pieces, there is little to distinguish the second part from the first. Indeed, the subject is everywhere, even in 'The dynasts,' the same. It is man face to face with the destinies, our little moment of life rounded by two eternities of silence, and going on its way with the three questions in its heart—Whence? Whither? Why?"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"We find him here a master of the lyric, although so great in his passion for studying human problems that the lyrics in this collection are few and far between." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '16 1500w

"The minority of readers who value verse, and recognise that, since the passing of Browning, Tennyson, and Swinburne, the authentic note of the great poet, of creative genius, would have been absent from our literature but for Hardy, may well add this book, even to a jealous and exclusive shelf where dwell the muses."

+ Sat R 122:394 O 21 '16 750w

"His habitual life is lived with the individual soul facing the destinies alone."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p553 N 23 '16 2850w

HARGER, WILSON GARDNER, and BONNEY, EDMUND ARNOLD. Handbook for highway engineers, containing information ordinarily used in the design and construction of roads warranting an expenditure of $5,000 to $30,000 per mile. il *$3 McGraw 625.7

16-15561

"The second edition of Harger and Bonney's 'Highway engineers' handbook' contains about 100 pages of new material, and represents a revision of the first edition, published about four years ago. . . . The book is divided into two parts, the first dealing with the principles of design and the second with the practice of design and construction."—Engin Rec

+ A L A Bkl 13:188 Ja '17

"The character of the book has not been changed, and the criticism of Mr. Dean—that the data cited were largely local—still holds. But perhaps this is in a large measure unavoidable. The tables and data are of unquestioned value, but the expediency of combining these with general information and expert opinions based on local experience may well be questioned. It is quite impossible to keep such opinions up to date."

+ — Engin N 76:745 O 19 '16 150w

"Since the publication of the first edition of the handbook many advances have been made in highway practice. The latest edition, therefore, brings the information up to date. Engineers will find this volume a compact and complete source of information ordinarily required in field and office practice of road-building."

+ Engin Rec 74:300 S 2 '16 210w

St Louis 14:395 N '16

HARPER, GEORGE MCLEAN. William Wordsworth; his life, works and influence. 2v il *$6.50 Scribner 16-6137

"It is seven years since Professor George McLean Harper of Princeton published his 'Life of Sainte-Beuve,' in which he showed himself master of a method of critical biography, resembling, but by no means imitating, that of the distinguished Frenchman. The substantial aim of that method is to trace the events and the associations of a writer's life 'pari passu' with his work. Professor Harper has now produced, after many years of close study, a 'Life of Wordsworth.' It is an elaborate work in two volumes, nearly 900 pages in all. He has developed his method and applied it with almost unimaginable patience in detail, and at the same time with so firm a grasp upon his whole complex subject that the true perspective is at no time lost. . . . He has held close to the chronological order, adopting the too-often neglected device of placing on each alternate page the year to which its contents relate. He has used very freely the available correspondence of the Wordsworth family and their friends, and especially the precious diary and letters of the poet's wonderful sister Dorothy."—N Y Times

"An important scholarly study which promises to be the definitive biography."

+ A L A Bkl 13:30 O '16

"As a record of the associations of Wordsworth's earlier years, Professor Harper's work is of incalculable value. For more than two years, from January, 1793, to September, 1795, he lived in contact with the famous circle of which William Godwin was the leader. He was a disciple of and established his life upon Godwin's principles, and he gave them his allegiance until he reached his twenty-ninth year." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 21 '16 1500w

+ Cleveland p138 N '16 110w

"It is hard to decide which to admire the more, the biographer's unflagging industry and his affectionate sympathy in tracing minutely the personal and social relations of his 'hero'—the epithet is justified—or the impartiality and discrimination with which he comments on his conduct, character, and works. His literary criticism is in the main acute at once and catholic; his personal criticism is kindly in spirit and emphatically just in intent and at times is surprisingly severe."

+ N Y Times 21:135 Ap 9 '16 1150w

"The conception of Wordsworth at his best is the norm of the narrative, and it is never lost sight of. . . . The general effect of the narrative as a whole, is to emphasize the unity, the consistency, the integrity, of Wordsworth's life. The life-story, too, is successfully set against an adequate human background. Wordsworth's social relationships are made real to the reader."

+ No Am 203:924 Je '16 750w

"The finest critical presentation of Wordsworth's personality, period, work, and influence that has appeared."

+ Pittsburgh 21:294 Je '16 10w (Reprinted from the Outlook [London])

"He discusses weightily Wordsworth's prefaces, manifestos, ethical system and what not. He brings to this business great knowledge and some new material. His book is a mine for Wordsworthians. It is an important book—a book for all Wordsworthians to buy and keep and refer to continually. Nevertheless Professor Harper is not a thorough-going Wordsworthian. . . . He does seem to realize that Wordsworth's immortality has after all very little to do with his prefaces and politics and a very great deal to do with 'The celandine' and 'Lucy Gray.'"

+ Sat R 121:305 Mr 25 '16 1600w

"A striking, not to say startling book, which admirers of Wordsworth may regret, but which no student can ignore. . . . Professor Harper speaks with absurd exaggeration of Wordsworth's skill in art, metre, and style. . . . It was time that a new portrait of the poet should be presented, and Professor Harper's love and labor have done a real service. Large gratitude, in particular, is owing to him for his honesty."

+ — Spec 117:238 Ag 26 '16 2350w

"If we have confined our attention almost entirely to Wordsworth's politics, we should not like to give the impression that Mr. Harper has nothing to say about the poetry, or about Wordsworth's critical writings. He discusses both with enthusiasm and judgment, but he sees that the approach to both is through Wordsworth's political development."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p79 F 17 '16 2000w

"The work is both comprehensive and thoroughly readable. It is also eminently just." F: E. Pierce

+ Yale R n s 6:212 O '16 1100w

HARPER, JOSEPH H. Hydraulic tables for the flow of water in circular pipes under pressure, timber flumes, open channels, and egg-shaped conduits, with much accessory information. il $2 Van Nostrand 532.5 16-5343

"With painstaking assiduity, the author has worked out, with the aid of certain well-established formulæ, what he terms a 'grill' or network of solutions, covering such problems as are likely to arise in actual practice 'regarding the flow of water in either closed or open conduits, with any reasonable assumption of rugosity and with any rational arrangement of grade in quantities from a small fraction of a foot to several thousand feet per second.' The formulæ selected are those of D'Arcy, Bazin, and Kutter."—Nature

Cleveland p150 D '16

"The tables are neat, concise and convenient in arrangement. They cover, however, rather a limited number of values within a wide range. They should prove very useful in preliminary studies for the comparison of the relative carrying capacity of conduits of different materials and slopes. . . . The book contains many other useful hydraulic tables on orifices, weirs, etc., as well as an interesting discussion of the development of the formulas on which the tables are based." R. E. Horton

+ Engin N 75:942 My 18 '16 400w

"The author has succeeded in compiling a very useful little handbook that will be welcomed not only by office engineers engaged in designing but also by field engineers called upon to determine quickly the quantity of water carried in conduits or discharged over weirs." A. G. Hillberg

+ Engin Rec 73:777 Je 10 '16 250w

+ Nature 97:460 Ag 3 '16 230w

N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 My '16 100w

Pittsburgh 21:347 Jl '16

St Louis 14:431 D '16

HARRADEN, BEATRICE. Guiding thread. *$1.35 (1c) Stokes 16-26775

Horace Holbrook, a distinguished scholar, has married Joan, the daughter of a country blacksmith. She is a beautiful girl, with eager, untrained mind, and it has been his pleasure to mold her intellect to his own will, to make it a copy of his own. By keeping her apart from the rest of the world, he has steeped her in the atmosphere of the Italian renaissance, his special field, until she knows more of it than she does of the living world of men and women. Joan is not unhappy until a chance incident shows her what she is—a clever parrot who can repeat phrases that she has been taught. Then she rebels and demands her freedom. She runs away from her husband, away from the Italian renaissance. The story follows her experiences, which include a voyage to America and a period of earning a living in New York, and brings her back finally to a husband who has benefited as she has by the separation.

Reviewed by P. G. Hubert, jr.

Bookm 44:274 N '16 820w

"The sole diverting feature of the book is the author's sheer inability to assimilate the stark American scene into her idyllic scheme."

— Nation 103:542 D 7 '16 440w

"It is a great pity that so excellent a book should be marred by the melodramatic climax the author has imposed on this one—a climax entirely out of key with the rest of Joan's adventures."

+ — N Y Times 21:362 S 17 '16 1100w

"The long arm of coincidence may be a little rheumatic from overstrain when the story is finished. The country sentiment is overdone, but like the story, it may please the average reader."

+ — Sat R 122:395 O 21 '16 170w

HARRÉ, T. EVERETT. Behold the woman! *$1.35 (1c) Lippincott 16-9266

In a prefatory note the author makes this statement: "In this novel I have attempted to picture an age which was at once the most magnificent, barbaric, cruel, corrupt, and splendid in the history of the world. Rome under Nero did not compare in many ways to Alexandria at the close of the fourth century." For his heroine he has chosen the half legendary figure of Mary of Egypt, the courtesan who after a life of shameful glory was brought to penitence and a death of martyrdom in the desert. Mary's story, as the author tells it, falls into three parts: first her childhood with its suffering at the hands of a brutal father who represents a perverted application of Christianity; second, the days of her ascendancy when her hatred of her father finds expression in persecution of all Christians; and third her downfall, conversion and repentance. The author says the book "is not written for children, but for men, and the mothers and wives of men."

"A thing as ugly as a bill-board, and rendered so expressly by fulsomeness. . . . As for the woman, one tries in vain to behold her. The style gesticulates, makes evocative passages; but she declines to materialize." Wilson Follett

— Atlan 118:494 O '16 140w

+ — Bib World 48:127 Ag '16 130w

"It will be read more for the exuberance of the author's fancy in depicting the evils of Mary's career than for the lesson contained in a brief epilogue addressed to the present-living reincarnation of Mary of Alexandria."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '16 250w

"Probably there is a good deal in the book which may shock even mothers and wives; but that does not seem anything very exceptional in current fiction, and the only question that would arise in most minds is whether they are shocked to any good purpose. Frankly, I do not think they are. . . . The actual impression of his book cannot be either of the eternal struggle of womankind or, as it seems to offer itself, of the eternal salvation of one woman, or of anything actually happening or ever having happened in the world. His detailed imagination lacks the touch of life,—the only thing which makes us do the imagining ourselves." E: E. Hale

— Dial 60:473 My 11 '16 1000w

"The publishers inform us that this work belongs with 'Quo vadis' and 'Salammbô.' It remains, in spite, of the author's intent, a book of sensationalism rather than of spiritual force. This is a record which gloats. Intentionally or otherwise, it relies upon the sensational appeal. Therefore, while we recognize his vividness and his sincerity, we cannot agree with the author that in declining to write a book for children he has succeeded in writing a book 'for men, and the mothers and wives of men.' His punishment will doubtless be a very wide reading by the prurient of all ages."

— Nation 102:648 Je 15 '16 580w

"A carefully studied, sedulously wrought, minutely detailed picture of a colorful, turbulent period."

+ — N Y Times 21:149 Ap 16 '16 630w

"In spite of its outpouring of adjective upon adjective, the writing is good, the language handled with dignity. It is an ambitious effort but it gives much. It does really at times recreate the spirit of a past age, the glowing color of life in a cruder epoch under the glare of tropical suns." G. I. Colbron

+ — Pub W 89:1318 Ap 15 '16 580w

* This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HARRÉ, T. EVERETT—Continued

— Sat R 122:395 O 21 '16 170w

"Legitimate exceptions can be taken both to the author's unrestrained realism and the inundation of colorful words and ideas to which he has recourse in painting the background against which events are enacted."

— Springfield Republican p17 My 7 '16 470w

HARRINGTON, VERNON CHARLES. Brown-ing studies. *$1.50 Badger, R: G. 821

15-18809

"The traditional inscrutability of Robert Browning is sharply denied by Vernon C. Harrington. . . . One-fifth of the book of nearly 400 pages is devoted to introductory material, biographical and critical; and after this long introduction one feels already as if he knew the poet. The remainder is a study of the best known of Browning's poems, a résumé of the action or the thought being given, together with such historical and textual comment as the lecturer deems necessary for better understanding of each."—Springfield Republican

+ A L A Bkl 12:467 J1 '16

"It is frankly academic in type, bristles with foot-notes, is divided into almost endless heads and subheads. Consequently it is a book for the student, rather than for the general reader,—a reference book for the library shelf, rather than a volume for consecutive reading. For the purposes indicated, it is admirable. For example, it would be difficult to find a more helpful discussion of 'The ring and the book' than in the fifty pages given to it here."

+ Dial 60:82 Ja 20 '16 170w

+ Ind 87:232 Ag 14 '16 80w

R of Rs 54:345 S '16 40w

"A collection of lectures tested by classroom work and frequent public presentation; and a book that will be enjoyed by anyone who wants to begin or continue a literary acquaintance with Browning. . . . There is also a classified bibliography, not aiming at completeness, but surely good enough for any but an expert; and a second appendix gives five page to the musical settings of poems or fragments from Browning."

+ Springfield Republican p19 Ja 21 '16 400w

HARRIS, CORRA MAY (WHITE) (MRS. LUNDY HOWARD HARRIS). Circuit rider's widow. Il *$1.50 (2c) Doubleday

16-18913

In this "family history of a church" the author does justice to the band of heroic and devoted women who thruout the land are keeping alive the Christian religion in struggling little country churches. Somewhere in the story it is said that if the widow called Dorcas had written one chapter of the Acts of the Apostles we should know more than we do about the church work of the period, and also that if Phebe had written up her experiences we should know more about St. Paul, for "she would have made it her business to find out what that 'thorn in the flesh' was which has puzzled so many commentators; and she would have told us." Again the author says, "If the women in this church at Berton could compare notes with Dorcas of Joppa, and Martin Luther's wife, and Susannah Wesley, we should find a remarkable similarity in our experiences." She has not written a novel, but has given a chronicle of small events, written with alternating warm humor and caustic wit.

"Slow moving, best to read a few chapters at a time. Appeared in the Saturday Evening Post."

+ A L A Bkl 13:175 Ja '17

"The comment is that of a widely read woman and the generalizations are those of a shrewd observer of life." W. A. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 22 '16 750w

"Since Trollope's 'Barchester towers' there has been no more candid and clever unveiling of church politics than in 'A circuit rider's widow.'"

+ Ind 88:328 N 20 '16 220w

N Y Times 21:467 N 5 '16 350w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ja 28 '17 400w

HARRIS, FRANK. Love in youth. *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 16-9548

The slight thread of story in this novel follows the course of an automobile journey thru southern France. Morton Bancroft, an American Rhodes scholar, after having lost money at Monte Carlo, puts himself and his car at the service of an American family, father, mother and daughter. From the first meeting the two young people strike fire. Antagonism and attraction are mutual and lead in the end to love. The mother, an unscrupulous schemer who has already planned a marriage for her daughter, succeeds for a time in separating them but they are brought together again with the aid of the father. The story is a study of young love and closes with a consideration of the conditions in marriage which may destroy it or make it permanent.

"Frank Harris gives of his many-sided talent in prodigal fashion. He is poet, critic, historian, nature-lover and artist all in one. Yet first and foremost he is the creator of three characters who stand out in vital clearness." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 29 '16 1150w

"A sort of cross between a guide book and a novel."

+ N Y Times 21:190 My 7 '16 450w

"A pleasant, readable story, and the twin interests of modern romance and ancient history are nicely balanced throughout."

+ Springfield Republican p13 My 28 '16 230w

HARRIS, FRANKLIN STEWART, and STEWART, GEORGE. Principles of agronomy; a text-book of crop production for high-schools and short-courses in agricultural colleges. (Rural text-book ser.) Il *$1.40 Macmillan 630 15-27707

"The work is divided into four distinct parts which are closely related and, taken together, afford a general understanding of the whole. The first part discusses the principles of plant growth and should be of service to students who take up horticulture, as well as to those studying agronomy. In the second part a study is made of the soil and its management. This part, it is worth noting, is likewise fundamental to horticulture as well as to agronomy. The third part is devoted entirely to the study of field crops; and in the fourth part a number of problems relating to field management are discussed."—Springfield Republican

Ind 87:419 S 18 '16 50w

"The book is too academic. In the hands of a teacher who knows agriculture and how to teach it, this volume may easily be made the basis for important work in the classroom. Not as a book to be memorized, or conned for an array of facts with no coordination, but as a framework upon which the class may build, 'Principles of agronomy' has its place." W. A. Freehoff

+ School R 24:489 Je '16 400w

"The work is designed for schools giving more than one course in agriculture, but the discussion is so broad that it ought to be useful to the practical farmer."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Ap 28 '16 270w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p214 My 4 '16 170w

HARRIS, GARRARD. Trail of the pearl. Il *$1 (1½c) Harper 16-18292

A new story for boys by the author of "Joe, the book farmer." Buckner Allen has that pathetic desire for "book learning" that has driven many a boy of the southern mountains to make heroic sacrifices. In the big pearl that he finds in a mussel shell from the river, he sees the means of realizing his ambitions, and with the treasure sewed securely on the inside of his home-spun shirt, he runs away from his uncle's home, bound indefinitely for the "settlements." News of the pearl's great value leaks out and Sol Allen, the uncle, with his son Tobe, sets out in pursuit of the boy. Fortune favors Buck, however. He finds kind friends to start him on his way toward an education, while his uncle meets the deserved fate of an illicit distiller of whiskey.

+ — A L A Bk1 13:227 F '17

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:409 D '16 30w

"The story will please the boy. It is full of adventure, of graphic characterizations, that vainly try to be humorous. It is like a moving picture, and satisfactory as a melodrama where virtue triumphs and vice sinks. One can applaud the hero and hiss the villain and close the book with a feeling of participating in life's copybook maxims."

— + N Y Times 21:423 O 8 '16 300w

"The early chapters of the book are perhaps more interesting because of its insight into the manner of life in the mountains."

Springfield Republican p13 O 1 '16 180w

"An interesting story though a bit sensational."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:455 D '16 30w

HARRIS, JOHN FREDERICK. Samuel Butler, the man and his work. il *$2 (3c) Dodd (Eng ed 16-26995)

"Mr. Harris's volume is in the main a 'critical study,' and one of some interest; and after a first chapter on the 'Early years' it passes to an examination of the books, referring to the personal life only in so far as it affects them. There is a bibliography."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

A L A Bk1 13:173 Ja '17

"Candidly, we doubt if Mr. Harris has the necessary understanding of subtlety to be a good biographer of his subject. His phraseology and use of words leave something to be desired, and his reproductions of some of Butler's more commonplace remarks would hardly, we think, have found favor with Butler himself."

— Ath p369 Ag '16 550w

"It is plainly evident from the book as a whole that no writer who is not himself a humorist should attempt to write a biography of Samuel Butler." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p8 O 14 '16 1100w

"We want to know a great deal more about 'Samuel Butler, the man,' than we do. . . . It appears, however, that this much-needed biographical material has not been accessible to Mr. Harris, hence his book will be, in this respect, somewhat disappointing."

+ — N Y Times 21:316 Ag 13 '16 520w

+ — N Y Times 22:17 Ja 21 '17 1550w

"A sympathetic study. Contains an epitome of an unpublished paper on Charles Darwin, full index, and a comprehensive bibliography." S. R. B.

+ St Louis 14:441 D '16 20w

"The conclusions of Mr. Harris, as a rule, are sound enough, but we do not care so much for his illustrations or dissertations on irony and satire."

— + Sat R 122:88 Jl 22 '16 1750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p322 Jl 6 '16 80w

"His work has the merit, in particular the very clear chapter on the scientific books, of bringing out the main lines of thought which unite all Butler's work."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p343 Jl 20 '16 2150w

Reviewed by Arthur Colton

+ — Yale R n s 6:412 Ja '17 900w

HARRISON, CUTHBERT WOODVILLE. Magic of Malaya. *$1.25 (2½c) Lane 915.95

16-24979

A series of sketches and stories of the Malay peninsula, some of which are reprinted from the Straits Times and the Malay Mail. Like the somewhat similar stories by Sir Hugh Clifford they are based on personal experience, the author's position in the Malay civil service having given him an intimate knowledge of native ways. Primitive superstitions and belief in magic form the basis for many of the sketches. There are studies of Chinese as well as of Malay character.

"There is a glossary at the end of the book with explanations of the Malay terms which are used and which is indispensable to a full enjoyment of the book."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 10 '17 300w

"His book possesses real charm and power. It is the work of a man who knows well the tortuous twists of thought and action of the real Malay. Being so, he can make his readers look through his eyes fascinated." Bishop Frodsham

+ Sat R 122:533 D 2 '16 1700w

+ Springfield Republican p8 D 15 '16 180w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p476 O 5 '16 420w

HARRISON, GRACE CLERGUE, and CLERGUE, GERTRUDE, comps. Allied cookery. *75c (4c) Putnam 641.5 16-14069

A cook book of recipes chosen from the cookery of Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium and Russia. There is an introduction [in French] by Raoul Dandurand and forewords by Stephen Leacock and Ella Wheeler Wilcox. The proceeds will be devoted to relief work.

"The first recipe in the book is from Mme. Jusserand, wife of the French ambassador to the United States. The housewife who can make use of this book will find in it many novelties in the manner of preparing food. . . . There are also several Serbian recipes and a few Canadian, with a chapter on Indian curries and a few from New England."

+ Springfield Republican p15 Jl 16 '16 250w

HARRISON, JANE ELLEN. Alpha and omega. *3s 6d Sidgwick & Jackson, London 824

A15-2057

A book of essays by a distinguished scholar, author of "Prolegomena to a study of Greek religion" and "Ancient art and ritual." "These papers are largely autobiographical; they tell us of influences and sympathies, repulsions, reactions, spiritual vicissitudes. But this candour never jars. It is controlled by delicacy and consideration: it is neither effusive nor acrimonious. Miss Harrison has her red rags: theology, for instance, in general, and anthropomorphism in particular; but she is seldom betrayed into personal animosity. . . . Another quality which must endear her to all readers is her happy gift of treating serious subjects without a painful display of erudition. She wears her learning lightly, and is not afraid of kindly railery. . . . It is a curious fact that, although her studies have lain chiefly in the domain of primitive or ancient culture, her literary predilections are profoundly modern. The great majority of the authors quoted or discussed are representative of new views or new movements." (Spec) An "Epilogue on the war" is added at the close.

"The sort of book of which one may say that there is more soul than body in it. Miss Harrison—all honour to her for it—hates war. 'We must live and let live,' she insists. Her book has brought this truth home to us convincingly, despite the superficial inconsistencies into which she has been betrayed by her references to 'isms.' To such rapid abstractions others may find a need to resort, but not a writer so well versed as is Miss Harrison in the higher logic of sympathetic insight."

+ Ath 1915:1:500 Je 5 1100w

"She is intensely in earnest, and she is sometimes a little diffuse and laboured in her manner of expression. Frankly, we prefer her in her lighter mood as exhibited in her first essay. She can find something new and stimulating to say even on the time-worn subject of Crabbed age and youth. And we like and admire in her essays the very human, very intimate little confessions of personal likes and dislikes, and the way she recants the opinions of her youth and explains why she recants."

+ Sat R 119:507 My 15 '15 1150w

HARRISON, JANE ELLEN—Continued

"We do not say that this book is a 'seething caldron of suggestion,' but the phrase represents, in an exaggerated form, something of the impression which it makes on a male reviewer. It is fearless, unorthodox, and yet kindly. Extremes are always meeting in Miss Harrison's estimates. . . . She would no doubt be regarded as a dangerous ally by the thoroughgoing advocates of the principles she supports. Deeply as we differ from her on most of the issues raised in these pages, it is impossible not to respect her sincerity and courage in maintaining positions many of which have been shaken, if not rendered untenable, by the events of the last ten months."

+ Spec 114:780 Je 5 '15 1500w

HARRISON, MRS. MARY ST. LEGER (KINGSLEY) (LUCAS MALET, pseud.). Damaris. $1.40 (1c) Dodd 16-19458

The plot of this Anglo-Indian novel is concerned with the advances and retreats of a love affair between a woman of alluring charm and an English officer who had been her devoted slave in years gone by. Both are past their first youth. The woman has a husband somewhere in the background and the man, whose wife has died, has a little five year old daughter. It is the child, Damaris, who acts as a determining factor in the affair.

"The descriptions of Indian life and scenery are well done."

+ Ath p434 S '16 40w

"In 'Damaris' her pen shows no falling off in the depiction of men and women under stress of temptation." P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 44:273 N '16 950w

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '16 700w

+ Cath World 104:538 Ja '17 270w

Dial 61:313 O 19 '16 730w

"This story is unwholesome."

— Nation 104:133 F 1 '17 320w

"'Damaris' shows the hand of the practiced novelist, but it is marred by a somewhat peevish note, and carefully studied as are certain of the characters it will scarcely rank with Lucas Malet's best work."

+ — N Y Times 21:426 O 15 '16 770w

"The days of crinolines, croquet and Victorian amenities are recalled in 'Damaris.'"

+ — Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 350w

"A powerful and moving story, but not a story that adds any zest to life or encouragement to live it hopefully; and not a story that justifies itself as profoundly true."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p428 S 7 '16 950w

HART, ALBERT BUSHNELL, ed. American patriots and statesmen from Washington to Lincoln. 5v il Collier press 308 16-17667

This set of five volumes, consisting of selections from the speeches and writings of American patriots and statesmen, marks the first appearance of "the Collier classics," a series designed to supplement the Harvard classics. The general preface says, "The books will be planned in sets of five volumes each, these sets being sometimes devoted to the works of a single author, sometimes to a single topic as treated by a number of authors." In these first volumes, edited by Professor Hart, the purpose has been "to gather into one set a vital selection of American patriotic utterances." The editor has endeavored to make the selection truly representative of America, choosing writers from every class and every section. The contents of the five volumes follows: 1, Patriotism of the colonies, 1492-1774; 2, Patriotism of the revolution and constitution, 1775-1789; 3, Patriotism of the early union, 1789-1820; 4, Patriotism of the East and West, 1820-1845; 5, Patriotism of the North and South, 1846-1861. The work is not carried beyond the civil war because of the many social and political controversies of the later period that are still unsettled.

"In none of these volumes is there a poor or unrepresentative selection—except, perhaps, in connection with military matters. . . . But the most questionable feature of the work is the emphasis which it places upon the jingo element in the utterances of our statesmen. . . . Without undertaking to enumerate the many pages which are occupied with the problem of military preparedness, it is perfectly plain that this is the theme of the work, its very 'raison d'être'. . . . Whether Professor Hart really desired to make use of his opportunity for purposes of propaganda is open to question." W: E. Dodd

+ — Dial 61:576 D 28 '16 1950w

+ Ind 88:241 N 6 '16 270w

+ N Y Times 21:498 N 19 '16 250w

"The work is compiled with the worthy object of awakening patriotic feelings in the breasts of Americans. The only fault to be found with the selections is that they tend to identify patriotism with an America-defying-the-world foreign policy. This is not wholly the fault of the book. . . . President Eliot's prefatory note on 'What is an American?' with its clear-eyed statement of American traits and ideals, is a notable feature of the book, well worthy of separate publication."

+ — Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 480w

HART, ALBERT BUSHNELL. Monroe doctrine: an interpretation. $1.75 (1½c) Little 327.7 16-1322

"To the author's mind the Monroe doctrine is not a question of theory but of fact. It is founded on the state of things in the western hemisphere. It includes much that is not agreeable to the people of the United States, but which must be faced because it exists. Meanwhile, the conditions of the problem change from decade to decade; and any doctrine which is to endure in the midst of these changing conditions must undergo corresponding alterations." (Preface) The book is divided into seven parts. Parts 1 to 3 are historical, taking up: The original Monroe doctrine, 1775-1826; Variations of the Monroe doctrine, 1827-1869; The American doctrine, 1869-1915. Parts 4 and 5 are devoted to Present-day doctrines and Present world conditions. Part 6, Doctrine of permanent interest, is an attempt "to point out how far the doctrine in its present meaning is likely to be applied in the future." Part 7 is a survey of the literature of the subject.

"As to matters of opinion, authorities will necessarily differ. For instance, when the policy of our earlier presidents is spoken of as a doctrine of 'isolation,' there are some persons, among whom is the reviewer, who regard the term as wholly misleading."

+ Am Hist R 21:827 Jl '16 1250w

"Annotated bibliography (17p.)."

+ A L A Bkl 12:263 Mr '16

"The fullest, most critical, and most readable account of the Monroe doctrine in all its important phases that has so far been written by an American. The recent work of Dr. Herbert Kraus, 'Die Monroedoktrin,' exceeds it somewhat in length. The book is carefully written and printed, and it contains apparently very few errors." J: H. Latané

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:370 My '16 1150w

"The value of the work is greatly enhanced by the inclusion of a most excellent bibliography." L. S. Rowe

+ Ann Am Acad 68:332 N '16 390w

"I cannot enter into an elaborate discussion as to the probability of German or Japanese expansion in Latin America. But neither does Professor Hart argue the matter. In just fifteen words—'the two powers most likely to be moved by an ambition to possess American territory'—he calls up a great fear and switches the United States into a new life. . . . It is not the historian in Professor Hart that writes like this. It is sheer emotion." Simeon Strunsky

— Bookm 42:733 F '16 1100w

"In the concluding pages, which concern themselves with the doctrine of the future, many will find their chief interest. Clear and brief analyses are given of the objections to the doctrine—its uneven application in the past, groundlessness of the fears which caused the original doctrine and many of its renewals, emergence of several Latin-American peoples from the conditions which suggested the doctrine, its failure to protect Latin-America, the fact that it involves us in quarrels not our own, failure to bring about concord and union among Latin-American peoples, its never having been sanctioned by the American people and its tendency to bring the United States within the field of military nations. . . . The book is an able argument against those who are almost ready to admit that the Monroe doctrine is too long outworn to deserve any other fate than the scrap heap."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ja 12 '16 520w
Cleveland p21 Mr '16 80w

"The most ambitious, and the most generally useful, treatise upon the subject at present available in the English language." F: A. Ogg
+ Dial 60:549 Je 8 '16 1650w

"The book is careful and scholarly but at the same time racily written; a perpetual quiet chuckle at the irony of events runs through the volume to the delight of the reader."

+ Ind 85:164 Ja 31 '16 500w

"The real historical process of the doctrine is set forth with admirable precision and very readably by Professor Hart. His interpretations of the changes in the doctrine, from generation to generation, and at the hands of successive Presidents, are his own, of course, and in their exact emphasis might be open to challenge at one or two points; but the material is all laid before the reader, and the dullest must see that it implies different policies and attitudes in different ages. . . . The whole work is careful, and, what is rare in such writing, entertaining throughout."

+ Nation 102:197 F 17 '16 550w

N Y Br Lib News 3:24 F '16

"As a keen and subtle exposition, Professor Hart's volume will prove fascinating to students of history—to all, in fact, who enjoy the feeling of easy intellectual mastery over a complex subject. By a process of reasoning as delicate and incisive as the work of a sculptor, Professor Hart frees the American doctrine from its obscurities and irrelevances and causes it to stand out in its bare essentials. The whole treatise is a task of definition carried out with surpassing skill."

+ No Am 203:461 Mr '16 1200w

Pittsburgh 21:104 Mr '16 120w

"The most important and timely of the books of the month. In view of the presence in this country of delegates to the Pan-American scientific congress, and the attempts at Washington last month to extend and reformulate the principles of Pan-American policy, Professor Hart's book is offered to the public at exactly the right moment. Its value, however, is far more than transient; and it will undoubtedly exercise a permanent influence upon American opinion and action."

+ R of Rs 53:242 F '16 600w

St Louis 14:149 Ap '16 10w

+ Spec 116:502 Ap 15 '16 2050w

"Prof. Hart traces interestingly the history of the controversies in which the Monroe doctrine has been involved, and his own comments, whenever he is pleased to make them—which is not seldom—are fresh and instructive though not necessarily authoritative."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ja 17 '16 650w

"Has preparedness for its moral." E. G. Balch
Survey 37:91 O 28 '16 10w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p468 S 28 '16 130w

"It is natural that a writer who is known as an eminent specialist in American history should not be at his best when he tries to give the European point of view, though on the whole he does so very fairly. His account of the Holy alliance is, for instance, a weak spot. . . . In conclusion, we most heartily recommend this excellent book to our readers as the only comprehensive account of the Monroe doctrine in all its phases—that is to say, of the whole attitude of the United States towards the world outside. It should be studied at the present time by every one."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p555 N 23 '16 1950w

"Full index and colored map."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:183 Ap '16 70w

HARTWELL, SHATTUCK OSGOOD. Overcrowded schools and the platoon plan. 25c (2c) Cleveland foundation, Survey committee; Russell Sage foundation 370.91 16-4413

This volume of the Cleveland survey deals with a problem that every growing community must meet. Various plans for solution are considered. Contents: Economical use of building space; The platoon plan; Problems of organization; Problems of administration; Costs; Building problems of Cleveland; Summary.

Cleveland p22 Mr '16 30w

"The book contains a thoroughgoing analysis of the situation at Gary."

+ El School J 16:339 Mr '16 720w

Ind 88:35 O 2 '16 60w

Pittsburgh 21:236 My '16

+ School R 24:328 Ap '16 20w

HARVEY, GEORGE COCKBURN. Famous four-footed friends. Il $1.50 (3¼c) McBride 590.4 16-25199

This book, opening with the story of Alexander and Bucephalus, is made up of a collection of stories about animals, chiefly dogs and horses, that have been the friends and companions of famous men. The author says, "The attempt has been made to combine, with the stories of great men's horses and dogs, a certain amount of information concerning the owners of the animals." The book is brought down to date by the inclusion of a story of two dog heroes of the present war. It is planned for children from seven to twelve years of age.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '17 340w

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 17 '16 230w

HARVEY, RICHARD SELDEN, and BRADFORD, ERNEST W. Manual of the Federal trade commission. $5 Byrne 338.9 16-4862

"It may safely be predicted that the Federal trade commission statute of September 26, 1914, will be one of the most important of recent congressional acts. . . . There is needed such a volume as this one in which is traced the legal conditions which led to, and which will largely condition the operation of, the act. This work the authors have done excellently; and, in addition, they have analyzed with care and judgment the act itself, and brought its provisions into relation to the Sherman anti-trust act and the Clayton act. . . . In a series of appendices there is given the text of the Trade commission, Clayton and Sherman laws, and other related statutes, and a memorandum, revised to October 15, 1915, of the cases instituted by the United States under the anti-trust laws."—Am Pol Sci R

Reviewed by W. H. S. Stevens

Am Econ R 6:651 S '16 280w

"The volume, as a whole, furnishes a most convenient manual which should be of use not only to practicing lawyers but to academic students of the general problem of the federal regulation of trade and commerce in this country."

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:396 My '16 280w

HASBROUCK, LOUISE SEYMOUR. La Salle. (True stories of great Americans) Il $50c (1c) Macmillan 16-17670

The author's aim has been "to give to younger readers what has hitherto been lacking—a short, yet not too short, account of La Salle's career, with details enough of contemporaneous history, scenery, manners, and customs to indicate the picturesque background against which La Salle's lonely figure moves." (Preface) Marquette, Joliet, Hennepin, Du Lhut and other early explorers of the Mississippi valley enter into the narrative. The author has drawn on Parkman's "La Salle and the discovery of the great West," John Finley's "French in the heart of America," and other works.

HASBROUCK, LOUISE SEYMOUR—Continued
+ A L A Bkl 13:182 Ja '17

"The author tells her story well, but she would have been better qualified for the treatment of her subject, had she possessed just a little more instinctive sympathy for things Catholic and ecclesiastical, and a little less readiness to quote—with apparent endorsement—the statements of prejudiced parties."

- + Cath World 104:560 Ja '17 90w
- + Ind 88:404 D 4 '16 50w
- + N Y Times 21:580 D 31 '16 40w
- + R of Rs 54:682 D '16 20w
- + Springfield Republican p15 D 9 '16 170w

HASTINGS, REV. JAMES, ed. Christian doctrine of prayer. *$3 Scribner 264 A15-2475

"Is the first in a series of six volumes on The great Christian doctrines, of which Dr. Hastings is the general editor. The present volume goes into detailed discussions of the objects, times and places, postures, etc., appropriate to prayer. . . . The work is, however, lifted above the character of a mere manual of prayer by the earnest desire of the editor to commend strongly to the Christian world the desirability of supplicating the Deity for the blessings of life. He recognizes the serious nature of certain objections, scientific and philosophical, held by many to the view that prayer is an actual objective force in the world. . . . The impression left on the reader by the discussion will probably be that the efficacy of prayer is subjective."—Nation

"A conservative, traditional and homiletical treatment of the doctrine of prayer."

- + Am J Theol 20:470 Jl '16 100w
- + A L A Bkl 12:259 Mr '16

"Thoroughly modern in its point of view and profoundly spiritual throughout. The treatment of such problems as the scientific and philosophical objections to prayer is ably handled in a manner that reveals the spirit of a student who has an open mind and withal a profoundly reverent spirit."

- + Bib World 47:51 Ja '16 110w

"The reader will discover that Dr. Hastings is as familiar with the best American thought as he is with that of English, French and German. It would be difficult to overpraise this book, which will prove of the greatest value to all those interested in prayer—and what human being is not?" F. W. C.

- + Boston Transcript p20 S 15 '15 880w

"We are told at the outset of the volume that 'notwithstanding the importance of prayer in religion and life, it finds little place in theology.' Of course the author means Protestant theology, for throughout his volume he ignores almost absolutely the great Catholic saints and doctors of prayer."

- + Cath World 103:697 Ag '16 160w
- + Nation 102:173 F 10 '16 400w
- + N Y Times 21:95 Mr 19 '16 80w

HASTINGS, REV. JAMES, and others, eds. Encyclopædia of religion and ethics. v 8 Life and death-Mulla. *$7 Scribner 203 (8-35833)

For descriptive note see Annual for 1909.

"Except for the tendency to deal tenderly with Christianity, so as to secure doctrinally desirable conclusions, the encyclopædia represents that spirit of exact and sympathetic historical study which is characteristic of the modern study of religion." G. B. Smith

- + Am J Theol 21:148 Ja '17 810w

"To understand that this encyclopædia does not duplicate the work of the general encyclopædias we may take such an article as 'Milk.' It is discussed only as it had a place in primitive and civilized religions. This work differs in its end and method from the general encyclopædias. The end is to include everything that influences the moral and religious life of men, and to trace that influence historically. The high standard of the preceding volumes is fully maintained in the present volume. As one reads he is impressed with the usefulness of these volumes." F. W. C.

- + Boston Transcript p4 Ap 12 '16 520w

"The outstanding features of this encyclopædia are the numerous articles on primitive religions and less known countries and peoples, and the highly composite articles on important religious and ethical ideas, customs and institutions. . . . There are especially rich contributions to our knowledge of India. . . . Ancient Israel has been strangely neglected in this encyclopædia. . . . In it Christianity is presented side by side with the other religions, and religion is placed in its larger social setting. On the other hand, the apologetic manner in which topics related to Christianity are treated contrasts painfully with the scientific spirit characteristic of practically all other departments of the great work." Nathaniel Schmidt

- + Dial 61:579 D 28 '16 3000w (Review of v 2-8)

- + Ind 87:424 S 18 '16 90w

"This volume is a decided improvement over the preceding in several respects. The editing has been much better done, and there is a marked abstinence, comparatively, from invasion of the economic as distinguished from the ethical and religious field. There is also an increase in the number of articles of moderate length. Among the topics which might advantageously have been more fully treated are mediation, metamorphosis, monotheism, and mother of the gods."

- + Lit D 52:1714 Je 10 '16 380w
- + Nation 103:66 Jl 20 '16 1050w

HASTINGS, REV. JAMES, and others, eds. Dictionary of the Apostolic church. 2v v 1 subs *$6 Scribner 225.3 (16-15591)
v 1 Aaron-Lystra.

"The present work is meant to do for the rest of the New Testament what the 'Dictionary of Christ and the gospels' did for the gospels, and 'carries the history of the church to the end of the first century.' It forms, therefore, with that, 'an . . . independent dictionary of the New Testament.' The style and the character of the articles are practically the same as in the other works."—Lit D

"Sold by subscription only, so that most libraries can wait and buy at second hand."

- A L A Bkl 13:55 N '16

"About one hundred scholars were employed in producing this volume, and they make an international group, the British empire, France, Germany, America, and the Netherlands being represented. . . . It is at once evident that the man for whom the writers have especially labored is the busy pastor who is anxious to keep abreast with the best scholarship of today. Such men will welcome it." F. W. C.

- + Boston Transcript p4 Ap 26 '16 480w
- + Ind 87:424 S 18 '16 110w

"For those who can afford to keep up with Dr. Hastings's activities in this line, and wish to see summarized the progress in historical and exegetical science on New Testament subjects, this new work is indispensable. Yet in fairness to purchasers it must be said that many of the more important subjects have been treated with a fair degree of adequacy in the earlier works. The new writers on many subjects present matters from a new angle, however, and so fresh and often useful views are gained."

- + Lit D 52:980 Ap 8 '16 400w
- + Nation 102:sup499 My 4 '16 160w
- + N Y Br Lib News 3:123 Ag '16
- + N Y Times 21:270 Jl 2 '16 110w

"It is a real advantage to have familiar themes treated in a fresh way by younger men who have learned to look at the old problems from new points of view. The dictionary provides a handy book of reference on New Testament subjects, not for the scholar's use alone, but for that wider circle of readers who have no opportunity of consulting many books and yet require to be in touch with what modern scholarship has to say on the early days of Christianity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p128 Mr 16 '16 1100w

HATCHER, ORIE LATHAM. Book for Shakespeare plays and pageants. il *$2 (4c) Dutton 822.3 16-9570

"A treasury of Elizabethan and Shakespearean detail for producers, stage managers, actors, artists and students." (Sub-title) Part 1 of the book provides the necessary background with its account of Shakespeare's England. Chapters are devoted to: The queen's revels; The queen's progresses; London in Shakespeare's time; Shakespeare's life; Shakespeare's plays; Theatres, etc. Part 2 suggests plans for Shakespearean festivities, supplying details as to costume, stage setting, etc. There are 166 illustrations and the music for a dozen or more songs and dances is provided. Bibliography, Glossary and Index are other features.

+ A L A Bkl 12:467 J1 '16

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 6 '16 600w

+ Cleveland p85 J1 '16 40w

"The illustrations are helpful and very numerous."

+ Dial 61:145 S 7 '16 320w

"Aside from its immediate use, it is a delightful and valuable collection of all sorts of Shakespearean miscellany."

+ Ind 86:554 Jc 26 '16 50w

"With the exception of an occasional misprint, appears to be as accurate as it is comprehensive. . . . The especial value of the book consists in its compact presentment, under one cover, of data collected from a variety of sources, familiar to students but not to the casual reader."

+ Nation 103:522 N 30 '16 250w

+ N Y Times 21:320 Ag 13 '16 130w

Pratt p36 J1 '16

+ Springfield Republican p17 Je 11 '16 300w

HAUPTMANN, GERHART JOHANN ROBERT. Dramatic works; ed. with an introd. by Ludwig Lewisohn. v 6 *$1.50 Huebsch 832 (13-35061)

v 6 Three of Hauptmann's later dramas in prose make up this volume. "The three plays," says Professor Lewisohn, "present, in clearly defined fashion, three phases of Hauptmann's dramatic art. In 'The maidens of the mount' he recalls an episode of his own past which had faded into the remoteness and unsubstantiality of dreams; in 'Griselda' he essays once more a modern and human interpretation of one of the famous fables of the world; in 'Gabriel Schilling's flight' he grapples with the problem of sex in its acutest and most modern form."

A L A Bkl 12:329 Ap '16

+ Ind 85:464 Mr 27 '16 70w

R of Rs 53:376 Mr '16 20w

HAVEMEYER, LOOMIS. Drama of savage peoples. *$1.75 (3c) Yale univ. press 809.2 16-22373

The author says, "The following work is an attempt to go back of the Greek drama, which has currently been conceived of as the source of the dramatic art, and to develop the more primitive phases of this institution." He finds the germ of drama in the ceremonies and rites practiced in even the most primitive tribes and suggests that its real origin is to be found in the sign language by which ideas were communicated. The chapters consider: The early development of the drama; Ceremonies connected with the animal food; Ceremonies dealing with plant food; Points of comparison between the savage drama and that of the Greeks and Japanese; Initiation ceremonies; Dramatic war ceremonies; The pleasure plays of savage peoples. A concluding chapter giving a summary closes the book. The author is instructor in anthropology and geography in the Sheffield scientific school.

"The author's claim to an original idea, though he has written an instructive book for students, can hardly be substantiated in face of his own bibliography."

Ath p590 D '16 100w

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 25 '16 280w

"The value of Dr. Havemeyer's book lies in the interesting facts he has collected in the course of his research rather than in his conclusions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p630 D 28 '16 900w

HAWTHORNE, HILDEGARDE. Old seaport towns of New England. il *$2.50 (4c) Dodd 917.4 16-23386

An account of a pleasant, leisurely springtime journey taken by the author and her sister. Twelve New England towns were visited, Portland, Portsmouth, Newburyport, Salem, Beverly and the rocky coast, Gloucester, Marblehead, Plymouth and New Bedford, Provincetown, Newport, New London and New Haven. The pictures by John Albert Seaford add to the charm of the book, so do the bits of poetry contributed by the sister's memory for apt quotations.

+ A L A Bkl 13:168 Ja '17

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 2 '16 1100w

+ Ind 88:409 D 4 '16 80w

"The volume makes no pretence of being a formal history; it is 'more in the nature of an afternoon tea chat.'"

+ Nation 103:519 N 30 '16 70w

"A very delightful book whose air of intimacy that invites the reader to share all the happy chances and humorous mischances and odd happenings of the journey creates in the reader some faint illusion—and that is always the final test of a travel book—of himself taking the trip."

+ N Y Times 21:578 D 31 '16 670w

+ R of Rs 55:100 Ja '17 160w

+ Springfield Republican p14 D 9 '16 650w

HAY, J. MACDOUGALL. Barnacles. *$1.40 (1c) Doran 17-2203

Benjamin Brocklehurst, known as Barnacles, left his father's house with his few possessions in a small bag and his violin under his arm. To get money to buy the violin, he had sold one of his father's sheep. To his father this was stealing, but to the simple mind of Barnacles the sheep was only honest payment for the work done without wages on his father's farm. With the violin under his arm, he goes to Paisley, to win his way into the hearts of all who come in contact with him, be they of high or lowly birth. He brings happiness to many lives, and in the end finds his own happiness in the love of a great-hearted woman who understands the simple nobility of his nature.

"A nice little tale, prettily fanciful and at times touching." P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 44:278 N '16 150w

"Just why the author of 'Barnacles' should be acclaimed for his rank in the 'new school of younger English realists' is a question his publishers presumably might be able to answer. . . . Personally, we find as much realism in it as in James Lane Allen or in Mrs. Porter, though it is far preferable to the work of either. . . . The novel is a little irritating, and a little disappointing. We hoped for something so much better, because the author really promised something so much better." R. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p9 S 30 '16 650w

+ — Dial 61:471 N 30 '16 300w

"The author has a whimsical humor and a love of children of all ages."

+ — N Y Times 21:403 O 8 '16 650w

"The portion of the story narrating Barnacles' experiences in the city among the poor, and his indifferent efforts to obtain employment, is written with an earnestness and artistry that makes its realism the more forceful. . . . The succeeding portions, while highly dramatic, are less convincing, because these are obviously mere 'situations.' It is a striking book; one that is read with the closest attention and in a riot of emotions."

HAY, J. MACDOUGALL—Continued

+ Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 470w

HAY, JOHN. Complete poetical works. *$5
Houghton 811 16-22653

"From an old chest of John Hay's have been brought forth a score of unpublished poems suitable for publication, and a dozen or more uncollected pieces are added. These thirty-three examples of the statesman's mastery of a finer art than diplomacy are now incorporated in a handsome volume, limited in its edition, containing also the poems already familiar to the public. A four-page introduction, explanatory and appreciative, is contributed by the poet's son, Mr. Clarence L. Hay."—Dial

+ Dial 61:544 D 14 '16 130w

+ Ind 89:30 Ja 1 '17 290w

"A triumph of the bookmaker's craft."

+ N Y Times 21:515 N 26 '16 50w

+ Outlook 115:208 Ja 31 '17 240w

+ R of Rs 55:212 F '17 250w

HAYDEN, ARTHUR. Chats on old silver. (Chats ser.; practical guides for collectors) il *$2.50 (7c) Stokes 739 (Eng ed A16-105)

This book for the collector of old silver has chapters on, The marks stamped upon silver, Ecclesiastical plate, The salt cellar, The spoon, The candlestick, The teapot, the coffee-pot, the tea-caddy, etc. "In dealing with the subject of old silver in a volume of this size sufficient details have been given to enable the collector to identify his silver if it be in the main stream of silversmiths' work." (Preface) There are over eighty illustrations.

+ A L A Bk 12:464 J1 '16

+ N Y Times 21:288 J1 '16 '16 90w

"A most valuable volume of convenient size to carry around on collecting tours."

+ R of Rs 54:236 Ag '16 120w

"The amateur may, with only an agreeable amount of effort on his own part, acquire plenty of very useful knowledge on this fascinating but intricate subject. Mr. Hayden's plan of linking a beautiful example of workmanship with its contemporary historical events is a good one. The illustrations in this book are excellent. Mr. Hayden has taken great pains over the reproduction of the hall-marks, and the result is also very successful."

+ Spec 115:21 J1 3 '15 680w

HAYES, CARLTON (JOSEPH HUNTLEY). Political and social history of modern Europe. 2v v 1 *$2; v 2 *$2.25 Macmillan 940.5 16-16141

The author defines modern history as "that part of history which deals with the origin and evolution of the great distinguishing characteristics of the present," and for the beginning of the modern history of Europe goes back to the sixteenth century. He has kept in mind the purpose of the study of history, to obtain an understanding of present conditions and future needs. He says, "Beginning with the sixteenth century, the story of the civilization of modern Europe is carried down the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries with constant crescendo. Of the total space devoted to the four hundred years under review, the last century fills half. And the greatest care has been taken to bring the story down to date and to indicate as clearly and calmly as possible the underlying causes of the vast contemporaneous European war. . . . The great basic causes of the war the author has sought, not in the ambitions of a single power nor in an isolated outrage, but in the history of four hundred years." (Preface) The two volumes are provided with maps, extensive bibliographical notes, etc.

+ Cleveland p158 D '16 50w

"The last chapter is an exceedingly able, yet cautiously stated account of the present war and the antecedent conditions, and comes down to 1915."

+ Lit D 53:1472 D 2 '16 400w

+ N Y Br Lib News 3:157 O '16

"A history of European affairs that will satisfy the reader whose time cannot be devoted entirely to the subject; a history that the busy man or woman will appreciate as setting before them in not too brief a form the social and political progress of transatlantic nations since the beginning of the sixteenth century."

+ N Y Times 21:547 D 10 '16 1350w

"By way of preparation for a study of the causes and origin of the great war now raging in Europe, there is probably no single work in the English language so useful as this new 'Political and social history of modern Europe,' by Professor Hayes."

+ R of Rs 54:682 D '16 160w

St Louis 14:442 D '16

"Fills a place hitherto left vacant in many a small library. . . . Illustrated by thirty-eight telling maps." B. Lasker

+ Survey 37:499 Ja 27 '17 270w

HAYNES, FREDERICK EMORY. Third party movements since the civil war. $2.50 (2c) Iowa. State hist. soc. 329 16-6948

Begun as one of the studies of the Iowa State historical society, this work was first meant to cover only the third party movements within the state. It was shortly discovered, however, that the scope of the book would have to be broadened. "Accordingly, the final product of the researches of the author is a history of third party movements in the United States since the civil war with special reference to Iowa. That such a volume should emanate from this state is both logical and fitting, since Iowa is in the very heart of the region in which the new movements have originated and has furnished the most capable leadership in such movements." (Editor's introd.) The Liberal Republican movement, the Farmer's movement, the Greenback movement, the Populist movement, and the Progressive movement are studied. Throughout the author emphasizes what he terms "an important but hitherto neglected phase of the history of political parties in the United States," the influence which these movements have had in shaping the policies of the two main parties.

"For the greater part of his general information he has relied upon such contemporary compilations as the 'Annual cyclopedia' and upon secondary accounts whenever available.

. . . In spite of these defects of organization and style, the work is an addition to the literature on the last half-century of American history. It brings together in a single volume a large amount of scattered information little known or used by historical writers, and it makes clear the unity and general significance of the third-party movements." S. J. Buck

+ Am Hist R 22:415 Ja '17 670w

Reviewed by A. C. Millsbaugh

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:784 N '16 320w

"Mr. Haynes's research and careful work deserve praise. An admirable feature is an index so complete as to include references to the leading newspapers and other publications of any significance. This index and preceding notes and references cover nearly one hundred pages." H. S. K.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 26 '16 550w

"The two main points which Mr. Haynes enforces, and the straightforward elucidation of which entitles his book to a place in every well-chosen library of American history, are of fundamental importance, especially at the present moment."

+ Nation 103:511 N 30 '16 1100w

"It contains a most valuable chapter on the Anti-monopoly party in Iowa. . . . Although the specialist in American political history will count the local studies of the greater value, he will find the general surveys of Greenbackism and Populism fresh and informing, because they are based on a new examination of original sources." C. A. Beard

+ New Repub 9:sup22 N 18 '16 600w

"In mentioning these few deficiencies there is no purpose to disparage the rather excellent contribution to the subject which the author has made; but it is perhaps not amiss to point out that he has undertaken the difficult task of covering in a comprehensive manner a broad field, many of whose various aspects and phases have not yet been studied in detail." B. B. Kendrick

+ — Pol Sci Q 26:462 S '16 1050w
R of Rs 53:754 Je '16 140w

HAYNES, WILLIAMS. Casco Bay yarns. il
*$1 (2½c) Haynes 16-15458

Stories and sketches of the Maine coast. Some of them are based on the author's acquaintance with the fishermen and lobstermen of the coast, others are historical tales resulting from researches in the files of the Maine historical society library. Some of them are reprinted from Travel, Outing, Lippincott's, and other magazines.

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 13 '16 190w
+ Ind 87:389 S 11 '16 40w
+ Springfield Republican p15 Ag 6 '16 300w

HAYNES, WILLIAMS. Sandhills sketches. il
*$1 (6c) Haynes 16-14475

A little volume made up of "pages from a note book kept during a winter spent in the Piedmont country of North Carolina." The sketches, written in story form, first appeared in Travel, Forecast, House and Garden, and Outing.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 9 '16 180w
Ind 87:390 S 11 '16 50w

HAYWARD, CHARLES BRIAN. Automobile² ignition, starting, and lighting. il $2 Am. technical soc. 629.2 16-8723

"A comprehensive analysis of the complete electrical equipment of the modern automobile, including many wiring diagrams and details of all the important starting-lighting systems." (Subtitle) Part 1 is devoted to Elementary electrical principles; part 2 takes up Ignition; part 3, Electric starting and lighting systems. The book is illustrated with over 300 figures in the text and is provided with an index.

N Y Br Lib News 3:93 Je '16
N Y P L New Tech Bks p3 Ag '16 90w

HAZLITT, HENRY. Thinking as a science. $*1 (2c) Dutton 150 16-10843

It will be remembered that Arnold Bennett in "How to live on twenty-four hours a day" says in connection with learning to concentrate on a certain subject, "You will not have gone ten yards before your mind has skipped away under your very eyes and is larking round the corner with another subject. Bring it back by the scruff of the neck." Mr. Hazlitt in his stimulating monograph tells how to get one's thoughts by the "scruff of the neck." He prescribes a constructive plan, with methods most approved by our experimental psychologists, for training the mind to become a good thinking instrument. The chapters show the scope of the book: The neglect of thinking; Thinking with method; A few cautions; Concentration; Prejudice and uncertainty; Debate and conversation; Thinking and reading; Writing one's thoughts; Things worth thinking about; Thinking as an art; Books on thinking.

"The same information can be obtained in any good psychology."

+ A L A Bkl 13:103 D '16
N Y Br Lib News 3:91 Je '16
Pratt p6 O '16 20w

"One of the most valuable books recently published."

+ R of Rs 54:122 J1 '16 80w

"The work is far from being a masterpiece, but at least it is intelligent at all times."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Je 11 '16 260w
+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p503 O 19 '16 90w

HEALY, WILLIAM. Honesty; a study of the causes and treatment of dishonesty among children. (Childhood and youth ser.) $*1 (2c) Bobbs 136.7 15-25522

Dr. Healy, in his capacity of director of the Juvenile psychopathic institute and advisor to the judge of the Juvenile court in Chicago, has had unusual facilities for obtaining first-hand information on which to base the conclusions stated in this book. This discussion of honesty and dishonesty in children is particularly addressed to parents and teachers. The significant fact on which the author insists is that the careers of criminals are practically always found to start in the delinquencies of childhood. The first and last considerations are therapy and prevention, and the first requisite of good treatment is to proceed from the misconduct back to the underlying cause. Home conditions and parental behavior; Companionship; Discipline; Amusement and adventure; Habits—mental, physical and social; Abnormal mentality correlated with stealing; Impulsions and obsessions are some of the topics considered. Illustrative instances are frequently given.

A L A Bkl 12:317 Ap '16

+ Dial 61:72 J1 15 '16 170w

+ El School J 16:276 F '16 570w

"He is more effective in case records than in general exposition, but makes clear the complexity of apparently simple problems, the personal habit and social responsibility factors in acquiring this trait."

+ Ind 85:284 F 21 '16 60w
Pittsburgh 21:100 Mr '16

"While thoroughly scientific in method, the author has throughout confined himself to simple and non-technical terms. This is one of the most useful of the recent books dealing with the moral aspects of education." F. W. Johnson

+ School R 24:241 Mr '16 150w

"The book considers, with less detail, the principal subjects treated in his enlarged work, 'The individual delinquent,' and is written with the same kindly sympathy and understanding, which give the reader the full benefit of Dr. Healy's broad, sane and sound observations."

+ Springfield Republican p19 D 19 '15 350w
+ Survey 36:461 J1 29 '16 310w

"A thorough and interesting study. It has value for school principals and teachers and social workers anywhere."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:142 Mr '16 50w

HEARN, LAFCADIO. Appreciations of poetry; selected and ed. with an introd. by John Erskine. $*3.50 Dodd 821.09 16-25166

Like "Interpretations of literature," published in 1915, this volume is based on Lafcadio Hearn's lecture notes prepared for his students in Tokyo university. A particular interest that attaches to them is that they represent an attempt to make English literature comprehensible to the oriental mind. The difference in point of view between East and West is made plain in the chapter "On love in English poetry." Poets treated somewhat at length are Rossetti, Swinburne, Browning, and William Morris, and there are shorter notes on Tennyson, Charles Kingsley, Matthew Arnold, Jean Ingelow and others."

+ A L A Bkl 13:210 F '17

"He is as sound in his analysis of the man as he is vigorous in his understanding of his poetry. . . . Such insight into the heart of English literature as may be found in this volume and its predecessors is exceptional. They form a rare body of criticism and no one who takes them as a companion and guide to his reading will go far astray." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '16 1250w

"As a literary critic, Hearn here shows himself to be more sympathetic and conventional than brilliant. Really original and profound criticism—criticism that throws a light not thrown before—is not to be found here. . . . These lectures, faithfully and admirably adapted to the purposes for which they were composed, seem a little out of place on one's shelves be-

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HEARN, LAFCADIO—Continued side 'Out of the East' and 'Gleanings from Buddha fields.' A. D. Ficke
+ Dial 62:23 Ja 11 '17 990w

HEARNE, R. P. Zeppelins and super-Zeppelins.
il *$1 (3½c) Lane 629.1 16-13186

An English work issued with the purpose of urging Great Britain "to take up the work of airship construction on a scale which will ensure safety and success in future wars." Contents: Is the Zeppelin a failure? The principles of the airship; The history of the Zeppelin; The construction of the Zeppelin; The scope and limitations of the Zeppelin; The Zeppelin in warfare; How to fight the Zeppelin; Air raid precautions; Super-Zeppelins and super-aeroplanes.

"It contains interesting illustrations and diagrams, with a reasonable modicum of numerical and mechanical detail, clearly and easily tabulated."

+ Ath p202 Ap '16 30w

+ Nation 103:137 Ag 10 '16 120w

"Not too technical to be of interest to ordinary readers."

+ N Y Times 21:285 J1 16 '16 330w

+ St Louis 14:382 N '16 10w

"R. P. Hearne once or twice indulges in wild prophecies. He has, however, presented an intelligent and lucid account of the Zeppelin's structure and activities, and his criticisms of the British air service are based on a technical knowledge of air-craft and their uses. Mr. Hearne's candid reflections add spice to his expert information."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 4 '16 480w

HEARTMAN, CHARLES FREDERICK. New England primer printed in America prior to 1830; a bibliographical checklist. (Heartman's historical ser.) il $6 Heartman 016 16-6928

"Paul Leicester Ford, in 1897, produced a sumptuous history of the New England primer, with a reproduction of the earliest known edition of 1727, and a bibliography. Now Charles F. Heartman enters the lists. Mr. Ford's list included primers only up to 1800, thirty-eight being listed as before that date, while references through advertisements are made to forty-eight more. Mr. Heartman's list includes 148 primers supposed to have been printed before 1800, and his check-list enumerates altogether 296 editions."—Boston Transcript

"It is the most important contribution yet made to the genealogy of the famous little book of the early New England child, and it will be appreciated by librarians, bibliographers and collectors everywhere." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 22 '16 920w

HEBBLE, CHARLES ROY, and GOODWIN, FRANK PARKER, eds. Citizens book; pub. under the auspices of the Cincinnati Chamber of commerce. il *$1.25 (2c) Stewart & Kidd 917.71 16-9178

A practical manual full of facts about a city, its community life, its government, and its institutions. Cincinnati has been made use of as a type of community life whose underlying principles and constructive methods are discussed. The divisions of the study are six: Foundations of community life; Protection of life and property; Cultural activities; Business interests; Governmental activities; The future city. The book is fully illustrated.

+ Boston Transcript p9 J1 29 '16 220w

"Is used as the basis of instruction in civics in the Cincinnati public schools."

+ Cleveland p108 Ag '16 40w

"It contains much material never before brought together in a single volume."

+ R of Rs 54:121 J1 '16 50w

"For Cincinnati citizens, but excellent material for any urban high-school class in civics, as laboratory material to be applied to his own city."

+ School R 24:494 Je '16 23w

"The book is marred neither by braggadocio nor by sweeping condemnation: its tone is consistently constructive. Modern civic and social ideas stand out in its pages. Preventive methods are urged in dealing with poverty and crime. Modern ideals of city government are clearly set forth."

+ Survey 36:527 Ag 19 '16 430w

HECKER, JULIUS FRIEDRICH. Russian sociology; a contribution to the history of sociological thought and theory. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) *$3 Longmans 301 15-24567

"The present volume presents the evolution of social thinking in Russia and like all other theory, it reflects the social, political and economic conditions of the country of its origin. Part 1, devoted to 'The beginnings of Russian sociology,' presents the social-political background in general and in particular the effects of Slavophilism and Russophilism and Westernism upon social theory. Part 2 is devoted to an analysis of the principal Russian sociological thinkers whom he designates as subjectivists: Lavrov, Mikholovsky, Youzhakov and Kareyev. Part 3 outlines miscellaneous theories and the present trend in sociological thinking, including a survey of the influence of the Marxists, anarchists, revolutionists." (Ann Am Acad) There is a five-page bibliography of sources for Russian sociology.

"The book is well worth reading, not only because it presents in clear outlines the social, political, and economic theories of different elements in the Russian nation, but also because it illustrates the difficulties and utilities which have beset sociological thought in Russia, as well as elsewhere, when it has not been developed upon a secure basis of established scientific truth. Nevertheless, many of the theories of Russian sociology which Dr. Hecker outlines for us are interesting and carefully worked out, and make us wish that he would soon present in English some of the more valuable of Russian sociological treatises." C: A. Ellwood

+ Am Econ R 6:350 Je '16 320w

"The principal contribution of the volume is not in the presentation of valuable theory so much as its practical demonstration of the influence of objective factors upon subjective reactions." J. P. L.

+ Ann Am Acad 63:294 Ja '16 140w

Ath p427 S '16 100w

"The book should prove valuable to those interested in the material treated but who cannot, owing to difficulties of language, consult the originals which in many cases have not been translated." J. R. K.

+ Int J Ethics 27:121 O '16 170w

+ J Pol Econ 24:618 Je '16 320w

"The first thorough treatment of the subject in the English language."

+ R of Rs 53:117 Ja '16 15w

"The introductory chapter, 'The social political background of Russian sociology,' is really an excellent survey of the more generalized aspects of Russian politics since the days of the Empress Catherine."

+ Springfield Republican p19 D 19 '15 70w

HEDGES, ANNA CHARLOTTE. Wage worth of school training; analytical study of six hundred women-workers in textile factories. (Columbia univ. Teachers college. Contributions to education) il $2 (4c) Teachers college 331.4 15-17063

The preface says: "This inquiry involved seeing twenty thousand girls at work, conferring in detail with foremen, forewomen, and managers, questioning several hundred girls themselves, and making an exhaustive study of 617 questionnaires." The first part of the study is made up of short chapters on: Training girls for wage-earning; Requirements of work on the worker; School requirements; Needs of the factory wage-earner; Method of the inquiry; Statistical procedure; Need for data. Following this comes an analysis, by means of tables and charts, of the results of the inquiry. A very brief bibliography closes the work.

"Statistical methods of enumeration, description, and interpretation are used more elaborately than is usual in such inquiries. The impression is left that the greater interest of the investigator is in the mathematical aspects of her problem, and that the standpoint of foreman and employer is more emphasized than the attitude of the women workers themselves." E. L. Talbert

Am J Soc 21:419 N '15 250w

Ann Am Acad 61:289 S '15 70w

"The book is for the most part made up of intricate and ingrowing statistics which lead nowhere. A more unhelpful contribution to the problem of the vocational education of girls has seldom been made. . . . The fact that the book was written by the state agent for the vocational education of girls helps to lend importance to its contents. One might reasonably expect from these sources a more discriminating view of the industrial relations and the educational needs of the girl wage-earner." Katharine Anthony

— New Repub 8:50 Ag 12 '16 1100w

"The data show low standards both of schooling and of wages, but they do not give sufficient basis for conclusions as to the statistical relation of schooling to earning capacity. . . . Furthermore, the treatment of the material is unnecessarily elaborate in view of the obviously tentative character of the statistics."

— Survey 36:543 Ag 26 '16 330w

HEFT, LOUIS. Holders of railroad bonds and notes. *$2 Dutton 332.6 16-4863

"A useful compendium of information regarding the rights of security holders in reorganizations, consolidations, receiverships, foreclosures, and other proceedings."—R of Rs

"His first three chapters, dealing with the legal phrases of the ordinary issue of railroad bonds, are clear and for the most part very comprehensive. . . . But when the writer comes to the later chapters, dealing with the second set of rights—those to be exercised in case of the bankruptcy of the issuing corporation—he is not so fortunate. The besetting evil is just this over-confidence in legal forms. . . . Besides the author's complacent confidence in legal fictions there are two rather serious faults with the book—its dogmatic tone and the total absence of references." A. S. Dewing

+ — Am Econ R 6:905 D '16 970w

"That any one could write four hundred pages about 'Holders of railroad bonds and notes' and name no road nor cite any decision is very remarkable. Yet Mr. Heft does this and in a book packed with information. But it must be read with care."

+ — Ind 88:75 O 9 '16 70w

"While not written from the economic standpoint at all, it may be of interest to teachers who conduct elementary courses in corporation finance."

+ J Pol Econ 24:919 N '16 60w

"The book may be commended to trustees and those who are charged with the responsibility of investing and keeping invested other people's money. Being wholly without references to either statutes or cases, state or federal, it makes its appeal to others than those of the legal profession."

+ Nation 103:90 J1 27 '16 110w

N Y Br Lib News 3:58 Ap '16 40w

Pittsburgh 21:437 O '16 30w

+ R of Rs 53:508 Ap '16 20w

+ Springfield Republican p7 My 11 '16 370w

HEINE, HEINRICH. Heine's poem, the North Sea; tr. by Howard Mumford Jones. il *$1 Open ct. 831 16-20919

Heine wrote of the North Sea in two cycles. "Die Nordsee, erster cyklus," appeared in 1826, "Die Nordsee, zweiter cyklus" in 1827. Both are included in this volume, the German original and Mr. Jones's translation occupying alternate pages. From the translator's introduction there are many temptations to quote: "It is certainly too much to claim that these sonorous hymns to the sea are the crowning achievements of Heine's kaleidoscopic genius. . . . The sea poems contain few of those lispings, soul-searching lyrics, at once so simple and so difficult, by which English readers know their Heine. . . . If the ocean poems are not Heine's greatest work, they are likely to be his most representative. . . . All in all, it seems to me that more of the strands that are Heine are twisted through 'Die Nordsee' than through any other single production."

+ Ind 89:118 Ja 15 '17 60w

+ R of Rs 54:568 N '16 80w

"Mr. Jones's introduction, in which he gives Heine's literary history and discusses the relative merits of the North Sea poems and Swinburne's verses on the same subject, is a valuable part of the book."

+ Springfield Republican p6 N 21 '16 500w

HELLER, ALBERT HENRY. Stresses in structures; rev. by Clyde T. Morris. il *$2.75 Wiley 624 16-17660

"Those who are familiar with the previous editions of Heller's textbook on 'Stresses in structures' will recognize that several improvements and additions have been made in this (the third) edition. . . . An explanation of the Bow notation for graphical diagrams has been included, and a new article giving the analytic solution for stresses in a derrick introduced. . . . Many of the illustrations have been redrawn and a large number of new diagrams included."—Engin Rec

+ A L A Bkl 13:189 Ja '17

"A special feature of this book, which teachers who may not be familiar with it will find helpful and suggestive, is the great number of questions and problems listed at the end of each chapter to cover the subject treated."

+ Engin Rec 74:568 N 4 '16 250w

N Y Br Lib News 3:154 O '16

HELPS, EDMUND ARTHUR, comp. Songs and ballads from over the sea. *$1.25 Dutton 821

"'Songs and ballads from over the sea' is a compilation of the poems of the British colonial possessions, inspired by patriotic sentiment, that attempts to bring the colonies into a better understanding and closer touch. The fields covered are those of patriotic, legendary, and historical verse, descriptive lyrics, ballads, and poems of the imagination."—R of Rs

"It would not be fair to this interesting anthology to offer it merely as a document in imperialism. No lover of poetry would willingly miss the hundred poets and more whom it sedulously brings to light." F. H.

+ New Repub 8:97 Ag 26 '16 1800w

"Some charming verses by E. Pauline Johnson. 'The legend of Qu' appelle valley' atone for dull pages that would make the volume impossible were it not for the folklore and sociological interest that makes it worth while."

— + N Y Times 21:436 O 15 '16 170w

"Readers may be fairly familiar with much of the Canadian poetry in this volume, but the poetry culled from Australian sources, from New Zealand and South Africa will compensate with its freshness, virility and originality of theme. It is a splendid collection that everyone will like to own."

+ R of Rs 54:567 N '16 110w

HEMENWAY, HENRY BIXBY. American public health protection. *$1.25 (2½c) Bobbs 614 16-9404

A forceful presentation of the need for drastic reform in public health administration. Dr. Hemenway shows that the popular idea that any physician is fitted for public health service is erroneous. Medical schools should offer special courses in public health and sanitation. They cannot do so until there are students to follow such courses, and students will not choose public health work until there is more assurance that they could put their training to profitable use. Therefore it is the public that must demand adequate health protection and see that it is adequately compensated. Public health service and private practice should be divorced. The book is dedicated to the women of America as "the power behind the throne," and credit is given them for much that has already been done. There are chapters on: The development of public health in the United States; National health agencies; Medical and sanitary education compared; Changed social and economic conditions; Changes due to advancement in science; Medical inspection of schools; Organization of health departments; Preparation of officers.

HEMENWAY, HENRY BIXBY—Continued

+ A L A Bkl 13:205 F '17

"Dr. Hemenway's and Dr. Hill's books supplement each other as admirably as if their authors had written with that intention. Dr. Hemenway devotes much attention to the historical development of the idea of making community health a public responsibility and to the development of the forms which that responsibility has taken in recent years. He thinks that a better public understanding is already on the way. His informed, well-balanced survey of the question ought to help much in bringing about that result." M. P. Allison

+ Bookm 43:206 Ap '16 250w

"The book is notably sane, progressive and free from apparent errors. A few sentences on sewerage disposal may mislead the uninformed, chiefly as regards the Imhoff tank."

+ Engin N 76:311 Ag 17 '16 170w

N Y Times 21:303 Jl 30 '16 70w

HENDERSON, CHARLES RICHMOND. Citizens in industry. (Social betterment ser.) $1.50 Appleton 331.8 15-15581

For descriptive note see Annual for 1915.

"It is to be regretted that more literature of the authoritative kind, such as the present volume, is not available for the executive's desk, to fill the need, which Professor Henderson also recognizes, for getting socio-economic facts (meatily arranged, let it be said!) to employers of men. An appended list of establishments in the United States, and certain countries of Europe, in which important welfare work is to be found, together with those referred to in the body of the book, serves as a valuable guide to whomever desires to get into direct touch with the activities to be found in specific localities." H. C. Metcalf

+ Am Econ R 6:167 Mr '16 700w

"The examples are presented with a richness of empirical detail and a care in selection of the relevant that make the book most instructive. The author has had in mind the practical application of his principles to particular cases; and not only the sociologist and social worker, but the employer, most of all, should find the volume of real assistance as an actual guide in the concrete problems of labor and capital."

+ Nation 102:316 Mr 16 '16 400w

"This book not merely describes what is being done, but places the development of the welfare movement in its proper position historically and discusses fully and ably its peculiar value and its limitations." R. M. Haig

+ Pol Sci Q 31:639 D '16 480w

HENDERSON, ERNEST FLAGG. Short history of Germany. 2v *$3.50 (1c) Macmillan 943 16-12242

The first edition, published in 1902, carried the history of Germany to the year 1871. Three chapters have now been added, treating of: Political developments from 1871 to 1914; Economic progress between 1871 and 1914; and Social progress down to 1914. The author says: "In order to avoid controversial matter I have closed the narrative with the murder at Sarajevo."

"It is quite certain that in no general German history in the English language will there be found an equal amount of information touching modern Germany. . . . There is no waiving of the right of criticism and no attempt to conceal difficulties and failures. The Polish, Danish, and Alsatian situations, for example, with their very questionable governmental methods and their occasional crises are set before the reader with fuller detail than is usual even in works that specialize in denunciation." Ferdinand Schevill

+ Am Hist R 22:434 Ja '17 380w

"The chronological table has been brought to date and the index of the second volume revised."

A L A Bkl 13:92 N '16

"As was pointed out in these columns (July 1, 1902) when the work first appeared, the narrative deals with political matters rather than the neglect of a discussion of the country's 'Kulturgeschichte'; but the new material makes up in part for this deficiency by its emphasis on recent economic and social advancement."

+ Dial 61:72 Jl 15 '16 140w

Ind 88:286 N 13 '16 70w

"The original portion of the work has apparently not been touched by revision. Not even verbal changes have been made. . . . It is gratifying to observe that the author's well-known Prussian sympathies and his admiration for German institutions and their efficient working have not led him into special pleading."

+ Nation 103:241 S 7 '16 230w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 Jl '16

N Y Times 21:538 D 3 '16 230w

+ R of Rs 54:348 S '16 90w

"The work is scholarly. It is also alive. If there is anything of stolidity in the subject, it did not effect this history."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ja 5 '17 430w

"Preferable to the shorter histories in most libraries, and not expensive considering the size and value."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 60w

HENDERSON, JOHN BROOKS, jr. Cruise of the Tomas Barrera. il *$2.50 (4c) Putnam 508.72 16-9059

An account of a six weeks' cruise along the northwest coast of Cuba and among the Colorado reefs taken in 1914 for the purpose of studying the land and marine fauna and flora and the salient geological features. The chapters of the book are written up from a diary and field notes kept during the cruise. The volume has many illustrations and sketch maps, a folding map, and a number of color plates.

Reviewed by P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 61:24 Je 22 '16 210w

"The book has uncommonly attractive illustrations."

+ Ind 87:426 S 18 '16 50w

+ Nation 103:88 Jl 27 '16 370w

Nature 97:478 Ag 10 '16 350w

N Y Br Lib News 3:94 Je '16

"An eminently readable narrative."

+ N Y Times 21:356 S 10 '16 480w

R of Rs 53:631 My '16 70w

St Louis 14:391 N '16

"Little of interesting adventure is recorded, and the book's attraction is mainly to those with a leaning, amateur or professional, to the study of zoology and botany, especially the former. In spite of its many technical names and terms, 'The cruise of the Tomas Barrera' has been written in a readable and at times amusing style."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 4 '16 170w

"The diary record of a scientific collecting expedition, the full results of which will eventually be published in the Smithsonian reports."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p311 Je 29 '16 40w

HENDERSON, ROBERT. Mortality laws and statistics. (Mathematical monographs) diags *$1.25 Wiley 368 15-15535

"The purpose of this monograph [is] 'to set forth in concise form the essential facts and theoretical relations with reference to the duration of human life.' . . . The work is concerned with life contingencies, excluding monetary applications. The book begins with brief descriptions of the preparation and use of the mortality tables that have been of greatest importance in the development of life insurance in England and the United States. . . . The work next deals with formulas for the probabilities of life and death and with the mathematical relations between various functions connected with human mortality. . . . The second half of the work is devoted to the construction and graduation of mortality tables from the mortality statistics of general populations and from the mortality experience of life insurance companies."—Am Econ R

"In the development of the necessary formulas the author has kept very close to the applications—a plan which makes this work both readable and very useful. Much is done to render the work concrete by constructing from given census data a northeastern states mortality table and by showing the various steps involved in the construction of the final table. There are given in the appendix to the work ten useful mortality tables." H. L. Rietz

+ Am Econ R 6:187 Mr '16 470w

"Mr. Henderson, who is the actuary of the Equitable life assurance society, has given in this work a description of what mortality tables are and how they are prepared. The methods used are necessarily complicated, and this book is not for the average reader. It will be found interesting and valuable, however, to all who desire to look below the surface of vital statistics and to use the data in the most effective way."

+ Engin N 77:108 Ja 18 '17 200w

"The book is a treatise for actuaries or for mathematicians interested in the theory of probability. The author has excluded the combination of life contingencies with the theory of compound interest, annuities, etc., and has confined himself strictly to life contingencies."

Nature 97:179 Ap 27 '16 100w

HENDRYX, JAMES B. Connie Morgan in Alaska. il $1.25 (2c) Putnam 16-21404

A story of Alaska for boys. Fifteen year old Connie Morgan goes to Alaska alone to find his father. Sam Morgan had been one of the failures of the northland. He had never made a "strike." Nevertheless he held the affection and respect of every man who knew him, and when, after his death, his son comes on his fruitless quest, the men welcome the boy for his father's sake. The story, taken up largely with the adventures of Connie and his partner, Waseche Bill, on a long sledge journey, is full of exciting incident, but it is the relationship between the rough men and the boy that makes it notable among books for young people.

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 44:411 D '16 170w

+ Ind 88:404 D 4 '16 50w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p638 D 28 '16 70w

HENSON, REV. HERBERT HENSLEY. Robertson of Brighton, 1816-1853. il $*1 Dutton (Eng ed A16-1558)

"In commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Dr. Frederick William Robertson, an address was delivered at Brighton on Feb. 3d last by the Rev. H. Hensley Henson, dean of Durham. It is now published in a little volume entitled 'Robertson of Brighton,' for it was in that English seaside town that the celebrated Anglican clergyman preached the doctrines of a broad and human Christianity which aroused both opposition and admiration within his own church. His message, too, went far beyond the four walls in which he delivered it, for his sermons were printed and widely distributed and read not only in England but also in this country."—Boston Transcript

"Dr. Robertson lived and preached for only a few years. He died at the age of thirty-seven with his reputation fully established within a limited circle that has since broadened to include the entire world." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 2 '16 820w

Library Association Record 18:179 Ap 15 '16 10w

"There are few Americans who are able to recall Robertson's great popularity in this country; but it was stated a few years ago that 'something like a quarter of a million copies' of his works had been sold to American readers."

+ N Y Times 21:372 S 17 '16 100w

"What his personality could not do because of its weaknesses—a nervous vehemence, a portentous lack of humour, an inability to suffer fools—his Brighton preaching and in due time his published sermons easily accomplished. They made him universal, a possession for all time. . . . [Among clergymen] Robertson stands out supreme, for he preached his Master's message all the time."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p147 Mr 30 '16 770w

HENSON, REV. HERBERT HENSLEY. War-time sermons. $*1.50 Macmillan

"The sermons in the volume by the Dean of Durham have been preached since the war began. In some of them the lessons of the war form the principal subject; in others the war is felt as a background suggesting a special application of the particular Christian message." (Spec) "Perhaps the most valuable, certainly one of the most striking, of these 'War-time sermons' is that preached last autumn in St. Margaret's, Westminster, upon 'the functions and future of national Christianity.' The reversion in Germany to a national, or, as some prefer to term it, a 'tribal' form of religion is well understood in this country. A similar reversion, although not so logical and complete, is not unknown elsewhere." (Sat R)

+ Nation 103:329 O 5 '16 150w

N Y Times 21:167 Ap 16 '16 30w

"The Dean of Durham is intellectual, and his methods are intellectual. He realises to the full that patriotism is always perilous in the Christian pulpit because 'Christianity is not a national religion and can never tolerate any national limits to its message.'" Bishop Frodsham

+ Sat R 121:230 Mr 4 '16 930w

"All are concerned with practical rather than philosophic questions, and all are marked by clear thinking and lucid exposition. At a certain point in most of them the thought quickens, and the language rises to eloquence."

+ Spec 116:336 Mr 18 '16 210w

HERBERT, GEORGE. English poems; newly arranged in relation to his life, by G. H. Palmer. il $*2 Houghton 821 16-2244

George Herbert Palmer's larger and more elaborate edition of the poems of Herbert is a work for scholars; he has prepared this smaller book in the hope of introducing Herbert to a larger public. The groping man of today, he says, should find much in common with this seventeenth century poet. "The double-mindedness of this stormy and introspective young man, too long mistaken for an aged and passionless saint, fits him peculiarly for companionship with our uncertain generation." The poems are arranged in twelve groups, "based partly on history, partly on subject-matter." For each group there is a brief preface. "By this simple means a chaotic mass of enigmatic verse is turned into a human document permeated with the life of a high-bred, hesitating, intellectual, and consecrated soul." (General preface)

N Y Br Lib News 3:44 Mr '16

HERBERT, SYDNEY. Modern Europe, 1789-1914. $*1 Macmillan 940.9 16-22819

"Mr. Sydney Herbert's book is one of facts, not of opinions. . . . The book is not intended for students of history, but for the general reader desiring an outline of the historical happenings in Europe that brought about the situation out of which the present war was precipitated."—N Y Times

"It is crisp, clear, and skilfully proportioned and arranged. In the first fifty pages the au thor shows how the great French ideas of liberty, democracy, and nationality arose and spread, and how they helped Napoleon's rise and fall. He then explains, as fully as is possible within the brief remaining space of two hundred pages, how the internal histories of the various European states since 1815 have affected their external relations, and how these in turn have influenced domestic development. . . . Incidentally he gives expression to much sound political philosophy. That he follows quite closely some of the best chapters in Lavisse and Rambaud's excellent 'Histoire générale' is a partial explanation of his successful condensation of a vast subject. His bibliography, however, neglects some of the best and most recent books."

HERBERT, SYDNEY—Continued

+ Nation 103:241 S 7 '16 180w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16

"Its accuracy recommends it to the seeker after information."

+ N Y Times 21:322 Ag 20 '16 160w

+ Pittsburgh 21:585 D '16 70w

HERDMAN, MARIE LOUISE. Story of the United States. il *$2.50 (1c) Stokes 973 16-18625

This volume belongs to a series of Children's histories of great countries. Other volumes published include "An island story," by H. E. Marshall, and "The story of France," by Mary MacGregor. The aim in each case is to write a narrative history that will interest young people. The author of this book has drawn on many sources, and she says, "My hope for this 'Story of the United States' is that it may help to quicken interest in the growth of our great republic, and that it may lead, at least a few, young readers into that fascinating realm of literature which deals with the development of our country." The story covers the period from the landing of Columbus to the present.

"An excellent child's reference book."

+ Ind 88:404 D 4 '16 30w

"A straightforward and excellently framed narrative. It avoids too much of a political cast and lays stress on events solely from the standpoint of Americanism."

+ Lit D 53:1562 D 9 '16 120w

+ R of Rs 54:570 N '16 90w

"It is given somewhat strongly to heroics, but perhaps this can scarcely be called a fault in a history for very young people. One might have expected, however, something of the modern point of view, at least on the revolutionary war period. It is not to be found here. The old prejudices are carried, though perhaps not viciously."

+ — Springfield Republican p14 D 9 '16 160w

HERMS, WILLIAM BRODBECK. Medical and veterinary entomology; a textbook for use in schools and colleges, as well as a handbook for the use of physicians, veterinarians and public health officials. il *$4 Macmillan 591.6 15-25091

"A large, well-illustrated and competent book of about four hundred pages, written by a man who has been investigating and teaching the general subject for six years or more at Berkeley. . . . Although the author states that his book is not intended to be a comprehensive treatise, but is rather an attempt to systematize the subject and to assist in securing for it a place among the applied biological sciences, it has greatly the appearance of comprehensiveness. The whole field is included in the treatment, and of course for the purposes of the volume the ticks and mites are among the subjects treated. There is also a chapter on venomous insects and Arachnids."—Science

+ Nature 98:386 Ja 18 '17 460w

"His chapter on the stable fly (Stomoxys calcitrans) is also strong, and his conclusion to the effect that it is doubtful that this species is the usual agent in spreading polyomyelitis in nature is based upon a careful series of experimental laboratory work with this species and monkeys." L. O. Howard

+ Science n s 43:27 Ja 7 '16 830w

HERRICK, CHARLES JUDSON. Introduction to neurology. il *$1.75 (2c) Saunders 611.8 15-22242

"The materials presented in this book are arranged in three groups: (1) Chapters 1 to 7 discuss the more general neurological topics; (2) Chapters 8 to 18 comprise a brief account of the form of the nervous system and the functional significance of its chief subdivisions in general, followed by a review of the architectural relations of the more important functional systems; (3) Chapters 19 to 21 are devoted to the cerebral cortex and its functions." (Preface) "Professor Herrick has given a full account of the minute and gross structures of the nervous system and a statement of the most significant teachings of nerve physiology. All this he has been able to do in a language which will not be confusing to the elementary student." (El School J) Each chapter is followed by a bibliography of the special subject under discussion. There is an Index and glossary.

"The illustrations are excellent. The information with regard to the activities within the nervous system is derived from the most recent works. The book is therefore likely to supersede such books as Donaldson's 'Growth of the brain,' which has long been used in teachers' courses."

+ El School J 16:225 Ja '16 250w

"The researches which have been brought together in this volume cover an immense reading; the references amount to many scores of contributions, and the book will be of great value to those who seek for an exact knowledge and a succinct account of the nervous system. . . . The book is concise and scientifically accurate, but owing to its extreme technicality it is difficult to read except by the expert anatomist or the senior advanced student. It certainly should be in the hands of every teacher of psychiatry."

+ Nature 97:497 Ag 17 '16 1050w

"The material is arranged with unusual skill and the presentation is masterly. The distinction is less in the freshness of the facts than in the selection made and the clarity of exposition displayed." P. G. Stiles

+ Science n s 43:431 Mr 24 '16 340w

HERRICK, CHRISTINE (TERHUNE) (MRS. JAMES FREDERICK HERRICK). A-B-C of cooking. (Harper's A-B-C ser.) *50c (2c) Harper 641.5 16-10500

This book on the A-B-C of cooking opens with a chapter on Furnishing the kitchen. This is followed by considerations of: Ordinary methods of cookery; Food and work; Soups, broths, fish; Choice and cookery of meats and poultry; Cheese, eggs, vegetables; Bread-making; Sweets of different kinds; Canning, preserving, pickling; Left-overs and their uses. This is not a book of recipes. Principles of cooking are discussed in a simple manner and various ways of treating different foods suggested.

"Tells just the things an inexperienced housekeeper wants to know a dozen times a day."

+ Springfield Republican p17 My 19 '16 80w

HERRICK, ROBERT. Conscript mother. *50c Scribner 16-11230

"In 'The conscript mother' Mr. Herrick shows how the scythe of war can turn a happy, commonplace little family into the dramatic personae of a heroic tragedy. Signora Maironi's complete self-abnegation in her desire to see her son once more before he enters battle and her simple, straightforward appeal, 'I am an Italian mother,' moves the reader as it did the sentries and commandants who let her through the lines."—N Y Times

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '16 360w

"Between the covers lies all the spirit of Italy at war and the spirit of those mothers whose boys go to fight for their country."

+ Ind 87:316 Ag 28 '16 40w

+ Lit D 53:76 J1 8 '16 100w

"Mr. Herrick walks the brink of the sentimental precipice, but his foothold is artistically secure."

- + New Repub 9:224 D 23 '16 180w
- + N Y Times 21:314 Ag 13 '16 130w
- + Spec 117:738 D 9 '16 50w

HERRICK, ROBERT. World decision. $1.25 (2c) Houghton 940.91 16-2390

Mr. Herrick's book on the war is divided into three parts, Italy, France, America. He was in Italy at the time when that country decided to enter the struggle and the first, and longest part of the book is devoted to vivid descriptions of scenes during those critical days. From Italy he went to France, and in the second part of the book he offers his tribute to the French spirit. France has learned what he calls the "German lesson," the lesson of organization for efficiency. England, which has not learned it, is still "muddling along." Part 3 is devoted to brief chapters recording his impressions on returning to America. The administration is criticised, the pacifists are scored, the purifying effects of war are extolled, and we are warned against emulation of Germany and the adoption of German ideals.

"The chapters have decided literary quality and contain many delightful references to things other than war. Selected from articles published in the Chicago Sunday Tribune."

- + A L A Bkl 12:377 My '16

"Written in a passionate, forceful style, but its chief value is rather in its description of conditions, men, and races than in its discriminating analysis of the forces and motives underlying the world war." K. F. G.

- + Ann Am Acad 65:312 My '16 130w
- Bookm 43:10 Mr '16 110w

"The whole of 250 pages are animated by a crystal vision, written with great force and convincing argument, and are filled with such incontrovertible proof of the American danger that if the nation would read 'The world's decision' there could not but be a different chapter of history to that which is about to be made. Mr. Herrick illuminates the situation over and over again. Will anybody heed the light?" W. R. B.

- + Boston Transcript p22 Ja 26 '16 800w

"Mr. Herrick writes with deep sympathy for the Italians; passage after passage is winged with patriotic and poetic fancy, and he has, as far as our knowledge goes, presented Italy's case in its best light."

- + Cath World 103:261 My '16 350w

"One feels he falls short of producing a work of great war literature. [For] great war literature must present both sides with impartial judgment."

- + Ind 87:102 Jl 17 '16 180w

"Readers will agree as to the literary merit of Mr. Herrick's war-book, his facility of expression, and his command of forceful English, but only sympathizers with the Allied cause, with complete indifference to the 'other side' could rest absolutely content with his verdicts on events of the last two years. If Mr. Herrick knew Germany and the Germans as well as he does the French from actual experiences, instead of hearsay, he might not designate them, as he does, as 'Barbarians,' for whom he has only words of contempt, wholesale condemnation, and a verdict of complete annihilation. His plea is that we should support the Allies and 'make ours a Latin rather than a Teutonic world.'"

- + Lit D 52:736 Mr 18 '16 500w

"Written with gravity, deliberation, and a concern for permanent values."

- + Nation 102:523 My 11 '16 280w

"He gives us a different kind of war book, one is concerned very little with scenes and events between the contending armies and very much with the struggle between nations and civilizations. Mr. Herrick sees the whole war as primarily a struggle between Latin and Teuton ideas and ideals, and his comparison of the two racial spirits which runs all through the book and his discussion of what they mean for this country are of timely interest and deep significance, and come evidently out of the depths of heartfelt conviction."

- + N Y Times 21:27 Ja 23 '16 750w
- + R of Rs 53:380 Mr '16 60w

"The book has limitations, and its judgment betrays an unexpected bias. Why has Mr. Herrick chosen to ignore the significance of Russia's part and England's part in the great conflict? He avers that it is primarily a struggle between the Latin and Germanic ideals. All else is shown to be relative and accidental. The war found Mr. Herrick in Italy. Is that why he sees everything Latin? His narration of the reaction that spread through a nation, upon the news of the sinking of the great liner, will take a permanent place in the history of the war."

- + Springfield Republican p17 Mr 12 '16 580w
- + Wis Lib Bull 12:185 Ap '16 90w

HESS, HERBERT WILLIAM. Productive advertising. il $2.50 Lippincott 659 15-24227

"This book has been written with the idea of giving to the beginner in advertising a logically discussed text, which includes: first the psychology of advertising; second, the typography of advertising; third, the English of advertising; fourth, the economic implications of advertising; and fifth, throughout the entire work there is insisted upon, a certain philosophical interpretation of all the principles involved." (Preface) The illustrations, particularly those showing color-printing processes, are worthy of special note. The author is assistant professor of commerce in the Wharton school of finance, University of Pennsylvania.

"The reviewer suggests that in the next edition the author eliminate or rewrite that portion of the volume devoted to the History of advertising. Advertising items in ancient Greece, Rome, Egypt and Jerusalem . . . are of no value to the advertiser of today. The author would have done better to trace briefly the market changes following the industrial revolution. . . . I would commend this book to instructors desiring a teachable text. It should be used as a beginning text and followed by the application of its principles in the practical problems of a constructive advertising campaign." J. R. Turner

- + Am Econ R 6:379 Je '16 530w

"Treats both theory and practice comprehensively and definitely from the viewpoint of the student, instructor, or advertising man seeking a logical development of the whole subject in textbook form. A useful stress is laid on the importance of absolute honesty in advertising. Interesting chapters consider the legal analysis of the trade-mark and discuss and illustrate the use of color in advertisements."

- + A L A Bkl 12:269 Mr '16

"The author deals with his subject in a thoroughly practical fashion."

- + N Y Times 21:278 Jl 9 '16 60w

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY. Frey and his wife. il $1 (4c) McBride 16-7919

A second time Mr. Hewlett dips into Scandinavian mythology for material for romance. This is a merry tale of the days of Olaf Trygvasson, a tale of Gunnar of Norway who did not take kindly to a change of religion, who fell into disrepute and crossed over into Sweden, where he attached himself to the household of the pagan god, Frey. Now Frey was a wooden creature with staring, unwinking eyes, but the wife of Frey, Sigrid, was of flesh and blood, and young and far as well as Gunnar, the driver of Frey's ox-cart was well aware. And how Gunnar, who looked very godlike himself, came to play the part of Frey in an emergency, of the miracles he wrought, of his marriage with Sigrid and their acceptance of Christianity, Mr. Hewlett tells with all the simplicity and vigor such a tale requires.

- + A L A Bkl 12:481 Jl '16

"It is a curious tale, rather vague, rather poetic, a little incomprehensible, and ending with a pretty bit of wit." P. G. Hubert, jr.

- + Bookm 43:541 Jl '16 120w

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY—Continued

"An extremely slight and slender tale in which Mr. Hewlett is not averse to entertaining us with occasional farcical scenes and episodes." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 15 '16 1100w

Reviewed by E. E. Hale

+ Dial 60:554 Je 8 '16 190w

+ Ind 86:342 My 29 '16 100w

"In outlandish and obsolete setting he encases an idyl of rare purity and charm."

+ Nation 102:595 Je 1 '16 350w

"The love story is a true one, where a man's heart and a maid's heart find each other straight across much trouble and difficulty. That the story is written with color and charm cannot be doubted, since the man who wrote it knows the magic of words."

+ N Y Times 21:146 Ap 16 '16 1100w

"Its relative brevity is a condition of bringing the plot to perfectly-balanced completion. Mr. Hewlett never slurs a single detail contributing to the inception of motives, or hampers or hastens the leisurely, logical growth of these motives into events."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Ap 16 '16 270w

"As vigorous as a slightly archaic style, honest Anglo-Saxon, and primitive manners can make it. It must have been a joy to write. And what was a joy in the writing makes crisp, short reading. It is a merry, headlong, genial, little story, neatly constructed and vividly told."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p106 Mr 2 '16 450w

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY. Gai saber; tales and songs. *$1.75 Putnam 821 16-17516

In two of the longer poems in this book Mr. Hewlett retells old tales that gave him the subjects for his prose romances, "A lover's tale" and "Frey and his wife." Other poems have their inspiration in Greek mythology, and there is a translation of Book III of the Iliad. The final group of poems, "War rimes," are reprinted from English periodicals.

"Most of the contents mingle realism and commonness with poetry and vision, the primitive with the ultra-modern, in a highly characteristic way."

+ Ath p284 Je '16 170w

"Untroubled by mystical visions, by any imperative command to be a realist and tell the bitter truth, or by any philosophy whatever, he simply pursues beauty wherever it be discovered, especially in the eternal feminine."

+ Ath p323 Jl '16 820w

Boston Transcript p7 N 4 '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:485 N 12 '16 800w

"Now it is a truant, trysting soul that haunts his poetry, now a very modern intellect. But whether Mr. Hewlett be one I or many, the accent is unmistakable, and everywhere lurks the essential faith in all religions."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Je 8 '16 1250w

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY. Love and Lucy. *$1.35 (2c) Dodd 16-18028

The story of a husband and wife who fall in love with one another has been told by Mr. Hewlett in this new novel. James and Lucy Macartney after thirteen years of married life are very good friends, or, as Mr. Hewlett puts it, "why not say, old acquaintances?" Then came the kiss in the dark. Lucy thought her husband had kissed her and thrilled at the thought of so romantic a situation after a dozen years! Later she learns that it was not her husband, but the mischief has been done; Lucy is in love with her husband and the awakening of a like ardent passion in the staid and stately James is the sequel.

+ A L A Bkl 13:124 D '16

"The characterization is brilliant."

+ Ath p480 O '16 90w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:262 N '16 420w

"The story partakes of farce, and it is only made readable by the undeniable grace of its style. Despite that, however, it frequently becomes unspeakably dull."

+ Boston Transcript p8 S 30 '16 1200w

"Throughout this story sentimentalism runs riot, and the unchristian doctrine of the end justifying the means seems to merit hearty approval."

+ Cath World 104:398 D '16 100w

+ Lit D 53:1338 N 18 '16 240w

"If Mr. Hewlett has ever done anything more delightfully characteristic than this, we do not recall it. . . . It is a cunning and delicious bit of romantic comedy."

+ Nation 103:443 N 9 '16 460w

"The book is staccato; it is the frothiest kind of light fiction. But it is 'done' with consummate skill by a professional author, and as a professional author Mr. Hewlett has his indisputable claims."

+ New Repub 9:164 D 9 '16 220w

"In a book of this kind, purely psychological, with little of what may be termed external incident, everything of course depends on the skill with which the characters are presented. And Mr. Hewlett has done his work exceedingly well."

+ N Y Times 21:373 S 24 '16 750w

Outlook 114:521 N 1 '16 270w

"'Love and Lucy' exhibits in a marked degree the author's characteristics. It is precious, mannered, and elusive. Those who dislike Mr. Hewlett's work will find in its exotic exuberance more than usual cause for discontent, while his admirers may point to it as one of the most triumphant products of their writer's pen. . . . It is the style, not the story, that is the thing."

Sat R 122:350 O 7 '16 650w

"The story is told with all of Mr. Hewlett's characteristic suavity; the dialog is pointed and often epigrammatical, and the book is entertaining. But it is—a trifle."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 8 '16 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p472 O 5 '16 870w

HEWLETT, MAURICE HENRY. Song of the plow. *$2.50 Macmillan 821 16-22278

"The song of the plow," a title which from a sense of decorum has been substituted for "The Hodgriad," is the history of Hodge's ten centuries of servitude. . . . Mr. Hewlett gives us the argument of his poem, stripped of episodes, in the Aristotelian manner:—"A certain man, being in bondage to a proud conqueror, maintained his customs, nourished his virtues, obeyed his tyrants, and at the end of a thousand years found himself worse off than he was at the beginning of his servitude. He then lifted his head, looked his master in the face, and his chains fell off him." (Ath) "There is a prelude in which the author depicts Hodge as the man on the hill. Then there are twelve books dealing with twelve great periods in the history of Hodge and, finally, an envoy with a vision of England after the present war is over." (Bookm)

"A satire rather than an epic, something more like the 'Margites' and 'Hudibras' than the 'Iliad' or 'Æneid'; but it is a notable work."

+ Ath p528 N '16 270w

"Hewlett, the aristocrat in the use of language, the painter of sophisticated heroes and heroines, here reveals himself as democrat, as patriot and as humanitarian. . . . There is so much that is fine in the spirit that animates his poem, so much real love of the common man, so much passionate truth, that it would be an evil day for England if it were to fail of recognition." Milton Bronner

+ Bookm 44:479 Ja '17 3700w

"The author reasons well. He prefigures with skill and sincerity. But why has he utilized rhythm to express his message . . . It is interestingly conceived; it is handled earnestly, but it is a ponderous, slow-moving piece of work, lamentably lacking in feeling, sonority, or beauty."

+ N Y Times 22:14 Ja 14 '17 200w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 22 '17 1000w
 "If Mr. Hewlett had contrived to convey some of his own heat into his lines, 'The song of the plow' might really have been an epic. . . . Here the argument remains a collection of picturesque description, medieval colour, constitutional history and democratic sentiments."
 + — The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 N 9 '16 1000w

HIBBERT, HENRY GEORGE. Fifty years of a Londoner's life; with a preface by T. P. O'Connor. il *$3 (4c) Dodd 792
 (Eng ed 16-26996)

Titles chosen at random from the table of contents will indicate the nature of these reminiscences: An old stock company; Of critics, old and new; The story of the music hall; Music hall society; East End entertainments; The lost theatres of London; Half-a-century of song; Ballets and ballet dancers; Feverish first nights; Memorable productions, etc. The author is a London journalist whose profession and inclinations have kept him in close touch with the theater and his book, "into which he has concentrated thousands of articles contributed to various journals," is based largely on his memories of the stage and of stage people. In addition there is a chapter entitled "In a provincial newspaper office" which gives an account of J. M. Barrie's beginnings as a journalist. There are eighteen illustrations.

+ A L A Bkl 13:158 Ja '17
 + Ath p230 My '16 900w

"The East and the West meet and fraternize in his pages. Englishmen, Americans, Bohemians and people of a dozen other nationalities appear and disappear. Newspapers, society journals and magazines come to life and die; theatres rise and fall; actors, singers, dramatists and managers grow affluent and famous or sink into poverty and obscurity, and Mr. Hibbert as he tells their tale of happiness or woe goes merrily on his way to the end of a volume that is completed all too soon." E. F. E.
 + Boston Transcript p8 O 4 '16 1000w

+ Dial 61:472 N 30 '16 210w
 + N Y Times 21:446 O 22 '16 150w
 + Spec 116:636 My 20 '16 90w

"He discloses good taste and an unbiased mind. He is apparently to be credited with veracity as well as vivacity."

+ Springf'd Republican p13 N 19 '16 1500w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p199 Ap 27 '16 1150w

HILL, DAVID JAYNE. Americanism; what it is. *$1.25 (3½c) Appleton 321.8 16-14345

Americanism is a general term used loosely by many people. The author of this book is explicit in its use; to him it means the fundamental difference between the American conception of the state and the European conception. This conception as embodied in the constitution was once endangered by conflict between the states; at present it is endangered by class conflict. Contents: The American conception of the state; The crisis in American constitutionalism; Taking soundings; The tests of American democracy; Americanism and world politics; The duty of national defense; New perils for Americanism.

"Will appeal specially to readers of conservative views."

+ A L A Bkl 13:61 N '16
Am Pol Sci R 10:756 N '16 260w

"The first chapter, on 'The American conception of the state,' is a notably clear, simple, and forceful exposition of fundamental American ideas. It ought to be printed in booklet form and studied by boys and girls in their teens in every school in the United States. Nor could those who are attempting to teach our aliens the significance of American citizenship find a better means." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 44:68 S '16 750w
 + — Ind 88:167 O 23 '16 70w
 + Lit D 53:1185 N 4 '16 450w

"While we sympathize fully with Mr. Hill in his keen and vigorous criticism of current political tendencies, we cannot think that his analysis quite reaches the heart of the matter."

The second part of Mr. Hill's book is a vigorous plea for preparedness, diplomatic and economic as well as military and naval, as the only means by which American democratic ideals can be maintained. . . . The most sincere opponent of national defence may well ponder what is here set down."

+ — Nation 103:377 O 19 '16 900w
New Repub 7:255 Jl 8 '16 1250w

"A sound, stalwart deliverance upon national and international affairs was wanted, and the demand has been supplied. Every voter in the approaching campaign should read it. Speakers and publicists should study it."

+ N Y Times 21:277 Jl 9 '16 1400w

"The volume has the merits of a good textbook—plainness, a methodical treatment, an avoidance of obscuring side-issues. But if Dr. Hill's treatise is elementary enough to prompt the thought that it might be studied with profit by high-school students or young men in college, it is by the same token profound enough to claim the attention of every thoughtful citizen of the United States. The usefulness of such a book is obvious."

+ No Am 204:298 Ag '16 1350w

Reviewed by T. R. Powell
Pol Sci Q 31:619 D '16 440w

+ R of Rs 54:349 S '16 30w
 + Wis Lib Bull 12:451 D '16 50w

HILL, HIBBERT WINSLOW. New public health. *$1.25 (2½c) Macmillan 614 16-3155

The original articles that form the basis for this book were written in 1911 for the Minnesota State board of health, of which the author was then a member, and published in the Journal-Lancet of Minneapolis. They were reprinted by more than 1000 newspapers in the United States and Canada and were later issued by the Journal-Lancet in book form. They have now been revised and expanded for republication. The book is concerned chiefly with infectious diseases. The new public health of which it treats has to do with the changed attitude of the last decade toward infection and the control of epidemics. "The old public health was concerned with the environment; the new is concerned with the individual. The old sought the sources of infectious diseases in the surroundings of man; the new finds them in man himself."

Reviewed by Irving King

+ Am J Soc 22:97 Jl '16 430w

"A valuable little book, presented in everyday language for the layman. Full table of contents, but no index."

+ A L A Bkl 12:323 Ap '16
Am Pol Sci R 10:581 Ag '16 250w

"A remarkably fresh, racy and stimulating discussion of one of the most important questions of the time will be found in this little volume. By the use of satire, ridicule and humor the author takes the public to task for its failure to protect its health and for its dependence on old superstitions rather than technical knowledge. The foibles of the medical men are not slighted, but the result is a book which must be read to be appreciated. . . . The volume will be of immense value to the layman as well as to the administrative officials of schools or towns." C. K.

+ Ann Am Acad 66:264 Jl '16 250w

"In particular, it ought to be taken up and studied by all the women's clubs from end to end of the country. For the women, especially the mothers, declares Dr. Hill, are chiefly responsible for the continued domination of the human race by infectious diseases." M. P. Allison

+ Bookm 43:205 Ap '16 570w
Boston Transcript p9 S 20 '16 320w

"The book is written in lively style and may be recommended to health officers as suggestive

HILL, HIBBERT WINSLOW—Continued and stimulating, and to laymen or social workers as distinctly informing."

+ Cleveland p91 J1 '16 140w (Reprinted from American Journal of Public Health)

"The new publishers have greatly improved the typography and general makeup of the book."

+ Engin N 76:121 J1 20 '16 100w

Ind 86:344 My 29 '16 90w

"The only criticism of it that might be passed is that the casual reader might gather that such factors as garbage heaps and ill ventilation are of little moment to the public health, whereas actually the author indicates that they are not to be neglected, though their importance and significance are very different from what used to be considered to be the case."

R. T. H.

+ Nature 97:460 Ag 3 '16 300w

N Y Br Lib News 3:46 Mr '16

"The volume is one of very great importance to the general public."

+ N Y Times 21:54 F 13 '16 1000w

R of Rs 55:221 F '17 60w

St Louis 14:187 My '16 20w

"Just what action to take in specific cases the author has not much to say about. His book is not a health manual."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Mr 6 '16 290w

"The most comprehensive recent book which is both popular and authoritative. No index."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:144 Mr '16 70w

HILL, JOHN PHILIP. Federal executive. *$2
(3½c) Houghton 353 16-8495

"The change in the federal executive is one of the most remarkable things in the history of the nation," says the author, whose purpose it is in this book to trace that change as it has affected all the federal departments. Beginning with the organization of the different departments he follows their development and shows how their expansion has come about gradually and naturally to meet the requirements of the expanding nation. The last chapter sketches probable developments in the federal executive. These will take the form, the author thinks, of the creation of new departments and of "reorganization and coordination of function" in the case of those already in existence.

"On the historical side the reader will look in vain for any careful and well-sustained consideration of the office of the President. . . .
To the scholar this volume is of no importance.
It is likely to mislead less well-informed readers. On both the historical and administrative sides it is shallow." H: B. Learned

— Am Hist R 22:175 O '16 710w

A L A Bkl 13:9 O '16

"It does not fulfill the publisher's announcement that it is a 'complete history' of the subject. Some of the omissions are notable, even in a volume of this size. There is no mention of Miss Hinsdale's 'History of the President's cabinet,' nor of Gaillard Hunt's 'Department of state.' There is one reference to national banks, but no account of the system of government control nor of the comptroller of the currency or the federal reserve board. Something is said about most of the presidents and a number of department heads; but many of the most significant do not appear." J: A.
Fairlie

— + Am Pol Sci R 10:782 N '16 420w

"For some reason he fails to note the need for a Department of colonial affairs. The book, while adding little that is new, is a valuable compilation of information. Like most books of its kind, however, it fails to give any adequate idea of the actual working of the administration." R. G. G.

+ — Ann Am Acad 67:314 S '16 200w

"Within its limited scope the work is well done. It is doubtful whether the subject matter bears out the claim that the volume is related to the question of preparedness." Lindsay
Rogers

+ Dial 61:135 S 7 '16 530w

J Pol Econ 24:831 O '16 200w

— + Nation 103:379 O 19 '16 410w

+ N Y Times 21:277 J1 9 '16 480w

"An illuminating study of the growth of the executive power in this country. Of special pertinence at this time are the author's discussion of the executive power in relation to military preparedness and suggestions for adding to the efficiency of the national government."

+ R of Rs 54:118 J1 '16 43w

HILL, LEWIS WEBB, and ECKMAN, RENA S.
Starvation treatment of diabetes; with an introd. by R: C. Cabot. $1 Leonard 616.63
15-25088

"This second edition of the small manual which appeared last summer gives a more detailed account of the very successful treatment devised by Dr. F. M. Allen, as that treatment has been applied in one of the medical services of the Massachusetts general hospital in Boston, and is now being followed also at the Children's hospital. The general principles of the treatment are founded on getting patients sugar-free by an initial period of fasting, and then giving slowly increased food that is kept within the individual limit of sugar and starch tolerance."—
Boston Transcript

"The book is unusual, among other reasons, for providing the patient at home with a very full list of diets and cooking directions; it is possibly unique in giving the protein, fat and carbohydrate content of every familiar food, and also the energy values in calories, for definite small quantities which can be measured out in the home. An introduction by Dr. Richard C.
Cabot testifies to the merits both of the book and of the treatment which it sets forth."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 26 '16 150w

"The complete details of the treatment given here by Dr. Hill, and the diet lists by Miss Eckman, make the work extremely valuable to both physician and patient."

+ Springfield Republican p17 Mr 30 '16 750w

HILL, MABEL, and DAVIS, PHILIP. Civics for new Americans. il *80c Houghton 353 15-18618

"A valuable handbook, published to the end of developing 'better standards of living and a clearer understanding of the opportunities of democracy and the higher ideals of citizenship.'
It is arranged in the form of lessons, with lists of questions. The appendix contains 'A final word to new Americans,' information as to how to become a citizen of the United States and other useful matters."—R of Rs

+ R of Rs 53:116 Ja '16 120w

"It would be desirable if a copy of 'Civics for new Americans' could be presented to all immigrants who have learned to read English and placed in the hands of everyone who desires to teach good citizenship."

+ R of Rs 53:508 Ap '16 90w

"The most complete work for the purpose, based on the practical experience of civic workers in Boston. In language and subject matter it is designed to form a consecutive course with Miss O'Brien's 'English for foreigners.' Fully illustrated and admirable in type and binding."

+ Wis Lib Bull 11:328 N '15 40w

HILTON-TURVEY, CAROLL BREVOORT.
Van Haavens. il *$1.35 (1c) Small 16-18560

The day after young Willoughby Van Haaven is suspended from college he quarrels with his uncle Pemberton, the head of the family, and sets out in the world to make his fortune. He doesn't make it and when Bella MacFallon, up in a little Canadian town, persuades him that duty demands that he go back to his family he takes her advice and returns to New York to shoulder business responsibilities. His days with tramps and lumber jacks have had a salutary effect on him and he sees the social circle in which the Van Haavens move in a new light.
In fact the purpose of the story, which moves along the lines of two love affairs, is to expose social shams.

A L A Bkl 13:221 F '17

- + Boston Transcript p9 S 2 '16 900w
- + Nation 103:610 D 28 '16 260w
- + N Y Times 21:356 S 10 '16 480w
- + Springfield Republican p15 D 10 '16 390w

HIME, HENRY WILLIAM LOVETT. Origin of artillery. *$2 Longmans 662.3 16-8714

"Col. Hime quotes evidence to show that guns were invented by a German monk in 1313, exported to England in 1314, and first brought into the field in 1327. What these early pieces must have been like, we may see from the frontispiece of the book, taken from an illuminated Latin MS, belonging to Christ Church, Oxford, and of date 1327, the earliest known representation of probably the earliest piece of artillery. The remainder of the book is devoted to the history proper of gunpowder, and of the various kinds of artillery ammunition down to, say, a century ago." (Nation) "Part of this volume is a revised reprint of the author's 'Gunpowder and ammunition'; the remainder is based on a paper which he contributed to vol. 31 of the Journal of the Royal Artillery." (Spec)

"The author has kept closely to his subject, and, avoiding non-essential details, has given a clear exposition of the methods used for throwing heavy stones, incendiary matter, etc., at the enemy, showing the development of modern gunnery from these early beginnings."

- + Ath 1915,2:147 Ag 28 200w

"This new work of his is merely the old one revised, increased in bulk slightly, in interest greatly, by the addition of a chapter on the origin of cannon. There is nothing to indicate that its publication is due to a desire to take advantage of the present feverish interest in affairs military; it is simply that the old edition is out of print; a new one would be called for even if profound peace reigned over the world. The book is handsomely printed and has a sufficient index."

- + Nation 102:139 F 3 '16 1350w
- N Y Br Lib News 2:170 N '15 80w

"Lieutenant-Colonel Hime is probably the classical authority on the historical problems which he discusses."

- + Spec 115:247 Ag 21 '15 60w

HINCHMAN, WALTER SWAIN. American school. (American books) *$1 (2½c) Doubleday 379.17 16-2420

A volume devoted to the problems of the secondary school, both public and private. Contents: The parent and the teacher; Education; The pupil and the school; What the schools do; Teachers; Some American traits; The school of to-morrow; The teacher problem; The curriculum; Methods; Athletics; Morality and religion. The author is English master in Groton school.

- + A L A Bkl 12:318 Ap '16

"The whole programme is a rational one. It takes cognizance of changing national ideals and promises to meet the need of the new America. And it is not at all unlikely that the successful school of tomorrow will be about as Mr. Hinchman has described it." H. T. C.

- + Boston Transcript p23 F 2 '16 550w
- + Cleveland p28 Ap '16 50w

"Mr. Hinchman's central idea is 'growth by production.' His proposal to reduce beginning salaries in order to increase those farther on is likely to lead to misunderstanding."

- + Ind 86:28 Ap 3 '16 50w

"A chapter on methods digests, though without credit to Wirt, Dewey, and others, many of the recent ideas for the derivation of the greatest mental discipline from a given course through what Mr. Hinchman calls 'growth by production.' The point of view in this, as in the chapters upon athletics and morality and religion, is, on the whole, well balanced. Upon some topics treated the book naturally wants adequacy."

- + Nation 102:172 F 10 '16 330w
- + N Y Times 21:153 Ap 16 '16 50w
- Pittsburgh 21:110 Mr '16
- School Arts Magazine 15:766 Je '16 30w
- + Springfield Republican p15 F 13 '16 400w

"The central idea is excellent." Elizabeth Hodgson

- + Survey 37:281 D 9 '16 520w

HIND, ARTHUR MAYGER. Van Dyck; his original etchings and his iconography. il *$5 Houghton 767 16-1775

"The less than two dozen etchings in the series known as the 'Iconography' which can undoubtedly be ascribed to Van Dyck himself take their place in the front rank of portrait etchings of all time. Our present writer describes them as, in spite of imitations, 'incisive, convincingly direct,' and 'among the most masterly plates produced in the whole history of portrait etching.' . . . More particularly has Mr. Hind been concerned with Van Dyck's attitude towards the 'Iconography,' with the method of production of the plates, and with the justice of certain attributions. . . . Numerous illustrations give valuable aid in the work of comparison and collation. They are printed on small rectangles of thin paper tipped at the top to the larger pages of the book."—Nation

"Mr. Hind—who is of the department of prints and drawings in the British museum—informs us that there is under his charge a collection of twenty-one etchings which are undoubtedly the work of the Flemish master. . . . This work of Mr. Hind with the profuse illustrations which accompany it was first published in the English Print Collectors' Quarterly about a year ago and is now republished in revised form and in a limited edition under a copyright procured by the Boston museum of fine arts."

- + Boston Transcript p22 Jl 5 '16 400w
- + Nation 102:628 Je 8 '16 370w

HIND, CHARLES LEWIS. Soldier-boy. *75c (4c) Putnam 940.91 16-14624

A collection of brief sketches in which an Englishman voices his country's feeling of gratitude and devotion to the boy soldiers who are doing the fighting. Slight as the sketches are, they are eloquent with tenderness.

- Army and Navy Journal 53:1513 Jl 22 '16 60w
- + Cleveland p121 Ag '16 20w
- + Ind 87:348 S 4 '16 70w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:120 Ag '16 40w
- R of Rs 54:237 Ag '16 20w
- Springfield Republican p13 N 19 '16 140w

HINDENBURG'S march into London; tr. from the German original; ed. by Logan Marshall, with a preface by L. G. Redmond-Howard. pa 50c (1c) Winston 940.91 16-8809

A curious piece of literature, interesting only as a revelation of the psychology of a nation at war. It is of recent date and is said to have had a phenomenal sale in Germany. It describes the crossing of the channel, the march on London, the attack, and the ensuing surrender and subjugation. The happy and victorious Germans sing a hymn of praise and return to their homes. A reign of world peace follows. Germany too, it seems, is fighting a "war to end war."

"The usual malignity is displayed towards everything English. We have remarked before on the lack in Germany of what is called a 'sense of humour,' and this is not only a failing but also a powerful agent for failure. In the first place, it is disastrous to underestimate the qualities, good as well as bad, of hostile nations; in war, as in peace, the only guide to lasting success is a sound appreciation of one's rivals."

- Ath p119 Mr '16 180w

"Through it runs, with its streak of sentimentalism, a most extraordinary brutality. . . . As a literary work this book is negligible. But its success and popularity in Germany has stamped it as one of the strangest revelations of a nation's soul ever written."

- N Y Times 21:148 Ap 16 '16 800w
- Springfield Republican p15 My 15 '16 110w

HIRSCHFELD, GEORG. Mothers; tr. and with an introd. by Ludwig Lewisohn. (Drama league ser. of plays) *75c (4c) Doubleday 832 16-13165

This German drama was written and produced in 1896 and has since attained a permanent place in the repertory of the German theater. The scene is laid in Berlin, but not in "the brilliant metropolises of the night cafés, and Max Reinhardt's theatres and Richard Strauss's music," says the introduction. "It is the older Berlin which has continued to exist in the great art-centre and imperial capital: the peculiar Prussian city with its rather rigid middle class and its exuberantly characteristic common people, with its very marked folk-ways and folk-speech." As in many of the Ibsen plays the action has taken place before the rise of the curtain. The death of a harsh, over-bearing father has opened the way for the return of the son who has been banished from home. The immediate conflict comes between the mother and sister who want him back and the young girl of the lower classes who has given him her love and protection in his exile. That it is the instinct of motherhood in the girl which prompts her to sacrifice herself gives the final touch of significance to the title.

"The play is more than all praiseworthy in this, that it has created definite and real human beings, whose problems are as real and whose decisions as difficult as are to be discovered in actual life."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 11 '16 430w

"A careful and sympathetic study. . . . Of the four Drama league plays, this would, I am sure, make the widest appeal to American readers. It is not, perhaps, a better play than 'The apostle,' but it is freer from handicaps." H. E. Woodbridge

+ Dial 62:69 Ja 25 '17 200w

"The tragedy is genuine, severe, uncompromising. The ending is tragically happy."

+ Ind 87:104 J1 17 '16 60w

"It is difficult to discover the object of the Drama league in selecting this play for publication. . . . There are pages where the impatient reader waits for the rescue of the thread of the story during a long, melancholic drive about canaries, coffee, crooked spines, and corsets. It is this childish insouciance of naturalism, this blundering between serious and sombre, between significant and insignificant themes, that so utterly bewilders the reader."

— Nation 103:67 J1 20 '16 1100w

N Y Br Lib News 3:108 J1 '16

Springfield Republican p8 Je 23 '16 60w

HITTI, PHILIP KHURI, ed. Origins of the Islamic state. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) *$4.50 Longmans 939.47 (16-10766)

"This work is a translation by Philip Khuri Hitti, the Gustave Gottheil lecturer at Columbia, of the 'Kitab Futuh Al-Buldan,' an Arabic authority for the period when the Arab state was in the process of formation." (R of Rs) "Al-Baladhuri was a Persian, born in Bagdad, and died in 892. . . . He is considered the most illustrious of the Arabic historians, and his chief work is Futuh al-Buldan, of which the present volume is a digest. It is almost entirely devoted to military and political history. . . . The volume is divided into ten parts, giving the history of as many different countries: Arabia; Syria; Mesopotamia; Armenia; Northern Africa; Andalusia; Islands of the sea—Sicily, Rhodes, Arwad, and Crete; Nubia; Persia; and Media. The work has never been translated before into English." (Boston Transcript)

"The attentive reader by his study of this Moslem historian of the ninth century will ever after have a better understanding of the problems which confront the student of early Moslem history." J. R. Jewett

+ Am Hist R 22:431 Ja '17 430w

"The book is well indexed."

+ Ath p437 S '16 190w

"English students of the Near East will count themselves fortunate to have this work, which is in fact a source-book, translated and annotated by a scholar who is a native of the Near East. There is a very full index which adds to the value of the work."

+ Boston Transcript p7 J1 1 '16 420w

+ R of Rs 54:345 S '16 120w

"Dr. Hitti's fine sense for the niceties of Arabic expression has enabled him often to overcome difficulties insurmountable to one not an oriental."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 8 '16 150w

HOAR, ALLEN. Submarine torpedo boat, its characteristics and modern development. il *$2 Van Nostrand 623.8 16-18778

"Mr. Allen Hoar, seeking to give the characteristics and development of 'The submarine torpedo boat,' writes for both the layman and the designing constructor. Touching very lightly on the history of earlier inventions, he devotes an interesting chapter to the types in use by the belligerents in the present war, and he gives a condensed account of their exploits."—Nation

"A copious index and many illustrations make the reader's path easy and agreeable."

+ Nation 103:568 D 14 '16 200w

N Y Br Lib News 3:170 N '16

"Reviewed in Marine Journal, Oct. 14, 1916."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p16 N '16 100w

HOARE, HENRY JOSEPH. Old age pensions. 3s 6d P. S. King & son, London; for sale by Survey associates 331.25

(Eng ed 16-9393)

"The practical working and ascertained results of the British Old age pensions act of 1908 and the Amending act of 1911 are here examined in an interesting and able manner. The effects of the various conditions relating to the age, nationality, residence, and means of would-be pensioners are shown and the disqualifications stipulated in the acts are discussed. It is found that in spite of apparently cumbersome machinery the working has been so smooth that few practical amendments can be suggested."—J Pol Econ

"It is a compact and clear picture which Mr. Hoare presents. He has raised no large questions of principle; he has made no comparisons with the institutions of other countries. We have had other accounts of the English act much more pessimistic than Mr. Hoare's, but I am not sure that they have been better grounded than his. It is not to belittle his contribution to say that profounder studies are desirable before we confidently assess the merit and rank of the English legislation." R. F. Foerster

+ Am Econ R 6:176 Mr '16 1250w

"Information that has hitherto been inaccessible to students of the problems involved in state provision for old age is for the first time made available. The author is a lawyer who served before the outbreak of the war (at present he is serving with the British army) as clerk for one of the local pension subcommittees for London." E. Abbott

+ Am J Soc 22:277 S '16 410w

"This is one of the first volumes to reach America which gives an account of the actual working of the old age pension system adopted in England in 1908. The method of the author is to discuss the treatment of cases of applicants showing the interpretation put by the authorities upon the questions of age, residence and nationality, income, assistance from private or public relief agencies. Though he may thereby make the discussion 'practical and human,' as he claims, he greatly minimizes its value for the foreigner who is not so much interested in administrative details which naturally turn largely on purely local conditions." C. K.

+ — Ann Am Acad 64:241 Mr '16 180w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 14:443 Ja '16 60w

"The book is not political and should be interesting to administrators and students of social affairs. Little is said concerning the fundamental economic and social considerations involved in old-age pensions: but special attention is paid to grievances and hardships that have occurred in the actual working out of the acts."

+ J Pol Econ 24:208 F '16 160w

N Y Br Lib News 3:24 F '16

"The book will prove of considerable practical value to all who are trying to draw workable pension acts for American states." I. M. Rubinow

+ Survey 35:438 Ja 8 '16 520w

HOBHOUSE, LEONARD TRELAWNY, and others. Material culture and social institutions of the simpler peoples, an essay in correlation, il *2s 6d Chapman & Hall, London 15-19922

"The authors classify all existing primitive races according to the degree of their economic culture, from the Lower hunters to the Higher agriculturists. Then they institute a statistical enquiry as to the number of tribes at each level possessing some particular institution, such as a system of government or justice, a marriage custom, a method of warfare, their object being to throw light on the question whether the figures will warrant any correlation of a given practice with a given stage of culture."—Int J Ethics

"No one who wishes to generalize about the ethical evolution of mankind can afford to neglect this painstaking piece of sociological research. The London School of economics is to be congratulated on this, the third of its sociological monographs." S. W.

+ Int J Ethics 26:144 O '15 150w

"Full tables of all the data used are given, and there is a complete bibliography. The book is absolutely essential to the student of social evolution. It breaks fresh ground and consolidates new positions."

+ Nature 95:672 Ag 19 '15 200w

"The application of statistical methods to such essentially fluid subject-matter must always be cautiously watched but this study is of undeniable value for students of the origins of social structure in uncivilized communities."

+ Spec 115:185 Ag 7 '15 230w

HOBSON, MRS. ELIZABETH CHRISTOPHERS (KIMBALL). Recollections of a happy life; with an introd. by Louisa Lee Schuyler. *$1.25 (2½c) Putnam 16-21958

Altho these recollections were written and first published for private circulation only, they have several claims to public attention. First, Mrs. Hobson led an adventurous life. As a girl she rounded the Horn in a sailing ship, she twice crossed the Isthmus of Panama and she spent her early married years in South America. Further, she led a life that was full of useful activity, having been instrumental in establishing the Bellevue training school for nurses, in addition to other philanthropic endeavors. And finally, hospitality and social intercourse, in New York, Washington and Europe, had a large part in her life and her memoir is filled with anecdotes and stories of the men and women who have been her friends. The chapters of the book were written in 1911 in her eightieth year. She died in 1912.

+ Dial 61:471 N 30 '16 200w

+ Ind 88:239 N '16 180w

+ N Y Times 21:550 D 10 '16 770w

"Altogether, this fragmentary story of a happy, quietly eventful, characterful life, is superior to most autobiographies in charm and in essential value."

+ No Am 204:946 D '16 820w

+ R of Rs 54:682 D '16 60w

"Some absorbing anecdotes are related in connection with the great ones the writer has met."

+ Springfield Republican p8 N 24 '16 350w

HOBSON, JOHN ATKINSON. New protectionism. (Cobden club pub.) *$1 (4½c) Putnam 337 (Eng ed 16-18051)

A book looking forward to trade relationships after the war. The "new protectionism" is the proposed policy of curtailing Germany's trade, with the hope of thereby holding her in subjection. The author scores the advocates of this policy in no uncertain terms: "The single fact which ought to guide us in our interpretation of the new protectionism is that the moving and moulding spirit is the evident desire of groups of business men to exploit the emotions of friendship and antagonism generated by the war and the immediate economic exigencies of the situation, in order to get a public policy which will yield them private profit." (Preface) Contents: The revival of protectionism; Defence and opulence; The tangles of a tariff; Protection no defence; Navigation laws; How to meet trade aggression; The case of agriculture; Free trade as a policy; The open door.

"Especially encouraging is the opposition of British publicists like Mr. Hobson and Lord Bryce, and, it now appears, Lloyd George, to the blind and narrow policy of the Paris conference. . . . For all those concerned on either side in this contest Mr. Hobson's little volume possesses great interest."

+ N Y Times 22:4 Ja 7 '17 820w

"Mr. Hobson's argument is a boomerang which turns and hits him badly. It is a good example of the hypnotic influence of the constant repetition of a formula or shibboleth on a disputant."

— Sat R 122:396 O 21 '16 230w

"Everything that comes from Mr. Hobson's fluent pen is marked by vigour and acuteness. He knows his own meaning, and expresses it in terse, aggressive terms. . . . He expresses clearly the fallaciousness of regarding nations as trading units or of separating the interests of sellers from those of buyers. But in this, as in some other of Mr. Hobson's more elaborate works, may be noted a proneness to look only, and intently, at one side of complicated problems, and to ascribe mainly to selfish motives conduct and policies in part at least to be otherwise explained."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p386 Ag 17 '16 920w

HODGES, ARTHUR. Pincus Hood. il *$1.40 (1c) Small 16-18485

Pincus is an art dealer who keeps a little shop on upper Sixth avenue. He is a friend to all struggling artists and the characters in this story of New York life are drawn largely from the studios and art colonies. Pincus is a man with a big idea. He wants to establish a free art gallery where young and unknown painters may exhibit their pictures. This is his great scheme for the assistance of his young artist friends. But the idea requires patronage and money, and members of the idle rich are thus drawn into the story. Like many other schemes that are taken up by Society, it is shortly dropped, but there is promise at the end that the dream is to be realized after all, altho Pincus himself doesn't yet know it.

"Too long drawn out to be of compelling interest."

+ — A L A Bkl 13:124 D '16

"What gives it charm is its wholesome humor and kind feeling. We have been hearing a good deal of 'glad' books—here is one which possesses the appreciable merit of escaping silliness and sappiness." H. W. Boynton

+ Bookm 44:262 N '16 370w

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 7 '16 250w

+ Ind 88:330 N 20 '16 30w

+ Nation 103:351 O 12 '16 350w

"The novel lacks plot, lacks verisimilitude, lacks coordination. There remain—characters that are interesting if not entirely real, a readable style, and a sprinkling of unmistakably American humor."

+ New Repub 9:224 D 23 '16 180w

"A pleasant, unpretentious, rather amusing little story."

+ N Y Times 21:402 O 8 '16 450w

"Undeniably a likable book. Whatever deficiencies he may have as a novelist, Mr. Hodges is fortunate in the possession of one quality that is none too common; he has an abiding faith in the reality of his people, and a genuine love for them." F: T. Cooper

HODGES, ARTHUR—Continued

+ Pub W 90:837 S 16 '16 430w

+ Springfield Republican p15 O 15 '16 210w

HOFFMAN, FREDERICK LUDWIG. Mortality from cancer throughout the world. Il Prudential press, Newark, N. J. 616.9 16-13333

Mr. Hoffman, statistician for the Prudential insurance company and chairman of the Committee on statistics of the American society for the control of cancer, has brought together all the information concerning cancer that is now available thru the reports and investigations of insurance companies, our own federal and state governments, and those of some of the foreign countries. The material is arranged in nine chapters with the statistical tables grouped at the end in appendixes. The chapters consider: The statistical method in medicine; The statistical basis of cancer research; The increase in cancer; Mortality from cancer in different occupations; Cancer as a problem in life insurance medicine; The geographical incidence of cancer throughout the world; The statistical data of cancer frequency in American states and cities; The statistical data of cancer frequency in foreign countries; Some general observations and conclusions on the cancer problem. The work is offered "with the compliments of the Prudential, to medical libraries, members of the medical and surgical professions, and to all others especially interested in the cancer cause and the problem of cancer control."

"Perhaps the most complete record of the sum total of statistical knowledge concerning any one malignant disease. . . . The book will undoubtedly prove of value both to medical and life insurance professions."

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ag 7 '16 100w

"Should be in the possession of all who are interested in the investigation of malignant disease." W: H. Woglom, M. D.

+ Survey 37:178 N 18 '16 210w

HOFMANNSTHAL, HUGO HOFMANN, edler von. Madonna Dianora; tr. from the German by Harriet Betty Boas. (Contemporary dramatists ser.) *75c Badger, R: G. 32 16-4262

This play, translated from the work of a modern German dramatist, is a variation of the theme that has served as a basis for other dramas with an Italian setting. Browning's "Ring and the book," Stephen Phillips's "Paola and Francesca." It records one brief, sharp scene between husband and wife just after he has found her waiting to receive her lover.

"Some of the lines show real poetic ability, but on the whole the verse is a little stiff, perhaps because of the translation. The play itself is picturesque and the action swiftly unfolded."

+ Ind 87:104 J1 17 '16 60w

N Y Br Lib News 3:122 Ag '16

Springf'd Republican p13 Ag 20 '16 130w

HOGAN, LOUISE E. (SHIMER) (MRS. JOHN L. HOGAN). Diet for children. *75c (1½c) Bobbs 613.22 16-5161

A valuable handbook for mothers, teachers, nurses, physicians and every one who directs the feeding of children. It is scientific, sensible and concise and aids efforts "to exercise intelligence and judgment in the selection and preparation of foods indicated for various ages and varying conditions of illness and convalescence." Menus and recipes for all ages of both well and sick children add to the practical value of the book.

"Mrs. Hogan has devoted many years to the study of children, with especial reference to their diet, and has written a half dozen or more books upon that and allied subjects. This authoritative little manual is the outcome of her scientific study and practical experience and observation."

+ N Y Times 21:260 Je 25 '16 180w

HOLBORN, IAN BERNARD STOUGHTON. Children of fancy. *$2 Shaw, G. Arnold 821 16-21079

A book of poems by the author of "The need for art in life." "An air of mystery pervades 'Children of fancy,' and gives attraction, apart from the verses, to its 251 pages." (Boston Transcript)

"We find the poems in this volume dated from many parts of the world, often from steamships in mid-Atlantic, but the most characteristic expression is that which flows from Scottish associations and affection. The poems are almost wholly objective, full of observant interest in the things of fact in human experience. The body of the verse is so sound, that a little warmth, a little rapture, a sensuous rather than intellectual emotion would have transformed its pallor into complexion, its movement into animation." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 12 '16 400w

"A volume richly bound in blue and gold, containing poems full of Celtic fire and Celtic melancholy. The author appears to be a man who writes for his own pleasure, rather than with a view to magazine publication, and this accounts for the intensely personal character of much of his work. He is particularly skilful in delineating the wilder aspects of nature."

+ Lit D 52:443 F 19 '16 600w

"Mr. Holborn's poetry is delicate, musical, rhapsodic; filled with a vague haunting of undefinable beauty that can never be embraced in words. It is a book of poetry for poets."

+ R of Rs 53:375 Mr '16 160w

+ Springfield Republican p8 J1 6 '16 260w

HOLCOMBE, ARTHUR NORMAN. State government in the United States. *$2.25 (1c) Macmillan 353.9 17-51

"Has the time come for discarding the eighteenth century doctrine of the division of powers?" This is one of the fundamental questions which the author, assistant professor of government in Harvard university, considers in this book. "This book is designed to furnish a critical analysis of the principles of state government in the United States. Beginning with a statement of the principles upon which the governments of the original states were established, it explains how the original forms of government have developed in response to changing conditions, how the present state governments are meeting present needs, and concludes with a brief consideration of some of the contemporary plans for further reform." (Preface)

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 27 '17 590w

HOLLAND, REV. HENRY SCOTT. So as by fire. pa *40c (1c) Young ch. 940.91

Papers written during the progress of the war make up this book. To reconcile the war with the principles of Christianity and to offer consolation and encouragement to those who face its terrors and losses seem to be the author's primary aims. He writes on Christianity and war; The Christian temper in war; The war—a war of ideas; Why does not God stop the war? The sermon on the mount; Armaments as insurances; Prayer for victory, etc.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 26 '16 250w

"Here is a little great book that soldiers ought to carry in their kits. There are seventeen brief chapters big with courage and thought and faith."

+ Sat R 120:115 J1 31 '15 400w

"In all there is the accustomed torrent of fine rhetoric; and in all some intellectual position, which the rhetoric, by attack or defense, is seeking to make good; so that the reader has always the sensation of being at the centre of forces hurrying him along to a goal. But while some of the essays produce conviction, others, it may be through the reader's fault, fail to do so."

+ Spec 117:447 O 14 '16 390w

"A brilliant exposition of the present war, from the point of view of the Christian philosopher."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Mr 27 '16 160w

HOLLAND, RUPERT SARGENT. Historic events of colonial days. (Historic ser. for young people) il *$1.50 (2c) Jacobs 973.2 16-22318

The author has selected dramatic episodes from colonial history and has brought them together in a book for young people. Contents: A Puritan hero; Peter Stuyvesant's flag; When Governor Andross came to Connecticut; The struggle between Nathaniel Bacon and Sir William Berkeley; An outlaw chief of Maryland; In the days of witches; The attack on the Delaware; The pirates of Charles Town harbor; The founder of Georgia; The Green Mountain boys and the Yorkers. Each of these narratives represents a different colony and they are arranged in chronological order so that they form something of a record of colonial history from 1630 to 1774.

+ Lit D 53:1613 D 16 '16 50w

+ R of Rs 55:107 Ja '17 10w

"The book deserves a popularity which it is safe to predict."

+ Springfield Republican p15 D 17 '16 150w

HOLLEY, HORACE. Read-aloud plays. *$1 Kennerley 812 16-23426

"In the long run, everything human rises or falls to the level of speech. The culminating point, even of action the most poignant or emotion the most intimate, is where it finds the right word or phrase by which it is translated into the lives of others." In his introduction the author thus explains the idea that lies back of these little plays. He started out to write them as short stories but found that at crucial moments they ran to dialog, so has written them wholly in that form. The plays are: Her happiness; A modern prodigal; The incompatibles; The genius; Survival; The telegram; Rain; Pictures; His luck.

"We have found all the plays in this little volume dull, vague and wholly lacking in power to hold our attention."

— Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '17 170w

HOLLINGWORTH, HARRY LEVI. Vocational psychology, its problems and methods. (Conduct of mind ser.) *$2 Appleton 16-15688

"This book is a development from the material presented by the author in a course on 'Psychological tests in vocational guidance and selection,' conducted in Teachers college, Columbia university. It contains matter that will interest students and teachers of psychology, all who are concerned in helping young people choose their vocations, business men who wish to know how to select their assistants and employees, and individuals who desire to make reliable self-appraisements." (N Y Times) "A chapter contributed by Mrs. Hollingworth makes a study of the aptitudes of men and women." (Dial)

A L A Bkl 13:56 N '16

"Professor Hollingworth's book is in substance the first to set forth the scientific basis of vocational fitness; if it fails to go as far as one could wish, it lays the foundations solidly and shows how cautiously one must proceed. It is at once a review of methods and results and a guide to the study of aptitudes."

+ Dial 61:215 S 21 '16 310w

"The book is written in a style which is intended for business men as well as for teachers. . . . The impression which a reader gains from this book is that the possibility of determining with any degree of definiteness the psychological background for entering any vocation is still remote. . . . There is recognition in the book of the necessity of another type of study, namely, a careful examination of the industries, such as was made in the Minneapolis survey."

+ El School J 17:227 D '16 480w

Ind 88:204 O 30 '16 200w

N Y Br Lib News 3:141 S '16

+ N Y Times 21:441 O 22 '16 90w

Pittsburgh 21:594 D '16 50w

"A word of commendation must be said for the lucid and careful style of Prof. Hollingworth. It is a readable book for even an average student."

+ Springfield Republican p13 N 19 '16 180w

"The bibliography in the appendix is very well selected, but shows signs of haste in preparation, since some references are incomplete and others are inaccurately stated." H. T. Woolley

+ Survey 37:280 D 9 '16 460w

HOLLISTER, HORACE ADELBERT. High school and class management; with introd. by L. D. Coffman. *$1.25 Heath 379.17 15-24811

"The work is divided into three general parts. The first shows the evolution of the high school, and gives a brief history of the development of its function, together with a suggestive outline of factors which the author believes will be prominent in bringing about further development and give the high school a wider scope of usefulness in the community. The second part consists of a very comprehensive discussion of the general management of the modern high school. . . . Part three deals with class management and the technique of teaching. . . . There are excellent chapters on class management and the technique of teaching, the teaching of English, the teaching of foreign languages, the teaching of mathematics, the teaching of history, and the teaching of science, each elaborated by means of copious notes."—School R

"The most complete treatise on the subject that it has been my pleasure to read. Very much unlike many efforts of the kind, it contains matter of real interest for the teacher, principal, superintendent, school-board member, and even for the teachers' agency. The style is simple and interesting, the subject-matter vital, and the presentation clear and concise." B. F. McCormack

+ School R 24:480 Je '16 450w

HOLLOPETER, WILLIAM CLARENCE. Hay-fever; its prevention and cure. *$1.25 Funk 616.2 16-15913

"Dr. Holo peter is a Philadelphia practitioner of high standing, who writes here as a specialist only because he has had, as he says in his preface, 'remarkable and uniform success with a simple treatment of hay-fever for the last twenty years.' He is familiar with the bibliography of his subject; his list complete fills over forty pages of the book. He quotes freely from men who have written authoritatively on hay-fever. . . . His book is intended for laymen as well as for physicians, and every victim of hay-fever may read it with whatever satisfaction is possible until he is relieved of the scourge."—Lit D

Ind 87:426 S 18 '16 60w

+ Lit D 53:755 S 23 '16 370w

N Y Br Lib News 3:139 S '16

N Y Times 21:371 S 17 '16 40w

+ R of Rs 54:349 S '16 120w

HOLME, CONSTANCE. Home coming. *$1.40 (1½c) McBride 16-10725

The house of the Huddlestons stands in the English North country, the hills behind it, the sea before. A fate hung over it and its inmates, brought by a ship of the Spanish Armada. From that ship was washed ashore a young Spaniard who married the daughter of the house, and from a Spanish ship came too a flock of Spanish sheep. Always, when in a descendant, the Spanish strain appeared, the call of the sea and the south was too strong for the English countryside to hold him back and he wandered far. Always when death awaited the owner of the house the sheep came pattering down from the fells. This story tells how Rowland Huddleston, with an English squire's sense of duty to his county, tried to stick to his work and wear out the curse, of how Spanish Luis dared it in the open sea and of how, when the appointed time came, death and the sheep awaited each.

HOLME, CONSTANCE—Continued

"Unusual in plot and execution but with a limited appeal."

+ A L A Bkl 13:84 N '16

"The home coming" is most certainly literature and good literature. Miss Holme's character drawing is superb."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Je 24 '16 370w

"The literary feat here accomplished is a rare one. A novel of modern manners is woven around a ghostly family tradition. . . . The unifying element is the author's sure understanding of the spirit that is England. It makes her work a national interpretation, the more veracious and complete because so beautifully touched with the legendary hues of tragic romance."

+ Nation 104:134 F 1 '17 90w

"The land has more personality than those who are described as dwelling upon it. Miss Holme evidently knows and loves the beautiful country of which she writes, and she draws many exquisite pen-pictures of it. In spite of its too great length and the marked decline of interest toward the end 'The home coming' is an artistic and worth-while novel."

+ N Y Times 21:202 My 14 '16 730w

"A well written and leisurely developed story."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Je 18 '16 260w

HOLMES, ARTHUR. Backward children. (Childhood and youth ser.) *$1 (1½c) Bobbs 371.9 15-24519

Feeble-mindedness is merely touched on in this book; its concern is with the temporarily backward child and his training. It is based on inductive study and many of the cases that provide the author with his material are described in some detail. It is a book for both parent and teacher. Contents: Measuring rods for children; Varieties of backward children; Typical retardation due to physical defects; Minds in straight jackets; Bad and backward; Retardation due to environment; The backward child in the home; The clinical diagnosis of backward children; The teacher's diagnosis; The teacher and equipment for a special class.

+ Am J Soc 22:102 Jl '16 250w

"Full of interest, suggestion, and can not fail to be helpful to the trainer of children."

+ A L A Bkl 12:264 Mr '16

"This compact book should be in the hands of every teacher of children, whether in public, private, correctional or institutional school. It gets at the root of problems."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 18 '15 190w

Cleveland p3 F '16 70w

"It is open to the charge of undue simplification, and of being superficial in the desire to be light and intelligible. It reflects much reading, but little critical ability. For those with modest demands, it promises a profitable service."

+ Dial 61:32 Je 22 '16 130w

"In this work the most valuable part results from the use of the case method."

+ Ind 85:235 F 14 '16 80w

Pittsburgh 21:111 Mr '16 60w

"This book ought to teach readers both how to get along without a mental specialist when he is not needed, and how to co-operate with him when he is needed."

+ Survey 36:209 My 20 '16 280w

"Preferable to the more technical works, such as the author's 'Conservation of the child,' for the average library."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:142 Mr '16 60w

HOLMES, EDMOND GORE ALEXANDER. Nemesis of docility. *$1.75 Dutton 914.3 (Eng ed 16-18505)

"What Mr. Holmes calls 'The nemesis of docility' is a study of German character, the latest investigation into the psychology of nations, one of the many attempts to find the central impulse, the dominant trait of character, of an entire people." (The Times [London] Lit Sup) In earlier books, among them "What is and what might be" and "The tragedy of education," the author has attacked the English system of education on the ground that it is mechanical and inimical to free development. His attitude toward the so much more oppressive German system may readily be divined.

+ A L A Bkl 13:169 Ja '17

Ath p418 S '16 1600w

Boston Transcript p8 O 21 '16 660w

+ — Dial 61:403 N 16 '16 220w

Ind 88:26 O 2 '16 170w

"Mr. Holmes's sober and thoughtful book is not a first-hand contribution to our knowledge of the ethical condition of Germany, but a review or appraisal of the rapidly-growing literature upon that country." M. J.

+ Int J Ethics 27:126 O '16 290w

"Well-written and fascinating book."

+ Lit D 53:1181 N 4 '16 400w

"While we are inclined to regard the author's survey as one-sided, and his interpretation in terms of the 'ultra-docility' formula overstrained, we feel that he has powerfully presented part of the truth, and driven home the salutary moral: 'Eas est et ab hoste doceri.'"

+ Nature 97:299 Je 8 '16 330w

"The acceptance of an author's hypothesis may well be a matter of personal opinion. The reader may quarrel outright with the present writer's major premise, disagree with his original statement that the Germans are docile on the one hand or dogmatic on the other. But there is no quarreling with the book's absorbing interest or with the sheer charm of its logic."

+ N Y Times 21:404 O 8 '16 1100w

"Among all the books that have lately, in sorrow or in anger, laid bare the German soul, few will be found more interesting or more attractively written than this."

+ Spec 117:78 Jl 15 '16 470w

"It may be that the literary value of the book is in excess of its value as a discussion of national character. The argument is too subtle, too complete, indeed too brilliant to be without need of modification."

+ Springfield Republican p6 S 18 '16 820w

"The book is instructive, and it goes far deeper into the true causes of the great schism in civilization than is usual in discussing it. There are, however, sides of Mr. Holmes's theme upon which he throws little light."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p314 Jl 6 '16 950w

HOLMES, FREDERICK LIONEL. Regulation of railroads and public utilities in Wisconsin. (Appleton's railway ser.) *$2 (2c) Appleton 385 15-20573

"A detailed account of ten years' progress in railroad and public-utility regulation by a state commission that was one of the pioneers in its field and has won over by its practical achievements the coördination of many of the corporations that are under its supervision." (R of Rs) "The aim of this volume," to quote the author, "is to present the important facts of this history of railroad and public utility regulation; to analyze the chief problems confronting this system of control and to measure the accomplishments, industrially and politically." (Ann Am Acad)

"Mr. Holmes, having been a member of the Wisconsin legislature which framed the laws regulating public utilities, naturally claims too much for his state. He ignores almost completely the previous activities of the Interstate commerce commission and of the Massachusetts and New York railway commissions." A. M. Sakolski

+ Am Econ R 6:115 Mr '16 550w

"Complete, scientific yet popularly written. Adapted to classes in economics and to serious general readers."

+ A L A Bkl 12:265 Mr '16

"A valuable contribution to an important subject. But it is not the final word on the subject of state regulation of public utilities. Limited to a study of the Wisconsin commission, it does not consider some of the problems which have been presented in other states, where the personnel and methods of the state commissions have been more open to criticism. Moreover, while the discussion given presents points and arguments which need to be faced by those who have attacked the Wisconsin commission, the author has not squarely met and answered some of the specific criticisms which have been made by those who advocated municipal rather than state regulation. It deals with a complicated subject in a way which will be of service to the serious student. It is not a popular essay for the general reader." J. A. Fairlie

+ Am Pol Sci R 10:408 My '16 500w

"Although the study is restricted to a treatment of the Wisconsin situation, it may well serve as a text on the subject of regulation by state utilities. The treatment is not merely comprehensive but is clearcut and illuminating. Of vital present interest among the topics treated are the subjects of physical valuation, rate of return, standardization of service, depreciation, making of rates, granting of permits, regulation of stocks and bonds, and state versus local control." F. W. B.

+ Ann Am Acad 63:301 Ja '16 400w

"The book will be of service to everyone having a part in the regulation of utilities anywhere and to the officials and engineers of the public-service companies as well. One chapter is devoted to depreciation. This is not a clear presentation of the topic."

+ Engin N 75:510 Mr 16 '16 780w

"The most recent product of the 'Wisconsin idea' is this study of the history and work of the present Railroad commission, created in 1905. It is written by one who was a member of the legislature at the time of its creation and chairman of the Assembly committee on transportation, and who has kept closely in touch with its work ever since. It is an extraordinary story and one of fascinating interest, admirably told."

+ Nation 101:781 D 30 '15 1000w

"Is an excellent account of the methods by which the present regulation has become more righteous and vigorous than the earlier. It is probably safe to say that the Wisconsin methods have been more generally followed than those of any other state. The book therefore makes a wide appeal to those interested in the subject. Particularly interesting and novel are the chapters on miscellaneous public utilities, telegraph, telephone, light, heating and power companies."

+ N Y Times 21:165 Ap 16 '16 600w

R of Rs 52:637 N '15 40w

"All Wisconsin libraries should know of the character of the book, though many will not need to own it."

+ Wis Lib Bull p1 Ja '16 70w

HOLMES, JOHN HAYNES. New wars for old. *$1.50 (1½c) Dodd 172.4 16-13641

To understand this "statement of radical pacifism" by the leading advocate of non-resistance it is necessary to know what he means by that term. "Non-resistance," he says, "means to me an essentially positive and indeed aggressive state of mind and attitude. The true non-resistant is militant—but he lifts his militancy from the plane of physical, to the plane of moral and spiritual force." Thruout the book the theory of force, which sees in the struggle for physical existence the chief law of life, is opposed by the contrasting theory of non-resistance, which bases its argument on the law of love, finding that even in the animal world "mutual aid" is the determining factor in survival. The material of the book has been used many times in sermons and addresses. Contents: A statement of the problem; The logic of force; The fallacies of force; The meaning of non-resistance; Exemplars of non-resistance; The practicability of non-resistance; Is war ever justifiable? Is permanent and universal peace to be desired? The duty and opportunity of America to-day. The appendix is a bibliography.

+ A L A Bkl 13:56 N '16

+ Bookm 43:627 Ag '16 510w

"The author stands with both feet upon the ground; he sees and meets the arguments of his opponents no less clearly and no less fairly than he sees his own idealistic point of view. The present reviewer has read many arguments for pacifism, each of which has but strengthened an already firm belief in the justifiability and the necessity of force. Mr. Holmes's book is the only one which has in the least shaken that conviction. The reader will find the book stimulating and well worth reading, whatever his convictions may be at the beginning, and whatever his conclusions may be at the end." R. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 7 '16 650w

"Throughout his treatise he fails to cope with the practical essentials of life, passes over the clearest evidence, and puts together a structure that has neither stability nor beauty."

+ Cath World 103:687 Ag '16 300w

Ind 87:350 S 4 '16 20w

"Mr. Holmes has laid the thinking public under a real debt in presenting so clearly and forcibly the case of radical pacifism or non-resistance. . . . A few words, however, may be ventured. In the first place, Mr. Holmes's insistence that we must all agree with him or Bernhardt may fairly be challenged. . . . Nor is Mr. Holmes's biological and historical argument for the futility of force by any means conclusive. . . . The empirical evidence at hand would seem to show that in the world, constituted as it is at present, crises occur in which these precious things must be fought for if they are to be preserved."

+ Nation 103:85 J1 27 '16 2450w

N Y Br Lib News 3:105 J1 '16

N Y Times 21:285 J1 16 '16 380w

Pittsburgh 21:366 J1 '16 40w

R of Rs 54:115 J1 '16 10w

"The spirit of the book is splendid. Its conception is fine. While one might wish that more time had been spent in its preparation, the faults of style are insignificant when compared with the achievement that the book represents. The book makes of pacifism a vital, regenerative life-force in this world crisis." Scott Nearing

+ Survey 36:508 Ag 12 '16 350w

HOLT, LUCIUS HUDSON, ed. Leading English poets from Chaucer to Browning. *$2.25 Houghton 821.08 15-19281

"Prof. Holt's volume touches only the high places in the matter of names, but for each of the score of authors chosen the attempt is made to provide a broad basis of appreciation, drawn freely from the minor poems as well as the masterpieces. The text in most cases is that of the Cambridge edition. Biographical sketches conclude the volume."—Nation

+ A L A Bkl 12:227 F '16

"By a wise recognition of its own limitations this anthology does succeed in living up to its title. Only the best known poets of the period are included and an unusually liberal amount of each author's work is given."

+ Ind 83:394 Mr 13 '16 60w

Nation 102:23 Ja 6 '16 60w

"A good anthology to purchase when a generous selection of the better poets is needed either to duplicate the individual volumes or to supplement more inclusive collections, like the 'Golden treasury' and the 'Victorian anthology.' There is a useful outline sketch of English poetry (13p), excellent biographical sketches (62p), glossary, and indexes of first lines, authors and titles."

+ Wis Lib Bull 11:368 D '15 70w

HOMANS, JAMES EDWARD. Homans's automobile handbook. il *$1 (1½c) Sully & Kleinteich 629.2 16-15931

A handbook on the management, operation and care of the gasoline motor car. Contents: The motor car briefly described; The transmission apparatus of a motor car; Planetary speed-changers; "Clash" gear speed-changers; The friction drive; The magnetic transmission; The motor-car engine; Engine elements and adjustments; The operation of a motor-car engine; Power estimates for motor-car engines; Multiple-cylinder gasoline engines; Rotary gasoline engines; Cylinder cooling devices; Vaporizing and mixing the engine fuel; The ignition apparatus described; The lubrication of moving parts; Operation of a motor car and engine; Adjusting the ignition; Adjusting the mixture; Causes and symptoms of engine troubles. The volume is fully illustrated with diagrams.

HOMANS, JAMES EDWARD—Continued

- + Cleveland p151 D '16 10w
- + Ind 88:127 O 16 '16 30
- + N Y Times 21:360 S 10 '16 50w

"The book is completely indexed."

- + Springfield Republican p15 S 10 '16 70w

HOMANS, JAMES EDWARD. Homans' first principles of electricity. il *$1 Sully & Kleinteich 537 16-18636

A book for the beginner, with chapters on Electricity and its manifestations, The chemical generation of electric current, Pressure, resistance and current, Electrical proportions and units, Electrical quantity, power and work, Wire conductors, Series and multiple circuits, Galvanic or primary chemical cells, Storage or secondary electric cells, Current induction or "side-action," Magnetism and magnets, The laws of magnetism, Alternating electric currents, Phase and circuit conditions, Dynamo electric machines and electric motors, etc. There are many drawings and diagrams by way of illustration, an appendix giving formulae and tables, and an index.

"The book is well suited to the beginner in that it is written in a clear and readable style, the author using no technical terms without defining them. . . . In the appendix the author has published many tables and much data not usually found in text-books of this nature. Mr. Homans has made 'First principles of electricity' a useful handbook to the beginner in electrical work as well as to the advanced student."

- + Elec World 68:823 O 21 '16 180w
- + N Y Br Lib News 3:170 N '16
- + Springfield Republican p15 N 26 '16 120w

HONE, J. M. William Butler Yeats. (Irishmen of to-day) *$1 Dodd

"A history of Mr. Yeats' life and development, especially as an Irishman, his relations with the Celtic renaissance, the Gaelic league, the Sinn Féin, etc. After detaching himself from Irish interests, according to Mr. Hone, Yeats is now absorbed by the politics, social ideals, and literature of his country."—Library Association Record

- + Ath p24 Ja '16 1200w
- Library Association Record 18:81 F '15 '16 50w
- N Y Br Lib News 3:107 J1 '16

"Frank but friendly estimate."

- + Spec 115:921 D 25 '15 1100w

HOOD, ALEXANDER NELSON. duke of Bronte. Sicilian studies. *$1.50 (3c) Dodd 914.58 (Eng ed A17-4)

The author of these essays holds the family estates in Sicily, with the title of Duke of Bronte, which was conferred on Lord Nelson by the King of Naples after the battle of the Nile. He lives on his estates and has been decorated by the king of Italy for his services to agriculture. All of these points qualify him to write on present day Sicily. The subjects of the essays are varied. The first, The great disaster, describes the earthquake at Messina. The second, San Filippo leaves his shrine, is a charming description of a feast day. Others that follow are: The spirit of the "Mafia"; Christmas; Vintage; The new religion; A Sicilian murder; To the top of Etna. Some of the sketches have appeared in the Nineteenth Century and the Fortnightly Review.

- + A L A Bkl 13:169 Ja '17

"Though Mr. Hood's powers of exposition often lag behind his knowledge, his book deals with a variety of subjects, and he can claim to speak upon most of them with an authority that should command attention."

- + Ath 1915,2:260 O 16 1100w
- + Boston Transcript p8 O 7 '16 680w

"This is a charming book, written in excellent English. It is also a valuable book, for it helps us to understand a people whose failings and misfortunes have been exploited to their own disadvantage from time immemorial by foreigners and by their own folk."

- + Sat R 120:475 N 13 '15 630w
- + Spec 115:478 O 9 '15 520w

HOOD, GEORGE WILLIAM. Practical school and home gardens. il *$1.25 Long & co., 1135 R st., Lincoln, Neb. 635 16-22571

A practical book designed for home and school use. As a school textbook it is adapted for use between the 6th and 12th grades. Contents: The value of a plant; Planning the garden; The seed and how to plant it; The soil and its treatment; The hotbed and the cold frame; Plants that should be started in the hotbed or the cold frame; Spray material and spray machinery; Vegetables grown for their roots; Vegetables grown for their green parts; Vegetables grown for their fruit and seed; Perennial vegetables. Twenty-four garden plans follow these chapters. The author is associate professor of horticulture at the University of Nebraska.

HOOD, WILLIAM ROSS, and others, comps. Digest of state laws relating to public education, in force January 1, 1915. (Bureau of education. Bul. 1915, no. 47) pa 60c Supt. of doc. 379 E16-279

This bulletin was prepared in answer to the many requests for information regarding school laws received by the Bureau of education. The laws are arranged in groups under such headings as: General administrative control and supervision of public education; State finance and support; Local finance and support; Buildings and sites; The examination and certification of teachers; School population and attendance; School discipline; Health regulations, etc. State constitutional provisions relating to education are given in an appendix.

- + A L A Bkl 12:438 Je '16

HOOL, GEORGE ALBERT. Reinforced concrete construction. v 3 il *$5 McGraw 693 v 3 Bridges and culverts.

"This is the third of the well-known series by the same author. The original intention of including many different types of reinforced-concrete structures has not been adhered to, and the present volume is devoted almost exclusively to bridges, especially arches. Culverts, in spite of their prominence in the title, are allotted only 35 of the total 688 pages. Structurally, the book has eight parts and thirty-seven chapters. Qualitatively, the first quarter covers the theory and design of arch bridges, and the rest of the book is wholly descriptive."—Engin Rec

"The series, when complete, promises to be indispensable to the structural engineer."

- + Engin N 75:746 Ap 20 '16 1200w

"Whatever criticisms may be made concerning the analytical part of the book, the descriptive part (beginning with chapter 9) containing 400 or 500 beautifully executed illustrations covering both American and European bridges, could hardly be improved, and makes this the leading descriptive work on concrete (especially arch) bridges in this country. The book is essentially a work of reference."

- + Engin Rec 73:458 Ap 1 '16 1000w

"The book gives the most comprehensive and best treatment of reinforced concrete bridges in print."

- + N Y P L New Tech Bks p8 F '16 150w (Reprinted from Engineering & Contracting 45:74 Ja 19 '16)

St Louis 14:154 Ap '16

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

HOPKINS, ALBERT ALLIS, ed. Book of progress. 3v il $9 Cricks pub. corporation, 8 W. 40th st., N. Y. 608 15-19219

"Under the subtitles, 'Man the creator,' 'Man the destroyer,' and 'Man and nature,' the author has put together with prefaces a series of articles specially written, mostly by authorities on the subjects of which they write. The first deals with inventions such as the movies, the creation of sky-scrapers, the building of automobiles and developments in electricity. The second aims to give (and succeeds in the task) information concerning the latest methods of waging war. In the third is a rather unrelated aggregation of information, ranging from bacteriology to the archeology of man, mad dogs and hydrophobia, food-purity, radium, diving, etc."—Lit D

"The papers are trustworthy as well as interesting."

+ Ind 85:318 F 28 '16 50w

"Every article is fully and clearly illustrated, and concerns subjects on which the daily newspaper constantly excites curiosity. Methods and mechanism are luminously described by letter-text, diagram, and picture. As a supplement to a good encyclopedia on the later phases of 'progress,' these volumes are quite worth while."

+ Lit D 51:1293 D 4 '15 180w

"The material for each of the three volumes has been obtained mainly from recent volumes of the Scientific American."

+ N Y Times 21:218 My 21 '16 290w

"In these three volumes Mr. Hopkins has compiled a vast amount of up-to-date information from varied sources."

+ R of Rs 53:253 F '16 100w

HOPKINS, FLORENCE MAY. Reference guides that should be known and how to use them. $1.50 Willard co., 479 6th st., Detroit, Mich. 025.5 16-9297

"A series of eight groups of graded lessons on the use of reference books which could be given in connection with the English courses in high and normal schools." (Title page) Directions for using the different parts of a book, such as title-page, preface, index, etc., concordances, atlases, dictionaries, encyclopedias, magazine indexes, year books and other standard reference works are given. Questions and exercises for class use are provided and the work is illustrated with specimen pages from the different types of books under consideration.

"Perhaps too detailed and technical for average high-school use."

A L A Bkl 13:5 O '16

"Equally serviceable for self-instruction or for teaching purposes in library training classes or library schools. Filling nearly two hundred octavo pages, it is comprehensive and detailed within its limits, works in foreign languages being beyond its scope."

+ Dial 60:430 Ap 27 '16 170w

N Y Br Lib News 3:108 J1 '16

Pittsburgh 21:450 O '16 40w

St Louis 15:5 Ja '17

"Heartily recommended to every high-school and college librarian concerned with the teaching of classes in library methods."

+ School R 24:407 My '16 110w

+ Springfield Republican p8 S 22 '16 280w

HOPKINS, NEVIL MONROE. Strange cases of Mason Brant. il $1.25 (2c) Lippincott 16-11041

The author of these three detective stories is a trained electrician and chemist who has written much for technical journals and is a member of leading scientific associations. Mason Brant, the detective, with his friend Robert Dale, formerly of the American embassy at London, inevitably suggest Sherlock Holmes and his friend Dr. Watson. But in each of the cases which Brant investigates the clue is found through his scientific knowledge. Radium causes death in "The mystery of the North case"; chemicals and an expert manipulation of a motor car are employed in "The Moyett case"; wireless telegraphy is the solution in "The investigation at Holman square." Slight love stories are introduced to provide motives for action.

+ Ath p480 O '16 20w

+ Engin N 76:310 Ag 17 '16 110w

+ N Y Times 21:283 J1 16 '16 190w

"The stories contain little that is original in their particular field; but the elements of mystery and surprise are well-conceived and developed in an interesting manner. The ingredients of each are the familiar instances of violence, intrigue or mysterious disappearance, plus a dash of the sentimental."

+ — Springfield Republican p13 My 21 '16 130w

HOPKINS, R. THURSTON. Rudyard Kipling; a literary appreciation. il $3.50 (4c) Stokes 16-15625

This volume will serve as a storehouse of information and anecdote about Rudyard Kipling. It is that rather than a carefully worked-out literary study. There are chapters on: Kipling at school, Personality, 'The brushwood boy' and 'They,' 'From sea to sea,' 'Kim,' Tales of horror and terror, Kipling's speeches, Animal stories, Soldier poems, etc. The author quotes liberally from contemporary opinion and criticism and gathers other interesting quotations into his appendixes. A bibliography of magazine articles is also given in an appendix.

A L A Bkl 13:30 O '16

"The principal value of Mr. Hopkins's compilation is that it will offer a rich mine of material to those who will later write Kipling's biography. It is a volume full of anecdote and reminiscence." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 5 '16 870w

"In spite of the fact that this is not a book to be eagerly read through at a sitting—in spite of the fact, indeed, that it is in parts dull and in parts rather petty—it is a work decidedly worth while. For one thing, it is a complete and useful work of reference. There are three lists which alone would justify the publication of the volume. One of these is a list of photographs, caricatures, and drawings of Rudyard Kipling. Another—and this is especially important—is a list of magazine articles dealing with Kipling and his work. The third is more than a list: it is an interesting collection of burlesques and parodies on Kipling's works, and some notable criticisms of him and criticisms of the criticisms."

+ — N Y Times 21:189 My 7 '16 550w

"The author brings out very clearly the human side of this subject, giving many references to Kipling's experiences as a traveler in various parts of the world, and particularly in the United States. Kipling himself is authority for the deduction that Americans have never forgiven him for not dying in New York."

+ R of Rs 53:629 My '16 140w

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN. Those Gillespies. il $1.35 (2c) Houghton 16-10881

Rudolph Gillespie, who is something over five and something under six, is the center of interest in this story. The tangled affairs of his elders form only a background for Rudolph's sunny personality. Not that these affairs are not absorbing in themselves, for they involve the married happiness of Rudolph's father and mother, which is almost wrecked by the intrusion of another man, as well as the less troubled love story of Rudolph's Aunt Kitty and Mr. Jack Ramsden, a playwright. Rudolph early adopts Mr. Ramsden as his Uncle Jack, so there is nothing for Aunt Kitty to do but make the relationship a real one.

"The story is a bit dull and rambling but has a charm in its suggestions of Boston, which are emphasized in the sketches which illustrate it."

+ — A L A Bkl 12:481 J1 '16

"Such stories are not written for readers who are fussy about detail. Mr. Hopkins has succeeded, as usual, in creating the necessary atmosphere, and his little fantasy will be read with content by persons who have an idle hour to spare." H. W. Boynton

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN —Continued

+ — Bookm 42:535 J1 '16 370w

"For everyone who loves children the book will have a great and abiding attraction in the figure of little Rudolph, the young Gillespie about whom the story is written and in whom the story lives. The others of 'those Gillespies' are not so important. Their story is undeniably fantastic, unnecessarily so, and must be said to peter out decidedly at the end."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 17 '16 190w

"A pretty love-story with just enough complications to make it interesting."

+ Lit D 52:1467 My 20 '16 130w

"The supposed time of this narrative is, we take it, the present. The motor-car figures a good deal; otherwise the atmosphere, like the persons, might be of the nineties. Are we to gather that certain things survive in Boston?
 ... There is a rather sublimated infant, Rudolf, who is distinctly of the machine."

— Nation 103:62 J1 20 '16 350w

"There is no lack of 'local color.'"

+ R of Rs 53:760 Je '16 30w

+ — Springfield Republican p15 S 3 '16 220w

HORNBECK, STANLEY KUHLE. Contemporary politics in the Far East. *$3 (2½c)
 Appleton 950 16-18764

"There are many reasons why we in the West should study the Far East," says the author. "We forced ourselves upon Asia. We compelled China and Japan to open their doors;
 we made them accept relations with ourselves;
 and we have driven them to adopt, if only in self-defense, instruments and policies patterned on ours. The present problems of the Far East are as much of our making as of Chinese and Japanese making." The author, who is now assistant professor of political science in the University of Wisconsin, was formerly instructor in the Chekiang provincial college and in the Fengtien (Mukden) law college. He has felt the need of a book on the Far East devoted especially to politics and he has tried to give here "a brief account of Chinese politics, of Japanese politics, and of some of the outstanding features of the international situation in the Far East." Part 1 deals with Politics in China and Japan; part 2 with Contemporary relations: China, Japan, and the United States.

A L A Bkl 13:164 Ja '17

Boston Transcript p9 S 30 '16 590w

"The most recent and, in the opinion of some authorities, the best book on the Eastern question yet published. It gives information on Chinese and Japanese constitutional law and present day politics such as can hardly be found elsewhere."

+ Cleveland p158 D '16 90w

N Y Br Lib News 3:172 N '16 80w

"The author's indictment of Japanese aggressive imperialism would be severe were it not so excellently documented. As it is, it stands as a bit of excellent reading for those who believe that benevolence will solve problems of national expansion. . . . A book which is itself an admirable simplification of what have been confusing problems to Occidentals." H. Seligman

+ Pub W 90:1416 O 21 '16 790w

R of Rs 54:683 D '16 80w

St Louis 14:441 D '16 10w

HORNBLow, ARTHUR. Training for the stage; with a foreword by D. Belasco. (Lippincott's training ser.) il *$1.25 (4½c) Lippincott 792 16-19834

The author's purpose is to give "hints for those about to choose the player's career." He says, "It is with the practical, rather than with the purely academic and theoretical side, of the players' calling that the following pages are intended to deal, and in presenting these practical issues the writer has been careful to trust less his own judgment than the opinions of those who, having themselves achieved success on the boards, cannot be charged with being ignorant of what they are talking about." Some of the points touched on are: The art of the actor,

 The stage as a career for woman, What an actor earns, Qualifications of a player, Can acting be taught? Perils and pitfalls, Compensations.

"Informal, entertainingly written essays, in which the editor of the Theater magazine aims to give would-be actors an accurate picture of conditions on the stage today."

+ A L A Bkl 13:159 Ja '17

"Its author stands for the ideal, and has contributed to the profession an honest, straightforward, readable book, if one that does not go so deeply into the subject as many readers will desire and expect."

+ Dial 61:401 N 16 '16 450w

N Y Br Lib News 3:171 N '16

Pratt p31 Ja '17

Reviewed by S. G. Stuart

Pub W 90:1421 O 21 '16 400w

"Spirited, delightful, and instructive—not a dull page in the book."

+ R of Rs 54:676 D '16 100w

HORNE, CHARLES FRANCIS. History of the state of New York; with introd. by James Austin Holden. il *$1.20 Heath 974.7

16-8818

"This book tells the story of the Empire state from the time of the earliest Dutch settlements to the present day, but it devotes fully three-fourths of its space to the colonial and revolutionary periods."—Ind

Ind 87:231 Ag 14 '16 80w

"He has succeeded in writing a lively and clear story of the most striking events in New York's history before 1815. It is true that he undertakes to describe the course of history down to the present date; but he gives very inadequate space to this latter part. . . . The book should contain a larger and less timid presentation of recent history. . . . It is not too much to ask that recent state history shall be presented in such a way that the reader can understand what was the real problem of the voter in deciding to which candidate he should give his vote."

+ — Nation 103:242 S 7 '16 400w

N Y Br Lib News 3:104 J1 '16

HORNE, HERBERT PERCY. Binding of books;
 an essay in the history of gold-tooled bindings. (Books about books) 2d ed il *$1.25
 Dutton 686

"In Mr. Horne's book about binding he has not attempted to give more than an outline of the technical processes involved in putting a printed book into covers, but has written, not merely as a critic or an antiquary, but as an artist.
 He believes that bookbinding is yet a living and growing art, capable of new motives and new forms of expression." (Boston Transcript)
 "The illustrations give examples of workmanship from the beginning of the 16th century to the present time." (Springfield Republican)

"In its new form it is more convenient for library use than in the large and sumptuous edition in which it first appeared. No appreciable changes have been made in the text, nor was there need of any particular amendment, for it treated thoroughly of its subject and it has come to be recognized as authoritative, so far as its treatment of the matter goes. . . .
 To those who know little of the tendencies of the art of bookbinding, Mr. Horne's well-written book will be found invaluable."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 11 '16 300w

+ Ind 88:331 N 20 '16 50w

Springfield Republican p9 D 3 '16 140w

HORSFALL, MAGDALENE. Maid marvellous:
 2 Jeanne d'Arc. *$1.25 Dodd

"A simple record of the earthly life-story of the maid of Domremy. Her deeds, and the poignant scenes of her trial and martyrdom, are described with pathos and restraint. There are six illustrations in colour."—Ath

+ Ath p483 O '16 30w

Sat R 122:sup4 D 9 '16 750w

+ Spec 117:738 D 9 '16 30w

"She tells the story itself with all the charm of a classic fairy tale, while Mr. Stephen Reid, R. B. A., does justice to the pomp and pageantry of the age in the accompanying series of colour plates."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p612 D 14 '16 270w

HOUGH, BENJAMIN OLNEY. Practical exporting. $4 Johnston export pub. co. 382 15-22030

"This is a handbook for manufacturers and merchants and represents the result of fifteen years of actual experience by the author in exporting, as salesman, manufacturer, and commission merchant, followed by eight years as editor of the American Exporter. It is the purpose of the book to explain logically and completely every step necessary in selling and handling goods for export, from the solicitation of orders to the preparation of shipments."—R of Rs

"The only recent American book to cover the subject completely."

+ A L A Bkl 12:359 My '16

"The rapid increase in the quality and variety of the exports of the United States has created a wide demand for a book of this character, and business men will undoubtedly welcome such an authoritative and admirably constructed work." T. W. V. M.

+ Ann Am Acad 64:237 Mr '16 80w

"Written by the editor of the American Exporter in a breezy newspaper style, such as will be attractive to the business man. Every section of the compendium is practical in its direct advice and bearing. It is chiefly broadly suggestive, and the person actually taking up the export business will find that he has still the details to learn for himself as regards his own business."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ja 12 '16 430w

Cleveland p10 F '16 10w

Pittsburgh 21:363 Jl '16 10w

R of Rs 53:243 F '16 70w

HOUGH, EMERSON. Let us go afield. il $*1.25 (1½c) Appleton 799 16-11748

A series of papers on out of door life. Altho the author does not make a specific statement to that effect, it is plain that the purpose of the book is two-fold, to entertain and to instruct. It is full of hints and bits of advice to the would-be camper and other followers of the outdoor life. And the author is not above preaching either. On two subjects he writes with feeling and force, American wastefulness, of which the buffalo is only one typical victim, and the danger of degeneracy in a nation whose young men sit in paid-for seats watching "hired men" play games in preference to taking part in sports for themselves. There are eight illustrations from photographs.

"Appeared as magazine articles from time to time in the last few years."

+ A L A Bkl 12:464 J '16

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:550 Jl '16 140w

"Written in a semi-jocular vein it fails to be amusing. The cheap use of slang limits the lifetime of the book to the fleeting lifetime of the slang employed therein."

— + Boston Transcript p7 S 16 '16 220w

+ Dial 61:54 Jl 15 '16 300w

+ Ind 88:402 Je 5 '16 50w

+ Lit D 53:467 Ag 26 '16 100w

+ — Nation 103:281 S 21 '16 240w

N Y Br Lib News 3:108 Jl '16 50w

+ N Y Times 21:237 Je 11 '16 100w

R of Rs 54:122 Jl '16 20w

+ Springfield Republican p6 Jl 4 '16 480w

"Very similar in content to the author's last 'Out of doors,' and might well have been incorporated with it, with the omission of the more trivial and irrelevant matter in both."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 12:269 Je '16 40w

HOUGH, EMERSON. Magnificent adventure. il $*1.35 Appleton 16-16714

"Great themes, vast spaces, and famous characters set the epic measures of Mr. Hough's new historical novel. The Louisiana purchase, Aaron Burr's conspiracy, the Lewis and Clark expedition furnish the material for its plot, while Thomas Jefferson, Aaron Burr and his daughter, Theodosia Alston; the two explorers, Captains Lewis and Clark; British minister Merry and Spanish minister Yrujo are among its chief actors. The hero is Captain Meriwether Lewis, head of the expedition, and the heroine is Burr's daughter, Theodosia, while its stage setting extends from the unkempt village that was the Washington of those days down and up vast sweeps of mighty rivers, across thousands of miles of wilderness, and over towering mountain chains."—N Y Times

"Not remarkable as a story but it does give some idea of the honor and the glory of the great expedition and the men who led it."

+ A L A Bkl 13:84 N '16

Reviewed by P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 44:279 N '16 120w

"The footnotes are more forcible and spirited than the body of the text."

— + Cath World 104:268 N '16 150w

"There is material in the explorations of Lewis and Clark and in the unhappy love of Captain Lewis and Theodosia Burr for a novel of really great qualities, but Mr. Hough has been unable to turn it to the best account."

— + Dial 61:334 N 2 '16 180w

+ Ind 88:76 O 9 '16 40w

"Mr. Hough has an instinct for the picturesque incident and out of the records of those days he has chosen many a little touch that gives piquancy to his narrative and helps to preserve the color of the time. . . . He follows very closely the facts of history in his novel."

The work is a good, stirring tale of what was indeed a 'magnificent adventure,' and deserves the reading of all who like a stirring tale and of all Americans who love their country and are interested in its history."

+ N Y Times 21:342 S 3 '16 1150w

"The book has a larger value than a mere story. It will aid present-day materialistic citizens to enlarge their background nationally. . . . It is a very dramatic story, peopled by strong and noble characters."

+ Springfield Republican p13 O 22 '16 210w

"The reader who has a regard for our heroes will resent the sort of liberty this author takes with them, but if the story leads to the reading of a reliable account of this period, as it should, it is worth while."

+ Wis Lib Bull 12:453 D '16 70w

HOUGHTON, HARRY GARFIELD. Elements of public speaking. $*1.40 Ginn 808.5 16-24567

The author, assistant professor of public speaking in the University of Wisconsin, says of this book: "It is the outgrowth of a need that I have long felt in my classes for a text-book which, without entering into unnecessary detail, would furnish the student with the essentials for instruction in practical speaking." The two things he has found to be essential in courses in practical speaking are, (1) a definite amount of accurately expressed theory, and (2) a maximum of practice. Both of these elements have been taken into account in the preparation of the book. Contents: Planning the speech; The conversational mode; Action; Gesture; The breath; Enunciation; Pronunciation; Pitch; Time; Quality; Force; Emphasis. There are two appendixes giving suggestions to teachers and notes on declamation.

HOUSTON, ROBERT ALEXANDER. Treatise on light. il $*2.25 Longmans 535 16-16378

"In scope, this treatise covers both theoretical and physical optics, together with geometrical optics, vision, photometry, illumination, spectroscopy and X-rays. Part 1 deals with Geometrical optics, Part 2 with Physical optics, Part 3 with Spectroscopy and photometry and Part 4 with Mathematical theory. . . . Numerous prob-

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue

HOUSTOUN, ROBERT ALEXANDER—Cont. blemes are given at the end of each chapter. These and the general presentation and arrangement of matter make the treatise well adapted for class-room work for third year students in the average university."—Science

"With this book the subject of light is better filled out than any other branch of physics. There are several satisfactory texts for elementary college classes, and we have the excellent treatises of R. W. Wood and of Drude for advanced students. Dr. Houstoun's book fits into this gap exactly. We seldom have a chance to recommend a textbook so unreservedly. It is thorough, well proportioned, and readable."

+ Nation 102:sup502 My 4 '16 80w

"Occupies a place of its own. To many of the chapters Dr. Houstoun has appended series of questions and problems. These are excellent, being real problems of optics, and not, as in the majority of college text-books, mere mathematical puzzles. There is a reality and freshness about them that is wholly commendable. The tables included at the end of the book are all too short. But they are satisfactory compared with the index. One looks in vain for many things. The publishers ought at once to scrap the index without waiting for the second edition, which is certain to be called for at no distant time." S. P. T.

+ — Nature 97:199 My 4 '16 1200w

"An extremely concise treatment of each subject makes it possible to cover this wide field in so few pages, the style is lucid and free from unnecessary explanations and deductions. Except, perhaps, in the chapter on the nature of light, the treatment is nowhere exhaustive or profound, and is well adapted to the use of advanced undergraduate students." P. G. Nutting

+ Science n s 43:535 Ap 14 '16 650w

HOVELAQUE, ÉMILE LUCIEN. Deeper causes of the war: tr. by the author, with an intro. by Sir Walter Raleigh. *$1.25 Dutton 940.91 16-15264

"The familiar view that Prussia's domination of Germany, together with fallacious abstract theories regarding Teutonic destiny, has plunged the German nation into the present world conflict is upheld in this volume. . . . M. Hovelague affirms that Prussia is 'an artificial creation, a factitious nationality.' . . . M. Hovelague is not at all inclined to agree with the German conception of English decadence, for he thinks that the evils of industrialism are universal and are lessening. To say this is to dismiss the subject lightly."—Springfield Republican

"He dwells too long on Germany's misunderstanding of other nations, since the other nations misunderstood Germany, despite her aggressive wars and trades and plans. In other matters M. Hovelague gets to very close quarters with his subject. He is admirable when he writes as a scientific historian, giving his whole attention to the evolution of Prussia's ruthless qualities."

+ — Sat R 122:68 Jl 15 '16 600w

"M. Hovelague's book, while not the dispassionate analysis that Sir Walter Raleigh's introduction leads one to expect—in fact, it is synthesis more than analysis—will command much admiration for the vigor of its thought and style. The secret of the Prussian tradition is revealed in glowing language."

+ Springfield Republican p15 S 10 '16 950w

"The book still remains perhaps the most acute, the clearest and the sanest analysis of the welding of the two elements so diverse and opposed in their essential characteristics, the realism of the Prussian state and the idealism of the German nation, which have produced the Germany of to-day. . . . The book owed much of its charm and value to the clearness and distinction of the language in which it was written. These qualities have been preserved with unusual success in the English version, and this is all the more remarkable inasmuch as the translation is the work of the author himself."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p377 Ag 10 '16 150w

HOWARD, ETHEL. Potsdam princes. il *$2 Dutton (Eng ed War16-59)

"Miss Howard went to the German court in 1895 as English governess of the Kaiser's children and remained there for three years. Her book is an intimate, gossip account, written in a just and kindly spirit, of her life with the imperial family, of the personalities of the boys who were in her charge, and of the Kaiser and Kaiserin. The book has been written since the breaking out of the war, and in brief preface she says that, although it is impossible for her to think now of the Kaiser's sons as she did then, she has yet tried to write a true and unbiased account of her pupils as she found them. She has been entirely successful in this, for there is no trace in her pages of the slightest war bitterness and, except for an occasional reference to recent events suggested by her narrative, the work might have been written a dozen or twenty years ago."—N Y Times

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 26 '16 800w

"From the fascinating and unusual material at her disposal she has made an ill-constructed, only fairly interesting book."

+ — Ind 88:330 N 20 '16 50w

+ — Lit D 53:1345 N 18 '16 200w

+ N Y Times 21:330 Ag 27 '16 700w

+ Springfield Republican p15 Jl 23 '16 550w

HOWARD, MARGARET, comp. "Truly stories from the surely Bible." *$1 (2c) Lothrop 221

A collection of Bible stories for children told in the words of the King James version with only a few omissions of words and passages unnecessary to the unity of the story. The title is taken from the words of a little boy who asked for such stories in preference to "made over" stories. The Old Testament only has been drawn on.

"The pruning is efficiently done, but in many cases it would appear that brevity is considered to the exclusion of much material that is vital to the lesson sought to be conveyed and would better have been included."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 S 16 '16 190w

"The [52] stories are in six groups, centering around (1) Joseph, (2) Moses, (3) Elijah, the Tishbite, (4) Elisha, (5) Daniel, (6) Daniel's dreams. This definite arrangement is most valuable in fixing the incidents in the minds of the young listener or reader. This book will prove most valuable in promoting an interest in the Bible."

+ Springfield Republican p13 Ag 27 '16 130w

HOWARD, WILLIAM LEE. Breathe and be well. *$1 (4c) Clode, E. J. 612.2 16-5621

A book on the relation of right breathing to health. The reader of the book will find that more than the mere drawing of breath into the lungs is involved. There is much sensible advice on exercise, clothing, diet, and habits of life generally.

"A simple, clear, and practical little treatise."

+ Ind 87:103 Jl 17 '16 50w

"The book's greatest merit, possibly, is its clear and graphic style." R. D. Moore

+ Pub W 89:652 F 19 '16 500w

St Louis 14:227 Je '16

Reviewed by H. M. Bracken, M. D.

— Survey 37:178 N 18 '16 140w

HOWARD, WILLIAM LEE. How to live long. *$1 (2½c) Clode, E. J. 613 16-19815

The author says, "This book makes no pretensions of giving rules for living long. I simply try to explain the inner workings of the human machinery, the kinds of foods the different makes require, what speeds can and cannot with safety be kept up, why and how man or woman can control their speed and increase their power and length of life." (Foreword) Contents: Mental poise; Keeping the tissues young by proper breathing and eating; Bathing and the proper care of the skin; Exercising; Mental and physical continence; Working; Playing; Resting; Reading; Exercising in bed; Having an object.

"There is nothing clap-trap about the book. No one can doubt Dr. Howard's sincerity." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 90:2078 D 9 '16 540w

HOWE, CHARLES BURTON. Mechanical drafting. (Wiley technical ser.) il *$1.75 Wiley 744 16-2118

"This work is essentially a text-book for preparatory schools and other schools where mechanical drafting is taught. . . . After a description of drafting instruments and their use, the principles of drawing and lettering are treated in a clear, concise way. Two chapters are devoted to geometry of drawing, after which follows a chapter on working drawings. The sixth chapter deals with machine drawing, describing in detail the conventions, etc., used in machine work. . . . The work is concluded with short descriptions of blueprinting and preparation of blueprint papers, ending with a word on blueprinting machines and appliances."—Elec World

+ Elec World 67:948 Ap 22 '16 180w

"Although the subject is undoubtedly over-written, the book under review immediately justifies itself in a manner with which, unfortunately, only a few of its predecessors can be accredited. . . . American Machinist, March 9, 1916, v. 44, p. 438. Also reviewed in Mining and Scientific Press, March 11, 1916, v. 112, p. 392."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p13 My '16 110w

"Suggestive book for teachers of drawing."

+ Pratt p18 O '16 20w

"A student's manual with explicit descriptions and illustrations." G. A. T.

+ St Louis 14:231 Je '16 10w

HOWE, FREDERIC CLEMONS. Socialized Germany. *$1.50 (2c) Scribner 914.3 15-18136

For descriptive note see Annual for 1915.

"In no other single book will one find so comprehensive and so able a summary and analysis of what the German state does for industry and for the citizen. . . . The query suggests itself whether Dr. Howe has not credited Germany's economic progress too exclusively to the intervention of the state. . . . There is not a word of individual efforts on the part of German business men, not a word of the cartels, or of the coöperative societies, or land mortgage associations, and only passing reference to trade unions. Again, too glowing a picture is presented. No proof is given of the assumption that conditions and progress are better in Germany than elsewhere." O. D. Skelton

+ — Am Econ R 6:356 Je '16 1350w

"Unfortunately there are a number of errors and inaccuracies which mar in considerable degree the general excellence of the work. In treating of the constitutional organization of the government there is a tendency to general statements which will scarcely bear analysis." W. J. Shepard

+ — Am Pol Sci R 10:177 F '16 850w

"Whether or not democracy and efficiency now or may at some future stage of social evolution, go hand in hand, we are indebted to Commissioner Howe for a very readable and understanding account of the life of modern Germany. He has made one understand why the German loves his Fatherland, for, as he says, in summing up, 'No other country has so greatly improved the well-being of so large a portion of the people.' He has given us in this the real explanation of Germany's power." F. D. Watson

+ — Ann Am Acad 64:255 Mr '16 570w

+ Ind 88:27 O 2 '16 140w

"There are serious questions as to the benevolence emphasized in the book, also to the universal application of the principles." E. T. Hartman

— Survey 35:643 F 26 '16 650w

HOWE, FREDERIC CLEMONS. Why war. *$1.50 (2c) Scribner 327 16-8580

A study of the economic causes of war. "Present-day wars are primarily the result of the conflict of powerful economic interests. . . . Surplus wealth seeking privileges in foreign lands is the proximate cause of the war just as wealth seeking monopoly profits is the cause of the civil conflicts that have involved our cities and states. It is the struggle of high finance bent on the exploitation of weaker peoples that has turned Europe into a human slaughter-house." (Preface) One purpose of the book is to warn America away from a course that may lead to a like fate. The danger that confronts America is a danger from within. The final chapters discuss The possibility of world peace and Democracy and the road to peace.

"Readable and thought-provoking, even to those who do not accept all of his argument."

+ A L A Bkl 12:450 Jl '16

"Not always does it reveal the careful thinker or the well trained historical writer. The author's ideas are larger than his knowledge or his comprehension of historical relations and development. His penetration is less profound than his manner, his condemnation is too ready his suspicions too certain, his solutions too easy and thorough. . . . The book is not free from errors, but it also contains large ideas and vigorous thinking, which, in so far as they are correct, are valuable and striking. If this volume attains wide circulation, as conceivably it may, the less scholarly and careful will almost certainly be stimulated and impressed." E: R. Turner

— + Am Pol Sci R 10:607 Ag '16 1100w

Reviewed by K. F. Geiser

+ Ann Am Acad 69:288 Ja '17 90w

"Mr. Howe has brought together an immense amount of material pertaining to the development of politico-economic power during the last twenty years and he handles it in a calm, judicial manner. His book is one of the most interesting of the investigations and arguments that have been produced by the war." F. F. Kelly

+ Bookm 43:628 Ag '16 410w

— Boston Transcript p11 Ap 22 '16 470w

"Of highest interest, and in strong contrast to certain recent amateur efforts, is this author's masterly survey of the psychological 'terrain' of the war, wherein he lets in light upon certain phases of the conflict purposely kept in darkness by a too one-sided press. England's power upon the seas and the scope and import of her dominion over the world's trade and commerce are here elucidated by an expert. The German cause is put in a favorable light and the right of that country to 'a place in the sun' is upheld."

+ Lit D 53:82 Jl 8 '16 420w

"This theory of wars presents an incomplete, and in some respects a much exaggerated picture. . . . That the sum total of economic well-being will be increased and wars abolished by further emphasizing nationalistic, or more properly mercantilistic, tendencies, and by necessarily restricting, rather than encouraging, all forms of foreign intercourse, is open to grave doubt."

— Nation 103:327 O 5 '16 620w

+ Pratt p35 O '16 10w

R of Rs 53:757 Je '16 100w

St Louis 14:218 Je '16 20w

Wis Lib Bull 12:270 Je '16 110w

HOWE, HENRY MARION. Metallography of steel and cast iron. il *$10 McGraw 669.1 16-6175

"This quarto volume of over 600 pages by one of the best known of American metallurgists 'consists of two distinct parts, an introduction to the new science of microscopic metallography, as applied to steel and to cast iron, and an extended study of the very new branch of that science, the mechanism of plastic deformation—subjects, the application of which forms the basis for the great advances to be expected in

HOWE, HENRY MARION—Continued
the metallurgy of iron and steel. There are many reading references and carefully prepared drawings including excellent photo-micrographs."—N Y P L New Tech Bks

+ A L A Bkl 13:66 N '16
Cleveland p115 Ag '16 30w

"A large index and 45 plates, each one averaging several good-sized microphotographs, are inserted at the back of the book. These illustrations are well prepared and clearly reproduced."

+ Engin N 76:312 Ag 17 '16 190w

"Reviewed in Iron Trade Review, April 20, 1916; in Metallurgical and Chemical Engineering, May 1, 1916, p. 556; in Engineering and Mining Journal, May 20, 1916, p. 917."

+ N Y P L New Tech Bks p17 My '16 110w

"Part of a proposed series on iron and steel. Comprehensive and scholarly treatment, concerned with the theory rather than the methods of metallography. The result of long and penetrating original research by one of the highest authorities on the constitution of iron and steel. Much of the author's pioneer work is far in advance of practical application at the present day (1916)."

+ Pittsburgh 21:292 Je '16 100w

HOWE, PERCIVAL P. Criticism. (Art and craft of letters) *40c Doran 801 16-26132

"Mr. Howe regards 'self-surrender' as the most necessary of a critic's qualities; he attempts to separate the functions of the 'artist' from those of the 'critic'; and, having performed this piece of ritual to his satisfaction, he discusses the salient characteristics of several outstanding critics."—Ath

+ A L A Bkl 12:275 Mr '16

"Mr. Howe writes with a thorough appreciation of the difficulties and temptations which confront the reviewer. Nevertheless he seems to overlook one essential part of the good critic's equipment—a mental resilience, an elasticity which does not become mere flabbiness after forced and frequent contact with inferior work."

+ Ath 1915,1:64 Ja 23 350w

HOWE, SONIA E. Thousand years of Russian history. il *$2.50 (1½c) Lippincott 947 16-10856

This account which begins with the appearance of Rurik, the Scandinavian invader, in 862 is continued down to the liberation of the serfs by Alexander II in 1862. The author's aim is "to convey general impressions of the various stages passed through by Russia in the course of her evolution, and to give sketches of the lives of those of her rulers who have stamped their era with the marks of their personality." Supplementary chapters following the strictly historical record are devoted to the Ukraina, the Cossacks, Poland, Finland, and the Baltic provinces. There are interesting illustrations from ikons, old banners, etc.

"The book is not a scholarly piece of work and it makes no contribution of any kind. Mrs. Howe is not a trained historian, she is not even deeply read in the subject which she treats. . . . She does not always know which of her sources to accept and which to reject and this lack of discrimination has led her to make, to put it charitably, a number of amusing statements. . . . It is not a book for scholars and it was not intended for them. The author has produced a popular book for the average reader, for the man in the street, for the woman in the reading circle. The book reads well and the many delicate feminine touches add a certain flavor."

F. A. Golder
— + Am Hist R 21:845 Jl '16 470w

"Her well informed account, with notes on recent history and on Poland and Finland, covers both political and social history, and is enthusiastically written, but is not too enthusiastic to be candid."

+ A L A Bkl 12:378 My '16

"A thoroughly candid and well-informed book, indulging in none of that unnecessary glorification of the subject which has spoilt for us several recent publications dealing with Russia. Mrs. Howe's volume is admirably illustrated with plates of great interest and numerous small pictures."

+ Ath 1915,2:366 N 20 280w

Boston Transcript p24 Mr 1 '16 650w

"The violent political changes which are a salient feature of Russian history and are so puzzling to the general reader, are well elucidated by the use of maps adapted to suit the text."

+ Lit D 53:899 O 7 '16 460w

+ N Y Times 21:296 Jl 23 '16 100w

+ R of Rs 53:500 Ap '16 80w

"In spite of some signs of haste in its composition, this is a book that will more than repay its readers."

+ Spec 115:sup770 D 4 '15 230w

HOWELLS, WILLIAM DEAN. Buying a horse. *50c (5c) Houghton 814 16-18330

A reprint of one of Mr. Howells's early sketches. It appeared in the Atlantic Monthly in 1879 and recounts humorously the difficulties to be met with in buying a horse in those days before automobiles had been thought of.

